NEW MARRIAGE CEREMONY.—Not long since a marriage ceremony took place at Skaneateles, in New York, rather out of the ordinary line, but still perfectly legal. The parties were Mr. Samuel Sellers and Miss Sarah Abbot. The ceremony is thus described by an eye-witness. After giving his views in a brief speech, Mr. Sellers took his bride by the hand and said:

"In the presence of all who are present, I take Sarah Abbot to be my wife, making no promises, but hoping, trusting, and invoking no aid thereto, but hoping, trusting, believing, that our characters are sufficiently well adapted to enable us to be to each other faithful and affectionate husband and wife during our lives."

Miss Abbot then said:

"In the presence of all who are present, I take Samuel Sellers to be my husband, making no promises, but hoping, trusting, and believing that our characters are sufficiently well adapted to each other to enable us to be faithful husband and wife while we live."

They then signed a paper with their declaration of being husband and wife, and the company present signed a certificate as witnesses to the ceremony, and thus they became husband and wife.

MORTALITY.—In New York, during the week ending the 6th inst., there were 388 deaths. Of these, 81 were men, 71 women, 133 boys and 103 girls; 44 deaths were by consumption, 13 by scarlet fever, 21 by typhus fever, 16 by small pox, and 32 by inflammation of the lungs.

TUNNELING THE SUSQUEHANNA.—The Elkton (Maryland) Democrat, in show of the fact that it is proposed to tunnel the Hudson, at Albany, suggests the propriety of inquiring into the feasibility of a tunnel under the Susquehanna at Port Deposit.

It is said that the fortunes of the Rothschilds are not less than [illegible]

PHENOMENON.—Captain Leslie, of the bark Guilford, from Rio, gives the following account of a remarkable phenomenon he witnessed on the 20th ult., in lat. 20 N., long. 61 W.: In the Northern Board, near the constellation of Ursa Major, the sky assumed an extraordinary appearance, as if a vast volcano had burst out beyond the visible horizon, and threw its shadow on the sky to the altitude of 25 or 30. The colors of the light were most brilliant, some of the lightest scarlet, others of the most vivid yellow, intermingled with streaks and columns of liquid fire. The whole spectacle was one of the most grand and striking that I have ever witnessed. The duration of the phenomenon was about ten minutes, at the end of which time it gradually diminished, and was soon lost to view. The weather had been very pleasant, and the evening mild and serene.

FRENCH FISHERIES AND BOUNTIES.—Intelligence has been received in Bangor, Me., that the liabilities on the fishery by the French nation are to be renewed under more favorable circumstances to the French fishermen than ever, both as to the amount of the bounty paid by the Government and the countries to which fish may be shipped. It is now settled that the fish may be shipped to any transatlantic port where there is a French Consul, which will give the right to ship them to the United States, and secure a bounty from the French nation of 10 francs ($1 86) per quintal.

FRIGHTFUL MORTALITY.—The Jonesboro' (Tenn.) Democrat of the 10th ult. states that a few days previous a disease similar to the cold plague broke out in the family of Rev. Wm. Reed, of Washington county, of which three of his children died within a few hours after they were attacked. A fourth child was attacked with this mysterious disease while returning from the funeral, and died shortly afterwards. The Democrat states that Adam Sligar's family also suffered from the same disease. Also, that others have been attacked with the same malady. The Democrat says: "It is fearful in its operation; in a few hours hurrying those it attacks from earth, in spite of every remedy our physicians have yet prescribed."

SEIZURE OF THE STEAMSHIP AMERICA.—A dispatch from Boston, dated the 6th inst., says: "The revenue officers having in charge the British steamship America, which arrived at this port yesterday, discovered last evening between four and five thousand dollars' worth of lace goods, which had been illegally taken from the steamer for the purpose of smuggling. The goods were found secreted in a wagon, among the dirty linen of the ship, which was to have been sent to the laundry. The goods are of rich and costly description, and the America has been seized by order of the Collector. No arrests have as yet been made.

WESTERN BOUNDARY OF ARKANSAS.—It is stated that "Mr. Ross, principal Chief of the Cherokee Nation, has obtained evidence to establish beyond a doubt that through a fraudulent survey of the western boundary line of Arkansas, the Cherokees and Choctaws have been deprived of a large portion of territory." How Mr. Ross came into possession of such evidence is not stated, and it is strange that any Government officer should have perpetrated such a fraud, as no motive for such a transaction is apparent. The Fort Smith Herald says that the present line of boundary was established by the bill admitting Arkansas into the Union, and that the State will not submit to be despoiled of the territory claimed by the tribes of Indians above mentioned. It is stated that Ross will lay the matter before the General Government.

AN ANGEL BY THE HEARTH.....By Fanny Falks.

They tell me unseen spirits
Around about us glide;
Beside the stilly waters,
Our erring footsteps guide!
'Tis pleasant thus believing
Their ministry on earth;
I know an angel sitteth
This moment by my hearth.

If false lights, on life's waters,
Ta'wreck my soul appear;
With finger upward pointing,
She turns me with a tear;
'Twere base to slight the warning,
And count it little worth,
Oh her, the loving angel
That sitteth by my hearth.

She wins me with caresses
From passion's dark defiles;
She guides me when I falter,
And strengthens me with smiles.
It may be unseen angels
Beside me journey forth:
I know that one is sitting
This moment by my hearth.

A loving wife. O brothers,
An angel here below:
Alas! your eyes are holden
Too often till they go;
Ye upward look while grieving,
When they have passed from earth;
O cherish well those sitting
This moment by the hearth!

THE ALMIGHTY DOLLAR.

BY J. N. MAFFIT.

[Concluded.]

A rapid contrast between the expense of doing good and that of doing harm will show how much cheaper it is to save than to destroy; how much more good the almighty dollar can do at a given rate than harm at the same outlay. To establish a Christian mission in a foreign land; a movement destined to give "life and immortality" to a kingdom, costs but a few hundred dollars. To build a college edifice costs fifty thousand dollars, and a like sum for a magnificent church, a hospital, an orphan asylum, or a Magdalen Retrent of Penitence; but to build a hundred gun war-ship costs a million of dollars; to keep it afloat, a thousnad dollars a week. Each cannon-shot and bomb-shell thrown by our forces in the bombardment of Vera Cruz cost the Government more than one hundred dollars, and every flashing sabre-cut inflicted by our fierce dragoons upon the flying foe at Cerro Gordo and Churubusco fell like winged lightning at an expense of ten dollars a blow. With each explosion of a musket or crack of the deadly rifle half an eagle vanished into curling smoke-wreaths [illegible] United States Treasury. The expenses of Pity, Peace, Healing, and Love are counted by hundreds; but, alas! the expenses of bombardment, storm, assault, the bloody fight, the earthquake shock of battle are counted by millions. The necessary expenses of the Mexican war must amount to a sum sufficient to evangelize fifty millions of heathen—to sustain ten thousand missionaries and teachers in heathen lands for twenty years. And all wars are thus!

Look, again, to that mighty emporium of the Southwest, scented so queenly on the delta of the Mississippi, the Nile of the West. Run the soft breezes of the Mexican Gulf fan that glorious clime, and soft fleecy clouds drive winter a thousand miles to the North, and sweet roses of January never fear the snow nor the ice. In vain the banks of the Father of Rivers are robed in perennial green. The demon of the Pestilence, the Yellow Tyrant of the Tropics, prowls through those streets erewhile so gay and redolent of life, of Paphian pleasure, and the glitter and show of wealth, and the roar of commerce. In August and September 1847 three thousand orphans were made by the pestilence. The moans of one thousand five hundred parents and scarce died away, hushed in death on the ears of these poor orphans, and they had scarce begun to feel how lone and desolate they were on the barren wilds of earth, over which sweep the bleak winds of death, before angel forms take them by the hands. Lovely babes, kinder than their own mothers, kiss away their infant tears, and they are sheltered in the Asylums that rise like magic palaces in an Arabian tale.

The plain-hearted and thrifty Scotch grocer, Milne, and the courtly French land proprietor, Paydras, eatailed, at death, their princely estates forever to the orphans of New Orleans, and now see the glorious effects of their benevolence. Long have they rested in their graves, a mighty shaft of Quincy granite pressing on the bosom of the one; and a pile of Italian marble, inscribed with the soft language of France, rising above the dust of the other; yet, year after year they [illegible] to the bosom of their undying charity the long after throng of orphans, and for ages upon ages will still, although dead and sleeping in their graves, continue to be the fathers of the fatherless!

What a sight to the spirit-eye would it be to see the monument to these fathers of the poor erected on that shore where tears and sighs never come; a triumphal arch reared by the Angel architects in honor of Mercy, draped from the base to its star-crested summit with festoons of infant gratitude, emblazoned with a crown of rainbows wrought of the tears of prayerful joy that gush from the dying eyes of hundreds of thousands of penitents whose last sighs commit their loved ones to God, and breathe out the venerated names of Milne and Peydras, with speechless blessings on their memories!

Again, nearer at hand, see a Smithson, the big-hearted Londoner, looking, as he died, beyond national boundaries, so dear to most, and making the fair and giant Republic of the West the administrator of his princely estate, for the youth of America his heirs forever. See the ocean merchant, Girard, covering one of the squares of the beauiful city that contains his dust with a stupendous Grecian pile, sacred forever to orphanage and education. Our cities teem with such examples. The venerable Halls of Harvard are a shrine which the dying merchant princes of Boston bring their votive offerings in magnificent profusion, as the kings and conquerors of antiquity, after each glorious battle or triumphant expedition, were accustomed to bring immense gifts and hang up splendid and costly memorials in the temple of Delphos!

My canvass now darkens—a moral shadow glooms over my picture. It is the great spectral army of the devotees of chance; the pale and haggard thousands who pursue the hazards of the card and die from earliest youth until they stake their immortal souls and make their last throw with Death! "The shark and the shark's prey are there!" The heads and chiefs of the great gaming establishments in our cities, not the adventurers, make all the nefarious profits of the games. There is no hazard for them; the chances in their favor are so enormous, and calculated with such mathematical precision, that the seeming winner against their banks is only getting deeper and deeper into their toils, until, in a moment, before he is aware, he is thrown a penniless desperado upon the outskirts of society, abandoned and unpitied. Said the venerable and sage-like Dr. Nott, of Union College, "The practised gambler has no heart!" Yet, a heart was once warm and vital in his bosom, although the place where once its generous throbbings alternated is now filled by a gray adder, whose stony eyes glare out with ravenous avidity for the "almighty dollar," no matter how obtained, through fraud or violence, seduction or blood. Is it possible that a single American city contains more than ten thousand gamblers; a larger army than the illustrious "Rough and Ready" headed in those fields of national glory, Palo Alto, Resaca de las Palmas, Monterey, or Buena Vista! What an army, all drawn out in terrible array, the heavy columns in full sight, under the flaunting banners of the great Lottery King, who beats up for volunteers through the columns of half the newspapers of the land, offering his staring bounties of a hundred thousand dollars, fifty thousand, unnumbered tens of thousands, and thousands upon thousands, to the adventurers who will join his ranks, and pay their little all to swell his princely and gorged revenues of deception; while deep and treacherous ambuscades are laid in the subterranean hells, or the sky-lighted attics, so high above surrounding residences as to overtop the eye of vigilance, while the goose is undergoing the plucking process, and in bitterness of soul learns the first axiom in the gambling code: "The more you lay down (or stake) the less you take up!"

An imaginative poet describes a "Midnight Review" of spectres. The moon-light is chill and pale, and drums, with double fingers, beats the long roll-call, a dreamy ruffling of the drum, like a stilled murmur in a sleeper's ears. At the unearthly sound, millions of warlike spectres advance in dim and moon-lighted squadrons, passing in grand review in the Champs Elysees before the spectral "Man of Destiny." They come from the Adige, the Po the Nile; from the Rhone, the Moselle, and the Rhine; from the ashes of Moscow, the invincible snows of Russia, and from the world's battle-field of Waterloo. The chief, with the tri-cocked hat, the gray surtout, and marble face, reviews the immense battalions of his former fields of glory, and dismisses them to their long, long bivouac in the grave, with the watchword—"Helena!"

If the chill of sublimity creeps over one's bones at this dim picture of departed glory, of the serried millions of Ambition's victims, how must the shudder creep over the moral sensibilities in contemplating the fall of the thousands upon thousands of the victims of the gamester upon these American shores! Mammon is their Demon-chief—"None higher sits in Hell than he!" Their ghastly spectres, bearing the gambler's brand upon each rigid brow, pass in frantic review before the Moloch whose fires consumed them. They gibber, they mope; and breathe the incoherent curses of insanity. They come from the gallows, the jail, the pillory, from the gory graves of the suicide, from the Draconic bar of the Lynch Code, from the black and cavernous bed of the ocean-like Mississippi, into whose measureless waters their repudiated carcases sunk—

"Without a groan;
Unknelled—unwalled—and unknown!"

They come from the Potter's Field, from the carcass-piled trench of pauper burial-grounds, from the death-bed of the maniac, from the cross-road pit, the noblest grave of murder. Their grim Chief reviews the ghastly battalions of Chance. The watch-word is given in a flash of sulphureous flame, gleaming like the ghastly smile of the Devil upon a sable scroll in the hand of the Angel of Perdition, disclosing the terrible list of doom—"Lost! Lost! Lost!"

Almighty Dollar! these are only a part of thy Death's Doings!

A ROMANCE FROM OUR OWN VALLEY.—The following incident will interest some of our readers, from the fact of its having an association with the burning of Royalton, and the other revolutionary events of 1780, which we have heard related by our grandfathers when we were dandled on the knee. [Green Mt. Ægis.

A few years ago two old acquaintances chanced to meet and fall into conversation under a large tree on the bank of the White River, near the spot where the Indians forded their captives on the way to Canada; when, during the conversation, one of them listlessly beating the earth about the roots of the tree, threw out a circular substance, which, when the encasing dirt was removed, proved to be a massive gold ring of antique workmanship. Various were the speculations, of course, which took place between the two friends respecting the original ownership of the ring; but nothing was ascertained about it till some months afterwards, when the finder made a journey to one of the old towns near the seaboard, from which some of the early settlers of Royalton had emigrated. Here, calling on a family with whom he had some business, in the dusk of the evening, something in the course of the conversation reminded him of the ring which he had on his finger. He related the singular incident of his finding it under a tree on White River, Vt., when an old lady of nearly ninety years, who had been sitting in silence in an obscure corner of the room, sprang up, and coming forward, requested him to tell that story again. He did so, and the old lady at once identified the ring as her own. She, when a girl, was one of the female captives taken at Royalton, and carried to Canada, from whence she was ransomed, and taken back to her relatives in the old settlement. When taken, she had this ring on her finger, and fearing it would attract the attention of the savage, and perhaps endanger her life, she took it off and cast it down at the root of the tree where it was found. We believe it was a bethrothal ring; but what romance in real life, if any, grew out of the loss, we are not apprised.

Recollections of Bishop Bascom.

BY ONE OF HIS STUDENTS.

I shall never forget my first interview with him. I had just reached Lexington, to enter Transylvania University, of which he was President. What I had heard and read in the far South, with reference to his splendid abilities, had made a deep impression on me. It was the year after the division of the Church, when his prominency in this affair had spread his fame where it had not gone before, and increased it greatly where it already existed. He had become known to the whole South, not only as the most learned and eloquent minister of his day, but as the able and successful champion of Southern rights. His celebrated Protest had created a deep sensation both in ecclesiastical and political circles. I had read it with deep interest, and heard it commended on every side in terms of the loftiest praise. I entertained the most extravagant opinion of his greatness. I thought of him as Wordsworth did of Milton—that "he was a star and dwelt apart." Young in years, and possessed of an unusual amount of timidity, I imagine an Eastern peasant could have felt no more awe in entering the presence of his monarch, for the first time, than did I on entering his library.

However deficient I may be myself, I profess to have an intense appreciation of genius in others. And when that genius is sanctified, I feel that its presence is sacred. I stand and gaze up its immeasurable heights with feelings of unutterable awe. It seems an embodiment of the holy, the beautiful and the grand upon earth. With such feelings did I present myself before this great man, coupled with the thought that he might be as abrupt and reserved as he was great. For what right had one so obscure, of so little consequence to the world as myself to expect any special favor from him. It seemed almost unpardonable temerity in me to approach one so great.

However, I presented myself, with my heart in my throat, announced my name and handed him my letters of introduction. He motioned to a seat and sat down to read them. His pleasant manner of greeting, and his fine face, so full of blended intellect, manliness and benevolence, partially removed my timidity. Folding up the letters, he welcomed me to the college in the kindest tones and words. He then entered into a free and familiar conversation with reference to myself, my acquirements, my proposed course, asked many questions with reference to the condition of the Church in my State, how the division was regarded there, etc. He did this in a manner so kind and condescending as to relieve me almost entirely of my embarrassment. I really began to feel proud to have so much attention shown me by such a man.

As it was late, he detained me until after tea. He then took me with him to see some friends and consult with them with reference to procuring board for me at a suitable place. He spared neither time nor pains until he succeeded, entirely to my satisfaction. His attentions, thus shown to a stranger, who had no unusual claim on him, and who was to be a beneficiary in the institution, made an impression on my mind which a thousand after kindnesses only served to deepen, and which will linger until life's latest hour. I had supposed that, intrenched in his intellectual fastness, I might consider myself favored if he but glanced sternly at me from the walls; but when he came down and grasped me by the hand and looked kindly in my face, and treated me more like an equal than an inferior, I was astonished, and retired to my bed that night with my head full of strange thoughts about the great, good and magnificent man, whom I had just seen. If I admired him before with an intense admiration, I loved him now with an intense affection. These may seem like little things to record, but they are just those little things which give an insight into the true character of the man. They teach us that his heart was as genial and sympathetic as his genius was vast and commanding. For thus was he to all who came in his way. He felt that every human being, however lowly, was a noble and glorious thing, with mental and moral needs and longings, and with an existence stretching out before him parallel with eternity. Was his splendid genius given him to isolate him from his fellows, and to teach him that he belonged to a race superior to the one from which he had descended? Nay, verily. It served only to open his eyes to the true wants of his race, and intensified his sympathy with every thing human. In this he recognized that principle in the Baconian philosophy, that there is nothing too insignificant for the attention of the highest, which is capable of giving pleasure or pain to the lowest.

How often do we find strong minds allied to cold and ungenial hearts. Such may be great in one sense, but not in the truest and highest sense. The intellect must be interpenetrated with warm and glowing sympathies, to stamp a man as one of nature's noblemen. Such a man was Bishop Bascom. His great heart glowed as a furnace with human love, and from it conductors passed through every portion of his great mind, and kept it always warm.

Though his labors were arduous and confining, in his study he never manifested impatience at the entrance of a friend. He would cease his labor and chat most delightfully for half an hour, or if especially engaged, would intimate the fact in the most agreeable way, never giving offence to one at all inclined to be reasonable.

He controlled the students in college with very little difficulty. There was such a combination of prudence, mildness and firmness in his character, as well fitted him for the station he occupied. The students knew that what he undertook he carried out. His choice of means was such as was well adapted to secure his end. The students respected and loved him. They held his commands sacred. College students are usually noted for their immense mischief-making resources; but I suppose there was no class of students in the Union more orderly and well behaved than those of the literary department of Transylvania University, during his Presidency. When he found it necessary to reprove publicly, and he thought the nature of the case required it, his withering tones of sarcasm would linger in our ears for days. With a few words he could make an improper course of conduct appear so ridiculous and [illegible] conning us to produce a degree of loathing for it; and after this few could be found who would be willing to engage in it.

We have a strange remark to make with reference to his public prayers. With all his wonderful and varied accomplishments, nature seemed to have denied him the gift of extemporaneous prayer. Whether he possessed it in early life, and lost it when he lost that extemporaneous pulpit power, for which he was famous in former days, we know not. But there was an unaccountable sameness in all his prayers, especially in the college chapel. I never heard him pray when he did not use more than half a dozen of the same stereotyped phrases he had been accustomed to use before. We all knew the most of his prayers before we heard them. I heard these phrases so often, that I remember some of them until now; one of which is the following, with which he almost invariably closed: "Translate us to thy heavenly kingdom above, through the death and merits of thy dear Son, to whom, with thee, O Father, and the unerated Spirit of all grace, we would render present and ceaseless praises. Amen." And when he occupied the pulpit, these phrases would creep occasionally into his introductory prayer. We may say, however, that as often as these phrases were repeated, there was nothing common-place in them. The sentiments were strong and forcible, the words exceedingly appropriate and expressive. As a whole, his prayers were like himself—comprehensive, full of meaning, fervent, unaffected, eloquent. He seemed to talk to God as to a friend, face to face. He impressed you with an awful sense of the presence of the God whom he was addressing. I think I can see him now, standing behind the desk, on the rostrum in the college chapel, his eyes closed, yet every muscle of his face twitching with emotion, his body swaying back and forth, and his head involuntarily shaking, as though by gesture as well as word, he expressed to God the urgency of his petitions. His rapid and emphatic enunciation convinced you that his prayers, though often literally repetitions, were yet, to him, no unmeaning form, but expressions embodying awful thoughts and feelings.

Dr. Olin's Poor Sermons.

Dr. Olin was the most powerful preacher I ever heard. The assertion is made without a reserved qualification. He did not affect the orator; his manner had peculiarities which were against the laws of the art; he gesticulated badly, defying all rules; his utterance was often extremely defective, especially when he was powerfully excited; but such was the massive magnitude of his ideas, the majesty of his language, the comprehensiveness of his logic, sweeping in mighty curves around the whole field of his subject, and concentrating at its very core; such the earnestness of his spirit, rising often to sublimity, that you were overwhelmed, if not appalled, at the example of intellectual and moral mightiness which he presented.

His very "failures" were usually great sermons, being remarkable for their thorough thought and sound logic, when even they lacked his usual vivid feeling. His feeble health was sometimes attended with a languor which was insurmountable, under whatever excitement the public occasion might afford. He seemed not disposed to disguise his sense of such "failures," and was grateful to find any good effect from them. I spent a Sabbath evening with him in Boston, after he had failed, as he thought, in a sermon during the day. He referred to it with much good-nature, and remarked that his history as a preacher had taught him to expect the blessing of God on even such efforts. He proceeded to relate an instance which occurred during his ministry in South Carolina. He preached at a camp-meeting where a Presbyterian clergyman, who was to address the next session of his Synod in Charleston, heard him. The Presbyterian doctor repeated, not only the text, but substantially the sermon, before his clerical brethren, giving, however, full credit to its Methodist author. This was a remarkable fact, and excited great interest among the people of Charleston to hear the latter.

He then occupied the Methodist pulpit of that city, and the next Sunday evening his chapel was crowded with the elite of the community, including several clergymen. He preached long, and, as he thought, loud and confusedly; in fine, he felt at the close of the discourse confounded with mortification. He sank, after the benediction, into the pulpit, to conceal himself from view till the assembly should be all gone. Silly-and-by, he espied some distingue individuals apparently waiting in the aisle to salute him. His heart failed. Noticing a door adjacent to the pulpit, he determined to escape by it. He knew not whither it led, but supposed it communicated with the next house, which had once been a parsonage, as he recollected having heard. He hastened to the door, got it open, and stepping out, descended abruptly into a grave yard which extended beyond and behind the former parsonage. He reached at last the wall which closed the cemetery in from the street, but found it insurmountable. Groping his way to the opposite side, he sought to reach a back street by penetrating one of the gardens which belonged to a range of houses there. It was an awkward endeavor in the darkness and among the graves, but at last he found a wicket-gate. He had no sooner passed through it than he was assailed by a house-dog. Having prevailed in this encounter, he pushed on, and reached the street, with some very reasonable apprehensions that the neighborhood would be alarmed by his adventures. He now threaded his way through an indirect route to his lodgings, passed unceremoniously to his chamber, and shut himself up for the night; but slept little or none, reflecting, with deep chagrin, on the strange conclusion of the day. On the morrow he hardly dared to venture out; but, while yet in his study, Mr. [illegible], one of the first citizens of Charleston, and a leading officer of a sister denomination, called at the house; he was admitted to the preacher's study with reluctance; but what was the astonishment of the latter to hear him say, that the sermon of the preceding evening had enabled him to step into the kingdom of God, after many years of disconsolate endeavors, during which he had been a member of the church. The same day a lady of influential family came to report the same glad tidings. Other similar examples occurred, I think, that morning; and this "failure" was one of the most useful sermons of his ministry.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

St. John.

St. John was the son of Zebedee, a fisherman, and of Salome. From the fact that Zebedee employed hired servants in his fishery, and from St. John's acquaintance with the high priest, and some other circumstances incidentally related, it would seem that St. John's family were in easy circumstances. At an early period of our Lord's ministry, John, with his brother James, was called to the apostleship.

It would seem that Salome, the mother of John and James, like most of her countrymen of that age, labored under the erronious impression that the Messiah's kingdom was to be an earthly kingdom. The Jews read in history of the Assyrian, the Persian, the Medean empires, which would be succeeded by a fourth empire of iron strength, and that in the days of the kings of this fourth dominion the God of Heaven would set a kingdom, of whose dominion and glory there should never be an end. To this fifth universal monarchy the Jews looked forward with the most longing solicitude. Jerusalem was to be the capital city of the empire of the world; and all tribes and nations were to be tributary to the chosen people of God. Salome desired that her two sons might sit, the one on the Saviour's right and the other on his left hand, in his kingdom; that is, enjoy places of the highest dignity in his government. This very natural manifestation of maternal solicitude and pride gave offence to the other disciples; for when the ten heard it, they were filled with indignation against the two brethren—their envious and jealous fears were fully aroused.

The disciples were but men, and previous to their inspiration on the day of Pentecost, often displayed their more human and national prejudices. They disputed at least once "who should be greatest," on which occasion Jesus called the twelve and said unto them—"If any man desire to be first, the same shall be least of all and servant of all. And he took a child and set him in the midst of them; and when he had taken him in his arms he said unto them, "whosoever shall receive one of such children in my name receiveth me, and whosoever receiveth me, receiveth not me, but him that sent me."

With the exception of St. Paul, St. John is the most voluminous of all the inspired writers of the New Testament. He was the inspired author of a Gospel, three Epistles, and the Apocalypse. St. John's Gospel is quite unlike the other three; while they devote a large space to telling what Jesus did, St. John's Gospel is, for the most part, devoted to writing what Jesus said. St. John's Gospel was written at a considerably later period than the other Gospels, and it was not necessary to repeat that which was already well known. But it was highly important to record those sublime and inimitable discourses with which the Gospel of John is enriched.

There is Divine wisdom in the development of the Gospel as it is written by the Evangelist. Men first needed to bear that Jesus had been in the world, and that his mission as the Son of God and our Saviour had been authenticated by miracles alike supernatural and beneficent. After this they would wish to hear and need to know what Jesus said and and taught.

The great points of Divine teaching peculiar to St. John's Gospel seem to be the mystic relation of the Father to the Son; of the Redeemer to believers; the promise of the Holy Ghost as the Comforter; and the great importance of love in the Christian system.

St. John, in common with all the disciples of the Lord, realized that in "the world ye have tribulation." For the word of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ, he tells us himself, that he was banished to the isle that was called Patmos. It is believed that he was banished by order of Domitian, the emperor of Rome. He was released from banishment, and spent his old age at Ephesus, in Asia Minor. He reached the good old age of an hundred years; or, as some say, one hundred and twenty years. Polycrates, bishop of Ephesus, writing A. D. 200, calls St. John a martyr; so that, it is possible, in extreme old age he suffered martyrdom.

From a remark made by our Lord, in answer to a question of Peter's in regard to John, a report went out that John was not to die—and this is the foundation of the fabulous tradition of the wandering, undying Jew—a tradition that has been the foundation of some of the most brilliant and powerfully written stories of modern times, especially those written by Croly and Sue.

From all that we can gather from the Gospels, from the writings of St. John, and from the tradition of the Church, St. John seems to have been a man in whom the "milk of human kindness" was richly and generously developed. We are certainly authorized, from inspiration and all observation to conclude that different men are, in all the possible aspects of character, differently constituted. While some are eloquent and mighty in the Scriptures, others are sons of thunder, and others are sons of consolation. Some men are gifted with gracious affability and kindliness of manner, that wins its way to the heart; to know them is to love them. So in the history of St. John. Our Lord Jesus Christ so loved all that he became poor, that we, through his poverty, might be made rich; yet did, as a man, love some men more than others. St. John is called "the disciple whom Jesus loved." What a eulogy upon the character of St. John! How does it tell forth all the sweet and the amiable traits of his benignant character! Jesus could weep over the ill-couring of a desolation of go wicked and persecuting city—he could bear without reviling or defence the buffeting and cruelty of his enemies; but John's was a character that called forth different emotions—he was the disciple whom Jesus loved.

In those pleasant domestic scenes where Jesus is represented as gathering his little family around his board, John is seen leaning upon his Master's bosom with the most affectionate and familiar confidence. Oh, what a privilege to feel the living throb of a heart vast enough to love a world, and generous enough to die to save it!

When the Saviour was upon his cross-bed of death, some of his friends, undismayed, love conquering fear, gathered round and looked and wept. Among them was Mary his mother, and the disciple whom he loved. Though in life's last trembling agony, he loved, in the pangs of death, those that he had loved in life. His hands were nailed and bleeding—he could not point, but he could look—a look that love could understand—and said to Mary, directing her to John, "Woman, behold thy Son;" and to the disciple whom he loved, "behold thy mother;" and from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home." Jesus knew that that disciple would be kind to his bereaved and venerable mother: and to that disciple what a delightful task was the care and comfort of the Mother of Jesus.

It is sometimes the case that the old, through many infirmities of body, through many disappointments and sorrows, become soured—the past only is good, all the present is wrong—and for its wrongs and errors the aged sometimes have little charity. To me it is a sad thing to see the aged bitter; but so it was not with St. John; his gentle and loving heart seemed to mellow and sweeten with age. Jerome tells us that when St. John was old and well stricken in years, too feeble to bear the weight of his trembling body, he would have the young men carry him to the Church, that he might say—and it was all he had strength to utter—"Little children, love one another:" his ruling passion strong even unto death.

Expository Preaching.

The sermon delivered by the far-famed Dr. J. M. Mason, on his taking his farewell of his Church, in Murray street, New York, to to engage in the Presidency of the Dickenson College, we well remember reading with much interest after it was published, and remember well his admonishing his people against any successor who should preach only from isolated texts; and having fallen in with an extract from this discourse relating to the latter, an in support of expository preaching, for which Dr. M. was so eminently distinguished, we here copy it for the benefit of our ministering brethren:

"Do not choose a man," says Dr. M., "who always preaches on isolated texts. I care not how powerful or eloquent he may be in handling them. The effect of his power and eloquence will be, to banish a taste for the word of God, and to substitute the preacher in its place. You have been accustomed to hear that word preached to you in its connection. Never permit that practice to drop. Foreign churches call it lecturing; and when done with discretion, I can assure you, that while it is of all exercises the most difficult for the preacher, it is, in the same proportion, the most profitable for you. It has this peculiar advantage, that in going through a book of Scripture, it spreads out before you all sorts of character, and all forms of opinion; and gives the preacher an opportunity of striking, at every kind of evil and error, without subjecting himself to the invidious suspicion of aiming his discourses at individuals."

We have frequently quoted the Doctor's practice in the articles we have occasionally written for twenty years past or more, in behalf of expository preaching, but only in substance; but here it is in his own words, and hope it will receive serious consideration, and that many may be induced to try it. Not only is a congregation essentially benefited by it, but the preacher is quite as much so. It involves as much discipline of mind as any course that can be adopted and nothing better can be found to improve a minister in ready extemporaneous performances. Dr. M. for many years hardly considered a man fit for a preacher who could not extemporize in the pulpit with readiness and force; and possibly, the great improvement he himself had derived from expository preaching—which had been a uniform practice with him one half the day from the early period of his ministry—may have had much to do in begetting this opinion. However, after his paralytic stroke in the pulpit, we believe his opinion underwent a considerable change, as he himself had to bring his notes into the pulpit, on account of the shock sustained by his memory.

As an expository preacher, he had no superior in the city, and when we made a visit there occasionally, the attraction was too strong to be resisted, and we were found perhaps oftener than we ought to have been, one of his auditors, fleeing absent from home, like others, in indulging ourself in a liberty we should not otherwise have allowed. Leaving our own place of worship for any other, however, when at home, we have never practiced, let the stranger who might hold forth be ever so distinguished; for we have thought it grossly inconsistent with our covenant relations to the Church in which we held our membership; still, were there a sound evangelical expositor within our reach, if we should be found one of his hearers occasionally when no service was held in our own chapel, we should hardly count ourselves transgressors. But to leave our own place of worship for any other, unless on some very extraordinary occasion, we should deem entirely inconsistent with our Christian profession—a shocking violation of a solemn covenant, and calling for pointed rebuke. Some, we fear, think lightly of covenant obligations, and that they may gratify their curiosity in going after a stranger, whether at home or abroad—we have not a charitable view of the gospel professions; and over the presence of Dr. Mason himself, with all his masterly expositions, would not divert us from the sanctuary to which we were solemnly pledged. An Alabama Camp Meeting Scene.

BRO. MCTYEIRE: During the autumn of my Presiding Eldership on the Talladega District, in 1850, I witnessed a camp meeting display which it has frequently occurred to me would be read with interest if written, and now, a little convalescent, after several weeks' illness, I have concluded to sketch it for you. The place is Cooper's camp ground, on the Tallapoosa River, in Randolph Co., Ala. The place is one of singular and romantic loveliness, in the almost enchanting mountain scenery of that section of our State. The people are, for the most part, from Georgia and North Carolina. Simple and unpretending in their manners, proverbial for their generous hospitality, and warm, faithful, and highly enthusiastic in their religion—a man could hardly backslide in such a country of humble, cheerful, joyful piety. I seldom, if ever, administered the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, without hearing the shout of glory, from many a faithful brother and sister.

It was the eleventh camp meeting I had attended, in as many weeks, and my physical powers were literally worn out. The Sacrament was administered, at 3 o'clock P. M., on the Sabbath. An overwhelming and glorious sense of the Divine presence pervaded the whole encampment. Christians were clapping their hands, and shouting from the altar to the very hills and hollows, as far on all sides, as voices could be heard. Heart-smitten sinners were lying, or kneeling in weeping and praying groups, in every direction.

Hours sped away, unobserved as the strains of the songs of Zion, as they reverberated from hill to hill, and from vale to vale. Twilight came, and the evening star shone out in the tranquil sky—but the songs of joy, the shouts of praise, and the wail of penitence still swelled up from every side. The trumpet at the "stand" was blown to call the people together—but they came not. An old mother in Israel turned to me and said: "O brother, Jesus is preaching, and you may go to your rest, for you look as though you needed rest, but I did need "rest," and though it was perhaps the most joyfully ecstatic evening I had ever seen, I concluded to go off, a half a mile, to brother Sims' to spend the night. It was but a few minutes ere "slumber's chains had bound me." After a few hour's of refreshing sleep, a sweet dream of the New Jerusalem, and the song of the heavenly harpers awoke me. My room was full of light, and a song, as sweet to my ear as tho one of which I had just dreamed, was rolling to the very vault of Heaven. Springing up, scarce knowing whether in the body, or out of it, what a scene of grandeur and wild sublimity, at once appeared! There were, I should say, two hundred blazing toroh-lights, and from fifteen hundred to two thousand people marching around the encampment, singing one of those delightful choral songs, which I have never heard except amongst our happy country Methodists. I scarce knew how, but I was soon in the ranks of the triumphal procession. There were no more mourners on the God-pervaded, salvation-ringing encampment. Fathers and sons, mothers and daughters, and husbands and wives, in happy embrace, were all marching together, filled with joy unspeakable, and full of glory—"Heaven their home," and "salvation to Jesus" their song.

It was believed that nearly three hundred found peace with God that night.

NEW ORLEANS:

Baptism—Public and Private.

At a late M. Protestant Conference in Georgetown, a member offered the following resolution. It was referred to committee, and we do not as yet know what became of it:

"Resolved, That no Minister of this Conference be censurable for refusing to administer the ordinance of baptism in private houses, except in cases of sickness."

Perhaps some may think that the increased amount of Pastoral labor incurred by administering the ordinance of baptism in private houses is the only considerable item. But this is, comparatively, a small matter. Like the Lord's Supper, Baptism becomes the Lord's house, and the Lord's house becomes it, and there it should be administered, unless sickness or other disability hinder. It is an impressive, edifying scene—parents presenting their children in the temple—there, in the presence of all the people, and before the altar, consecrating them to God. The rights of children to participate in the blessings of the Covenant should be openly proclaimed, and emphatically set forth. The Church is not ashamed of it; and these things ought not be done "in a corner."

It is objected by some that children will cry in the church, and interrupt the congregation, etc. But this cannot invalidate the claims of children to be recognized as members of the New Testament Church. Nor does it make it improper for them to be brought to the church. Crying is not an accident in children; it is natural. The description of the infant Moses in the ark, among the flags is completed when it said—"And, behold, the babe wept." Children cried under a former dispensation; and yet, they were permitted to see the inside of the House of God. We have no sympathy with the fastidiousness that raises this objection, and hope the House of God may never be profaned by any thing worse than the sound of infants' voices, and their public presentation for receiving the seal of that Covenant which God has made with us and our children.

In the case of adults: Those who have worn the old man publicly should "put him off" publicly, and in the sincerity of repentance would be apt to prefer this open act. How solemn is the ritual service! Few things can be said or enacted with more hallowing effect than a baptismal scene. If possible, it ought not to be lost upon a congregation. They are entitled to the heavenly benefit. The renunciation of the Devil and all his works, the vain pomp and glory of the world, with all covetous desires of the same, and the carnal desires of the flesh—how do these words, and many others, benefit even the members of the Church by reminding them of the engagements they have entered into, and the vows that are upon them.

RETURNING THANKS.—The foreign papers inform us that the Queen of Spain has recovered from her wounds and fright, and can hardly be thankful enough. Her Catholic Majesty's convalescence and gratitude were indicated by her presence—at a bull fight.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.—The letter of our French correspondent will richly repay perusal. It points to a few bright spots in the present lamentable state of France. Christians may well pray that God would overrule this troubled state of things, this violence to his glory, and by these political convulsions open great and effectual doors for the promulgation of his pure Gospel.

A CHURCH BUILT BY ONE FAMILY.—The Episcopal Recorder contains an interesting account of the consecration of a church in Augusta, Georgia, which was built by a family of three individuals, "as a thank-offering to Almighty God for the blessings he has visited upon their worldly substance." How vividly, adds the editor, are we reminded of our Lord's inquiry: "Were there not ten cleansed; where are the nine?" The expense in completing this sanctuary, was Ten Thousand Dollars.

CALIFORNIA MISSIONARIES.—M. E. Church, South.—From the Christian Observer, February 11, we clip the following information:

"The steamer Oregon arrived on Wednesday, between 10 and 11 o'clock A. M., having 439 passengers, among whom were 38 women and 28 children, and four missionaries. Three of the missionaries, A. M. Bailey, Morris Evans and Jas. M. Fulton, are from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and one, the Rev. G. S. Phillips, of the Church, North. The former are stationed as follows: A. M. Bailey, Stockton; Morris Evans, San Francisco; and Jas. M. Fulton, Grass Valley. We understand that the Rev. G. S. Phillips will be stationed in this city. Some eight or ten more missionaries of the Church, South, are on route for this country, and will arrive in the course of a few weeks."

PROTESTANT BISHOPRIC OF JERUSALEM.—This bishopric, which was founded ten years since at Jerusalem, under the protection of England and Prussia, having become vacant, will now be filled by a prelate chosen by the King of Prussia. M. Valentiner, a Schleswig ecclesiastic, who had been obliged to quit his country in consequence of political events, has been selected for the post. He had just left Berlin for Trieste, whence he will embark for his destination.

THE CONFERENCES of the M. E. Church, North, draw on the Book Concern this year for only $400.

Baltimore Conference.

Baltimore Conference met on Wednesday, March 3, in Cumberland, Maryland, Bishop Janes presiding, assisted by Bishop Waugh. The Rev. J. Collins was elected secretary. The election for delegates to the General Conference resulted in the choice of N. J. B. Morgan, Alfred Griffith, John Davis, Norval Wilson, John A. Collins, John Bear, Henry Slicer, John A. Gere, S. S. Roszell, Aquila A. Reese, Charles B. Tippett, B. N. Brown. Reserves: E. R. Veitch, George Hildt.

Rev. J. A. Collins submitted a paper on the subject of dividing the Conference, to which were appended several resolutions:

Respectfully soliciting the ensuing General Conference not to divide the Baltimore Annual Conference.

That it ought not to be divided at present.

If the General Conference evince a disposition to divide it, that it be by such line as the delegates from the Conference may determine. [The purport of this is, that there be no amputation.]

That a committee of five be elected by ballot to draft a memorial embodying the above, in a petition to the General Conference to grant this request.

A substitute was adopted, appointing a committee of one from each district, (ten in number) by the chair, to take charge of the whole subject.

The death of Rev. J. White was reported by Rev. Bear, and Rev. S. McMullin stated that he was with him in his last moments. His attack was sudden, severe, and unyielding. His last words were: "That Gospel which I have preached to others, now in view of the Judgment, sustains my spirit. Tell the preachers of my unabated love for them, and that I die in the faith of the Gospel—Hallelujah! Hallelujah!" And his Joshua divided the waters, and he passed over to his God. He was one of the best of men.

Rev. Dr. Peck presented a neat and comprehensive report of Dickinson College. The number of students, the past year, has exceeded the previous by twenty-four, the financial condition better, and the moral also much improved.

A letter was presented from Lane & Scott, containing the annual report of the book concern in New York. It represented the concern in good condition, the proceeds the past year exceeding $60,000. The annual report of the book concern in Cincinnati, Ohio, was also read, and that establishment is also in a prosperous condition. Its assets are $187,545, and profits the past year $15,000.

The Bishop called the names of those who had been on probation two years, for Deacon's order and full connexion.

The name of G. A. Coffey was called, when a long and adroitly, though ingeniously written letter was presented from him, in which he stated that he had imbibed Socinian doctrines, and with his credentials of ordination resigned the office of minister of the gospel.

The ordinations of T. Mercer, recently from the Protestant Methodist Church, was recognized; also, the ordination of J. Hildebrand, formerly of the same Church.

CHOLERA IN TEXAS.—A private letter from Huntsville, Texas, informs us that there were several cases of the Asiatic cholera in that place. Several persons have already fallen victims. It seemed to be more fatal among the negroes than among the whites. [T. W. Banner.

MACREADY'S OPINION OF THE STAGE AS A SCHOOL OF MORALS.—A correspondent vouches for the truth of the following statement: Mr. Macready, the eminent tragedian, now resides at Sherborne, in the bosom of a most interesting family of 12 children. Among many excellent rules for the government of his family, is one from which, it is said, he has never deviated. It is that no one of his children should ever, on any pretence, enter a theatre, or have any visiting connection with actors or actresses. [Chris. Times.

What kind of a father would he be if, knowing the theatre and its hangers-on as he does, he did not adopt such a rule. He knows it too well not to know that it is the way to hell, going down by the chambers of death; and all the paid puffs of all the editors in Christendom can't alter it. Macready knows the moral and social tendency of all the paraphernalia of his former exploits, as well as Walter Scott did that of his novels, which he was so careful to keep out of the hands of his children. Others with a tenth of his sense could not only point out the exact localities described by the author, though utterly unknown to him, but could see a fine moral tendency in all his writings! Under this impression Washington Irving thought he was paying Scott a fine compliment, by sending his daughters a copy of the father's poems. But the father soon gave him to know that his labor of love won no thanks from him, as he had made it a point to keep his writings from their knowledge!

ANECDOTE OF THE SULTAN.—Late letters from Constantinople relate an anecdote of the Sultan which is quite worthy of the Arabian Nights. A rich Armenian had lost a portfolio containing 400,000 piasters, and for which he offered a reward of 30,000. The portfolio was found, and the reward claimed by a very honest and poor old man; but the Armenian, in order to escape payment, then declared that the portfolio also contained a very valuable ring which the old man must have stolen. The affair was brought before the Sultan, who having ascertained the honesty of the old man and the well-known avarice of his adversary, decided that, as the Armenian declared that his portfolio contained a ring, this could not be the one he had lost, and that he had better return it to old man and continue to advertise for his own.

MISSIONARIES TO THE PACIFIC.—The following Methodist Episcopal missionaries will sail on the 9th of April for California, in company with the Rev. John Dillon, of the Ohio Conference, whose destination is Oregon: Revs. James Hunter, A. S. Gibbons, Elijah Merchant, W. J. Mackey, from the Baltimore Conference; J. Swaney from the Pittsburgh, and J. D. Blaine from the NewJersey Conference.

A NEW TEMPERANCE LAW.—A petition is being signed in NewYork, praying the Legislature to pass a law by which any person found drunk is liable to be arrested and be taken when sober before a magistrate, who shall ascertain from where the liquor was obtained. The seller in such cases shall be fined in a sum not less than $25, and not more than $100.

METHODIST PRESS.

CHRISTIAN OBSERVER.—Dr. Boring has changed the name of the San Francisco Ch. Advocate to "Christian Observer." This was done to avoid confusion in exchanges, etc., with the California Ch. Advocate, published at the same place. The paper is a beautiful and interesting sheet. The editor seems in fine heart. He says:

"Our hearts are greatly encouraged by the recruits arrived, and those now upon their way. Let the members of the Church throughout the country rally, and, as far as possible, prepare for the coming missionaries, by forming themselves into societies, fitting up rooms for preaching, and reporting to the Rev. Green Woods, traveling agent, or to the editor in this city.

"It is very desirable to have all the information possible in regard to the residences, localities, etc., of our brethren and friends by the 1st, or at the furthest, 10th of April.

"Let every member and friend of the Church do his duty, and we shall soon have all the privileges and facilities of a regularly organized Annual Conference, and feel ourselves no longer strangers and sojourners in a strange land."

ANOTHER BOOK ON BAPTISM.—It seems, and we note the fact with pleasure, that Methodist literature is like to be well supplied on this subject, and from our ablest writers. Dr. Lee, referring to Dr. Summer's forthcoming volume, says:

"But, as the Doctor's work is so general, we hope to find a place in the affections of the great reading public for one of our own that may one day see the light, devoted exclusively to infant baptism, but altogether distinct in plan and execution from the articles we are writing in the Advocate. We may be excused for making this statement, as the occasion offers so good an opportunity to give this reply to many who have requested us to republish our articles in a more permanent form."

THE NEW TRANSLATION.—The churches in the West are specially troubled by this sectarian agitation. In the last number of the Memphis Advocate, Rev. S. J. Henderson begins a series of articles on the subject, in the right quarter and in excellent style. He asks:

"Is a new version of the Holy Scriptures necessary in order to understand the Scriptures?"

And in the course of his essay he remarks:

"But the paramount reason of these essays lies in the importance of holding fast the present translation until we shall see whether the object of the new translation is, as is pretended, to 'obtain the pure Word of God,' or to give currency to some denominational dogmas, by fraudulently and unwarrantably incorporating them with the inspired text."

BUNCOMB SYMPATHY.—The Christian Guardian, an able Wesleyan paper, published in Toronto, Canada, thus aptly "hits off" those numerous prints of other churches that are so much taken up with Methodist affairs, complaining in behalf of the poor, oppressed laity! pitying them and indignating at those who are lording over God's heritage! etc. Hear:

"Why this hue and cry raised against Methodist polity? Why so many strong appeals to the American people? Why so many deadly thrusts aimed at our bishops and ministers; and why are they denounced as 'popes, hierarchs, aristocrats, tyrants,' etc! The secret lies below the surface. Methodist doctrines were once the but of ridicule; but our enemies exhausted all their strength here in vain. Now they must needs attack our government, and for the reason that our plan is very efficient and successful. They see the great Methodist car rolling on; guided by our bishops and officered by our ministers, it moves with a velocity unparalleled in the history of the modern Church. The glorious itinerant plan sends our preachers every where; and fired with a zeal for God and the salvation of souls, they make thousands of converts and increase their numbers beyond example, and wield an influence where others are unknown. This orettes in the minds of sectarian bigots jealousy and envy, and they determine to close those wheels, to stop that moving machine, and thus end the success of the Methodists. Sympathy for Methodist laity! It is all feigned. Despotic government! It is all for the popular ear. Republican Christianity! It is all for 'Buncomb,' as politicians would say."

VAIN WORK—PITY! PITY!—Perhaps our brethren of the Arkansas Conference, who are quietly doing their Master's work, little dream (and little care) of the designs of absorption entertained concerning them by a few preachers of the M. E. Church, North. One Mr. Bird, a P. Elder of unknown extent out there, thus reports to the Illinois Ch. Advocate, his success in keeping good "old Methodism" on its legs in that quarter. Are our brethren not alarmed? Mr. Bird says:

"I find a great many who were once members of the old Church now in the Cumberland Presbyterian and other churches, who would not go into the Church, South; and I have no doubt but many of them will return if we can get an Arkansas Conference—which we are trying for; it is true: the notions of Judge Nelson have astonished us, and have created a sort of suspicion in the minds of some of the friends of old Methodism, but we regard it but momentary, comparatively speaking, as we believe the Church will take an appeal, and all will be set right, and such a slander not suffered to remain upon our fair Methodism. But be this as it may, there are hundreds in this country who will never go into the Church, South. And the brethren, in order to exhibit their views to the delegates of the next General Conference, have have gotten up the following preamble and resolutions:

"The Committee appointed by the Quarterly Meeting Conference of the Batesville mission, Missouri Annual Conference, to memorialize the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church relative to the propriety of erecting an Arkansas Annual Conference, beg leave respectfully to present the following report:

"Whereas, from all the information we have been enabled to obtain, from personal observation and the representations of others, whose positions in the Church entitle their opinion to respect, it appears that her condition, wants and increasing interests in this country are such as to justify, and in our opinion imperiously demand, in view of her future success in carrying the grand designs of the Gospel into effect, a separate annual Conference; therefore,

"Resolved, By this Conference, that the General Conference of the M. E. Church, to be held in the city of Boston in May next, be and hereby is respectfully requested to constitute an Arkansas Annual Conference, embracing the States of Arkansas and Texas, and all the intervening Indian Territory, together with that portion of the State of Missouri now included in the Arkansas district."

LITERARY NOTICES.

EXPEDITION TO THE DEAD SEA AND THE JORDAN. By W. F. Lynch, U. S. N., Commander of the Expedition, with maps and numerous illustrations. Philadelphia: Lea & Blanchard. 8vo. pp. 509.

The copy furnished our table by the publishers, is of the seventh edition of this work. The print is large, the paper white and strong, and the engravings in the best style of the art. As a national work—the narrative of an Expedition undertaken by our Government—it is universally acknowledged to be highly creditable. The river Jordan, with its wondrous reservoir, the Dead Sea, teeming with sacred associations, have never before been so thoroughly and satisfactorily explored. It should be in the library of every Biblical student.

We are indebted to some unknown friend for a copy of the Address of Rev. F. L. B. Shaver, delivered in this city January 23, before the M. W. Grand Lodge of Louisiana. Mr. S. handsomely eulogizes Masonry for her interest in education. He is President of the Masonic College of Missouri, located in Lexington, and an institution exhibiting encouraging statistics. The President, in a late tour South, has made a highly favorable impression in behalf of the College.

Prayer for Servants.

A missionary in Alabama, in a late communication, makes some valuable suggestions on an important subject, and the case he gives, it is hoped, may lead many pious masters, by the light of example, to doing their full duty. [Ed.

"I have a plan for pious masters. It is in use, also, by a good brother of my acquaintance. Every morning (circumstances permitting) about light, a bell rings for all hands to get up, and soon after another bell rings for all the servants to assemble at one of the servants' houses for prayers. While the master is praying with the servants, the white family is getting ready for worship in the house. At night, between 8 and 9 o'clock, the bell rings for religious worship on the "quarter." Should any of the servants fail to attend prayers at the quarter, without good excuse, they must come to the house and unite with the whites in worship.

"Masters, what do you think of the plan? I think those who have not a better, would do well to adopt it, and those who have no plan at all, would greatly improve matters to do likewise. It makes it more agreeable on the part of servants generally to meet them at their own houses. Many of them are very much cramped when required to come into their master's dwelling. They know "Mistress" don't like to have her clean floor or rich carpet soiled. All this is avoided when they meet in their own cabins; and then for their master to come to their houses, with God's book, and there read, sing and pray with them, impresses them with the fact that he cares for their souls, and wishes them to unite with him in God's service here, and live with him in God's kingdom hereafter, which can not fail to be productive of much good to them." A.

THE DISCOVERY OF ETHER.—The committee of the House of Representatives, it is said, have decided upon awarding $100,000 to Dr. Morton, of Boston, for his discovery, thus settling his right to that discovery. Dr. Morton, it is also stated, has caused his competitor, Dr. Jackson, to be arrested in Washington for a libel, growing out of the controversy between them.

PARIS CORRESPONDENCE.

PARIS, February 19, 1852.

I have just received the N. O. Christian Advocate for January 17, and beg to enter my protest against the general tone of the letter written by your English correspondent on French politics. I also demur to some of his statements, because they are not exact, and it is but just to give every one his due. Louis Napoleon has not "sprung forth with desperate resolve as the antagonist of liberty and constitutionalism;" but of anarchy and licentiousness, and I thank him for it. He did not invent "the two conspiracies which were to have broken out." The first of these has been confessed to by Cavaignac, Thiers, and Gen. Bedeau. The existence of the second is a well-known fact, sufficiently attested by the insurrections of Central France. The Socialists were making extensive preparations for the month of January or May, and they were determined to have the upperhand by force, if not by intimidation or universal suffrage. In some of the Southern Departments above 40,000 men were already enrolled in secret political societies. Had not the "coup d'etat" saved the country, France would probably be given up at the present moment to pillage and anarchy. This I know, not from the Government papers, which only give one-sided views of the matter, but from correspondence with my friends in the South, and from conversations with persons who were in these Departments some weeks ago.

Again: it cannot be said that Napoleon "most of all hates and fears constitutionalism, the only effectual tie of tyrants, the only cure of tyranny." On the contrary, he has given a Constitution, superior in many respects to the preceding one; and now, that the Senate and the Council of State are constituted, the law has again taken its empire and authority, and he simply remains President of the French Republic for ten years, according to the will of 7,000,000 of electors.

I do not think it very "significant that the High Church Popish party, in the person of the Count of Montalembert, and by its Jesuit organ l'Univers, has given in its cordial adhesion to the usurper." The Popish Church has always extolled the stronger party. It did so in '48, and in '30, as well as in '51. Napoleon has not "shown himself to be a good son of the Church;" for he has displeased Montalembert and the Univers by granting full religious liberty to Protestants, whether national or dissenting; he has banished from Paris the Abbe Lacordaire, the most eloquent of Romish preachers, for having mentioned politics in his sermons; he has allowed Protestants to enter the State, and has not stopped one of the organs of Protestantism, whilst many of the avowed papers of Popery have been repeatedly warned.

As to such men as Leon Faucher, Berryer, Odillon Barrot, and "that clever and popular scamp, Thiers," being now excluded from Government, far from regretting it, as your Loudon correspondent does, I heartily rejoice in it; for they were not "the strength of society, the guard of freedom, the hope of France." Leon Faucher was, when a Minister, three or four times convicted of deliberate falsehoods; his only principles seemed to be to get to the top of affairs, and to remain there, no matter how. Berryer is the leader of the Legitimist party, which endeavors to bring back to the throne of France Henry V, and with him, the despotism of Popery, and the persecuting spirit of Louis XIV's reign. The less we have to do with Thiers the better. But Guizot is not lost to France; he has lately come to Paris, whereas, he formerly resided in the country, altogether retired from public life. Cavaignac, the best, perhaps, of the men of name mentioned by X. Y. has been liberated, and is actually said to be a candidate for Paris to the Legislative Assembly. Intelligent and practiced political men are not so very scarce in France, that the President should not be able to have "a government, ministers, embassadors, debaters, etc."

Let it be understood that I do not pretend to exonerate Napoleon from all the charges made against him. His antecedents are very bad; the affray of Boulogne, in which he killed an officer, can not be forgotten; his private life is immoral. The "coup d'etat" of the 2d December, is an illegal act, however necessary it may have been to protect France against Socialism. It is to be feared that he has taken, in some instances, an advantage of the full powers granted to him by the people; he has no doubt gone a great deal too far in his restrictions on the political press; he has alienated many of his partizans by confiscating part of the property of the Orleans family, (they still own 100 millions of francs, i. e. 20 millions of dollars) and by the organization of the Ministry of Police, which is nothing more than a general system of espionage applied to all the Government officers in France.

On the other hand, he has plainly refused to give himself up to the Popish party, and he has granted us full religious liberty. The Constitution is very clear on this subject. It is based on the principles laid down by the revolution of '89, amongst which is the following: "The liberty of worship is guaranteed by the Constitution. No magistrate can interfere with it; no man can say to another, Thou shalt exercise such a worship, thou shalt exercise it on such a day." The Emperor Napoleon maintained this principle, notwithstanding the opposition of the Pope; he struck out from the royal oath the sentence by which the ancient kings of France swore "to exterminate heretics," and he introduced into the oath he took as Emperor, the following clause: "I swear to respect the liberty of worship." After his coronation, a Protestant deputation having been introduced to him, the Emperor said: "I wish it to be known that, my intention and positive will are to maintain the liberty of worship. The empire of the law finishes where the indefinite empire of the conscience begins; neither the law nor the prince can do any thing against this liberty. Such are my principles and those of the nation; and should any member of my family, being my successor, forget the oath I have taken; should he, deceived by the inspiration of a false conscience, violate it, I devote him to public animadversion, and I authorize you to call him a Nero."

The nephew of the Emperor seems to have remembered these words. The 26th article of the new Constitution declares that "it is the duty of the Senate to oppose the promulgation of such laws as would be contrary to, or would interfere with, liberty of worship." It is further worthy of remark, that whilst the former Constitutions recognized the Romish religion as that of the majority of the French, this one does not say a word about it, and the tribunals can therefore no more distinguish between the ministers of the Popish religion and those of the various Protestant communions. No wonder, then, that addresses have been sent to the President from forty-two Consistories of the Protestant Reformed churches.

This actual religious liberty (long may it last!) explains why, on New Year's eve, we have for the first time dared to hold public watch nights in our Paris Wesleyan chapels; why we have not been afraid to form the Sunday School Society, and the Young Men's Association, mentioned in my last; why the Independents have held their Synod in Paris, under the state of siege, without being in the least molested; why the Wesleyan Missionary Anniversaries, just over in Paris, are the best we ever had.

I need not repeat what I said a month ago on the Sunday School Society, and the Young Men's Christian Association. But the Synod of the Independent Churches deserves to be briefly noticed.

Whilst the National Reformed Churches, salaried by the State, receive as members, all baptized persons, and exercise no discipline whatever over them, the Independent, or dissenting Churches, hold that no man can be received as a member of a church, without making an individual profession of faith, and as a guarantee of this individual profession of faith, they believe it is wrong for a church to receive any grant from Government to admit catechumens to the Lord's Supper at a fixed age, without inquiring into their moral and religious state. The oldest of these churches were formed in 1830. Their number increased very slowly, and in '48 there were only eight in France. But when the Republic was proclaimed throughout the whole French Territory, the political agitation was followed by a very great religious agitation amongst the Protestants of the Reformed Churches. The various tendencies which had developed themselves in their midst, agreed to ask the Government for a reconstitution of their churches, and a General Synod was convened in Paris, in order to prepare the project of an organic law, which would be presented to the Government for acceptation. In this Synod, a great variety of opinions were brought out. The Latitudinarians, who were in a majority, opposed any confession of faith. Some evangelical men did not know whether it was expedient to make one. Others, in a very small minority, headed by Pastor Frederick Monod, declared that they could not conscientiously remain in the National Church, if the Synod did not highly proclaim the necessity of a clear profession of faith and of Christian discipline. They were of course unable to carry their point, they therefore withdrew, formed, at once independent churches, made an appeal to those already formed, and on the 20th August, 1849, a Constituent Free Synod met in Paris, composed of 34 Laymen and Ministers, who represented 13 churches already formed, and 15 others in course of formation. This first Synod formed what was called a Union of the Evangelical Churches of France, based on the principle of a complete independence of each church, for all that relates to the forms of worship, of discipline and of organization. There is, however, a general confession of faith, which is Calvinistic. The Synod regulates what relates to the theological studies of candidates to the ministry, to religious liberty, and to certain Christian enterprises, carried on in common by all the churches of the Union, such as missions, evangelization, etc. It has a fund, supported by voluntary contributions, and intended to pay the general expenses of the churches, and to help those that cannot yet bear the whole of their local expenses.

The Synod which has just been held in Paris, is the third. It was composed of 32 Representatives of 18 churches. The number of members contained in the churches is about 1,000, who have subscribed for their local expenses more than $6,000. As this is far less than the expenses, considerable sums have been collected in England, Scotland and the United States. Amongst the most important decisions of this Synod, is the nomination of a Committee of Evangelization, which is to employ evangelists and traveling preachers in places where the number of dissenters are not large enough to form a self-supporting church. Whilst, as a Methodist, I cannot approve of the organization of the dissenting churches, nor of their confession of faith, still I believe they are doing a great deal of good in this country. They will considerably help us in propagating the voluntary principle. Since the formation of the Evangelical Alliance, they have maintained very friendly relations with the Wesleyan Methodists.

Our Paris Anniversary Meetings in behalf of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, are just over. They have been exceedingly well attended, the speeches were good, and the collections abundant. During the past year, our collections have been more zealous; our Christmas Juvenile Offerings, introduced for the first time this year in the circuit, have produced $70, and amongst the names returned on the children collecting cards, we have been surprised to see those of Prince and Princess Murat, and Princess Mathilda, a cousin of the President. All these aiding, our Missionary receipts for 1851, are about $200 in advance of last year.

The new Italian paper, la Buona Novella, edited by our Christian friends at Piedmont, has been honored with the excommunication of the Popish Bishop of Mondovi. The result has been an increase of 700 copies in the sales. The Pope, highly discontented, has put it in the Inde-Expurgatory. The Buona Novella seems highly pleased at this, as it will cause it to be read by many more persons.

The President issued, yesterday his new law on the press, which had been long expected. It is very severe, but for political papers only. Religious, scientific, and literary papers will only suffer a slight increase in the stamp duty.

PAPAL TESTIMONY.—The Abbe Migne, in the Voix de la Verite, one of the organs of the Papists in France, has been lately directing attention to the Methodists. He is guilty of many errors respecting our body in his review, but we find such statements as the following, which, coming from a Romish ecclesiastic, may not be deemed uninteresting:

"The strength of the Methodists is the result of their zeal. They do not wait for the people to come to them, but go after them. They go from house to house, doing good temporally and spiritually.

"Their missionaries are numerous and spread in every part of the world. They propagate their doctrines by means of Sunday Schools, Bible distributions, religious books and newspapers.

"We do not deny the good faith, and the chances of salvation, of many Methodists.

"In other circumstances Wesley would have become the founder of an order, or a reforming pope. His zeal is the confirmation of the words of St. John Chrysostom, that 'one man, animated with the zeal of God is sufficient to change a whole country,' for thousands of men, imitating John Wesley, have for more than a century, given life to the living Protestantism of England and the United States, and still excite by their religious activity, the astonishment of all creeds."

This is a remarkable testimony. The Papal leaders both here and in England dread Methodism. It is their most formidable competitor among the masses. [Z. Herald.

Ladies' Bible Society of Plaquemine.

DEAR BRO. MCTYEIRE: We have just been favored with a visit from Rev. E. H. Hatcher, Agent American Bible Society, which has resulted in the organization of a Ladies' Bible Society. Brother H. was with us but a few days, and though in very feeble health, was diligently employed in the business of his agency.

On Saturday some preliminary arrangements were made, and on Sabbath last two Protestant congregations met in the Presbyterian Church, and after a sermon from Rev. Mr. Wayne, the pastor, presenting the benefits of the Bible, and urging upon all the duty of circulating it, "The Ladies' Bible Society of Plaquemine" was organized, by adopting a constitution and electing the following officers: Mrs. Almira Dickenson, President; Mrs. Eliza Reams and Mrs. Lavinia Gay, V. Presidents; Miss L. Kingman, Secretary, and Miss E. Bond, Treasurer.

Almost every lady in the house became a contributing member—the collection amounted to about $75, with promises of more. This result was gratifying to the worthy agent, and all lovers of the Bible.

I trust this, and the recent organization at Thibodaux, are but the prelude to a great movement on this subject. The vast amount of good that may be done by these auxiliaries throughout the country, can not be estimated until the last great day, when the Books are opened! I am astonished to see some who call themselves Christians, hesitate in a movement of this kind. Why, how long should it take a Christian to determine that it is his duty to circulate the Bible! It seems to me a simple knowledge of the destitution is sufficient to bring the matter home to him at once. But this knowledge is not general; many men do not know the need of active effort in the circulation of this blessed book; they have several Bibles lying about their houses; many more, perhaps, than are read, or even preserved, and they think not how many are without.

I speak not of the destitute Hottentot, but of citizens of our own State. Mr. Editor, will you or your readers believe me, when I say that I know of men and women, over twenty-one years of age, born and raised in this State, who never saw a Bible, do not know what it is, or from whence it came! 'Tis even so, and these persons live within twenty miles or less of flourishing churches. This is but one instance of many. Add to this the thousands from whom the Bible has been withheld as a matter of religious policy, and we find that the destitution is great, even at home! Here, then, is a field worthy the greatest exertion, and from it comes up a call worthy the liberality of those who are able to help. God bless the rich with generous hearts, to give of their abundance to this good cause! I firmly believe, in the great day of judgment, many rich Christians will wish they had given to the Lord a better interest on the loan he has made them. Success to the New Orleans Bible House! Yours, truly,

A. E. GOODWIN

Brevities.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Bishop Hughes is pouring forth words and sweat to prove that this is not a Protestant country! It would be a great relief to him, and many others, could he succeed. For wherever Popery holds sway in every other part of the world, it has carried such an unmitigated civil, social and moral curse with it, that it is very desirable to have one green spot on which the eye may rest, and for this the bishop labors. Could he convince the world that the prosperity, intelligence and greatness of the United States is not attributable to Protestantism, it would be more than a Kossuth feather in his cap, and hasten his Cardinal's hat which is so long in coming. There is nothing like trying, and the accomplishment of this would not be a greater falsification of history than Papists are guilty of continually to keep themselves in countenance.

Moore, the celebrated Irish poet, is dead. His friends, and parvenues generally, will make great lamentation over him, as similar classes are now making over J. F. Cooper, neither of whom ever planted a virtue in human nature, or wrote a line of permanent value to the race. Yet a Mobile editor has expressed the remarkable, not to say shameful sentiment, that Cooper never wrote a line which, dying, he wished to blot. Cooper knows far better about it now, than his misguisers. H.

The Clerical Impostor—Again.

In glancing over the Baltimore Clipper last week, the following bit of biographical history turned up. John Wesley, or John Wesley Green, is not unknown in the South. His smartness needs no endorsement, has given our Presbyterian and Baptist friends a touch this time. Even the Children of the World have not been wise enough for him. The Church should guard well her name, her pulpit, and sacred places. The impostor preachers going through the land, without character in this day of order and organization, may be set down prima facie, as not of the right sort. It is not impossible, impolitic, un-ministerial or un-Christian to require good proof of them before receiving them. Read the praise of the Church of Ephesus, and one of her praises—"Thou has tried them which say they are liars, and hast found them liars."

THE SWINDLE GREEN.—We announced in a few days since that a fellow calling himself Green had perpetrated some outrageous swindles in Philadelphia by representing himself as a U. S. Mail Agent. The following particulars will prove of interest, as Mr. Green figured some in this vicinity:

He went by the names of John W. Green, John

also Rev. J. W. Green, and represented himself as having held for the last twelve years, and still holding, the situation of U. S. Mail Agent. Also represented himself as an elder and a local preacher in the M. E. Church. He has preached in the Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian churches in this city, and was known four years ago, in Cincinnati, Ohio, as a minister.

A woman and two children were with him, whom he claimed as his wife and family. He was engaged in preaching almost in several churches of different denominations almost constantly, and stated that, after having struggled with numerous difficulties in the West, he had succeeded in acquiring a snug and comfortable little place in Cincinnati, having paid for the property out of his salary from the Government, which was $3,000 a year.

His object in coming to Philadelphia, he stated, was for the purpose of employing secret deputy agents on the great Southern mail line between New York and New Orleans.

He chose a gentleman for each situation; this one to California was to get $3,000; the agent of one of the routes through the Southern States $1,800, with extras to make up $2,000, or $2,500; all the others $1200 with perquisites.

The 15th of this month was the day fixed on for all the parties to meet Mr. Green in Washington, to enter upon their duties, their salaries to commence on the 1st inst., dating back. By previous arrangement, they were to be ready with their surveillance at that time. Some of them had secured bondsmen worth $10,000.

Under date of Washington, March 1st, 1852, each one of the gentlemen engaged received through the Philadelphia post-office a communication stating that the necessary documents for their appointments were all filed.

A postscript informed them that it was customary when men got into situations, as they had been so lucky to obtain, to make Bobbin a present; he got from each of this to make Major Bobbin a present; he got from each of three for the pretended purpose, from $25 to $50. He also borrowed some of money from other persons, and bought articles on the credit of one or two gentlemen. Among the articles were two handsome gold levers, chains, and key.

All of the swindled persons were egregiously deceived; they gave up their situations, and sold every thing they had; and the worst feature of the case is, that with three exceptions, the persons thrown out of employment were men of limited means.

He is represented as being a very smart, intelligent man, and a popular preacher. Last fall he worked in Philadelphia painting the dials of gas meters, when he got money under false pretences and made off.

DIED—In this city, Thursday, March 25, WILLIAM D., son of Enoch and Florida Everett, aged two years and two months.

DIED—At Richardson Place, in the Parish of St. Mary, on Sunday, the 29th ult., of typhoid fever, following an attack of measles, DANIEL D. B. RICHARDSON, Jr., only son of Daniel Du Bose and Mary Rebecca Richardson, aged one year, six months and twenty-two days.

St. Mary's, La. J. W. R.

Sweet spirit to thy blessed abode—
Back to thine everlasting home,
For 'tis not meet so fair a bud
Should blossom in this world of gloom.

Away, on rapid wing return,
God wills thy stay on earth be brief;
Go, ere those mirthless lips shall learn—
To lisp the dialect of grief.

Away, ere sorrows wave of night
Shall o'er thy peaceful bosom roll,
Or sin has left its mildewed blight
Upon thy pure and spotless soul.

The angel band is hovering near,
To bear thy gentle soul above,
To shine amid the jewels fair
That gild the diadem of love.

Away, then, to thy native skies;
Back to the bosom of thy God;
Nor let our fond, imploring eyes,
Detain thee from thy blessed abode.

Thou 'rt gone! the tender tie is riven
That bound thy gentle spirit here,
But Hope, sweet angel, points to heaven,
And whispers we shall meet him there.

INCREASE OF THE MORMONS AT SALT LAKE.—We see it stated in some of the Western journals, that a vast emigration is expected to go westwardly, from the valley of the Mississippi, during the ensuing summer, towards the desert of Utah—the home of the Mormons—the number of these emigrants from the North and Eastern States, alone, being estimated at five or six thousand persons. In addition to this emigration, we may state that a vast accession will also cross the Atlantic from Europe, to the same destination—probably of an equal, if not superior extent.

From all sources, it is generally estimated that, during the present year, ten thousand persons, if not more, will be added to the population of Utah territory—all blending and mingling with the Mormon church and the Mormon movements in that region. According to the last census, the Mormons numbered about twelve thousand persons; but from recent sources of intelligence, we are led to believe that at present they reach twenty thousand, and, with the additional emigration expected during the present year, they will probably soon be over thirty, and will be rapidly growing on forty thousand persons, of all sexes, believing in the Mormon creed, promoting the plurality of wives—seven to each man—and having faith that Joe Smith was a prophet of God for these latter days.

The rise, growth, increase, principles, and practices of Mormonism will soon begin to call the attention of the rest of the nation, and more especially of Congress, to its singularity, its position, and its menaces. Already they form a society stimulated by the deepest feelings of faith or fanaticism in their own creed and practices. These principles and that creed are utterly hostile to the rest of the Union, and must be the cause, one of these days, of some serious emeute, unless steps are taken in time to provide a remedy before the evil is too great for the grappling of Congress.

PORTRAIT OF HUMBOLDT.—We find in the Boston Traveler the following:—There are some fifty Americans now in Berlin. Many of them are students. Every month, more or less, letters are brought from them to this country. Several epistles, lately received, state that the celebrated Von Humboldt has sat for his last portrait. It took place in Berlin during the past month. The honor of executing the work was conferred upon an American—a young artist from Boston. He left this city last summer, after visiting all the principal private and public galleries in England, and receiving marked attention from amateurs and others. He visited those of Paris. From the latter city he went to Berlin. He had been there but a few days before he painted a portrait of the American minister in that metropolis. The picture was executed in so admirable a manner as to attract great attention, and it was immediately decided that he should paint the portrait of Baron Von Humboldt. The name of this fortunate artist is M. Wight.

PLANS OF INTERCOMMUNICATION.—A correspondent of the National Intelligencer proposes the construction of a railroad of forty miles from Washington to the Point of Rocks, there to connect with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; the establishment of a line of steamers from Washington, via Norfolk and the Canary Islands, to Cadiz, and thence up the Mediterranean to Constantinople; and the building of a railroad from the Missouri river to the Rocky Mountains, there to meet a similar road from the Pacific shore.

SUNSHINE AND SHADOWS....BY FINLEY JOHNSON.

Within this changing world of ours
Are griefs and pleasures blended;
And bright and sunny days are oft
By darker ones attended.
And therefore man should never grieve,
Though overcast with sorrow;
For though the sun shall be obscured,
'Twill brightly shine to-morrow.

Man should not weep though round his heart
The tempest should roar loudly;
But with an iron nerve he should
Gaze on the tempest proudly;
For raging storms shall surely cease,
And bring serener weather;
The sun again shall shed its light,
And all be peace together.

Then when dark clouds obscure thy path,
And storms are loudly roaring;
Let thy sad heart on wings of faith
Still up, still up, be soaring.
Then shall the sun burst through the clouds,
And change thy grief and sadness;
Then shall Hope's rainbow round thy heart,
Afford thee joy and gladness.

LARGE BUSINESS.—It will be seen by reference to our commercial column that the sales of cotton for the past week exceed 57,000 bales—a larger quantity, we believe, than was ever sold in this city during any previous week.

Gov. Kossuth arrived yesterday morning in the steamer Alex. Scott, and took rooms at the St. Louis Hotel, where he was waited upon by the committee of the General Council, and several other citizens.

FIRE IN THIBODAUX.—The dwelling house of Mrs. Amedi. in Thibodaux, was destroyed by fire on the night of the 11th instant, Mrs. A. lost all her furniture.

FURTHER INTELLIGENCE, BY THE NIAGARA.—Italy.—The Opinione quotes a letter of the 25th, from Milan, which states that the police had received orders to exercise the strictest surveillance over English travelers. They are not permitted to sojourn more than twenty-four hours in Lombardy.

An official letter from the Foreign Office, dated March 2, states that the Emperor of Russia had given instructions to the authorities on the east coast of Siberia and the west coast of North America, to furnish Capt. Beatson with all possible assistance in his search for Sir John Franklin.

TWENTY THOUSAND DOLLARS STOLEN.—On Tuesday night last week the store of U. L. Wright, at Atlanta Ga., was broken open and his safe robbed of twenty thousand and one dollars, eighteen thousand dollars of which were in bills on Georgia and South Carolina banks, and the remainder in American gold coin. The robber entered the store through a back window, and is supposed to have succeeded in opening the safe by means of a false key. The robbery was effected between 9 and 10 o'clock at night, while Mr. Wright and his clerks were absent for a short time from the store. Twenty-two hundred dollars in bills, which were deposited in a drawer in the upper part of the safe, together with letters, notes, etc., were left untouched. A reward of one thousand dollars has been offered for the recovery of the money and apprehension of the thief.

APPOINTMENTS.—Among the recent appointments by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, are the following: Loomis L. White, of New York, to be Consul of the United States at San Juan del Sud, in the Republic of Nicaragua; James W. Irwin, of Kentucky, to be Consul of the United States for the city of Ravenna, in Italy; and Edward F. Beale to be Superintendent of Indian Affairs for the State of California.

QUICK PASSAGE.—Clipper ship Shooting Star, Capt. Baker, with a valuable cargo of teas, silks, etc., arrived at Boston on the 17th in 87 days from Whampoa, and 84 from Macao.

FROM BERMUDA.—The late news states that the sugar producers have exhausted their capital in attempting to uphold their plantations against the competition, created by the products of slave labor, and active measures were in progress to avert a further continuance of the consequences.

HEAVY SNOW STORM.—The New York Mirror of the 18th says: "The twenty-seventh snow storm of the season occurred yesterday, and was one of the most violent that we have almost ever experienced. The snow covered the ground to a considerable depth, although much of it melted as it fell. Towards midnight rain and sleet succeeded the snow, and early pedestrians this morning experienced a time that "tried men's soles." About 4 o'clock in the afternoon, every telegraph wire leading out of the city broke down under the heavy pressure of the damp snow."

A PROFITABLE RAILROAD.—The net profits of the South-Western (Georgia) Railroad, for the last six months, were $40,509 82; at the end of the year the company expect to declare a dividend of not less than eight per cent. The road was opened on the 4th of July last from Savannah to Oglethorpe.

NOVEL INVENTION.—The Charleston Southern Standard has the following: A gentleman now in our city, and a native of the State, has succeeded in producing some of the most extraordinary and novel results in mechanics and science of the present day. One of these is an exceedingly simple apparatus, to be attached to any wheeled vehicle, in which is placed a sheet of paper connected with instrument by two moveable cogs; regardless of the speed that the vehicle may be impelled over any surface, upon the paper will be correctly charted the distance, course, altitudes, and depressions of the surface over which it passes. In the present increase of railroads this instrument seems admirably calculated to facilitate the survey of land in the various proposed routes, and well deserves the attention of the scientific. Another invention is for the prevention of explosion in steam boilers. This is based upon principles which palpably demonstrate the various phenomena of this so much and justly dreaded agent. It has also the sanction in principle of some of the most eminent scientific men in our country, and experiments which have been made upon these principles could not fail to satisfy the most skeptical.

COLORADO RIVER.—The Houston (Tex.) Telegraph of the 10th, says: Capt. Tracy who arrived a few days since from the Colorado, states that this river rose nearly to the top of its banks during last week, and was rising rapidly when he left. Fears were entertained that some of the plantations below Columbus would be injured by the freshet. The season has been so favorable that most of the corn and cotton fields in the bottoms had been planted and the planters will suffer heavy losses if the bottoms all be overflowed.

THE AUTHOR OF JUNIUS.—The London Quarterly presents a new candidate for the authorship of Junius, in the person of Thomas Lyttleton, son of the first Lord Lyttleton, who was twenty-four years old when the Letters first commenced, and who entered Parliament, and evinced wonderful abilities, seven years after. The Reviewer first seems to demolish the claims preferred on behalf of Sir Philip Francis, and then shows that in moral character, intellectual abilities, party affinities, personal relations, and in the general tone of his character, Lord Lyttleton was precisely the person upon whom the suspicion of the authorship of Junius should justly fall. His speeches are also quoted to show an identity of general sentiment and of studies with the Letters, and a variety of coincident phrases, similes, allusions, etc., is collated. The article is long and written with ability. It certainly makes out a very strong case.

FOREIGN GOODS FOR CANADA.—Boston seems to be coming in for a profitable share of the business of importing foreign goods for Canada. The packet ship Staffordshire, which arrived there recently from Liverpool, had a cargo valued at $250,000, one-fourth of which was on Canadian account.

D'ISRAELI, NOW THE LEADER OF THE BRITISH HOUSE OF COMMONS.—It is said that during the agitation of Sir Robert Peel's Anti-Corn Law measures, the Times, London newspaper, offered one hundred guineas for the best defence of free trade. Amid the multitude of competing articles there was one most masterly and convincing exposition of the free trade system, showing that it was essential to the welfare of the nation. This, of course, carried off the prize, and was afterwards said to have come from the pen of Mr. D'Israeli, who had just before delivered a brilliant oration for protection, from his seat in the House of Commons. Whether the above be true or not, we have in it an epitome of his character—abundant intellect—no principle.

POST OFFICES.—The Postmaster General has established a Post-office at Darbonne, Union parish, Louisiana, and appointed Jno. B. Wallace Post-master. The name of Chesterfield Post-office, in Madison Parish, Louisiana, has been changed to Warsaw.

Boil three or four onions in a pint of water. Then with a gilding brush do over your glasses and frames, and rest assured that the flies will not alight on the article washed. This may be used without the least apprehension, as it will not do the least injury to the frames.

An Irish girl in Gotham, who planned herself upon being employed in a "genteel family," was asked a definition of the term. "Where they have two or three kinds of wine and the gentleman swears," was the mighty satisfactory answer.

A CHILD FREIGHTED PROFIT.—We see that O'Reilly of telegraphic notoriety, says the N. Y. Tribune, is now busily engaged in promoting the project of extending the telegraph westward to the Pacific, and is sanguine of being able to have it in operation to San Francisco within eighteen months, provided Congress shall make a favorable response to his memorial asking for right of way through the wilderness, and protection to his wires. He seeks no pecuniary aid, but simply proposes to supersede the present system of forts, at long distances, with large garrisons by establishing stockades twenty miles apart, each of two only dragoons. He proposes that two or three soldiers shall ride daily each way from each stockade, so as to transport a daily express letter mail across the continent, while at the same time protecting and comforting emigrants and settlers along the public domain, and thus incidentally furnishing all the protection which the telegraph will require. Seemingly this is a very ingenious and practicable mode of securing a great national object with comparatively small expense. The distance between Missouri and San Francisco is 2,700 miles. The mail service conducted with military precision therefrom ought to be accomplished in from twelve to fourteen days.

ANOTHER PRONUNCIAMENTO.—We learn by a passenger who came on the brig Brownsville from Bruzos that Canales had pronounced against the Central Government on the 15th inst.

STEAMBOAT ACCIDENT.—The Mobile Register of Wednesday says, on Monday the steamboat Bradstreet struck a snag near Lackey's landing, some ten miles below Aberdeen, in her upward passage, and sunk in some seven to ten feet water. No lives were lost and there was little freight on board to be injured. The boat was insured for $3,000, which was below the value of the engine.

THE CUBAN PRISONERS.—A preamble and resolutions offered on the 15th in the Board of Aldermen at New York sympathizing with the returned Cuban prisoners, and in favor of aiding them in reaching their homes, by an appropriation of $2500 was, after some discussion, lost, by a vote of nine in the negative to eight in the affirmative.

THE CALIFORNIA TICKET OPERATIONS.—Speaking of this affair, the New York Mirror of the 18th says: "A crowd of about 100 persons, who had purchased tickets for California from Palmer & Co., yesterday assembled at the lower police court, at the hour for the investigation into the charges made by Robert Sirlen, who alleges that he had been defrauded by them of $175, which he paid for passage tickets to California, but which proved valueless. Palmer, who on the previous night had been arrested by officer Elder, made a proposition to those persons to meet him at his office at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, where he would refund them the money received for their tickets, or forward them by the next steamer, as each one thought proper. Justice Lattrop then postponed the investigation of the charge already preferred until this afternoon at 3 o'clock, and the crowd left for the office of Palmer and & Co. Should he fail to settle, it is probable that many of those who have purchased tickets will prefer complaints against him at once. He states that he can explain the whole matter satisfactorily. The average amount obtained from each individual is about $180.

STEAMBOAT EXPLOSIONS, ETC.—During a debate in the U. S. House of Representatives on the 5th, Mr. Hamlin, Chairman of the Committee on Commerce, said that the committee had before them the whole subject for the better security of the lives of passengers on steamboats, embracing steam boilers, safety boats, pumps, etc.; also, the subject of calamities arising from over-burdened vessels, deficiency in the quantity and quality of food on board the California steamers, etc.

The bill already reported provided for the suitable inspection of steamboat apparatus. The committee intended to report some additional sections, limiting the number of passengers in steamers, and requiring a sufficient quantity of food to be provided of good quality.

He believed these provisions, with the strict penalties proposed, would remedy all difficulties in the way of ocean steam navigation.

LOLA MONTES.—Lola Montes made her first appearance in Boston on the 15th at the Howard Atheneum. The building was crowded, but there were not a dozen ladies in the house.

THE POTATO HOT.—It appears by the proceedings of the Legislature of Massachusetts that there are fifty-two applicants for the discovery of a cure for the potato rot. The House voted to have the communications all printed.

ASSIGNMENT OF THE ASSETS OF THE U. S. BANK.—The stockholders of the U. S. Bank held a meeting at Philadelphia on the 17th instant, and passed resolutions making a general assignment of all rights, titles, credits, etc., belonging to the bank, by a vote of 730 yeas, representing 27,000 shares, to 123 nays, representing 3160 shares. The following trustees were elected: A. W. Schwab, Martin D. Rogers, James Cooper, of Pottsville, Charles Macalester, and Daniel L. Miller. The new trustees are not to be salaried officers. The directors took no action in the meeting. The result has knocked down the price of shares.

A PATHETIC SPEECH.—The speech made in the Florida Legislature, on the occasion of a member's death, has been the rounds, but is good enough to print again:

"Mr. Speaker—Sir; Our fellow-citizen, Mr. Silas Higgins, Esq., who was lately a member of this very branch of the Legislature, and he died yesterday in the forenoon. He had the brown creatures, (bronchitis,) and he was an uncommon individual. His character was good up to the time of his death, and he never lost his voice. He was 56 years old, and was taken sick before he died, at his boarding-house, where board can be had at a dollar and seventy-five cents a week, washing and light included. He was an ingenious creature, and in the early part of life had a father and mother. His uncle, Timothy Higgins, served under Gen. Washington, who was buried soon after his death with military honors, and seventeen guns were burned in firing salutes. Sir, Mr. Speaker, General Washington would have voted for the tariff of 1846, if he had been alive and hadn't a' died some time beforehand. Now, Mr. Speaker, such being the character of General Washington, I motion that we were adjourned till to-morrow morning, as an emblem of our respect for the memory of S. Higgins, who is dead and died of the brown creatures yesterday in the forenoon."

THE MURDERER OF NYE.—It appears that Nathan H. Crist, who has been arrested at Cleveland as the murderer of Nye, at Mobile, was once a respectable tanner of Columbus, Ohio.

In February last Crist wrote a letter to a gentleman in Montgomery, Alabama (for whom he was selling patents); stating that he had made $8,000 and wished to enter further into the business. Subsequently Crist called upon the gentleman at Montgomery and requested the loan of money. The letter was produced, and he was asked why, when he had made $8000, he wished to borrow money. His reply was that he did make it, but at Mobile the man became dissatisfied, got him into his room, knocked him down, choked him, tied a napkin about his mouth and left him for dead; describing, in fact, the details of the murder, and making him off the victim.

It appears, from a long account in the Cleveland Herald, that the officers traced Crist to the house of Judge Bugenbeal, where Mrs. Crist, the Judge's daughter, was residing, and there arrested him. The Court of Common Pleas being in session, and Judge Bugenbeal serving upon the jury, when in the midst of an argument, Mrs. Crist rushed into Court, forced her way to her father, and falling upon her knees informed him of the arrest of her husband. The scene was one of intense interest. The Judge was of course excused.

Crist is in jail, awaiting the arrival of a requisition from Alabama.

It is said that Crist is laboring under embarrassments, and that he has to pay considerable sums of money on the 1st of April. This, and the supposition that Nye had $10,000 in his possession, are the most palpable motives for the murder.

PRESENTIMENT OF RAILROADS.—Affecting extract from an unpublished play:

Edgar—Adieu, my life, my love,
Pauline—Say'st thou adieu?—
My mind misgives me, Edgar—strange fear
Sits like a heavy dumpling here, my life.
Ah, whither goest thou in this strange haste?
Edgar—Nay, ask me not. You rack my soul with sorrow
Pauline—Speak, Edgar, I must know.
Edgar—Well, if I must, Pauline, to Dunkirk!
Pauline—To Dunkirk? No! no! no!
Edgar—Yes! by the Erie railroad!
Pauline—Nay, then, farewell forever! All is o'er.

INTERMARRIAGE.—On the subject of the intermarriages of relatives, the Fredericksburg (Md.) News has the following:

"In the county in which we were raised, for twenty generations back a certain family of wealth and respectability have intermarried, until there cannot be found, in three of them, a sound man or woman. One has sore eyes, another scrofula, a third is idiotic, a fourth blind, a fifth bandy-legged, a sixth with a head about the size of a turnip, with not one out of the number exempt from physical or mental defects of some kind. Yet this family perseveres to intermarry with each other, with these living monuments of their folly constantly before them. It is of no use to dole ignominy by the best people. Young people never reflect upon consequences, and old people are too avaricious to forbid a match where money is gotten. Let the law reach it and it will be stopped."

Some constables in Maine, hunting for rum, entered a house and found a woman rocking the cradle and singing "Hush-a-by-baby." Not finding "the critter," one of them, more cunning than the rest, made a dash at the baby clothes, exclaiming, "Sweet little baby—how much it looks like its father!" And sure enough, so it did—for in a bed behind the little offspring turned out to be a keg of rum with a right sap on!

The Gazette Musicale, a French paper, gives an account of a prodigious musical boy, named Frederic Bernsheim, aged only ten years—who is already vigorous enough as a pianist to perform from the Concertos of Weber, Moscheles, and Mendelssohn, in public. Further, he composes in full score, is capable of improvisation; and, in short, reproduces the marvel of finger, fancy and feeling wrought in his boyish days by little Mozart.

The "Courrier des Etats Unis" mentions the existence of a race of goats in the South of France, which were imported some years ago from Elben, on the Red Sea, and which being accustomed to very little rain in their native country, can always tell the approach of a shower by instinct, and seek a shelter before any of the more evident signs of its approach become visible. This animal has long pendant ears and hair of a black color, and very soft.

There were 384 births at sea on board of vessels which arrived at New York during the year 1851.

At San Juan, it is said, carpenters are in demand at from three to five dollars per day.

By the first of October next, the cities of Cincinnati and Indianapolis will be connected by railway, and travelers conveyed between them in nine hours.

Telegraphic Items.

NEW YORK, March 22.

The Collins steamer Pacific arrived to-day, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 10th instant. The Canada arrived out on the 8th.

LIVERPOOL, March 10.

There has been a fair demand in the Cotton market since the sailing of the Niagara, and the sales of Saturday, Monday and Tuesday embrace 21,000 bales of which speculators took 4000, and exporters 2000 bales. The advices brought by the Canada had a tendency to depress the market, and holders were more anxious to sell, although there is no quotable change in prices. The rates fixed by the Board are as follows: Fair Orleans 5¼d. Middling Orleans 5d.; Fair Uplands 5d.; and Middling Uplands 5d. ₱ lb.

France.

France is quiet. The Swiss staff officers now in Paris have been ordered to return forthwith. The difficulties between the Swiss Government and France have been arranged. A steam frigate has sailed from Toulon with 200 political prisoners for Algeria. The French Ambassador left London for Paris suddenly.

Turkey—A Conspiracy discovered.

A conspiracy having for its design the overthrow of the Government has been discovered in Turkey. All the large towns have been strongly garrisoned, and every bridge and ferry is guarded.

Further by the Pacific.

NEW YORK, March 22.

The circulars state that the sales of the three days preceding the departure of the Pacific amounted to 25,000 bales, of which 16,500 were taken by the trade, 2,500 by exporters, and 6000 on speculation.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, March 22.

In the Senate to-day Mr Soulé has delivered a speech in favor of Intervention by the United States Government in the cause of the oppressed against the tyrants of Europe.

In the House the Deficiency bill was taken up and discussed. The Senate bill amendatory of the act for holding courts in cases of the disability of the judges.

Great Robbery.

AUGUSTA, Ga., March 22.

The Central Railroad Bank at this place was robbed last evening of $20,000.

TRENTON, N. J., March 23.

Daniel Webster, Rufus Choate, Francis B. Cutting, and other lawyers connected with the great India Rubber case, have arrived here. Judges Grier and Dickinson are expected to-night. The Legislature adjourned to-day.

Arrival of the Europa—Interesting Political News—Proceedings of Louis Napoleon.

NEW YORK, Thursday, March 25.

The Cunard steamer Europa has arrived here, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 13th instant. The following is a summary of her news:

Liverpool Markets.

LIVERPOOL, March 13.

There has been a good demand in the cotton market during the week, and the sales embrace 61,000 bales, of which exporters have taken 4000 and speculators 17,000 bales. Prices for some descriptions have fallen off ⅛d., the principal decline being for middling and lower grades. The quantities are now as follows: Fair Orleans 5⅝, middling Orleans 5 1-16, fair Uplands 5¼, and middling Uplands 4⅞d. ₱ lb.

France—More Decrees—Cavaignac's Protest.

A decree has been published declaring that an oath to support the Constitution and the President is indispensable to all, and every Representative refusing to take it is to be considered as having resigned his seat in the Assembly. It is believed that Cavaignac will refuse to take the oath in this form and it is said that his intention is to appear in the Chamber, and protest against all the proceedings of the Government since the 2d December, and then retire.

M. Armand, Duke of Ragusa, the last of Napoleon's Marshals, who betrayed him at Fontainbleau, died in Venice on the 2d inst.

The bust of Louis Napoleon has been ordered to be placed in each commune in France, and the impression is gaining ground that the opening of the Chambers will be seized upon as a favorable opportunity for declaring Louis Napoleon. The control of education will be enjoyed exclusively by the State. The system of Church Professors will be abolished. Armand Marrast, a prominent leader in the revolution of February, 1848, died on the 10th inst. The arming of the fortifications of Paris was going on with great activity. A large number of political prisoners have sailed from Havre for Cayenne. The Prince President gave a banquet on the 8th instant to the British Minister.

England.

Parliament reassembled on the 12th. In the House of Lords, on Monday Lord Beaumont gave notice that he would ask the Government whether any alteration in the Protection policy was intended. Lord Lyndhurst deprecated the postponement of the Chancery reforms, and denounced the efforts of the Anti-Corn Law league to effect a dissolution of the present Parliament. Lord Brougham denounced the league in the House of Commons, and asked if Government intended to define its policy before making its estimates. A meeting of 168 members had been held at the House of Lord John Russell. Lord John expressed much dissatisfaction with the programme of Lord Derby, and a plan of operations was agreed upon. Lord John Russell advised Cabinet supplies for three months only should be voted, at the end of which time a dissolution of Parliament would be forced upon the Government. Lord John Russell had brought up the Reform bill in the House of Commons. The Earl of Eglintoun has been inaugurated Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

The Kaffir war had been concluded, on the condition of the surrender of the Kaffirs.

Bank Defalcation.

BOSTON, March 25.

A heavy defalcation has been discovered in the Suffolk Bank, the book-keeper and receiving teller being the guilty parties. The former sailed for Europe in the Asia. It is reported that the teller has been arrested.

Charleston Cotton Market.

CHARLESTON, Friday, March 26.

There has been a fair demand in the Cotton market during the week, and the sales embrace 9000 bales. Middling Upland is quoted at 7¼c. ₱ lb.

The increase in the receipts at all the Atlantic ports, compared with those of last year to date, is 77,000 bales, against 60,000 bales at the close of last week, and 42,000 the week before. Dispatches from New York state that the Europa brought advices of a decline of ⅛d. in the Liverpool cotton market during the week ending the 13th instant.

Terrible Accident—Death of Mr. Maillefort.

NEW YORK, March 26.

A premature explosion took place at Hell Gate this afternoon, and all hands engaged in blasting the rock, four in number, including Mr. Maillefort, the French Engineer, who has for some time been engaged in removing obstructions from the channel, were killed.

Explosion of the Buckeye State.

PITTSBURGH, March 26.

The steamer Buckeye State, while lying at Steubenville, burst her larboard steampipe, scalding three deck passengers slightly. One was drowned. Cabin passengers all safe. The boat proceeded on with one wheel.

There is six feet water in the channel at this point.

The big bell cast in Boston for the city of New York, and exhibited in State street, as the largest ever made in America, has been condemned and returned. The fracture of nature is its thickness, the sound being a deadened tone, heard only at a short distance. It is to be broken up.

From the Rio Grande.

We received yesterday the Brownsville Rio Bravo of the 17th inst. The town continues deserted. The following particulars of the surrender of Carvajal

Hon. Carvajal having landed in Brownsville, arrived here yesterday morning on the Commanche. On his way down, he was arrested by a company of United States troops under Lieutenant Gibbons. Immediately on his arrival bail, of a hundred thousand dollars was offered and refused, and although Mr. Commissioner Pimming demanded ten thousand dollars more than Judge Watrous did, in like cases, the bail was instantly entered, and Carvajal was triumphantly discharged. We noticed quite a number of long faces and very short tallies of courage exhibited just after this event.

The General comes accompanied, on his visit to this place, by Brevet Lieut. Col. A. H. Gonzales, his aid and military secretary; Colonel José M. Cabazos, formerly in command of the Bryanon Squadron; and Major A. N. Norton, of the Commissary Department. Col. Cabazos, whose grandfather was executed by the Spanish Government, in 1817, for espousing the patriot cause, with Don Ignacio Guerra and several other patriotic gentlemen of this frontier, who are with him, are at present exiles from the same cause. We trust the day is not distant when they may return with honor to their own country.

Robberies.—The Brownsville Rio Bravo has the following:

Within the last few weeks a large number of horses and mules, and a quantity of other property, have been robbed from citizens in the vicinity of Brownsville, and carried to the other side of the river. Among others, we are sorry to say, our friend Mascorlas lost twenty-five horses and mules, stolen a few nights ago; and on the spot where these horses were secured a badge of one of Avalos's soldiers was found.

It is asserted, and confidently believed, that Avalos has given permission to the thieves in his service to rob all the filibusters on this side of the river. The word has been passed, in addition to Mr. Mason, to rob Adolphus Gloyerake, and other well known friends of the cause of Carvajal, of their property. A short time ago several horses were stolen from Mr. McFaden, mail contractor between this city and Point Isabel, and a day or two since two valuable mules, with his brand upon them, were discovered to be in the public service under Avalos, and he has made a demand for them through the proper authorities.

BEEF AND PORK INSPECTION.—Attempt at Fraud.—It would seem that large shipments of beef and pork are made by parties in this city, to the interior, for plantation use, which purports to have passed the regular inspection ordeal when, in fact, the imitation brand is a pure fraud. The following, which we take from the Vicksburg Whig of the 20th instant, throws some light on the matter:

In the early part of the month of February, there was a lot of pork received from Natchez, by way of our commission houses, and notwithstanding it was branded, and purported to have been inspected, it was subjected by the merchants who received it, to our City Inspector, Mr. James Hazzlett, for examination and inspection. Upon inspection Mr. Hazzlett found the pork deficient both in weight and quality, and so reported. It was immediately presented to Newcombe by the merchants who received it, and a letter was written by Mr. Hazzlett to the State Inspectors of Louisiana, calling their attention to it, and giving his reasons for refusing to pass it in this market. The gentleman to whom the letter was addressed, immediately examined the pork so returned, and promptly sent to Mr. H., the following letter in reply:

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 11, 1852.

Mr. Jas. Hazelett—Sir: Your favor of the 1st instant, is at hand, and in reply, we beg to say, that the twenty-five barrels of pork returned here, per steamer Magnolia, were not inspected by us; there are several brands used here by dealers in the article, some of which closely imitate our brand; but you will always be able to recognize ours by the following description: It is in the form of a triangle; the names of the inspectors forming the sides of the brand, and with the words "State Inspectors—1852," underneath. Yours, respectfully,

BOZANT, HOLMES & HANDLAN.

P. S.—If you think it would be of any service to you in satisfying your fellow-citizens of Vicksburg, we have no objection to your publishing the above letter. B. H. & H.

It will be seen that although the pork in question purported to have been inspected, the only authorized inspectors in New Orleans say that it was not, and that there are several brands used here by dealers in the article, some of which closely imitate our brands.

In this case, there was clearly an attempt to commit a fraud, because it was purchased in New Orleans under the belief that it had been properly inspected; and if it was the only instance, it could be passed over, but it has occurred so frequently that it is necessary to give it publicity, so that cotton merchants and planters who purchase in New Orleans may examine minutely, and see that they have a guarantee as to weight and quality under the genuine brand of the State Inspectors, instead of the short weight and bad quality under the imitation brands. Under our laws no pork, flour etc. can be sold in our city until it has been inspected by our city inspector; but these articles can pass through our city without inspection if purchased by the planter elsewhere. We are informed by our inspector, that the pork

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

ONE, OR TWO.... Virginia Smith.

Are we one, my sister dearest?
One, or two, my sunny-eyed,
Sunny-hearted gipsy—fairest,
Little laughter-loving Lide?
Like the fabled "Star" and "Stalla,"
To the morn and even sun,
Don't you think, sweet Zingarella,
That our spirits are but one?

Brightly blending, shall we frame them
Into Spring's Italian lane,
Or discerning softly, name them
Laughing May and smiling June?
Like the sunshine and the shower,
Tied in flashing jewels run
Through one golden April hour,
So our spirits are but one.

Joy to them is like the springing
Of the birdling's choral swell,
Sweetly wild, and softly ringing,
With a chiming mirth to tell.
And when e'er them sadly linger
Shadows of the lovely hours,
Sorrow's pale and tear-dewed furor
Writes upon them "Ta are one."

Long ago our gentle mother
Sought the sunny spirit land,
And we never had a brother—
So we wander, hand in hand,—
Through life's labyrinthine maze,
Where to guide us there are none;
Yet, amid its thousand phases,
Still our spirits are but one.

Smile, my love—the great All-seeing
Is our Father, and we bow
To the hand which gave us being
As our noble mother now.
Pillared flame and cloud before us,
Through the wilderness begun,
They shall journey, watching o'er us,
That our spirits may be one.

I have often thought if only
I could pass from earth with you,
That our hearts would ne'er be lonely,
If in Heaven we were but two.
Yet a deeper bliss is given
Us to know, our mission done,
As on earth, so in the Heaven
Shall our spirits be but one.

Later Foreign News by the Asia.

We have full details of the news brought by the Asia, from which we take the following summary:

ENGLAND.

The English papers are occupied with a discussion of the new ministerial prospects. In the House of Lords, Earl Derby had made a lengthy speech, giving a sketch of his political campaign. He stated that although the resignation had taken him completely by surprise, he had determined not to shrink from the responsibility of forming a new Government. He expressed his determination to pursue a calm and temperate policy towards foreign nations. With regard to our power of repelling aggression, he believed the navy was never in a more perfect state, and that the efficiency of our military force, considering its number and the arduous duties it had to perform, was matter for admiration.

If the country were threatened with invasion, the people of England, Ireland and Scotland would raise as one man; but though he felt no alarm on that subject, he felt that the present moment was favorable for so organizing the undisciplined valor of the country, that they might resist to the greatest advantage the trained armies of the invader. The noble lord then passed on, after warning the exiles assembled in this country that the Government would not tolerate any attempts on their part against foreign powers, to the commercial policy which it was his intention to pursue, and expressed his approval of the principle of the American tariff, rather than of the free trade system adopted by the late Sir Robert Peel.

The Earl of Aberdeen was anxious to take the very first opportunity which presented itself to declare, on the part of his late colleagues of the late Sir Robert Peel, his determination to adhere to the free-trade policy of that lamented statesman. He thought the distinctions drawn by Lord Derby on this subject were shadowy and unreal, and for his part he should oppose a duty on corn, whether for revenue or protection. The foreign policy laid down by the noble Lord met with his unqualified approbation, and he might rely on his cordial support.

The Times says: We are requested to state that Mr. George Frederick Young has for the present, declined to accept the office of Vice-President of the Board of Trade, which has been offered to him by the Earl of Derby. Ill health is the cause of the refusal to accept the office.

The following additional appointments have been made and accepted: Ordnance Board Hardinge, Lords of the Admiralty, Admiral Milne, Admiral Hornby, Admiral H. Parker; Secretary to the Admiralty, Mr. A. Stafford; Under Secretary for the Home Department, Sir W. Jolliffe; Under Secretaries of India Board, Lord Desart, Mr. H. Bonle; Judge Advocate, Mr. Bankes; Lords of the Treasury, the Marquis of Chandos, Mr. Bateson; Chief Commissioner of the Poor-Law Board, Sir John Trollope.

Thomas Moore is dead. He died on the 26th February at his residence, Sloperton Cottage, aged 72 years. For the last few years his mind became affected, but no man of the last century had seen more of what was best and most brilliant in every department than Thomas Moore, and of the polished and intellectual society in which he moved, he was one of the brightest ornaments. To the last, he was the intimate friend of Lord John Russell, and his death coincided with his friend's fall from power. Moore was born in the same year (1780) with Beranger. He desired to be buried in the church-yard of the parish where he died.

Of the new Arctic Expedition we find the following: The vessels commissioned will be well supplied with officers fully competent to take charge of the searching parties when they arrive in the Arctic regions. The Assistance (the flag-ship) will have Captain Sir Edward Belcher, Commander Richards, two lieutenants, one master, and one clerk in charge. The Resolute, Captain Kellett, C.B., will have three lieutenants, one master, and one clerk in charge. The North Star, Commander Pullen, one lieutenant, one master, and one clerk in charge. The Intrepid, screw-steamer, Commander McClintock, tender to the Assistance, one master, and two assistant engineers. The Assistance and Resolute have taken on board a large supply of coals, instead of ballast, and the hands are now busily employed in taking on board the iron water tanks. The bows of both vessels have been sharpened, by attaching strong pieces of timber, which will be covered with felt, and they will be much easier to tow during their transit, than they were during their voyage to the Arctic regions.

From Ireland we have news of the death of Dr. Murray, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin. This venerable prelate has long been the leader of the moderate party among the Roman Catholic clergy of Ireland, and his death will leave the party of Dr. Cullen and Dr. Mollais almost wholly unopposed.

True bills have been found by the grand jury of Dundalk against Mr. Joseph Cartan, the proprietor of the Dundalk Democrat, for seditious libel. He entered into the usual recognizances to take his trial, which will take place in the Queen's Bench next term. The Freeman's Journal says: "As this prosecution was instituted by the deposed Government, would it not be prudent in the new Attorney General to inaugurate his career with an act of favor, and discharge the indictment?"

A steamer has gone to Ireland to bring the Earl of Clarendon to England.

The Evening Mail states that the Chief Justiceship of the Irish Queen's Bench has been offered to Mr. Jonathan Henn. The appointment would be an excellent one, but it is by no means certain that the learned gentleman will accept it.

FRANCE.

Advices from Paris announce that a number of political prisoners have been set at liberty at Moulins. M. Guinard, who was sentenced to imprisonment for life for having aided Ledru Rollin, and others, in his attempt at insurrection in 1849, has been pardoned by the President of the Republic.

The Globe's correspondent says that it is reported that some of the opposition candidates for the Legislative body have declared that, if elected, they will refuse to take the oath prescribed by the Constitution. Some ask "Why Louis Napoleon does not obtain absolution, according to the forms of the Roman Church, for the violation of the oath that he had taken to the Constitution of 1848?" But the answer is, "That the oath was not taken on the Gospels, and, therefore, the Church had nothing to do with it."

It is certain that the French and Austrian governments are friendly since the arrival of dispatches from St. Petersburgh, in which the Emperor declares that if Austria moves one step to assist France in disturbing the treaties of Vienna, he will march an army to the aid of Prussia.

The President's second ball had taken place at the Tuileries. The number of tickets issued was, I am informed, 3,500, and so numerous were the applications that a notice was inserted some days since in the papers to the effect that no more invitations could be issued. It is stated, however, that not less than 5,000 persons were present. The President arrived at the palace at 9 o'clock, and left at midnight. The Marshals present were Jerome Bonaparte, Exelle, and Excelmans. All the Ministers attended except M. de Persigny and the Minister of War; the latter was prevented by an accident which occurred to his son, whose leg was broken by a kick from a horse. The Diplomatic Corps and Consular body in Paris were nearly complete. A considerable number of Senators appeared in their new official costume, and M. Baroche appeared in that of the Vice President of the Council of State. The attendance of military men was considerable, and several Commandants of the Reformed National Guard were present in their new uniform. The same total absence of "high society" was noticed at this, as at the first ball.

The opposition candidates have ventured to placard some of the public thoroughfares with addresses, and to issue voting tickets for the coming elections.

The Government is extending its precautions to prevent the elections of candidates opposed to it, and as a large number of the Departments are still under a state of siege, the coming election promises to be about as farcical as that which confirmed the usurpation of Louis Napoleon.

GERMANY.

Count Thun, the President of the Frankfort Diet, had proposed to the Prussian Government the plan of a Press law for the whole Confederation. The Government had refused to sanction it.

The state of distress in the Prussian provinces is increasing in a most terrifying manner; even in Berlin itself the price of victuals is 50; potatoes are rising in price about 150 per cent., and bread is diminishing in quality and quantity. The prospect for the next season is very far from being satisfactory.

Telegraphic dispatches have been received by the Austrian Government, stating that on the 8th inst., two tricolored flags of the Italian Republic were planted in the public thoroughfares of some Italian city, name omitted, and cockades of the same character were every where distributed. At San Marino and Spoletto similar demonstrations took place.

SWITZERLAND.

Letters from Switzerland speak of a second French note, repeating the demand contained in the first, and asserting the right of France to indicate refugees for expulsion, which she requires, shall take place as a matter of course.

RUSSIA.

A letter from the Polish frontier given in The Augsburg Gazette, has the following upon Russian military movements:

"According to our latest advices from Kalisch, and other parts of the kingdom of Poland, the Russian Government appears to doubt either in the stability of Louis Napoleon's power or the sincerity of his assurances, as military preparations are on every hand again urged forward with surprising activity and upon a large scale. The westward movement has re-commenced, and the munitions of war are produced and accumulated with great zeal. The officers believe that the summer will bring with it a campaign; and as the common soldiery believe almost that the Czar is the supreme and rightful disposer of events on earth, they only wait the word to march with alacrity wherever their master may "bid them."

SPAIN.

The authorities have ordered an investigation which will bring to light facts showing into how low a state of immorality the Spanish priesthood has fallen. Even the papal nuncio is said to have complained of the facility hitherto offered to taking orders, and stringent measures will be probably taken by the ecclesiastical authorities.

PIEDMONT.

The Courrier Mercantile, of Genoa, quotes a letter from Turin of the 10th, stating that the following Ministerial changes in the Piedmontese Cabinet may be relied on as certain: M. de Foresta, Minister of Justice, is to retire on account of his opinions in favor of a Concordat; M. Galvagno, Minister of the Interior, is to take his portfolio, and is to be replaced in his present office by M. Pernatt, an excellent administrator but new to political life.

ROME.

All due precautions having been taken by the French and Roman authorities, the Carnival commenced on Saturday, the 14th. Previous to the time, a considerable number of persons who are under the surveillance of the Police, were taken up to keep them out of harm's way. A Carnival without masks is but sorry play. The Corso was lined with French troops. The whole garrison seemed actually to have been turned into the principal thoroughfares of the city, and every square in the city was filled by a battalion of Chasseurs de Vincennes. After the street had been cleared to prepare for the race, the long vista was very nearly one red line, formed by the soldiers' red pantaloons. Though it is a gay sight, and a stranger is struck by the liveliness of the scene, it is but the ghost of the old Roman Carnival, as celebrated under the late Pope. The little brilliancy that at present distinguishes it is chiefly sustained by the foreigners, who take a part in it. The principal Roman families, who were the soul of its frivolities and originality, now abstain from leading this eight days' dance of jollity throughout the streets of the old capital.

The Roman Observer of the 18th instant announces that the Pope had published, in his usual form, two decrees of beatification. The first refers to the venerable Giovanni de Brito, a clergyman of the Company of Jesus, who died a martyr to his faith on the 4th of February, 1693, in the East Indies. By the second, the Pope confirms two miracles effected at Tivoli, toward the close of the last century, through the intercession of the venerable Giovanni Grande, alias Peccatore, a friar of the Order of St. John of God.

NAPLES

A private letter from Naples, of the 14th instant, states that the King of Naples, notwithstanding the supplications of the members of his own family, as well as of the Duke d'Aumale, has refused to enter any formal protest against the decrees by which the family of Orleans is despoiled of its property. The cause given is, that Naples is on such bad terms with England that she cannot run the risk of quarreling with France. The King has consequently fully approved of the conduct of his representative in Paris, who, since the publication of the decrees, has declined any sort of communication or conference with the testamentary executors of Louis Philippe. It appears, however, that the new Neapolitan Ministry is endeavoring to make itself more popular in the country, and at the same time more agreeable to England. It has already set a great number of political prisoners at liberty, and others have been removed from the prisons of the capital to those of the interior, with a view to their being treated with less severity.

An English company is in course of formation for supplying Madrid with an abundant quantity of water.

The Jews of Paris, headed by M. Rothschild, have just established a society, for the study and propagation of the sacred sciences.

The Princess Navaki, grand daughter of the Emperor of Russia, has abjured the Russian-Greek faith, and become a member of the Roman Catholic Sisters of Providence, at Valenciennes.

Letters from Messina say that the shock of an earthquake was felt in that city, which so alarmed the inhabitants as to cause hundreds to sleep out of their houses. Volcanic action continues to be felt at Melfi.

M. Guizot is about to publish a work on Shakspeare and his Times, composed of a life of the bard, and several articles which he has before written on the plays.

Mr. John O'Brien, M. P., will not offer himself as a candidate for Limerick at the next election.

An old woman of 76 died at Balourvie, near Belfast, in consequence of being hit in the finger by a cockatoo.

The Vienna Gazette contains the sentence of Maria Vichwager, cigar roller, to four months' imprisonment in irons and twenty stripes with rods for inciting her fellow-laborers to strike for wages.

A terrible accident lately occurred at Insterburgh, in Prussia. Seventeen children returning home from school were passing over the ice of the river Inster, to shorten their way, when the ice broke and they were all drowned.

After the execution of Merino for the attempt to assassinate the Queen of Spain, a cast of his head was taken by Dr. Didier of Madrid. A copy of this cast has arrived in Paris, and been placed in the Museum of Anetomy, in the collection of heads of great criminals.

The Roman Government have sanctioned the introduction of postage for the pre-payment of postage letters. The stamp is about the size of the American postage stamp; and on it is a representation of the tiara and keys, the badge of Papal dignity and power.

A letter from Constantinople states that the Government has just imposed a personal tax on every Turkish subject, without distinction of religion. The minimum is to amount to 20 piasters (5f. 40c.) a year and it is thought that the whole amount will reach the sum of 104 millions.

Mr Murray, the late Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, was struck with paralysis. He had presided at the funeral ceremonies over the remains of the late Richard Shell, at the Church of St. Francis Xavier.—He was in his 73d year.

In the course of the month of January, the Paris Mint commenced a coinage of 5f. pieces, bearing the effigy of the President of the Republic. The likeness not being considered a good one, only 3000 coins were struck off. At present the dies have been retouched, and the coinage will be immediately proceeded with.

The Algiers journals record frightful murders at Ouad-el-Ameur, near Mascara. During the absence of a colonist, named Doloneas, some malefactors invaded his house, and murdered his wife, three infant children, and servant; also a child who had been confided to M'me Doloneas to nurse. The murderers have not yet been arrested.

It is understood that the English Government have signified to the Court of Rome that no charter will be granted to the "Catholic University," and that its degrees will not be recognized by the state. The Queen's Colleges will be maintained against all opposition.

The Munster News states that informations have been granted against the Rev. George Weldon, curate of Tuam, on a charge of having knocked down Mary Barnes, a poor Catholic woman, kicked her on the temple while she lay on the ground, and injured her to such an extent that her face was deluged with blood.

For fourteen millions sterling, if any body will give it to him, M. Horeau intends to lay a railway in the bed of the bed of the sea between England and France. The road is to be enclosed in a tube similar to that which crosses the Menai Strait—and, if we understand the particulars—the tube is to be fastened down in its bed by huge iron pins at intervals of a mile throughout the 25 miles of its submarine course; which pins will perform the further service of carrying lights on their heads at night to warn ships against anchorage over the railway.

SLAVE TRADE IN CUBA.—A letter from Cuba says: The Slave trade in Cuba is prosecuted with so much vigor, that the Governor General has suspended the Governor of Matanzas, General Pavia, from the exercise of his functions. The extreme laxity of the penal law promulgated in this island by General O'Donnell, some time in the year 1845, by which slave trading thenceforth was pronounced piracy, has not had much effect on the traders, because, at the time the law in question was established, the trade was at its height, under the notorious protection of Gen O'Donnell.

The slave trade continued to flourish under the administration of General Roucali, and the Count of Alcoy. The penal law here seems to have been studied so as to afford every advantage to the slave traders. It is expressly stipulated that "negroes be they of whatever class they may, just from the coast of Africa or otherwise, once safely placed upon an estate, cannot be interfered with or molested, in any way whatever." The moment the slaver makes her appearance at the given place on the coast preparations are made to convey the negroes instantly to the nearest estate, upon safely reaching which they are without the pale of the law, and therefore cannot be seized by the authorities. So it has been with reference to the eight hundred at Camanoca, and the 640 at Sierra Morana.

The influence of the slave traders, from their great wealth, is such that they obtain whatever they please from the home government and it would, strange to say, be almost impossible for the Captain General even to attempt to bring these guilty parties to punishment.

The colored population of the Island of Cuba, (notwithstanding the statistics to the contrary given in by the Government,) far outnumbering that of the whites, has always been a source of fear to the native whites and they have endeavored, by every means in their power, to put an end to fresh importations of negroes from the Coast of Africa. The recent enormous importations introduced by a company of Catalans at Matanzas, and by others, of Havana, have caused considerable indignation amongst the enlightened Creole population, who foresee, sooner or later, the danger which may accrue from the cupidity of these Catalan Spaniards, whose only end being gain, care not for the future prosperity of Cuba.

Gen. Pavia, Governor of Matanzas, has not only been suspended by the Captain General, but a commission has been issued to inquire into his conduct in reference to this transaction.

Gen. Concha has issued the most stringent orders for the prevention of the traffic, in fulfilment of the treaties with Great Britain. He does everything in his power to walk in the paths of honesty, and does so; but it seems quite impossible for him to induce the subaltern officers to follow a similar course.

Pavia laughs with scorn at the threats of his dismissal by Gen. Concha.

Intelligence has been received that 640 more Royal negroes were safely landed from another brig at Sierra Morena, on the 23d inst.

A vessel under Spanish colors landed a cargo almost in sight of the Moro Castle, at the Chorrera river, on the 23d inst.

Nearly all the principal functionaries at Trinidad have been suspended from their employments. Some have arrived at Havana and been confined in the castle of Principe, for scandalous connivance with the slave traders in that district, where several disembarkations have been effected during the last three months.

A man under sentence of death, while in prison, allowed his hair and beard to grow to a great length. On the day on which he was to be brought before the court to see whether the sentence would be commuted or carried into effect, the jailor advised him to shave and have his hair cut, in order to make a decent appearance. "What is the use of spending five sous?" said the prisoner; "before having my head dressed, I wish to know if it belongs to me."

J. E. Kirkpatrick, a native of Charleston, is now filling the chair of Greek Literature in the University of Edinburg, recently made vacant by the death of Prof. Dunbar.

Arrival of the Empire City.

The steamer Empire City, Captain John Leeds, arrived on Saturday evening from New York, via Havana, bringing the California mails, with dates to the 18th ult.

The Empire City passed the Georgia, bound for New York, at 4 P. M., on the 15th instant, off Matanzas. The Empire City arrived off the Moro at 9 P. M. on the 15th and sailed at 10 A. M. on Wednesday, the 18th. The Ohio was to sail for Chagres at 12 M. on the same day.

William R. Miller, of Cincinnati, died of consumption on board the Empire City at 3 P. M. on the 19th

The California news is not of much importance. The Alta California of the 18th has the following summary:

Within a few days, intelligence has reached us of a painful character, from the northern coast. The propeller Gen. Warren, for many months engaged in our coast trade, was wrecked at the mouth of the Columbia on the 31st ult., and forty-two lives were lost. She was bound for this port, and had proceeded to sea, when an accident occurred, causing her to leak badly, and she put back to Astoria. She had passed the bar, when, in consequence of the insufficient power of her engines, and the roughness of the sea, she became unmanageable, and drifted toward Clatsop Spit, where she finally struck. The sea breaking over her in great fury, parted her old hull, and before assistance could be procured by a boat's crew, dispatched with extreme difficulty to the shore, every vestige of the wreck had been swept away, and every soul on board perished. Only the two men composing the boat's crew escaped. Capt. Thompson, commanding the General Warren, met the sad fate to which his vessel and all on board were so suddenly swept. The event has caused much gloom in our community, and a strong prejudice has been created against the unseaworthy vessels plying in our harbor, of which class the Warren was one.

Passenger List of the Warren.—The following are the names of the persons lost, so far as we have been able to ascertain:

B J Provin, Thomas Mickie, —— Benson, —— Randolph, of Oregon City; Alanson Pomeroy, of Tualatin Plains; —— Stanley, —— Montgomery, —— Miller, Mr. Fuller, John F. Duncan, of Mo.; Mr. Luther, of Clyde, N. Y.; Mr. Shloss, of Humboldt; A Cook, H A Buck, Humboldt; Geo. Hatch, porter; —— Nelson, steward; —— Jamison, steward; —— O'Niel, engineer; Augustus Stanley, Marietta, Ohio; Capt. Chas Thompson, —— Johnson, purser; John Dolton, Mosquitine county, Iowa; Willhars, late of Vancouver, formerly of Iowa.

We learn from J B. Goddard, Esq., purser of the Columbia, that the body of Mr. Luther, passenger by the Warren, had been found, with over $400 on his person. Mr. E. E. Finch, of San Francisco, took out letters of administration, and took charge of the amount. The body of a Kanaka had been found. Two other bodies had been found and buried by parties unknown. One of them had $180 on his person, and the other a gold ring with a bezel, heart shaped, on his little finger. The Warren had a freight list worth $70,000.

The tidings of the loss of the steamer Sea Gull, another old vessel employed between our harbor and the Columbia river, reached us on the day following the receipt of the above mournful intelligence. She was wrecked at the entrance of Humboldt Bay. She had a number of passengers, but all were saved, and reached this port day before yesterday. She was bound for Oregon, when the accident occurred.

The Quartermaster's schooner, Capt. Lincoln, with a detachment of U. S. troops and supplies for the post at Port Orford, was cast away on the 2d ult., near the mouth of the Cowes river. No lives lost.

We have reports, by a recent arrival from Oregon, of several shipwrecks on that coast. We do not hear of the loss of any lives.

These disasters are mainly attributable to the heavy weather and dense fogs which have prevailed on our coast, to a succession of weeks and months.

The "news of the fortnight," pertaining to local matters, will hardly interest our Atlantic readers. On summoning up the Legislative business performed within the past fifteen days, we find an exceedingly meager detail—a lean and beggarly account.

An attempt has been made to get up a feeling favorable to the early calling of a Convention to revise the present State Constitution, and lay open, probably, the question of slavery to those who desire the introduction of slaves into California.

The State Controller's second report, exhibiting the unsuccessful working of the present revenue system, has been laid before the Legislature.

Five clipper ships have arrived in our harbor since the sailing of the last steamer. The Trade Wind, 120 days, the Golden State 113 days, and the Sword-Fish 90 days, from New York. We perceive that the R. B. Forbes, clipper, has arrived at Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, 99 days from Boston.

The country is quiet. Considerable apprehension is felt in all the mining and farming districts, that the winter rains are over. Water was never more required in the mines than now. Appearances indicate that we shall yet have many days of wet weather before the long dry summer fairly sets in.

Our criminal record exhibits no remarkable charges or occurrences. Two men were hung by the populace at Murphy's Diggings, a few days since, for thieving. Burglaries have recently become frequent in this city. We have no fatal rencounters or bloody transactions to chronicle for this mail.

California Items.

We collect the following additional items of news from California exchanges by the Empire City:

BOGUS GOLD.—Considerable quantities of bogus gold have made their appearance in San Francisco. It is a conglomeration of zinc, gold and quicksilver.

ARRIVED.—The clipper ship Celestial, one hundred and six days from Boston, arrived at San Francisco on the 17th ult.

AGRICULTURE.—Agriculture is receiving a large share of attention. Immense crops of corn, barley, onions, oats, etc., will be raised this year.

NEW PAPER.—The establishment of a German paper is in contemplation at San Francisco.

LEGISLATIVE.—The business of the Legislature is going on smoothly at San Francisco, but nothing of much importance has been done since the election of United States Senator.

A motion has been made to pass a law authorizing the calling of a Convention to frame a new Constitution for the State.

MOKELUMNE RIVER FARMS.—The Calaveras Chronicle states that a number of residents along the river banks are fencing in the more fertile spots for purposes of cultivation. This will be a great benefit to the surrounding miners, who will be enabled to procure their vegetables without sending below for them.

INCIDENT SHIP.—The Nevada Journal states that the Hon. T. Butler King, of the Custom-house at San Francisco, has arrived in Nevada, for the purpose of acting as counsel for plaintiffs, in the case of Central Quartz Mining Co., vs. Mr. Peck—trial for the right of property.

NEW ROAD.—A survey has been commenced with the intention of making a new road from Carson Valley to the Southern mines.

MORRIS RAVINE.—A new Quartz lead has been discovered in the ravine by the brothers Samuel and John Kelly. Some specimens of the quartz showing gold were brought to our office yesterday morning by one of the discoverers, who is on his way below to get them tested. We have always been of the opinion that a good lead would be discovered somewhere in this ravine, as it has been one of the richest ever worked in California. We hope that the right point has been struck.

FROM FOREST TOWN.—Quarts mining is still on the increase in this enterprising and thriving place. Two steam mills will soon be in operation at this place, and a third, the Boston Company's, will soon be erected and driven by water power. Holders of shares feel confident in their ultimate success, and the shares command a high price.

Isthmus Items.

PASSENGERS.—The Panama Star of the 20th ult. says: We seldom recollect seeing so large a number of passengers in our streets, as we witnessed yesterday afternoon. Main street was so crowded with emigrants, their mules, and baggage, that it was really difficult to find space to pass by. The passengers by the steamers City of New York, Ohio, and Sierra Nevada, are now in town, and the very is, still they come;" and the echo is, how are they to get away? The two steamers now here can carry but a small proportion of the immense number awaiting passage, and we know of only one sailing vessel now ready, or likely to be ready for some time, to issue tickets.

The same paper of the 28th, has the following: Another batch of passengers has arrived within the last few days, with through tickets issued by Palmer & Co. of New York, and as a matter of course they find themselves here without a steamer. We learn that the agent here has been paying back the money, but that is rather an indifferent substitute for a passage now-a-days. We wish the press in the United States would inquire into the standing of parties who are in the habit of issuing through tickets, and the prospect they have of being able to fulfil their contract with the passengers, and report accordingly to the public; by doing so they may prevent a great deal of suffering and misery.

ROSEBAY.—The Star of the 28th says: A Hungarian, under the assumed name of Hackel, and who was one of Kossuth's majors, stole from two of his traveling companions yesterday, two through tickets issued by Palmer & Co., New York, obtained the amount of money originally paid for them, from Palmer & Co.'s agent, and decamped with the whole, leaving the two unfortunate victims penniless.

THE TELEGRAPH.—The agent of the Isthmus Telegraph is at present in Panama for the purpose of opening an office, and establishing a Board of Directors.

Provisions of all kind are scarce and very high in Panama.

NEW DOCK.—It is said that George Law, Esq., is examining into the practicability of building a dock at Panama.

DÉBOUCHÉ.—The Star says it is getting to be quite fashionable to get in debt in Panama as much as possible, and then elope for Chagres.

RAISING THE WIND.—The Star says that the New Orleanian authorities at Panama are raising the wind by charging merchants a "provincial duty" on stores arriving in that port, even though they are not landed at all but transported to passage vessels. It advises merchants to resist the payment.

SOUTHERN RIGHTS MEETING.—A Southern Rights meeting was held at Mobile on Saturday evening last. A resolution in favor of the principles and action of the late Convention at Montgomery was adopted.

MONUMENT TO JEFFERSON.—A bill has been reported in the Virginia Legislature making an appropriation for the erection of a monument to the memory of Thomas Jefferson at the University of Virginia.

Arrival of the Cuban Prisoners.

The ship Prentice arrived at New York on the 13th inst., from Vigo, Spain, having on board the captives of the Cuba Expedition, who were liberated by the Spanish Government. The following is a list of their names:

William Wilson, Armand Weie, Daniel DeWolf, John Cooper, H Thomasson, Daniel Gerry, Peter Lascott, John B Roswell, Thos L Lee, John D Brown, Thos Little, Cornelius Duffy, Michael Girger, Joseph B Ghonta, J B Wilson, Ransom Beach, Michael Keenan, Thos H VeNiel, John Johnson, George Holdship, R M Orilder, David Winburn, Hiram West, M H Scott, John H Somers, M L Heffron, Cornelius Seebring, Wm Wilson, Wm H McKenzie, Chas Dalley, Joseph H Halpin, F Boyd, W K Hert, John F Batcheldor, Henry Hart, John McKennes, Henry Stanmur, John H Bush, A H Ludwig, Edgar Crissey, Thomas Denton, A Phillips, Denj Oliman, Henry Williams, Jas H Ucursay, H B Metcalf, D F Metcalf, Geo Nickhurdson, P C Mahan, John Griffen, Wm Lasner, Louis Nagel, Jas D Baker, John F Prewitt, Wm H Cameron, O O Cook, G W Foster, J C Chapman, John Klyne, Isaac Freeborn, D Q Reanseau, Geo Hnrrison, Thos Hilton, Wm L Hilkinson, E Q Bell, Priston Essep, Wm H Cruft, F Monroe, Chas Harrison, J B Fagan, E J Otis, Chas J Hodge, James Smith, Joseph Dorcot, George Parr, Wm H Hadnal, John Carter, S Barnard, J McMurray, George W Berry, Thomas Bryan, John Denion, Henry Jasper, O N Harwell, D S Weymouth, John Casanover, George Edgerton, George Wilson, Victor Buprat, Benjamin Haunah, P D McMullen, C Hagnoori, J Brown, (counterfeit,) Augustine Montoro, T A Simpson.

The New York Harald of the 14th says that they are still on board the ship, and in the most destitute condition. The benevolent were requested to contribute to the relief of the unfortunate men

THE CHURCH ESTABLISHMENT IN IRELAND.—There are 155 parishes in Ireland, with an income of £12,000 a year, which do not contain one Protestant. There are 173 parishes, income £19,000 a year, and in each of which the number of Protestants is under ten. There are 407 parishes, of which the joint income is £53,000 a year, and in which the Protestant population seldom exceeds fifteen and never exceeds fifty. There are 575 single parishes, in each of which there are less than fifty Protestants, but of which the united income is £170,000 a year.

Grace Greenwood, it is rumored, will accompany Miss Cushman on her return to England, with the view of preparing herself for the stage, under her direction. Her first attempt will be made in the English provinces, and, if successful, will submit to the ordeal of a Metropolitan audience.

THE CUBAN TRIALS.—John W. Harrison and Paul Williamson, two of the returned Cuban prisoners, have been detained in New York to appear as witnesses in the case of O'Sullivan and others.

Mammoth Cave in California.

Our latest California papers say that in the county of Calaveras, there exists an immense cavern, under solid stone, which has been called by the miners of that district for some time, Solomon's Hole. A mining claim has been located at the spot, the cave having been explored to the depth of three or four hundred feet. The cavern is situated on Wadle's Creek, one of the tributaries of the Cosit Creek, and is six miles distant from Carson's Hill. Mr. J. B. Trask, who is now engaged in a tour of scientific observations and geological survey of the State, thus writes to the Sacramento Times:

"It is situated in limestone, and the descent is from the side of a hill on the west side of the creek. The opening is about three feet in diameter, and the descent vertical for 30 feet; at this point a mass of limestone rock forms a platform some six or eight feet in length; the next descent is to the right of the plat some five feet, and eighteen feet vertical; at this place a smaller stage occurs sufficient only for one man to stand (the above two points cannot be shown in the plat from darkness and position.) From the second plat you descend in a space some fifteen feet in diameter to that point, at which you notice the first and upper-candle placed on your left; this line of descent is seventy feet.

This point from its form, is called the Liberty Cap; it is of a stalactite formation and 15 feet high, being composed of four or five of these, apparently cemented together, and resting as you see, on a table jutting from the main ledge with circular stalactite hanging pendent from its sides; the other lights on the left were placed for a better view of interior and sides. From the cap the descent is near 100 feet, and you go to your first footing some 30 feet in the dark space in front, nearly opposite to these two figures in the centre and on an inclined plane of 35 degrees.

The shape of the first chamber is that of a bishop's mitre, the space between fire on the right to the narrowest point on the left, in a line of two figures in the centre, is 50 feet, and it expands to a width of 300 feet in diameter, covered with drapal curtains of stalactites."

A large mound occupies the centre of this room 50 feet in height, and 70 in diameter, composed of loose stones and earth, that was washed in from the top, and contains gold. Behind the figure, sitting by the fire, on the right you will notice a triangular space, in distance 40 feet in the scale. This is the aperture to the next chamber below, and directly under the first; it cannot be shown in the plate. The vertical depth of this room is 100 feet, and is composed of the fragments of the rock forming the cavern; in this chamber the most interesting feature of the whole presents itself, which was the appearance of portions of a human skeleton. One a large flat rock, on one side of this room, lay a portion of the skull; the skull was not entire; the entire base was wanting; all that remained was the os frontis, the parietal bones, and part of the occiput. One of the company, Mr. Phillips, attempted to pick it up, in doing which it crumbled and fell to pieces. No vestige is as yet found of these remains; the opening of the cave next season will probably develop them. "I will not attempt to speculate on these remains, or the age in which they have been deposited, but the situation, or peculiarities attendant, to say the least, is strongly presumptive of high antiquity.

This cave is now explored to the depth of 450 feet, but as yet the bottom is not found. Two other apertures, of great depth are still known to exist, below those named, and until more efficient means are used, they must remain unknown; but the company who have now located it, are determined to find its bottom.

Arrival of the Cuban Prisoners.

The ship Prentice arrived at New York on the 13th inst., from Vigo, Spain, having on board the captives of the Cuba Expedition, who were liberated by the Spanish Government. The following is a list of their names:

William Wilson, Armand Weie, Daniel DeWolf, John Cooper, H Thomasson, Daniel Gerry, Peter Lascott, John B Roswell, Thos L Lee, John D Brown, Thos Little, Cornelius Duffy, Michael Girger, Joseph B Ghonta, J B Wilson, Ransom Beach, Michael Keenan, Thos H VeNiel, John Johnson, George Holdship, R M Orilder, David Winburn, Hiram West, M H Scott, John H Somers, M L Heffron, Cornelius Seebring, Wm Wilson, Wm H McKenzie, Chas Dalley, Joseph H Halpin, F Boyd, W K Hert, John F Batcheldor, Henry Hart, John McKennes, Henry Stanmur, John H Bush, A H Ludwig, Edgar Crissey, Thomas Denton, A Phillips, Denj Oliman, Henry Williams, Jas H Ucursay, H B Metcalf, D F Metcalf, Geo Nickhurdson, P C Mahan, John Griffen, Wm Lasner, Louis Nagel, Jas D Baker, John F Prewitt, Wm H Cameron, O O Cook, G W Foster, J C Chapman, John Klyne, Isaac Freeborn, D Q Reanseau, Geo Hnrrison, Thos Hilton, Wm L Hilkinson, E Q Bell, Priston Essep, Wm H Cruft, F Monroe, Chas Harrison, J B Fagan, E J Otis, Chas J Hodge, James Smith, Joseph Dorcot, George Parr, Wm H Hadnal, John Carter, S Barnard, J McMurray, George W Berry, Thomas Bryan, John Denion, Henry Jasper, O N Harwell, D S Weymouth, John Casanover, George Edgerton, George Wilson, Victor Buprat, Benjamin Haunah, P D McMullen, C Hagnoori, J Brown, (counterfeit,) Augustine Montoro, T A Simpson.

The New York Harald of the 14th says that they are still on board the ship, and in the most destitute condition. The benevolent were requested to contribute to the relief of the unfortunate men

THE CHURCH ESTABLISHMENT IN IRELAND.—There are 155 parishes in Ireland, with an income of £12,000 a year, which do not contain one Protestant. There are 173 parishes, income £19,000 a year, and in each of which the number of Protestants is under ten. There are 407 parishes, of which the joint income is £53,000 a year, and in which the Protestant population seldom exceeds fifteen and never exceeds fifty. There are 575 single parishes, in each of which there are less than fifty Protestants, but of which the united income is £170,000 a year.

Grace Greenwood, it is rumored, will accompany Miss Cushman on her return to England, with the view of preparing herself for the stage, under her direction. Her first attempt will be made in the English provinces, and, if successful, will submit to the ordeal of a Metropolitan audience.

THE CUBAN TRIALS.—John W. Harrison and Paul Williamson, two of the returned Cuban prisoners, have been detained in New York to appear as witnesses in the case of O'Sullivan and others.

EL PASO.—It appears that neither the commander of the Eighth Military District nor Col Sumner consider El Paso in their district, and consequently that region is left without officers or protection.

Later from Key West.

The steamship Isabel arrived at Charleston on the 18th inst., bringing news from Key West to the 14th. We extract the following news from the correspondence of the Courier:

KEY WEST, March 15, 1852.

SHIP TELAMON OF NEW YORK, March 8.—By the arrival of the schooner St. Denys, I am informed that the ship Telamon has already commenced breaking up. Although lying in deep water, the leak has gained in consequence, no doubt, of her exposure to the sea; and pieces of timbers have been discovered by her officers, who have been on board from the day that she ran ashore, (Monday, January 15, 1852,) floating alongside. Capt. Burgess has been expecting the steam pumps from New York, which are now on board of a vessel, but when they do arrive they will be of no avail. Capt. B. left on the 6th inst., together with crews of wreckers, to examine her condition; and, from all accounts, all her materials will be conveyed to this port, as there appears no hope of now saving the hull. During the 4th inst. she thumped heavily on account of the boisterous weather.

SCHOONER ST. DENYS, OF KEY WEST.—Said schooner arrived here this morning from Nassau, N. P. Capt. Stickney, her master, on account of business, remained at Nassau, N. P., and dispatched her to this port; but unfortunately for himself, sent her in charge of a foreigner, and did not have his clearance, manifest, or even a captain. The consequences are, that our collector, although authorised, demanded only a fine of $100 from her owners here, at the same time requesting an excuse, so that he can transmit the same to the department. I understand that the loss or expenses will fall on Capt. Stickney, who has her under charter. What the Secretary of the Treas

The Bible.

OF THE INCOMPARABLE TREASURE OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, WITH A PRAYER FOR THE TRUE USE OF YE SAME.

The following stanzas are copied from Parker's (breeches) Bible, 1594. They are well worth preserving for their terseness, vigor and pithiness, notwithstanding the ruggedness of the versification:

Here is the spring where waters flowe,
to quench our heate of sinne:
Here is the tree where trueth doth grow,
to leade our lives therein:
Here is the judge that stints the strife,
when men's devices faile:
Here is the bread that feedes the life that death cannot assaile.
The tidings of salvation deare, comes to our eares from hence;
The fortress of our faith is here,
and shielde of our defence.
Then be not like the hogge that hath a pearle at his desire;
And takes more pleasure in the trough,
and wallowing in the mire;
Reade not this booke in any case,
but with a single eye;
Reade not but first desire God's grace to understand therebye;
Pray still in faith with this respect,
to fructifie therein,
That knowledge may bring this effect to mortify thy sinne.
Then happie thou in all thy life,
what so to thee befalles;
Ye, double happie shalt thou be when God by death thee calles.

Thoughts for the Theughtful.

BY LIZZIE NEWTON.

Who that considers the great responsibility of ministers of the Gospel, can be unmindful of their welfare, or coldly look on as they stand or fall! Surely there are few subjects which should more deeply interest the Christian, or call forth more importunate petitions at a throne of grace. If our ministers were more faithful, the Church would be more zealous; but remember, O Christian, if you prayed more earnestly for your preacher, he would be more holy. Great, great is the accountability of him upon whom is laid the burden of souls, and but little less will be ours when we answer concerning the prayers offered for him, and the charity with which we regarded him. I have thought much on this matter, mourned over the delinquencies of both pastor and people, and before God bewailed my own short-comings. Occasionally some incident brings it more forcibly before me, and I long for "the pen of a ready writer," if I may thereby lead one to think of the light in which even men regard these things. But I am not eloquent, and I place the simple truth before you as more effective than any imagery with which I can surround it.

Some months since, on a pleasant Sabbath evening, a gentleman met, at a bayou or lake, two men, who were fishing. To many residents of this State this would be no unusual scene, and would therefore call forth no very strong emotions, but to him just from one of the most moral and religious communities in Alabama, it was peculiarly striking, and seemed exceedingly sinful. As is generally the case, they were not transgressing in one point alone, but added to the profanation of this holy day, was the taking in vain the name of Him whose day it is. Without much hope of success, some words were addressed to them; one seemed rather abashed; he was not so far gone in sin as to feel none of its sting, acknowledged it was a wrong course, at least an unprofitable one; but the other, with barefaced indifference, made an effort at self-defence, remarked that he had two years before been a Methodist preacher, and now jested at the probability of passing eternity among the damned. They were left there, and I doubtless will know nothing more of them till we meet at the judgment bar of God; but imagination would go back and picture the backslider, entering life with fine prospects and an extended field of usefulness; but perhaps he was young and unsustained by those who should have watched over him with jealous care; temptation came, and he fell. I have often hoped that his story was false; but there are no means of deciding; let us therefore profit by the lesson which it offers.

A few days after this circumstance, a friend returned from a camp meeting, to which I had been anxiously looking forward; in answer to my inquiries, he replied that he thought there was but little good done; the people were careless, and the preachers as much so; that he visited the preachers' tent, and thought they were only engaged in "cutting" at each other, more intent upon criticising each other's efforts than in asking the aid of the Spirit. From another I should have thought such an account exaggerated, or uncharitable, but I knew that he from whom it came drew no hasty conclusions, and was wont to look leniently upon the faults of his fellows. In time it was confirmed by others, and I wondered how those preachers felt when they left the ground and remembered they had possibly misimproved or wasted time especially appointed to worship God. Perhaps they thought those criticisms harmless diversions, and it may be they little suspected any one noticed those smiles and sly glances exchanged in the pulpit. Perhaps they did no wrong, but if they did their duty, why did they not go away with their hearts burning with love to God, and glowing with interest for perishing souls, why was not the church built up and knit together, and why were so few mourners found at the altar?

True, we frequently complain of our preachers, and often look for angelic or Adamic perfection from men as fallen as are we; we forget their natures, and harshly canvass their actions, words and looks. This may discourage some, and lead them to think it impossible to please us; but we are not altogether unreasonable; almost every one thinks he has seen some blameless men, and great as is thy responsibility, He who placed thee there has said, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

Oh, that we were more fully awake, both as preachers and people—more earnestly sought to do our whole duty! Let us in charity hide the faults we see, cover the shortcomings which harshness can not remedy, pray more, frequently and fervently for the watchmen of Zion, and He who heareth prayer will surely bless us in our ministers.

Circuit Riders not Ministers.

Bro. McTyeire: I have recently noticed that a disposition is manifested on the part of some our ministers to bring about a union between our Church and the American Tract Society in its work of distributing books and tracts. I must confess that I have seen this with surprise and regret. Do those brethren forget that that Society is scrupulously careful to exclude from their catalogue almost every book that has for its author a Methodist or an Arminian? That while they publish not a line from Wesley, or any of his Methodist contemporaries, they publish freely the writings of Edwards, Baxter, Flavel, etc.! That in the letters and reports of their agents and secretaries, they frequently treat our whole Church polity as unmeaning; and in doing this even some of the secretaries of their Society are guilty of the most glaring misrepresentations! Do our brethren know these things; and if so, can they argue a union with such a society!

That your readers may know something of their strange publications, I send you the following extracts from a pamphlet entitled. "Home Evangelization—A view of the events and prospects of our Country—based on the facts and relations of Colportage."

Pages 17-18: "A region of country lying between the Alleghanies and the Ohio river contains more than fifty counties, with an average population of some five thousand souls in each county, or about six to the square mile. The whole district is an ocean of mountains, and the chief occupation of the people that of herdsmen or hunters. Less than ten of the villages have a population exceeding three hundred each. The inhabitants live along the streams, or in the coves and valleys, generally remote from each other, and so situated as to forbid their general enjoyment of schools or preaching. There are not a dozen points in all that district where the Gospel is statedly preached each Sabbath by any one denomination, and those who are favored with the Gospel rarely hear it oftener than once a month; while thousands remain from year to year without listening to the preached Word. In one county, larger than the State of Rhode Island, the only preachers are two uneducated Circuit Riders. Another county has an equivalent to the time of two and a half ministers bestowed upon it. Other counties are equally destitute."

The above refers to the Western division of Virginia, (as appears from another part of the book) and there are about sixty counties in that division of the State, with a population of at least 600,000, instead of 300,000, as is assumed by the writer. There are about fifteen inhabitants to the square mile instead of "six."

"The chief occupation of the inhabitants, that of herdsmen or hunters." I wonder if the agents of the Society circulate this tract among the few scattered semi-heathen of West Virginia? Such ignorance would be inexcusable in an Englishman who had never seen our country, if he made any pretension to being a gentleman of information. But it is far worse for a secretary of the American Tract Society to make and publish to the world statements so wide of the truth. I will just add that about the time this tract was being prepared for the press, the assessors of taxable property were passing through West Virginia, and entering upon their books thousands of acres of land as being worth from forty to eighty dollars per acre. But if the writer has erred most strangely about the population and manner of life in West Virginia, he has been equally blundering and incorrect in what he says of her moral and spiritual destitution. In that division of the State there not less than one hundred itinerant preachers belonging to the two divisions of the M. E. Church, and probably as many more good and efficient local preachers. Now, if we add to these two hundred Methodist preachers, say four hundred more as the number belonging to all other denominations, we shall have six hundred, or an average of six for each county in the State. But it is quite possible that my estimate of the number of other than Methodist preachers is too large; because it is notorious that neither Presbyterian nor Episcopalian preachers are wont to labor in the mountains. Nay, there are tens of thousands of our mountain population who never saw one of "the successors of the Apostles!" No: and they never will see them.

But, I mistake; Methodist "circuit riders" are not ministers; they are merely "unlettered preachers," or "uneducated circuit riders." And it seems quite plain from this tract that they hardly supply the place of a "minister" any better than their own colporteurs. And it is by counting out all our itinerant and local ministers, that these agents and secretaries are enabled to present such pictures of the spiritual destitution of various districts of our great and happy country.

But, why is it that those sons of the mountains, and those, too, who inhabit the poor marshy and unhealthy districts of the South, never see any of "the successors of the Apostles!" Yes, why is it! Are not those poor, our brethren! Did not our Lord redeem them by His death! Are they not the subjects of our Heavenly Father's care as well as others? May they be saved in Heaven! Then, we repeat, why are they not cared for by those pretended successors to the Apostles? To speak the truth plainly, those poor people have not comforts enough in their cabins, or gold enough in their pockets, to attract those men to their mountain-homes.

I quote from pages 19, 20: "The average population in the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin, and Michigan, does not exceed six, or about one family to the square miles. From our own observation," say two of the best informed and most discriminating of the American Tract Society's general agents at the West, "families live three, five, and ten miles from each other, as a general thing, in such a relative position as to render it difficult to bring any stated religious influence to bear upon them. This obstacle, combined with many others, renders it next to impossible to gather even a tithe of this population into schools and churches. Less than one-third of the population of our field, embracing Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, and Iowa, is under the direct influence of any evangelical instruction." This view is corroborated by the statements of pastors, one of the most prominent of whom writes from Ohio: "We have fifty towns, with an average population of 800 each, entirely without any kind of preaching. We have fifty more, with a still greater population, never partially supplied."

The number of square miles in the above named States is, in round numbers, 350,000. The writer of that extract assumes that there are 500,000. The population he estimates at 3,000,000. The population in 1850 was 5,408,000; or, fifteen inhabitants to the square mile, instead of six. "Families, as a general thing, live three, five, and ten miles from each other." Who believes this! If the writer does he is to be pitied.

I do not know what the writer means by "direct influence of any evangelical instruction;" and I do know that there is great destitution in those States among our foreign population; but, after all, I am sure that this destitution is grossly exaggerated. So far as the writer's remarks relate to Ohio and Indiana, I know that his statements are entirely incorrect. In Ohio there are two very large Conferences belonging to the M. E. Church. One of them numbers three hundred itinerant ministers and as many local. The two Conferences combined contain, I think, not less than six hundred efficient preachers of both classes. The membership of the Church is not far from 120,000. Thus, it will be seen that about one-sixteenth of the whole population are communicants of the M. E. Church. The Presbyterians and Baptists are numerous, and the smaller sects—Protestant Methodists, United Brethren, Episcopalians, etc., are all pretty well represented in that great State. Now, if we estimate the number of all those evangelical denominations at eight hundred preachers and 180,000 church members, we shall have a total of 1400 ministers and 3,000,000 church members; or, nearly one-sixth of the whole population of the State. According to these figures it will be seen that at least two-thirds of the population are under the direct influence of the word of God. In Indiana about one-tenth of the whole population of the State is in the M. E. Church, and that State will compare favorably with any other State in the Union in religion and morality.

Is it again asked, why and how is it that an intelligent pastor would state that there is such great destitution in Ohio that one hundred large towns are so nearly destitute of ministerial labor! The answer is plain: They do not think that a town or country is supplied with ministers when a large portion of those men are "uneducated preachers," or "circuit riders," and if the agents of the American Tract Society could be brought to believe that our ministers are evangelical ministers, and our churches evangelical churches, you would not hear half so much said about the moral and religious destitution of the country. That there are one hundred large towns in Ohio so destitute of ministers as the Tract Society represents, nobody will believe. Indeed, I very much doubt whether there are a half dozen such towns in the whole State where there is not regular service in a Methodist Church.

The Grip of Faith.

John Welsh, one of the early reformers of Scotland, born 1570, has given a lively picture of faith, which may serve to encourage some trembling believer:

"It is not the quantity of thy faith that shall save thee. A drop of water is as true water as the whole ocean. So a little faith is as true faith as the greatest. A child eight days old is as truly living as a well man. So it is not the measure of thy faith that saves thee, it is the blood that it grips to that saves thee; as the weak hand of a child, that lends the spoon to the mouth, will feed as well as the strongest arm of a man; for it is not the hand that feeds thee, albeit it put the meat into thy mouth, but it is the meat carried into the stomach that feeds thee. So if thou canst grip Christ ever so weakly, he will not let thee perish. 'All that looked to the brazen serpent, never so far off, they were healed of the sting of the fiery serpent; yet all saw not alike clearly, for some were near hand, and some were far off. Those that were near hand might see more clearly than those that were far off; nevertheless, those that were far off were as soon healed of the sting when they looked to the serpent, as those that were near hand; for it was not their look that made them whole, but He whom the serpent did represent. So, if thou canst look to Christ ever so meanly, He can take away the sting of thy conscience, if thou believest; the weakest hand can take a gift as well as the strongest. Now, Christ is the gift, and weak faith may grip him as well as strong faith, and Christ is as truly thine when thou hast weak faith as when thou hast come to those triumphant joys through the strength of faith." Let every trembling sinner grip Christ by faith.

Timothy.

Timothy was born in Derbe, a city of Lycaonia, in Asia Minor, now comprising a part of the Turkish Empire. Timothy had, through the gracious Providence of God, the happiness to be born of a God-fearing ancestry. His mother Eunice, and his grandmother Lois, were women of piety and "unfeigned faith." When but a youth, Timothy was converted to the faith of Christ, and it would appear, sustained the best reputation; for it is said by St. Luke, in the Acts of the Apostles, that he was well reported of by the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium, cities not far from Derbe.

Timothy left all, and joined with St. Paul in the glorious, but hazardous enterprise of preaching to perishing millions the Gospel of salvation. He continued with the Apostle Paul for a number of years, and was his companion in travel, suffering and imprisonment. Timothy was a prisoner with St. Paul at Rome, but was released before the Apostle. We read in the Epistle of Paul to Timothy, that when St. Paul went into Macedonia, he left Timothy in charge of the Church and its interests at Ephesus; and in the Second Epistle to Timothy, written just before St. Paul's martyrdom at Rome, that Timothy was still at Ephesus, where it is believed he continued the remainder of his life.

The fact that St. Paul (who had the daily "care of all the churches" which he had planted) put Timothy in charge of the interest of the Church at Ephesus, is proof alike of St. Paul's affection and confidence, and Timothy's superior gifts and ability.

Ephesus was the most considerable city in Asia Minor. It was made by the Romans the capital of the whole Asiatic Province of their Empire. Ephesus was renowned of old as the city of the Temple of "the great goddess Diana," reputed, from its colossal proportions and the splendor of its decorations, as one of the seven wonders of the world.

It was the uniform policy of the apostles, first to establish Christianity in the great cities, and the best reasons justified their policy. The large cities presented to the early preachers the largest number of hearers and the greatest opening for usefulness. The large cities of antiquity were the great centres and supports of idolatry; in them were erected the magnificent temples consecrated to the glory and worship of the gods of ancient mythology. In them lived the splendid retinue of priests, and here were celebrated the pompous, imposing and time-hallowed rites of idol worship.

In their strongholds of idolatry, the apostles, with a policy as fearless as it was wise, planted the standard of Christianity, and preached the Gospel as "the power of God unto salvation." These cities, too, were thronged with strangers from many and distant lands, who, hearing the Gospel and witnessing the working of miracles, would carry the report into places remote, and prepare the public mind for the coming of the apostles of the new religion.

Great cities are the creators of public opinion—they originate and control the fashions, and give a complexion to their times and their countries. These reasons show the wisdom of the apostolic policy in planting the Gospel, first of all, in the great cities of the Empire.

The tradition of the times tells that Timothy ended his labors and his life by martyrdom in the city of Ephesus. There are some points in the history and character of Timothy that may afford us, we trust, not unprofitable matter of reflection.

His history shows us how certainly piety shall reap its reward and be productive of good. Lois, the grandmother of Timothy, was a woman of "unfeigned faith," and according to the example of Abraham and the teaching of Moses, she commanded her household after her to fear the Lord. We know not that she was blest with a son, but her daughter Eunice had the "faith" of her mother. This was reward and consolation enough to repay all her outlay of maternal piety and prayer in bringing up her child in "the nurture and admonition of the Lord." But God had more honor and comfort yet in store; Eunice was blest with a son. This son, Timothy, was trained and reared for God: "from a child he knew the Holy Scriptures." What a noble instance is Timothy of the truth of the inspired teaching, "train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." What an encouragement is this case to parental faith and duty. Little did Lois and Eunice know that they were educating an embassador for God, and training a hand to scatter with generous philanthrophy, on a hundred fields, the seeds of eternal life, to be a boon of everlasting good to perishing thousands. "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation." Little did the great and faithless world know or care that these two humble women, in the privacy of their home were, under God, preparing an instrumentality that was to bear a prominent part in revolutionizing the whole face of human society, and in founding and extending a kingdom, of whose dominion there should be no end, and whose extent should reach to the "utmost bounds of the everlasting hills."

As the acorn contains the oak, and all its fortunes, so the child contains the man, his history and destiny. So of the child Timothy; "he knew the Holy Scriptures from a child," so he was "well reported of by the brethren" "Paul would have him go forth with him," on his mighty and far-reaching embassy of love, to preach in many lands and proud capitals, "Jesus and the Resurrection." He was honored, also, by being the object of two inspired Epistles, which will identify his name with the history and glory of the Church throughout all coming time.

Timothy consecrated his youth and prime to the service of God, and cheerfully laid himself as an offering on the altar of Christ. When the old and wasted seek God, we feel thankful; a brand has been snatched from the burning; a victim half drowned has escaped on the last plank of life's wrecked and sinking bark; but when the young, the lovely and the strong come to Christ and hang their honors about his Cross, we feel an admiration: they renounced the world when the world seemed fair, and the pathway of pleasure blushed with flowers and was redolent of countless sweets. Piety with the sick and the old has much the look of a dernier resort, a reluctant necessity. Not so with the young and strong—piety with them looks like an act of principle, a cheerful and early choosing of the right, because it is right; and not as the old and dying, who seem to array piety and hell before their eyes, and as they look from one to the other, seem to say, "I must endure this or suffer that," and then, through fear of future ill, lean to virtue's side.

Timothy was a character and a life to be beloved. St. Paul calls him "Mine own son in the faith," "My dearly beloved son," terms which describe equally well the affection of St. Paul and the character of Timothy.

What manner of youth must Timothy have been to call forth the love and admiration of such a man as St. Paul! Doubtless one worthy of all acceptation and universal emulation.

The Devil's Power in Tempting.

He is called the Prince of the World, and the "strong man," and he is called in Revelations, 12:9, "The red dragon, who with his tail drew down the third part of the stars." The devil being an angel, must be full of power. Satan, by his fall, lost his holiness, but he did not his strength. Look at the several ways in which the devil, tempts, and there see his power. Satan is a spirit, having a being which is intellectual, and can therefore convey himself into the fancy, and fill the mind with impure thoughts. As the Holy Spirit sweetens the mind with good thoughts, so the devil, being an intellectual spirit, poisons the mind with bad thoughts. Satan, it is true, can not force the will; yet he can set pleasing objects before the eyes, and this has a powerful influence. Satan places before Achan a wedge of gold, and so enticed him with this yellow bait. The devil can excite and act upon our depraved nature, until he sees some symptoms of yielding in the heart—some disposition to embrace the temptation. Thus he stirred up corruption in David's heart, and David numbered the people. The devil can not compel to the gratifications of the lust, but he can blow upon these sparks of lust till they rise to a flame.

Much of Satan's power lies in the fact of his being a spirit, and can therefore strangely convey his temptations into our minds, that we can not easily discover whether Satan is the father of them, or whether our own hearts gave birth to them. Often we indulge the devil's suggestions, thinking they were the natural production of our own hearts. When Peter dissuaded Christ from suffering, Peter no doubt thought all this came from the love he had for his Master. Peter had no idea Satan had a hand in it.

Now, if this be the power of Satan to convey his temptations, so that we can not discover whether they be his or ours, we must be in great danger of being led off from the way that leads to Heaven, and had need pray "Lead us not into temptation."

Macon, Ala., 1852. J. W. L.

John Knox in his Last Moments.

A short time before he breathed his last, this great reformer fell into a slumber, interrupted by heavy moans, during which the attendants looked every moment for his dissolution. But at length he awaked, as if from sleep, and being asked the cause of his sighing so deeply, replied:

"I have formerly, during my frail life, sustained many contests and many assaults of Satan, but at present he hath assailed me most fearfully, and put forth all his strength to devour and make an end of me at once. Often before has he placed my sins before my eyes—often tempted me to despair—often endeavored to ensnare me by the allurements of the world; but these weapons were broken by the sword of the Spirit, the Word of God, and the enemy failed. Now he has attacked me in another way; the cunning serpent has labored to persuade me that I have merited heaven and eternal blessedness, by the faithful discharge of my ministry. But blessed be God, who has enabled me to beat down and quench his fiery dart, by suggesting to me such passages of Scripture as these: 'What hast thou that thou hast not received? By the grace of God I am what I am. Not I, but the grace of God in me.' Upon this, as one vanquished, he left me. Wherefore let us give thanks to my God, through Jesus Christ, who has been pleased to give me the victory; and I am persuaded that the tempter shall not again attack me; but within a short time I shall, without any great pain of body or anguish of mind, exchange this mortal and miserable life for a blessed immortality, through Jesus Christ."

Religion in Oregon.—A writer from Oregon, in giving a sketch of religious matters there, has the following facts and figures:

The Conscience.—When a man's conscience begins to get hard, it does it faster than any thing in nature; it is, I may say, like the boiling of an egg, it is very clear at first, but as soon as it gets cloudy, one minute more, and you may cut it with a knife.

Reflections in Solitude.

Mr. Editor: I am again in that lonely retreat; and of a truth

"I love to steal awhile away," where

Solitude is sweetest
With reflections undisturbed;

And while all is silent, save an occasional sound upon the passing breeze, I am led to ask myself, "In whom do you put your trust?"

This important question points me at once to that truism or fact established in that great text-book of experience, that man is a dependent being. The intellectual, the animal, the spiritual and temporal man, all must have support. In the abstract, these several constituents parts of man can not exist. With a kind of instinctive conviction of this fact, in the first hours of life man stretches out the feeble hand as if to ask for help. As he grows, the mind takes hold of this fact, and is soon engaged seeking support. All nature, with nature's God, are set before him, and all creation seems to sympathize, by offering the various means of created good. God and man propose to help, and seem to rival in their claims to his confidence. But I hear the Lord declare, that the man who trusteth in man is "cursed." Jer. 17:6.

We are not to understand this declaration as designed to destroy all human instrumentalities; for to this end men are brought into the world; and every man who uses his gifts properly and faithfully, must command our confidence. For man's integrity, and his confidence in man, are essential to the organization, well-being and permanency of society. But this confidence should always be secondary; for to confide in man so as entirely to forget God, or cease to look to him as the source and giver of all good, is unreasonable, as well as reprehensible. This degree of trusting in man, is more deeply engrafted among the different classes than we would suppose, or even be willing to admit, on a partial examination. Kings, upon their thrones, have been guilty of trusting in man so as to forget their God. Turn to the rich and business men, and in the great current of speculation and commerce, we find them trusting in man so as to forget their God. The poor, who toil for a pittance, are too apt to stay their trust with those through whose instrumentality they are blest with daily bread. In trade, the beggar forgets his God, and soon, by an involuntary, if not by a voluntary act, his trust is fixed in man. While the seller, in his turn, anxious to get gain, forgets his God and puts his trust in man. And it is to be feared that this degree of trusting in man is taken by some who minister in the Gospel. To some it does seem that the voice of the people is the voice of God. Not that the people have no voice; every man has a voice, and should be heard in his place. But if the people speak not according to the oracles of Heaven, their voice is not the voice of God. To confide in man so as to forget God, is the spirit and body (if not the parts) of idolatry. Hence, when man speaks, we should guard our feelings lest they declare that "a god hath spoken," and the worms of death devour us, and we die in the midst of life.

In whom, then, should we put our trust? In man? No; the soul that trusts in man has a wasting and dangerous foundation. He rises not to God, nor is he stimulated by those high incentives to immortality which raise him to the third heaven; his all is with man; his trust is where the seeds of disappointment are thickly sown in the deep soil of corruption; he will be "cursed" with disappointments. These make sad hearts and heavy spirits; these weaken his affections, harden his heart and blunt his sensibilities, till his feelings, like so many spars, are set against the feelings of others; and he at length is so isolated in spirit that he is compared to a "heath in a desert;" something that has a being, or a state of being, but is located where it is of no use to any thing; "in a desert," where no kindred plant or shrub is seen to waive a friendly salute; no foliage, whose verdant branch may cast a shade of sympathy; no forest blooms, to delight the eye or fill the air with fragrance: all is a dreary waste.

Such is the figurative end of that man who trusts in man. He "is cursed." He finds no heart beating in unison with his—no band of sister spirits to share his griefs, or throw their cheerful and concentrated smiles around him—no places of recreation or sweet consolation to which he can retreat for a while—no hymeneal or social tie can bind him to one green spot upon earth, or point him to happiness ahead, for "he shall inhabit the waste places." This earthly house of God's tabernacle is a waste place; his soul dwells there. This is but an index to the great desert of Eternity, to which the soul that trusts in man must go. Then in whom should I trust? Ans. "Trust in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, specially of them that believe." T. J. L.

Tendency of Theatres.—A New York letter writer, not particularly rigid in his morals, gives his testimony upon the influences of theatres and the plays most in vogue at this time:

"Another report from the Chief of Police, upon a state of city morals, which makes a philanthropist groan in despair! 'What is the cause!' asks the latter. If the Chief would tell him thus, he would tell him nothing but the plain truth: 'I find a great cause for juvenile depravity in the playing of vicious plays at the minor theatres. There is now enacting at one theatre the drama of Paul Clifford; at another, the play of Dick Turpin; at a third, the melo-drama of Jack Sheppard—in each and all of which crime is shown up couleur de rose.'

"During the past month, six youths have been tried for burglary, and convicted, every one of whom admitted to stealing money in the beginning, that they might visit the shilling pits of the theatres. And every one was arrested in the theatre."

Profaning Scripture.

Dear Bro. McTyeire: I wish, through your widely spreading and acceptable paper, to call the attention of professors of religion to two very important particulars. The first of which respects the use of Scripture terms, or phraseology, improperly or irreverently; and in my opinion this is the case when the Scriptures are quoted as a stroke of wit, or without any suitable design. The admonition to Moses appears to me very applicable, when approaching the sacred oracles: "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground."

I do not think that the introduction of Scripture language, jocosely, is consistent with the Psalmist's spirit, when he said, "My heart standeth in awe of thy word," or that it can have a good tendency, but rather that it may lead some to an improper familiarity with the inspired pages, as well as furnish argument to the Infidels. But to explain more particularly what I here intend, it may be necessary to mention a few of the many instances I have heard, by way of example. Two persons walking together, the other day, to attend an official meeting in church, one had in his hand pens, paper and ink; the other remarked, "I perceive you belong to the Scribes and Pharisees." Another tells us, "I have found my sheep which was lost." A person wishing to inform another that he is alluded to, announces in Scripture language, "Thou art the man;" or in excusing the attendance of a man lately married, that "he has married a wife and therefore can not come." And I have heard a person, when business has taken a more favorable turn than was expected, rebuke another jocosely in the words of our Lord, "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt!" I have also heard persons, fond of smoking tobacco, invite others to make with them "a burnt offering;" and some who are given to drinking ardent spirits, when they have taken up a glass of whisky and placed it to their lips, I have heard them exclaim, "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but be filled with the spirit." On other occasions, when drinking off a small glass, they would profanely quote these words: "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones."

The other point which I beg to mention is, the late attendance on public worship. Many people frequently, if not constantly, go during the time when the minister and people are engaged in supplication at the throne of Almighty God. Such a practice not only disturbs the minister and congregation assembled, but prevents entirely such as are appointed to keep the doors, or to open the pews, from joining in the worship. I therefore earnestly entreat ministers, and those who have influence, to use their endeavors to correct an evil so glaring. Is it not a fact that many persons, who profess attachment to the Church, are never present at the opening exercises, but make it a point to disturb the whole congregation, during the first prayer, with the noise occasioned by their late attendance?

Some may think these hints are trifling, and that they arise from a sourness or singularity of disposition in one who has no relish for a jeu d'esprit; however this may be, I submit to their consideration, whether the Divine oracles ought not to be held more sacred? R. T.

Bastrop, La., March, 1852.

Read the Scriptures with a Pure Intention.—In reading the Scriptures, with a view to personal application, we should be careful that it be done with a pure intention. The scribes and pharisees searched the Scriptures, yet without deriving any real benefit from them: they thought that they had eternal life in them: yet they would not come to Christ that they might have life. He, however, who peruses the Sacred Volume merely for the purpose of amusing himself with the histories it contains, or of beguiling time, or to tranquilize his conscience by the discharge of a mere external duty, is deficient in the motive with which he performs his duty, and can not expect to derive from it either advantage or comfort amid the trials of life. Neither will it suffice to read the Scriptures with the mere design of becoming intimately acquainted with sacred truths, unless such reading be accompanied with a desire that, through them, he may be convinced of his self-love, ambition, or other faults, to which he may be peculiarly exposed, and that by the assistance of divine grace, he may be enabled to root them out of his mind. [Bishop Horne.

Silence.—What a strange power is in silence! How many resolutions are formed—how many sublime conquests are effected during that pause, when the lips are closed, and the soul secretly feels the eye of her Maker upon her! When some of those cutting, sharp, blighting words have been spoken which send the hot indignant blood to the face and head, if those to whom they are addressed keep silence, look on with awe; for a mighty work is going on within them, and the spirit of evil, or their guardian angel is very near to them in that hour. During that pause they have made a step towards heaven or hell; an item has been scored in the book which the day of judgment shall see opened. They are strong ones of the earth, the mighty for good or evil, those who know how to keep silence when it is a pain and grief to them; those who give time to their own souls to wax strong against temptation, or to the powers of wrath to stamp upon them their withering passage.

Those who are incapable of shining but by dress, would do well to consider that the contrast betwixt them and their clothes turns out much to their disadvantage.

Any thing which an honest man would do is, of course, not to be considered as a merit, but simply as a duty.

NOTE.—There is a wide difference in the manner of reporting missionary money. Some present minute details of all moneys, where, when, by whom and for what purpose paid. One brother gives me three blank books, containing almost as much matter as this report, and desires their publication. Another furnishes only the sum total—no item of interest, other wise. So that I have been compelled to abridge and select, that this report, already too long, might not reach such an unwieldly length as to frighten both editors and readers. T. J. K.

American Bible Society.

The Managers held their monthly meeting on the 4th ult. The meeting was unusually full and interesting. Twelve new societies were recognized as auxiliaries, most of them in the Southern and Western States. Letters were read from Texas; Hayti; from Dr. E. Robinson, London; from Paris, Smyrna, and China. Grants of the Scriptures were made on application to various places, as usual, both at home and abroad.

A large portion of the session was devoted to the subject of the new Bible House—its dimensions, ultimate arrangements, mode of payment, etc. Full and lucid plans were submitted, and ample explanations made by the building committee. The result was a great harmony of views in the Board; a purpose to proceed at once with the building; to keep a distinct account of funds thus used, with the assurance that they should have no connection with the ordinary remittances of auxiliaries and members.

The receipts of the last month were $23,200 62; the number of Bibles and Testaments issued, 30,916.

The Bible, with the corrections of the "committee on versions," has been stereotyped, and will be ready for delivery in May, at the 36th anniversary of the Society. [Bib. Soc. Record.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, April 3.

Death of Young Men.

That most mysterious Providence concerned in the death of young men may not be fathomed by us. It however forcibly suggests lessons for the conduct of the living; for men may learn their duty from God's ways, though they may never learn His reasons for them.

Most mysterious we have put it. What is more nthwart human hopes, or irreconcilable to human calculations, than such an ovent! For the old to die is, after the common phrase, "in the course of nature." Their mission is fulfilled. The middle aged die and make a great and painful void by their death. But they have had time to do something, and they have had opportunity, and they have not lived in vain. They acted a few scenes on the stage of life—perhaps an eventful, though brief part. Their mission to the world has not wholly failed. In very early age death inflicts bereavement, but not calamity, upon those who live to mourn. There are solacing thoughts in the certainty of infant salvation, and in the "evil to come" that has been escaped. Life hangs by a frail tenure these first years. A thousand casualties threaten in this tender epoch, and hopes that would be cherished are held in check by these well known contingencies. But when the object of love and solicitude has matured into a support; when the flower, that could not at any time have been plucked without a pang, is now the staff for old age to lean on; when all that has been professedly done in life is a preparation, perhaps todious, costly preparation to live—then to die! Parents and friends have need to pray for resignation to His will, and to dwell much on this blessed truth, that God is "too wise to err, too good to be unkind."

Besides the testimony of this week's obituary column, we have before recorded, in a brief career of journalism, the death of several young men—promising young men—young men who seemed, in some cases, to be indispensable to others' joy and comfort—young men who had lively hopes, and of whom there were large expectations—young men who had prepared themselves for life by laborious discipline of mind and body: they were stepping forth upon the arena, with no mean purpose, but with noble resolves; the World and the Church needed them much, and hailed their coming; they were just from the College with its fresh honors, just from the University equipped for the war—AND THEY DIED. The bough is broken under the burden of unripe fruit. Alas for those hopes, that rest on the fairest things below the sky! Man, at his best estate, is altogether vanity. Such sad dispensations are suggestive of admonitione:

1. Prepare to live: These providences are unwarrantably used if they lead any to spare themselves the pains of discipline and the expense of acquiring thorough fitness for some useful department of life's labor. It is not allowable to reason thus: "Why all this weariness and self-denial in mastering a trade, in learning a profession, when my days may end with my education! I may die as others have done, just as I get ready to live. Then all this study, this painstaking preparation will go for nothing." Surely man should be ready to die. He should not be less ready to live. A sudden death and a long life should both be provided for. God makes both these provisions man's duty by keeping him in ignorance of both these issues. Mortality will not excuse the sluggard's sin. A woful improvidence has he been guilty of who finds his days stretching beyond his employment; who has not work enough laid out to occupy his time; to whom long life would be a calamity and responsible position a curse, because he is unfit for their requirements. The chances of not seeing to-morrow have been so nicely calculated, that if it come he will have lived a day too long.

Two parents were not agreed as to correcting their interesting, but disobedient little child. The one fondly remonstrated—"If we punish it and it dies, the recollection will be so afflicting." The other replied—"We will raise our child to live. If God wills that it should die, be it so. We may be resigned to that."

And should a young man upon the threshhold of busy life, all eager and ready to bear his noble part, a polished shaft just launched forth, be cut down and be laid in the grave as he is about to devote, as an offering to God, his well furnished and vigorous and expanded mind and soul, may we not expect God's merciful economy here to interpose its reward upon the terms—"If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." And so a noble purpose is accepted for a noble life.

2. Begin to live early: Do not pitch designs for usefulness too far forward. The shadow of death often falls with sharp outline upon all human projects, and you may lament—"My days are past, my purposes are broken off, even the thoughts of my heart." One does not attain to ability for all kinds of usefulness as he does to the rights of legal majority, at a given date. There are many tasks his shoulders can bear who is not yet a man in stature. Responsibility comes on gradually. Little things may be achieved while preparing for great achievements. This previous exercise is itself the best preparation, the most natural development of power. The too common opinion that young men are to be considered drones till they have "finished their education," will send many of them out of the world, having accomplished nothing. They will have made no mark; nothing of theirs shall live after them. Not so with these who begin to practice as soon as they begin to learn. Even while under tuition, there are whole classes of mankind below their attainments whom they can teach. There are thousand things, level with every grade of capacity, the willing hand can find to do. The world is largely debtor to influence exerted and to works wrought by apprentices, and juniors, and minors, and undergraduates. There are who have done a good life's work in getting ready to live. They began to live early. Let death come to such soon or late. They can not live in vain.

TREASURER'S REPEAT.—Several communications of interest have been laid over to make room for the Report of the Treasurer of Alabama Conference. It, however, is a very interesting document; not very fresh it may be. We had not published it before, supposing its publication in the Conference paper superseded by the Conference Minutes. But, upon request of many members it is now given, as the Minutes may be slow in getting into general circulation. Here; see the grains that made up the wonderful pile; the rills that swelled into the larger stream; the gatherings here and there and every where which made up the heaviest Missionary collection ever made by any Annual Conference. May the next year's report overtop this!

Bishop Doane and his Convention.

THE CHURCH WAR.—The war in the Episcopal Church at the North is assuming a threatening aspect, and the charges against Bishop Doane, of New Jersey, are of a heavy and serious nature. There are nineteen specific charges of most all sorts and sizes. He is charged with obtaining money under false pretences—of inducing persons to endorse notes for him of large amounts, pretending that they were to renew notes which they had already endorsed—that he used the funds of the Diocese in the amount of several thousand dollars—that he swore falsely as to the list of his creditors and the amounts due them—that he has ground the face of the poor, and oppressed the hireling in his wages—that he borrowed several thousand dollars from different ladies in his Diocese which he never paid, and which he knew at the time he could not pay—that he represented his indebtedness at $70,000, when it was actually over $250,000—that when he was actually bankrupt he lived and continues to live in a style of extravagance, etc., etc. A convention has been held, and things appear to have been somewhat smoothed over for the present, but "three Bishops," who have for the nonce been defeated, are said to have some extensive thunder in preparation, which at no distant day they will launch at the head of Bishop Doane. [Exchange paper.

The special Convention called by Bishop Doane, of the New Jersey Diocese, to review the action of the Bishops of Ohio, Virginia and Maine, in reference to charges against himself, met on the 17th ult., in Burlington, in his own Diocese. He had previously issued a protest and appeal against the action of the three assailing Bishops, in which he pronounced their conduct not only unbrotherly and unkind, but "inhuman." The sessions were opened by a sermon from the Bishop, and the administration of the communion. His address occupied more than an hour in the delivery, in which he stated the circumstances under which he exercised his privilege of calling a special Convention; a privilege that had not been asserted for twenty years before. He denies the right of his brother Bishops to take any action whatever in his case, as it had already been disposed of by his Convention. The special Convention seemed to sustain the Bishop. According to the reports of the daily papers, the legal gentleman who led the party which is for investigating the Bishop's affairs was laughed at, whilst the eloquent speeches in defence of the diocesan were received with applause.

A preamble and resolutions were adopted. The first resolution approved the protest of the Bishop, and affirmed that the conduct of the three Bishops was unwarranted by any canon, custom, or usage of the Church. The second was a resolution of unshaken confidence in the Bishop, in the integrity of his character and purity of his intentions. After several efforts to substitute and to amend, with the widest latitude for debate, the resolutions were adopted by a vote of clergy 25 to 2, and laity 25 to 9. After this emphatic vote, and the singing of the "Gloria in Excelsis," the Convention adjourned at 11½ at night. The result is looked on as triumphant for the Bishop. But matters will not be allowed to rest here.

THE BIBLE BETTER THAN PISTOLS.—Rev. Mr. Washburn, Agent for the A. B. Society, in his last report, relates the following fact: "One donor, who is a stranger to the hope of the Gospel, told me that he had resolved to aid in giving the Bible to the world, as long as he had the means to do so. He thought it indispensable to the security of property and the rights of man. He said he once heard an irreligious and profane man, whose business required him to be often among strangers, say 'that he always carried his pistols with him, and usually laid them under his pillow at night; but when he saw a Bible in the house, that had the appearance of being well used, he never took his pistols from his valise.'"

DEATH OF THE OLDEST METHODIST IN N. YORK.—Mr. Richard Leaycraft, a member of the Duane Street Church, died on Tuesday, 16th ult., in the ninety-first year of his age. He was one of the few who worshipped in the "Old Sail Loft" (which is yet standing) in Horse and Cart street, (now William street) the first place opened for public preaching by the followers of John Wesley in America.

Rev. B. H. Russell, of the St. Louis Conference, was on the 25th ult., in St. Louis, making preparations to go as a missionary to California, under the appointment of Bishop Paine, as one of the "twenty."

A CHRISTIAN CHINESE EMPEROR.—The Bengal Hurkaru states that Tien Tun, the new Emperor of China, is a Christian, having been baptized by the late Dr. Gutslaff.

Literary Notices.

The Messrs. Carter, whose publishing house, 285 Broadway, New York, teems with new and valuable books, have laid the following upon our table; which are on sale by J. Ball.

CHARITY AND ITS FRUITS: or Christian Love, as manifested in the heart and life. By Jonathan Edwards. 1852: 16mo., 530 pp.

It will strike readers as remarkable that this work of the famous Edwards should now be published from the original MS., for the first time. These lectures were delivered in 1738. They are eminently practical, and like all their author ever wrote, able. The subject is thoroughly analysed and discussed.

THE FOLDEN LAMB, or Memorials of an Infant Son. By His Mother. 1852: 16mo., pp. 257.

A neat little book, full of tenderness, and as one may readily imagine, full of allowable excesses of admiration. Little Harry died; "The lamb was folded in the Saviour's bosom" before he was four years old, having given many marks of the Holy Spirit's regenerating influence. Parents can not peruse the volume without much delightful sympathy, and they will be led by it to an earlier attention to the spiritual culture of children.

DAILY BIBLE ILLUSTRATIONS; being original readings for a year, on subjects from Sacred History, Biography, Antiquity, Theology, etc. By J. Kitto, D. D. 1852: 12mo., pp. 418.

This is the first volume in what the author calls his EVENING SERIES, or the fifth in his entire series of Daily Bible Illustrations. It is devoted to the Book of Job, and other POETICAL books of the Bible—Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes and Song of Songs. Few living men have done as much for Biblical criticism as Kitto, and the results of some of his most valuable researches, especially in the department of antiquity, are furnished here. Every student of the Poetical Books will highly appreciate them.

FRANK NETHERTON, or the Talisman. 1852: 16mo., pp. 201.

A book for young people that they will not have to be paid to read; and yet they will be well paid for reading it.

MAN—HIS RELIGION AND HIS WORLD. By Rev. H. Bonar. 1851: 18mo., pp. 239.

A very subtle and searching exposure of the various shapes and phases of formalism and nominalism in religion. The style is earnest and pointed. It will often bring to mind, "Are there few that be saved!" Decided Calvinism pervades the book, but the doctrinal peculiarity is not so marked as the practical. The second hand and second rate religion; the unhealthy and uncertain religion; the labors of man to solace himself with a religion below what God has provided and therefore required—these are brought out with awakening force and fidelity.

SONGS IN THE HOUSE OF MY PILGRIMAGE; selected and arranged by a Lady. 1852: 16mo., pp. 316.

A collection of sacred poetry, much of which is familiar. A song for every day in the year, appropriately headed with a verse of Scripture, of a pleasingly mournful air. The volume is neatness itself, and affectionately inscribed to the bereaved, the sorrowful and the heavy laden.

ROGER MILLER, or Heroism in Humble Life. 1852: 18mo., pp. 185.

An encouraging and suggestive narrative, bringing to view much that is noble in life, but lacks the world's imprimatur of greatness. A blessing follows the circulation of such books. Plain, diligent goodness is cheered on. The cause of philanthropy is greatly benefited by such an acknowledgment of an ostentatious worth.

WESTMINSTER REVIEW. January, 1852: American republication. Leonard Scott & Co., New York.

The present is an unusually interesting number of this Foreign Quarterly, indicating the course of the new conductors into whose hands it has passed, who represent, in philosophy, skepticism; in theology, rationalism; in religion, latitudinarianism; in politics, liberalism.

The tenth article is a racy, but partial, summary of the evidences and results of intellectual activity in the United States. An extract from it will be acceptable. The reviewer, after stating that "In no other department is American literature so rich as in that of theology and religion," and giving a list of eminent living names, Beecher, Burues, Sears, McClintock, etc., adds:

"In this list it will be observed that we have mentioned no member of the Episcopal Church; and it is remarkable that the American branch of the English Establishment has never furnished a man of first-rate abilities, or one whose writings have in them the elements of enduring life. Bishop White did not lack much of being an exception; he certainly was in all respects a most respectable person; but his distinction was rather in affairs than in authorship. The late Dr. Jarvis was learned in ecclesiastical history; the two Bishops Onderdonk (one of whom was deposed and the other suspended a few years ago for licentiousness) are clever men. Dr. Seabury is a sharp, but not a strong dialectician; Bishops M'Ilvaine, Potter, and Hopkins, are industrious and sensible divines; Bishop Doane, Bishop Bargess, Dr. Hawks, (one of the most impressively brilliant and graceful of modern pulpit orators) Dr. Hooker, and some others, are men of decided talents; but we do not find among them all any one to be compared with a dozen in the Presbyterian Church; to Dr. Williams in the Baptist, or Andrews Norton in the Unitarian denomination. The dearth of eminent capacities is still more noticeable among the Roman Catholics. Archbishop Hughes, (an Irishman by birth) is a noisy, impudent, and superficial, but tolerably shrewd, demagogue: Dr. Ryder's claims to distinction rest on a few discourses, in which he denies that Lord Bacon was "in any sense a great man;" sneers at the inductive method as ridiculous, and asserts that "the church" was never unfriendly to the march of science or the freedom of thought; and Bishop Kendrick, though he has filled several cumbrous octavos with decent Latin, has done nothing to preserve his name, except in the lists of the Roman Catholic Bishops of Philadelphia and Baltimore. Brownson, whom we have mentioned elsewhere, is but a spendid specimen of the theological Swiss guard."

Progress and Anti-Progress.

An editor of one of our Church papers, writing upon the "Philadelphia movement," expresses himself as follows: "If, however, any radical demonstration should be made in the South, we have no doubt that it will originate with some restless and ambitious preacher, and not among the members." Now, without stopping to remark upon the taste or propriety of using the term "radical" in this connection, which is more ad captandum, and serves only to show the writer's destitution of argument, we would ask is it quite respectful, under all the circumstances, for this writer thus to launch forth his censures.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

...logically and necessarily follow. It is the embodiment of doctrinal liberty and independence, where "every one hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation." What wonder that in such an element of liberty a master mind should sometimes shake off the trammels of creeds? What wonder that genius should shed its sanctity and its orthodoxy, and indulge in the wildest heretical pranks!

If this is the lesson taught us by that religious anomaly of your city, the "First Congregational Church," it may be turned to some account after all, and your readers may be made wiser by thinking about it. It should lead them to cherish the connectional principle of the Church, and to regard as her enemies those who would sever a single fibre of the tie which makes her one.

Since my last communication, our river has filled its banks, and a large commerce, with its din and bustle and buoyancy, moves in our streets and throngs the levee.

March 24. WOODSMAN.

[Special Correspondence of Advocate.]

Note from "X. Y."

LONDON, Feb. 26, 1852.

I drop a few lines just by way of Postscript to my last.

Since that letter was dispatched, the Russell ministry has been unexpectedly upset by a side wind. It is not to be believed that Lord Palmerston had any idea what was likely to be the effect of his amendment on Friday last; as else, I feel sure, he would never have proposed it.

It is generally supposed that the late Premier was glad to accept the first fair opportunity of resigning. The imminent debates on the new Reform Bill and on the Kaffir question, might have driven him out at a disadvantage. As it is, leaving office on a mere question of administrative detail, he still remains in Parliament as the unrumpished champion and representative of free trade and safe progressive reform.

By his resignation Methodism has lost the aid of a ministry ever ready to listen to its representations, and to afford every possible constitutional help to its educational and missionary efforts.

Lord Derby's ministry is, with scarcely an exception besides the Premier himself and Mr. D'Israeli, what the Chronicle has called it—a ministry of "ignotabilities"—and as to D'Israeli, putting him to be Chancellor of the Exchequer, is very much like putting Professor Longfellow to the office of managing a railway or a joint stock bank. Mr. Walpole (Home Secretary) has ability, though not experience. For the rest, they are country gentlemen and Justices of the Peace. And such a ministry enters office not on a popular party cry, but as pledged to unpopular political and fiscal retrogression. X. Y.

St. Paul in Rome.

The late lamented Cook, well known in New Orleans, informed me, some years since, that he believed he had seen and been in the rooms occupied by St. Paul the two years spoken of in Acts 28:30. He stated that they are at present fourteen feet below the surface of the ground; this being occasioned by the accumulation of rubbish in the street, through eighteen centuries. The apartments consist of a suit of rooms some sixteen feet square, communicating with each other by a door through the partition, near the corner of the rooms. They are paved with marble, or a species of flagstone. Mr. Cook was of the opinion, from all he could learn from conversing with the people of Rome, during the two or three years he spent there, that there was a uniform tradition and universal belief among them, in favor of these being the identical rooms rented by the apostle; and when I expressed a doubt upon the subject, he replied by reasoning as follows, which has its force: He said that 2000 years hence Mount Vernon would be as well known to Americans as the burial place of Washington as it is to the men of this day, and that the residence of St. Paul in Rome, under the circumstances, was an event of as great interest to the persecuted and unsettled believers of that city as the deeds and patriotism of Washington are to the people of this country, and the location of the residence of the one would be as likely to be kept in remembrance as the burial place of the other. Obituary Notices.

DIED—In Autaugaville, Ala., 15th ultimo, JACOB STOUDENMIRE, Jr., in the 18th year of his age. He was a youth of a good mind, and having been raised by pious parents was somewhat remarkable for his amiability, devotedness to his parents, and for his correct moral deportment. His relatives and friends doubt not that he had for some time lived in the enjoyment of religion. He had been afflicted long and severely, but bore it all with Christian resignation. His death-bed scene was one of profound interest. When life was sinking apace, and death was in full view, he called his parents to his bedside, and after assuring them of his readiness to die, urged them by many considerations, as he did the whole family, to meet him in heaven. Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord. May this dispensation of Providence be sanctified to the bereaved family and friends. S.

DIED—On the 17th March, in Chambers county, Ala., AUGUSTUS ADKINS, in his 19th year, the youngest son of William and Susan Adkins, and the strongest pillar on earth left for them to lean upon in old age and affliction. He joined the M. E. Church about the 7th of September last, when he gave the liveliest testimony of his acceptance with God through the blood of Christ. He lived an acceptable member up to the hour of his death, and in that moment he gave the brightest evidence of his reception into the kingdom of glory; and so he died. His funeral services were attended to by the writer. He has left a large train of connections to mourn their loss. A. B. CAMP.

General Intelligence.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following are the returns of this institution for the week ending with Saturday evening. It is unusually favorable; the number of admissions, deaths, and patients remaining, being considerably smaller than we remember to have noticed during several months past: Admitted 253; died, 28; discharged, 209; remaining, 865.

REFUSAL OF VOTES.—The Sheriff on Saturday finished the recount of the votes, under the mandamus of Judge Buchanan, and made up his return to the Fifth District Court. The votes counted and compared are those of the 4th, 7th, 10th, 12th, 13th and 15th precincts. The result has been to slightly increase the majority of the whig candidates, that of Mr. Crossman being 123, instead of 115, as made by the Commissioners.

CUBAN PRISONERS.—The following is a list of the Cuban prisoners who sailed from New York on the 20th ult., in the ship Southerner, for New Orleans. It was forwarded here by them with a request that it should be published to let their friends know of their whereabouts, as they are entirely destitute of money, and in a sad plight in every other particular. They state that Messrs. Cook, McCluskey, R. Sands & Co., Professor Williams, and the Cuban refugees in New York, contributed to obtain for them a steerage passage in the Southerner, and gave $7 each to those who went the overland route:

NEW LINE OF TRADE.—The steamer James L. Day has commenced regular trips between this port and Key West, the first regular communication ever established between these two ports.

MOBILE AND NEW YORK STEAMSHIPS.—It is stated that the Steamship Black Warrior now building at New York, for the New York and Mobile line of steamships, will probably be launched by the 1st of June, and will leave on her first trip about the 1st of August. She is to be commanded by Captain Shufelt, formerly first officer of the Collins steamship Atlantic.

U S BRANCH MINT.—The Treasurer has kindly furnished us with the following statement of deposits and coinage at the Branch Mint of the United States at New Orleans, during the month of March, 1852:

DEPOSITS.

Gold, $427,205 21, of which $304,443 56 was California Gold.....	$427,205 21
Silver, $15,156 72, of which $2,561 33, parted from California Gold.....	15,156 72
Total amount of deposits.....	$442,361 93

COINAGE.

44 750 Double Eagles.....	$895,000 00
3,000 Eagles.....	60,000 00
8,000 Half Dollars.....	4,000 00
Total Coinage.....	$959,000 00

NAVIGATION CLOSED.—A dispatch from Buffalo, dated the 22d, says that the weather had again become very cold, and that Lake navigation would be closed probably for two weeks longer.

DEATH OF A CLERGYMAN.—The Rev Dr. Potts, Pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of St. Louis, died in that city on the 17th inst.

SAILING OF THE ARCTIC.—The United States mail steamer Arctic, Capt. Luce, left New York for Liverpool on the 20th with fifty-nine passengers and 2,200 in specie. Among the passengers is the Rev. John S. C. Abbott, who is to visit Paris for the purpose of collecting additional materials for the history and life of the Emperor Napoleon, in writing which Mr. Abbott has for some time been engaged.

HOMEWARD BOUND EAST INDIA TRADE.—Forty-one ships, says the Traveler, are now on their passage to this port from various ports in the East Indies and Pacific—viz: 26 from Calcutta and China, 7 from Manilla, 4 from Batavia, and 4 from Valparaiso. Most of these vessels are now nearly due.

A POWERFUL COMBINATION.—The Maryland Senate has passed, without amendment, as it came from the House, the bill to unite seven of the Cumberland iron and coal companies under one corporation, with a capital of five millions of dollars, and with power to hold 12,000 acres of land. This concentration of power may for the present be beneficial in developing the wealth of the mineral regions of the State; but it is contended, with good reasons that it will eventually prove detrimental to the interests of the whole State. This extensive monopoly will break up the smaller companies, and at once put an end to competition, which is so necessary to the faithful action of all kinds of business.

RENTS IN CALIFORNIA.—The California papers contain complains of the heavy drains on the public resources, from the enormous rents paid for buildings for the accommodation of courts and public offices. The Common Council of San Francisco, and the Board of Supervisors, severally representing the city and county, have recently rented for the above purposes the whole of the California Exchange, for $3000 a month, and this is said to be a saving of some $1700 to $2000 a month on the rents previously paid.

ADVANCE IN PROPERTY IN NEW YORK.—It is stated, that within the last few days, over one thousand lots of ground have been sold at auction in the city of New York, for an aggregate sum of $800,000. The same lots, thirty years ago, cost only $4,400.

TRADE WITH MOROCCO.—The late U. S. Consul to Morocco has published a letter earnestly calling the attention of the people of the United States to the importance of the trade of Morocco, which is very lucrative, and is now all enjoyed by England.

Loss of the Steamship Independence.

SIX LIVES LOST.

We learn from the officers of the Louisiana, that the Independence, in attempting to cross the Malagorda Bar on the morning of the 25th ult., struck and broached to in the breakers, and became unmanageable. Sails were then set, and the engines kept working to force the ship over, but all to no purpose. The entire cargo was then thrown overboard, consisting of assorted merchandise, valued at about $75,000, but the ship still worked to the North of the bay, and brought up in the reef, where she bilged on the 27th at 9 o'clock, A. M., after being ashore for 27 hours. The engines ceased to perform only when the fires were put out by the water. The ship soon broke in two and keeled off shore. The mainmast was then cut away, to keep the ship from keeling, so that the sea could not break over her deck. On the evening of the 27th ult., the officers of the Louisiana, with Capt. Kerr, of the Propeller Rayburn, made an attempt to reach the wreck, but failed. On the 28th they succeeded in reaching her with their boat, and in ten hours landed her passengers and crew, numbering 150 persons. During the whole of the 26th ult., the sea broke completely over her. When the Louisiana left the scene of the disaster, on the evening of the 30th ult., the Independence had sunk to the upper deck. Cargo and vessel a total loss.

Lives Lost.—The following are the names of the persons lost on the 26th ult., by the swamping of a boat, in attempting to leave the wreck: Mrs Minalt and three children, Mrs Lieut Jones, Mr. Hovey, chief mate. The mate was drowned in attempting to save Mrs. Jones.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival yesterday of the steamship Louisiana, Captain Lawless, we have received Galveston papers to the 30th ult., and our regular exchanges from the interior.

FIRE IN SAN ANTONIO.—On the 8th ult. the residence of Dr. Wright, of San Antonio, was consumed by fire. Loss, $8000.

OVERFLOWS, ETC.—The Galveston News, of the 20th, says:

"The overflow of rivers and creeks is said to be greater throughout the country than has been known for many years. We learn from a gentleman just from a long journey in the interior, that there is but one bridge over any stream he passed, either large or small, that has not been entirely carried away. The gentleman who gives us this information has probably traveled Texas more than any man in it, during the last twenty years, and he assures us that he never before witnessed such an inundation, and never before found the country impassable. Many streams, not exceeding thirty or forty yards from bank to bank, have now to be ferried over for a distance of five or six miles. The heaviest of the rains that have thus deluged the country, fell on Friday, the 19th instant, and were attended with a most violent wind, which blew down fences, carried off the roofs of houses, and did other damage. The crops, near our streams, and within the reach of the overflow, have of course suffered, but to what extent cannot yet be ascertained. In all other parts of the country the crops never looked better than at present."

The same paper says that the steamer Camden arrived after having been detained a considerable length of time in the Brazos by the drift wood. The Camden reports Dr. Munson's plantation completely inundated. A man and his wife were brought down on the Camden who had been driven from their homes by the overflow. A large number of cattle and horses had been drowned by the overflow.

The San Antonio Western Texan of the 18th ult. says the San Antonio river rose rapidly in consequence of the heavy rains, and carried away every thing on its banks. All the bridges were swept away, and an immense amount of damage was done. The San Antonio has not been so high in many years, and it is thought by the Ledger that great damage has been done along its banks.

AID TO THE GOVERNMENT.—Don Juan Maria de Leon, of El Paso, has offered to the Government, in case it will send troops there for protection from the Indians, the premises heretofore occupied as a military post, with one hundred acres of tillable land, rent free for one year. The Government paid for this same property, when occupied by troops, $350 per month. It is said to be well situated, and admirably adapted for a military post.

After the expiration of twelve months he will give them a lease of a site for a post, with one hundred acres of tillable land, upon any of his domain, for twenty years, upon the same terms that similar leases are made in New Mexico—That is, that at the expiration of the twenty years the lands and improvements revert to the lessor. Or, if this does not suit, he will give a lease for a post, parade grounds and a reasonable quantity of tillable land, so long as the Government may wish to occupy it.

TRAIN ARRIVED.—Wm. T. Smith's train of sixteen wagons arrived at San Antonio on the 6th ult., making the trip from El Paso to that place in thirty-five days. Messrs. Archibald and Hall, and several others, arrived with the train, all in good health.

A number of trains are expected to pass through San Antonio this spring, loaded with merchandize for the Chihuahua market. The superior advantages of this route are now fully demonstrated.

THE CROPS.—It is said that the crops in the western part of the State never looked better. Many planters have got through scraping their cotton, and some have corn two feet high. Vegetables are abundant.

HORRIBLE DEATH.—An old man named Lowe was thrown from his carriage in New Year's Creek bottom on the 12th ult., and being helpless from the effects of rheumatism, remained there until the creek, which was rising at the time, had sufficiently overflowed the bottom to drown him.

FROST.—The Houston Telegraph says: The frost on the night of the 19th ult. nearly destroyed the cotton on many of the plantations near Richmond. The corn is also cut off in many sections.

THE JAPAN EXPEDITION.—The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald says that one of the objects of the intended naval expedition to Japan it is understood, is to make a hydrographic survey of the Japanese Islands, together with the Strait of Corea and Sea of Japan, which divide the dominions of the Japanese King from those of the Emperor of China.

THE SAN FRANCISCO NAVY YARD.—The Commission appointed to select a site for a navy yard on the magnificent Bay of San Francisco was to leave New York in the steamer of Wednesday, the 24th inst. The Board consists of Commodore John D. Sloat—Commander W. S. Stigden, Lieutenant Simon F. Blunt, and W. P. S. Sanger, Esq., Civil Engineer of the Navy Department. Lieutenant D. Ammen accompanies the Board as Secretary, and Passed Midshipman A. C. Jackson as Draughtsman.

THE DAUGHTER OF ROSAS.—In our recent accounts of the defeat of Rosas, Governor of Buenos Ayres, by Gen Urquiza, it was stated that Rosas, with his daughter, Manuelita, had taken refuge on board an English steamer. This lady is the most remarkable woman of her age. She has managed the affairs of the Argentine Confederation for a long time, softening the roughness and cruelty of her father's acts, wherever an opportunity enabled her to do so. A recent private letter from Buenos Ayres thus speaks of her:

"There is one redeeming, purifying spirit about him—his daughter, Manuelita Rosas, a noble, graceful, accomplished, splendid woman. She alone can exercise any soothing influence over the savage ferocity of the father. If as good as she done by the Government, her hand and heart are there; if a life be spared, it is only by her intercession; and, if rumor be true, she has exposed herself to blows, and even death, to save others. The admiration, the homage, the universal deference paid her, even by the bitterest enemies of her father, will be enough to stamp her as no common woman. She receives the legislative bodies, foreign ministers, and almost, if not entirely, the whole diplomacy goes through her hand. She has her clerks and her secretary, and all foreign agents negotiate with her. The co-ordinate branches, if they can be called such, are so called, once or twice a year go out in a body of two or three hundred to pay their respects to her. It is universally conceded that, if her equal be living, she can have no superior."

It is difficult to tell what will be the result of this victory. The motive of Brazil in entering into this war, was to protect her province of Rio Grande. The motives of the Governors of Entre Rios, Corrientes, Paraguay and Curuguay, the allied provinces of the Argentine Confederation, in joining together, was to crush Rosas, in order not to be crushed by him. The sole object of the tragic career of Rosas was to rule over the whole of that section of South America. His determination was to drive the Brazilian empire into a republic, and then annex it to the Confederation. He called it the only blot upon the face of America. While Ocibe was besieging Montevideo, for upwards of nine years, he caused a good deal of trouble in the Rio Grande to put that empire to a vast expense. He would have made serious inroads into that country, if he had not been opposed at Montevideo by England and France. The probability now is that the successful leaders will get into trouble among themselves for ascendancy. Such has always been the case in all parts of South America.

THE CAPTURER OF LOPEZ REWARDED.—The man named Castaneda, who captured Lopez, has returned to Havana, laden with honors. The Queen gave him six thousand dollars, and made him a captain in the rural militia with a salary of one hundred and ten dollars a month; ten negroes and a tract of land have been given to him. The order of Isabel decorates his person; his children are to be educated at the expense of the government; and while in Spain, he was permitted the favor of kissing the hands of the Queen and the little Princess. He can neither read nor write.

THE SLAVE TRADE IN CUBA.—It is known, by documentary evidence, that there were brought to Cuba and sold as slaves as follows: In 1849, arrived twenty vessels with 6575 Africans. In 1850, seven vessels with 2325; and in 1851, seven vessels with 3557. These are matters of documentary evidence. During the same three years, accurate investigation reveals an added number of 4196; and from the brig Hanover, built in New York and delivered in Cuba last summer, 630 slaves were landed in the last week of February at Sierra Morena; and to the eastward of Saguada Grande, by vessels not yet known of 800; making a grand total of 18,223 slaves imported into Cuba during the last three years.

BRITISH WAR AT SEA.—A very important step has been taken by the British Navy to secure a supply of fresh water at sea. A compact distilling apparatus has been adjusted to the caboose, whereby, with the usual, or little more than le usual, expenditure of fuel, a full daily supply of swell, wholesome water, is procured for the ship's company. The British steam-screw sloop Niger, which sailed von England in September last gave striking evidence of its value and of the deserved confidence reposed in this novel arrangement. The Niger carried but a single water tank, of a few hundred gallons capacity, which was re-imbibed daily from the surplus distillation, after meeting all the wants of the entire crew. The plan of this caboose, which cooks water as well as provisions for a cruising ship, has been adopted and applied by a talented engineer (Copeland) to a passenger steamer of the Philadelphia screw-ship line.

THE FISHERIES.—There is still a great excitement in the British Parliament upon the encroachments of American fishermen on the fishing grounds of the North American British provinces. The Americans have nearly driven out British competition and the reason given is that they enjoy from the liberal policy of this Government, a bount equivalent to the salt duty, and, in fact, much more than equivalent to it. Sir Henry Bulwer tendered a negotiation on the subject to this Government, but it was deemed as a more proper subject for legislation.

A LIFE SNAKE EJECTED FROM THE STOMACH.—Roman Catholic Cruz.—The Christobal (Mass.) Aurora states that Wm S. Sanford, of Salt city, who has been sick for two years, and was supposed to be in a declining, took some inches medicine which caused him to cough and retch violently, when he threw from his stomach a living snake, about eight inches in length, almost perfectly white, with sharp black eyes. Mr. Sanford drank water from a brook, in Maine, some two years since.

AMERICAN TROUBLE IN EGYPT.—The Allgemeine Zeitung contains a statement, under date of 21st February, from Alexandria in Egypt, to the effect that the American Consul, Gen. Magniey, had pulled down his flag on account of some delay of justice upon the part of the Director of Foreign Affairs. The Minister of War being asked if the United States having vessels of war, replied that he believed they had, at that they would hardly venture so far as Egypt.

A COALITION OF SNAKES.—On Thursday last, near Worcester, Mass., a boring man dug out of a space four and a half feet in diameter, and one and a half feet in depth, two hundred and seven snakes, ranging from four to sixteen inches in length, and embracing all the different species common to the vicinity, except the rattlesnake. When found, most of them were torpid, but soon gave evidence of locomotive power. Sometimes they were found singly, and sometimes in bunches of half a dozen. The black, green, striped, and brown, and the adder, were found in the unsolicitous embraces.

THE U. S. ARMORIES.—We learn from Virginia papers that thirty hands have been discharged from the U. S. Armory at Harpe's Ferry, in consequence of the appropriation being nearly expended. Also that the Military Committee of the U. S. House of Representatives have unanimously agreed to report in favor of abolishing the military superintendence of the Armories at Springfield and Harper's Ferry, and restoring the civil system. This is in consequence of the efforts of the representative from the Harper's Ferry District, Mr Faulkner, backed by petitions from there, and also from Springfield.

THE CUNARD STEAMSHIPS.—It is said the Cunarders have sold the new steamer Persia. Some defect was found in both the Arabia and the Persia; at least it is reported that they would not beat the Arctic or the Pacific, and that it was better to work on with the present craft. It is also said that they intend to build two large iron steamers for the service—they are to be twenty feet longer than the Arabia or Persia, of 1,500 horse power, and to be ready in December next.

ANOTHER DIFFICULTY WITH ENGLAND.—It is stated that a grave misunderstanding or misinterpretation of the Oregon Boundary treaty in relation to British vessels navigating the waters under the United States jurisdiction, within the boundaries and along the coast of Oregon Territory, is the occasion of a correspondence which is just now going on between Mr. Webster, and the British Minister at Washington, Mr. Crampton. The second article of the treaty, defining the boundaries between the two countries, grants only the right of "navigation to the Hudson's Bay Company, and all British subjects trading with the same," or so much of the great northern branch of the Columbia River as is within the boundaries of the United States and from the point where that branch meets the main stream of the Columbia out of the ocean, "with free access into and through the said river or rivers, it being understood that all the usual portages along the line thus described, shall in like manner be free and open."

There are no other stipulations in the treaty touching the point at issue, save one other, which reserves to the United States Government the exclusive right of making such regulations in regard to commerce and navigation on those waters as it may see fit, and agrees that British subjects trading with the Hudson's Bay Company shall be upon the same footing, with their vessels and merchandise, in navigating those waters, as citizens of the United States.

A converted Romish priest, J. C. Pitrat, has challenged Archbishop Hughes to an oral or written discussion of the doctrines recently put forth by the Archbishop in his historical speech.

LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR OF NOVA SCOTIA.—Sir John Harvey, Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia since 1848, died at the Government House, Halifax, on the 23d.

BAYARD TAYLOR IN THE EAST.—This peripatetic poet seems to be extending his "Views A foot," far into the orient. The New York Tribune says:

"By the Niagara's mail we have had the pleasure of receiving letters from our friend and associate Bayard Taylor—or as he is known among the Arabs, Taylor Bey—dated at Khartoum, the chief city of Seunaar, situated at the confluence of the White and the Blue Nile, about half way between Cairo and the Equator. He arrived there on the 12th of January, in excellent health and spirits, after a journey on camels across the Nubian Desert, during which he had sundry fortunate adventures, and received friendly attention from the native chieftains. He was the first American ever seen so far toward Central Africa, and like a good patriot never slept without the stars and stripes floating above his tent. Every where good luck had attended him—in truth he seems to have been born to it—but at Khartoum especially he was received with unexpected honors. The governor of the city had presented him with a horse, and had entertained him at a banquet of genuine Ethiopian magnificence, while the commander of the troops had stationed a mighty guard of honor around his tent. In company with Dr. Knobleeher, the venerable Catholic missionary bound for the equatorial regions, whom he had overtaken at Khartoum, and of Dr. Deitz, the Austrian Consul, Mr. Taylor had also attended a banquet at the palace of the daughter of the late King of Seunaar, a very stately and clever princess, who entertained her guests chiefly upon sheep roasted whole. Others of the first families among the Ethiopian aristocracy had also welcomed the strangers with distinguished civilities. Mr. Taylor expected to reach Cairo, on his return, about the 1st of April, though we should not be surprised to learn that he had changed his mind, and, in company with the Jesuit mission, plunged still further into the mysterious country about the equator and the sources of the Nile."

ARMAND MARRAST.—This gentleman, news of whose death was brought by the Europa, was former editor of the National newspaper and President of the French Constituent Assembly. A Republican from conviction, a writer of rare lucidity and elegance, and endowed with great rapidity of intellect and indomitable energy, he labored zealously for the triumph of Republican principles, and made himself prominent in the Revolution of 1848. But with all his tact and talent he never gained the full confidence of the people. They admired his bold intellect but distrusted his integrity, and consequently he failed to secure a place in the Provisional Government, and was compelled to be content with the honors attaching to the mayoralty of Paris. After the memorable days of June, however, he was chosen President of the Constituent Assembly, and retained his position until that body ceased to exist. He was aristocratic and luxurious in his tastes, and his salary of 20,000 francs per month failed to meet his expenses. M. Marrast was born in 1802, at Saint Gaudens, in the Haute-Garonne, a mountainous province in the region of the Pyrenees. His father, who was a lawyer, died early, leaving his son to be educated by the mother, who afterwards kept a school. At the age of twenty-three or twenty-four, he went to Paris and became a teacher of Philosophy at the College of Louis-le-Grand. From this post he was expelled for a speech made at the funeral of the celebrated Manuel, in 1827. When the Revolution of July brought in the liberals, it did not bring in Marrast, who had bitterly assailed the doctrines of M. Cousin and was personally disliked by Casimir Perier. He now entered upon journalism as one of the editors of the Tribune, a Republican paper, whose conductors were the object of special persecution on the part of the Government. Marrast became its chief editor and was condemned to prison, but was let off less severely than his colleagues. In 1834, he was actively inciting to insurrection, and was again imprisoned. He was tried before the Chamber of Peers and distinguished himself greatly by his defence. He was condemned, escaped from prison and fled to England, where he married a Miss Fits Clarence, an illegitimate daughter of William IV. The general amnesty which accompanied the marriage of the Duke d'Orleans allowed Marrast to return to France, and in 1837, some time after the unhappy death of Armand Carrel, he became attached to the National, and as its chief editor, struck some of the weightiest blows which finally overthrew the monarchy. On the memorable night of February 23, 1848, after the massacre in front of the Hotel of M. Guizot, it was Marrast who harangued the excited mass over the dead bodies of their comrades and sent them back to renew and control the struggle which resulted in the downfall of Louis Philippe. Since the end of the Constituent Assembly, M. Marrast has lived mainly in retirement. He has been nominally connected with one or two journals, but has held no public position and has had little or no influence on the march of affairs.

Congressional Proceedings.

WASHINGTON, April 1

In the Senate to-day, a bill was reported granting land to Asa Whitney, to aid in constructing a railroad to the Pacific Ocean.

A resolution was introduced requesting the President to inform that body as to the object of the expedition to Japan. The resolution was debated at some length, and further consideration postponed until to-morrow.

In the House, the bill granting lands in Iowa for Railroad purposes, and the Homestead bill, were discussed without definite action. Plans for a Branch Mint, at Sacramento, California, were submitted and referred.

WASHINGTON April 2

In the Senate, the private calendar was taken up, but the business was not of much importance. Adjourned till Monday. In the House the Iowa Railroad Land bill was discussed and referred to a committee, by a vote of 115 to 50. Adjourned till Monday.

Items by the Canada.

NEW YORK, April 1.

The crew of the Austrian war-steamer Ancona, numbered 150 men—all lost. The disaster occurred off Balmatia by stranding.

New York Markets.

NEW YORK, April 2.

The sales of Cotton to-day amount to 4000 bales, the demand being steady, and prices unchanged. In the Flour market there is a good demand, and the sales to-day amount to 7,000 bbls. State brands $4 43@4 50; Ohio $4 75@4 87½. There has been considerable activity in the Corn market, and the sales to-day reach 12,000 bushels. Prime Yellow is quoted at 86@87c. The sales of pork amount to 300 bbls. Mess 17s—prime unchanged. Seven hundred barrels of lard have been sold at 9½@9¾ ₱ lb.

Fugitive Slave Case.

A hearing was had to-day in the case of Forrest Hanks, a fugitive slave from Baltimore. His discharge was moved on the ground of want of evidence. No decision has been rendered. Considerable excitement exists.

Foreign News by the Europa.

The New York papers of the 25th contain the news brought by the Europa, of which we have had a telegraphic summary.

The English papers are filled with election returns, most of which are in favor of the Government.

It is generally understood that the coasting bill will be adopted by Lord John Russell and his party will be to force the tories to an early dissolution of Parliament, even if it has to be done by limiting the supplies to three months. They will then be compelled to appeal to the country on the questions at issue.

FRANCE.

In the new Legislative Assembly there are to be two questors, as in the old Chamber of Deputies, who are to be chosen by the President of the Republic. M. Vaderte is spoken of for the Presidency, and M. Dennes Legarde Secretary and Chief Clerk of the proceedings. M. Bevaillant remains Secretary General. M. Muller, Librarian of the late Assembly, also retains his place, but the said his assistants are to be changed. M. de Beaumont, the prisoner, remains Chief of the Ushers. The Palace of the Presidency, like that of the Assembly, will be placed under the administration of the President of the Corps Legislatif, and the questors are to be compulsorily under his orders. The internal arrangements of the two Chambers will be completed in a few days. M. Billault removes this day to his new hotel.

More than 150 of the newly elected Deputies have already chosen their places, and the Salle des Conferences has been fitted up for their reception. The President of the Republic has ordered that there shall be put one tier of galleries in the grand hall. M. Court's painting, which represented the late King, Louis Philippe, taking the oath to the Charter and which had been suspended over the President's chair, was destroyed by the mob on the 24th February, 1848. It is replaced by a common panel, uniform with the other panels of the hall.

Marshal Prince Jerome Bonaparte, President of the Senate, has just published a series of regulations for that body.

Marshal Marmont, duke of Ragusa, died at Venice on the 24 inst., after an illness of six days. Thus has perished in exile the last of Napoleon's Marshals, but his memory will not be held in much reverence, as his conduct towards his great master in his last struggle before his first abdication is generally acknowledged to have been basely treacherous. By a separate capitulation he betrayed the Emperor at Fontainebleau, leaving him uncovered by drawing off his Corps d'Armee to Versailles, and leaving the road to Fontainebleau open to the allied armies concentrated at Paris.

Lamartine has attempted, but without success to whitewash this evidently base desertion, which at once stopped all possibility of negotiating the imperial regency, an issue then far from probable, and lauished the Emperor to the rock of Elba, from which he was destined to achieve so glorious a return on the 20th of March of the next year. Marmont elected by his betrayal of the Emperor to the cause of the Bourbons, and prevented by the excess of his apostacy from imitating the weakness of Ney, formed one of the fugitive Court at Ghent, and re-entered France with the second Restoration. He was Commander-in-Chief of the Army when Charles X was expelled by the electors of Paris for crimes which have been since pardoned to Louis Napoleon. By his fidelity to the exiled Court of the elder Bourbons, Marmont repaired in some measure the stain which his treacherous betrayal of the Emperor, in 1814, must ever leave upon his memory.

The accounts from the manufacturing districts are much less unfavorable than heretofore.

The decree on Public Instruction published on the 16th, confirms the information communicated some time since relative to the University. Heretofore the Professors were not liable to be removed, but the guarantee to their independence no longer exists. The appointment and dismissal of almost every officer connected with public instruction is now the sole prerogative of the President. The decree has created much dissatisfaction, as it shows a haste to congratulate all the patronage of the State in the hands of the executive before the meeting of the Chambers, to avoid any interruption or interference on the part of deputies or the Senate. The members of the new Assembly are to take the title of "Deputies of the Legislative Corps."

The appointment of Lord Malmesbury as Foreign Secretary has given great satisfaction in Paris, the noble Earl being a personal friend of M. Persigny and of Louis Napoleon himself.

TO THE PETREL.

Lone bird of the ocean, how sweet is thy home
'Mid the briny waste and dashing foam!
No grassy wood tree for thy humble nest,
With fruits and flowers; tha'wild wave's crest
Bears thy dwelling rude—nor bough, nor leaf,
Nor shattered wreck, nor sheltering reef.

But tell me, thou wanderer, where dost thou sleep,
When the tempests forge o'er the billows sweep,
And the gallant bark finds a watery grave,
Where the breakers roar, and wild winds rave;
Dost thou hie away to some quiet bright,
Where the mermaid dwells in halls of light?
And then return from thy fairy bower,
When Mother is hushed, at the midnight hour,
Where the moonbeams smile and sapphyrs sigh,
O'er the mariner's head his lullaby?

Rest on, lone one, o'er ocean's waste;
O'er life's rude sea! quickly haste,
And of thee I'll learn—never despair;
Kind Providence for me will care;
He'll guide me safe the billows o'er
To a fairer clime and a brighter shore.

MOUNT ETNA.—We take from the Italian correspondence of the National Intelligencer the following description of the ascent of Mount Etna:

From the Casa Inglesa to the highest crater occupies about an hour. The direct elevation is about 1400 feet, but the winding of the path more than doubles the distance.

As daylight broke clear and broad over the still earth, and the eastern sky gleamed with the first rays of the rising sun, we reached the highest peak and turned to look down into the vast depths below. The whole island was wrapped in an impenetrable mass of sleeping clouds, covering mountain and valley and ocean, as a mantle of mist, while not a shadow dimmed the bright sky above. It was thus upon the solitary cone of Etna, with the broad lurid firmament arched over us, and the vast sea of floating clouds outspread below, that there uprose before us a sublime picture of the shattered Ark, as it rested of old amid the subsiding floods on the heights of Ararat, when the fountains of the deep and the windows of heaven were stopped and the rain from heaven was restrained.

On the right and on the left yawned a vast crater, lined with banks of sulphur and ashes; and from out the bowels of the earth came clouds of hot smoke, rolling upward till they vanished in the thin air; and a thousand fissures around sent out jets of scalding steam, and smouldering fires seemed ready to burst forth, and spread ruin and death under their seething floods of lava. And now, from the bed of clouds that rested on the deep, up rose the sun, scattering away the thin vapors that hung around his couch, and filling the air with his glorious radiance; and the slumbering ocean of mist that lay upon the valleys unheaved under his piercing rays of heat and light, and gathered in around the mountain tops; and green valleys, and villages, and vineyards, and gleams of bright waters, lay outspread in the calm of the morning as it opened upon the shores and vales of Sicily.

One gigantic shadow, the shadow of the mighty Etna, stretched across the lesser mountains below as far as the eye could reach; and the valleys beneath it were still covered with clouds and the darkness within the shadow. Up rose the sun higher and still higher; and now the floating vapors that rested upon the earth disappeared, and there was nothing left but the bright glowing slopes of mountain and valley, bathed in his deepest rays; for "life going forth is from the end of the heaven and his circuit unto the ends of it: and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof." There was not a breath of air to disturb the glittering sea; ships lay motionless on its unruffled surface; and on the Straits Gibraltar, like flakes of snow, the villages that were washed by its waters. Far in the distance the towering mountains of Calabria reared their rugged peaks, bounding the view towards the east; to the north lay Messina and the rocks of Scylla and Charybdis; and stretching southward the coast swept under the base of the Etna; its shores lined with villas and towns, and indented by the bays of Catania, Agosta and Syracuse. Back towards the west lay the interior of Sicily, a desert of parched and barren hills, with scarce a tree or spot of verdure to relieve the sterility of the vast wilderness. And now, as we gazed entranced upon this scene of awful sublimity, the smoke rose up in heavy masses from the crater, and, whirling around us with a sudden gust, shut out sea and earth, and filled the air with noxious gases; and the sun had a lurid and ghastly glare through the gloom, and we thought the earth would open and swallow us. But soon the gust passed away, and left us unharmed amid the smouldering masses of ashes and sulphur.

My friend, the Englishman, considered the whole thing "excessively fine;" in which sentiment I heartily agreed with him, with the understanding, however, that it would require the simultaneous rising of the sun and moon and all the stars to get me up there again in the middle of the night; a sentiment in which we both agreed, and thus compromising all previous diversity of tastes, we sat down in a comfortable bed of sulphur, and, warming our hands in a jet of steam, lit a couple of cigars and smoked coolly with old Etna.

It is difficult, without any means of measurement, to give a correct idea of the extent and depth of the crater; and unfortunately I have no books at hand from which to derive the required data. The extent of the rim of the upper crater must be about three miles and a half —calculating by the time required to walk around it; the depth, as far down as the neck or narrowest part, perhaps three or four hundred feet. The nearest estimate we could make of the depth was by rolling down large pieces of lava, and listening to the reverberation made as they struck for the last time. We went down a short distance within the rim of the great crater to collect some volcanic specimens, but were soon driven back by the smoke. The sides are so precipitous that, to make any extended descent with safety, it would be necessary to be provided with ropes; and then it could only be done in very calm weather, when there is not little smoke. I am not sure whether this has ever been accomplished; but so far as I could judge there is no reason why it should not. The crater of Mount Vesuvius has been explored by several daring adventurers, and there does not seem to be any great difficulty in effecting the descent into that of Mount Etna. For that matter, indeed, it requires neither ropes nor ladders to get down; start at the top and you are sure to get to the bottom with all possible dispatch; but it might be found agreeable, after reaching the bottom, to have some means of getting up again.

Standing on the ridge between the two craters, where there is barely a foothold, I could not help thinking how short a time it would take to reach that bourne whence no traveller returneth. A little step, just a foot, would give a sufficient start; and then what a sliding, and rolling, and and skipping these would be! What a whizzing through smoke and brimstone! What visions of devils and fiery furnaces within the bowels of the earth! The whole scene was worthy of Dante. It was terribly infernal. Even old Pedro, as he stood wrapped in his shaggy capote, looming through the smoke, and peering over into the seething abyss, looked diabolical, black and grim of visage he stood, as good a looking devil as ever walked upon brimstone. Now, I do not mean to speak lightly of a serious subject; but I do think no person can visit the crater of Mount Etna without entertaining a much more vivid idea of the lower regions than he ever had before. For my own part, I dreamed of nothing but flames of sulphur, huge figures with cloven feet, and little dancing blue fellows with pitchforks all the next night, which I assure you, on my honor, was not the effect of a bad conscience, but altogether the result of the vivid impression created in viewing the crater.

RAILROADS IN RUSSIA.—A letter from St. Petersburg, of the 13th ult., to the Courrier du Havre, announces that the Russian Government had resolved to carry into execution the project of establishing a railway from Charkof to Theodosia, and had accepted the proposition of a private company for that purpose, with a capital of fifty millions of silver roubles (16,750,000f.) to which the government had consented to guarantee an interest of three per cent. Charkof is a city of the Ukraine, situated 1030 kilometres southeast of St. Petersburg, and Theodosia or Kaffa is a port on the Black Sea, near the Straits of Yenikale. It is in contemplation also to establish a railway from Moscow to Charkof, so that a direct communication will be ultimately established between Petersburg and the ancient and the capital of Russia be thus also to be in a few days with the Black Sea and Meeting in Lafayette Square.

KOSSUTH MEETING.—In accordance with the announcement of the committee, the public reception of Kossuth came off last Tuesday in Lafayette Square. At an early hour in the evening an immense multitude gathered in the square, near the center of which a stand was erected and surrounded by large torches. At half-past seven Mr. B. F. Flanders proceeded to organize (?) the meeting, by announcing the following list of officers:

President—A D Crossman.

Vice-Presidents—J H Caldwell, Joseph Genois, C Gayarre, E LaSere, Alex Grathia, Seth Barton, M M Cohen, J H Dolhonde, R B Sykes, C D Yancey, Louis Lebeau, C Barthe, Alfred Hennen, A Derbes, W. P Converse, Dr Labatut, Judge Preston, P Sturrneau, F Bouligny, J J B Planche, C Roselius, Gen Lewis, B Marigny, H W Palfrey, T ti Mackey, F Stevenson, P U Collins, N Vignie, E W Sewell, J J Lugenbuhl, J A Watkins, J M Bush, P Hellgman, Judge Overton, Joseph Etter, N. Soulé, O Vigneaud, Charles Blenvenu, D C Labat, Wm Bogard:

Secretaries—Alex Walker, L Heyliger, J M Burke, and Laroque Turgeaud.

Kossuth entered the square a few minutes after the list of officers had been called, and, ascending the stand, was received with many cheers. Mr. E. W. Moise then advanced and commenced reading the address which had been prepared by the Reception Committee.

He, as the organ of the city, welcomed Kossuth to New Orleans. The voice of the community had been expressed by the General Council, and it bade Kossuth welcome to Louisiana, and to its Commercial Capital. This welcome was given not in personal sympathy, but as the champion of a great cause—to a leader defeated but unsubdued, to an advocate of human rights, to a soldier in the fight of liberty. We had not been indifferent spectators of European affairs, nor indifferent readers of European history. Beyond the advantages to ourselves of the political truths that have governed us a nation, the first, glorious offspring of a character created by them, is a warm sympathy for every injured people, and a corresponding detestation of all despotic rule. We had watched the Hungarian struggle with the warmest sympathy of true brotherhood. We had felt that the triumph of the Hungarian arms were the triumphs of American principles.

When Hungary fell a victim to a foreign power, none borrowed more than those that now surrounded him, (Kossuth.) We felt then as we feel now, that the cause of Hungary was the cause of European liberty, and if the public sentiment of the world should not rebuke the Czar for an unavoidable interference in the affairs of other nations, and in aid of the wrong-doer, the battles of freedom would have been fought in vain. The President of the United States had expressed the sentiment of the American people in declaring the interest that we feel in the establishment of Free governments and the sympathy we feel in the struggle of nations against their oppressors.

It was to be hoped that the feeling evoked by his (Kossuth's) efforts would cause even Russia to pause in her career of outrage; otherwise, the time would come when the down-trodden nations that suffered under her would compel her to do so.

KOSSUTH'S SPEECH.

GENTLEMEN—Having the honor to be the guest of the Crescent City, I feel reminded of the circumstance that with that people which bears the Crescent upon its banners, the word hospitality is equivalent to protection against mischief and injustice. There to receive a guest is so much as to pledge word and deed to protect that guest, who, by crossing the threshold of his host, becomes sacred to him. I hope, gentlemen, that the citizens of the Crescent City will not refuse to grant the same protection against injustice to a man who did not intrude himself upon your hospitality, but became your guest because you have been pleased to invite him to become your guest.

Upon this ground I claim here, in the face of high heaven, your protection, not against private misfortune—that I can bear—but against private injustice I have to complain of.

Though I am in my conscience convinced that the views and principles I advocate are not only well founded and true, and if sanctioned by the people of the United States, would be highly beneficial to my own beloved nation, to all oppressed nations of Europe, and in general to the cause of national freedom, independence and republican self-government; but though I am also in my conscience convinced that the acknowledgement of my principles is advantageous and necessary to the most vital interests of the United States themselves, and especially to the Southern States—whereas the repudiation of my principles I am convinced will and must bring home to the United States manifold dangers, complications, political as well as commercial, nay, even war—still I do not complain of seeing my views opposed—that is a necessary consequence of the nature and of the fragilities of man. There was yet never a truth which would not have been opposed. The divine doctrines of our Savior were opposed, and himself crucified for preaching them; and I am sorry to say it to-day, again, if he would come to the world, he would be crucified again.

I therefore, do not complain for sharing for my doctrines and for my own self, the common doom of all humanity. Let me be opposed—let my opponents attack my logic—let them upset my arguments if they can—let them calumniate my character, relying upon truth and the impartial judgment of history, I will stand the blow. Yes, if the cause which I plead be not just, may it perish, and I together with it. I would rather this hand of mine were withering, and my tongue dyleg out, than to defend an unjust cause.

No, it is not opposition that I claim your protection against, but the foul play of gross misrepresentation of my principles, and falsification of facts, by which my enemies continue to mislead public opinion, and to divert the generous instinct of the people, which, if not misled by falsification of facts, could not but support my course, because that great, noble, and unscrupled heart which is throbbing in the people's breast, never fails to be with the right.

I believe, gentlemen, that it is contrary to the respect due to the sovereign people of this country to mislead its judgment and its affections by submitting to it facts in a false light. That is no fair play gentlemen. That is not only an unmanly thing to do, but a disregard of, nay, most an offence, to yourself. Falsehood is an habitual vice of despotism. Let Kings, and Emperors and Czars employ it, but republicans, to whatever party they belong, should feel too proud, out of party considerations to descend to the low means of falsifying facts.

If I argued such a stratagem of my enemies that I protest before God and the people publicly here; and being your invited guest, having crossed upon your invitation the threshold of your hospitality, I claim the protection of your congenial generosity.

Gentlemen, there is nothing nobler in the character of a free people than the susceptibility about the honor of its distinguished citizens, who have well merited of their fatherland—as to the people who do not honor their great men—woe to the people who do not feel an offence given to one of their great men, as if they had been offended themselves. The honor of good and great citizens is no party question—it is and should be always considered as a common national property—a people who would not consider it thus, would never honor great men, because it would not deserve to have them.

It was this truly republican sentiment upon which some enemies of mine played a disgraceful trick, with the design of prevauting a warm cordial welcome to the poor exile whom you offered your congenial sympathy for the noble cause of his country, and invited to enjoy the public honors of your city's hospitality.

Give me the privilege to close that matter, before the great tribunal which I have the honor to address. I claim that privilege, because I am wronged.

When in Washington City, I had the honor to see Mr. HENRY CLAY.—The distinguished gentleman, I understand, holds a high place in the affections and in the regards of this community, and nobody on earth can more heartily join in these your sentiments than I myself. I fear nobody but the Almighty God—therefore this tongue of mine will never be sullied by flattering a mortal man. It is therefore not with the purpose to gain your or his favor, but because it is time that I say, that I spoke with full belief of your affections and your regards for Henry Clay—God preserve his life—We have need. The memory of our meeting remains deeply engraved on my mind. It was a melancholy one, on account of the condition of his health. When about to part—he standing erect, with the youthful energy of his mind, neither broken by sickness nor the burden of age, laid his hand upon my head and gave me the blessings (as he said with a melancholy) he blessings for myself and for my blessed fatherland, and we parted both with affection, I trust, and I besides with deep respect.

In the course of our interesting interview, he entered with wonted energy upon politics, and advanced some views with which I do not agree; but so great and sincere are the respects I bear to him, that I would not for all the world have spoken a single word capable to cause him the least excitement which might have added some injury to his condition of health. I did not therefore answer him—the more because I considered our interview to be a private one—as it was, indeed. I believe every one having a claim to the character of a gentleman, would have acted on that occasion just as I did.

But somebody of those few present on that occasion (I indeed don't know who, but certainly not Mr. Clay—if this I am sure,) considered matters not with the same delicacy I have done, and made a public report in some newspapers about our private interview; and therefore I stood before the public of this Great Republic in the light—as if I were not able to answer, a view opposed to mine, and had avowed silent acquiescence to plead a bad cause.

Now, gentlemen, the cause which I plead, is not my private cause. It is the cause of my brave unhappy country, and of many millions of oppressed natives besides; nay, of all the nations comprised within the boundaries of Christian civilization, and therefore of your great Republic itself also. To be an advocate of such a great and sacred cause, is a position connected with the high and sacred duty not to abandon it so long as we are convinced of its righteousness, justice and truth. Mr. Clay himself, is too distinguished, too just a man to claim the privilege of infallibility—a quality reserved to the Almighty himself and not given to any mortal man on earth. He has in his brilliant career often met opinions different from his own, but he would not be so great as he is—had he felt offended by it. Nay—I remember that when America lost another of its great Statesmen—very often opposed to the views of Mr. Clay—it was he—Mr. Clay himself, who paid the noblest tribute to the character and patriotism of his deceased opponent. Thus, I saw myself obliged in honor, duty and conscience, to answer publicly, with some modest respectful remarks, that which I was publicly opposed to, and if passed silently would harm my great and sacred cause; I did so in Louisville, Ky. I am sure every man would have done the same—nay, would have done it with far more skill, but so much I dare say, nobody could have done with more delicacy—more loyalty and with more personal regard.

Allow me to quote from word to word what I have said on that topic in my speech at Louisville:

"It is here I take the opportunity briefly to refer to an assertion of an American statesman, who holds a high place in your affections and in my respect. He advanced the theory, that should you now take the course which I humbly claimed, the despots of Europe would be provoked by your example to interfere with your institutions and turn upon you in the hour of your weakness and exhaustion, because you have set an example of interference."

"I, indeed am at a loss to understand that. Is it interference, I claim? No, precisely the contrary. If you now declare "that your very existence being founded on that principle of the eternal laws of nature's God—that every nation has the independent right to regulate its domestic concerns, to fix its institutions and its government—you cannot contemplate with indifference, that the absolutistical powers form a league of mutual support against this principle of mankind's common law—you therefore protect against the violation of this principle of foreign interference." I, indeed, cannot understand by what logic, such a protest could be taken up by the despotic powers as a pretext for interference in your domestic concerns. My logic is entirely different—it runs thus: If your country remains an indifferent spectator of the violation of the laws of nations by foreign interferences, then it has established a precedent—it has consented that the principle of interference becomes interpolated into the book of international law; and you will see the time when the league of despots commanding the whole force of oppressed Europe will remind you thus:

"Russia has interfered in Hungary, because it considered the example set up by Hungary dangerous to Russia. America silently recognised the right of that interference. France has interfered in Rome, because the example of the Roman democracy was dangerous to Rome. America has silently agreed. The absolutistical governments, in protection of their divine right, have leagued in a saint alliance, with the openly avowed purpose to aid one another by mutual interference against the spirit of revolution and the anarchy of republicanism. America has not protested against it; therefore the principle of foreign interference against every dangerous example has, by common consent of every power on earth—contradicted no one, not even by America—become an established international law."

And, reminding you thus, they will speak to you in the very words of that distinguished statesman, to whom I respectfully allude.

"You have quit your ground upon which your national existence is founded. You have consented to the alienation of the laws of nations—the existence of your republic is dangerous to us; we, therefore, believing that your anarchical (that is, republican) doctrines are destructive to, and that monarchical principles are essential to the peace and security, and happiness of our subjects, will obliterate the bad which has nourished such noxious weeds, we will crush you down as the propagandists of your doctrines too destructive to the peace and good order of the world."

I have quoted the very words, very unexpectedly given over to publicity from a private interview, which I, out of respect, and personal affection, did not answer—then publicly because I took the interview for a private one. Even now I refrain from entering into further discussion, out of the same considerations of respect; though I am provoked by this unlooked-for publicity, and will say, nothing more. But after having quoted the very words I leave to the public opinion to judge if that authority of just words is against or for a national protest against the principle of foreign interference.

Let once the principle become established with your silent consent, and you will soon see it brought home to you; and brought home in a moment of domestic discord, which Russian secret diplomacy, and Russian gold, will skilfully mix. You can be sure of it; and this mighty Union will be shaken by that very principle of foreign interference which you silently let be established as an uncontroverted rule for the despots of the earth.

These are the only words which I spoke, and I trust every just man must take them to be spoken with that consideration and with that high respect which none of his warmest admirers can entertain in a higher degree for that distinguished statesman. Even the remark of the unlooked-for publicity, though being a simple fact, was in no care indelicate, is not applied to that distinguished statesman. Nay, I have never even entered in any detailed discussion of the matter, but simply left it to the judgment of public opinion. And yet, upon these modest and respectful remarks, somebody, hiding himself in the dark clouds of animosity, that he may not be made responsible before public opinion for his foul misrepresentations, writes to New Orleans, by telegraph, that I "assailed" Mr. Clay, and charged him with "a breach of confidence and a want of gentlemanly courtesy."

And no is taken the foul misrepresentation in certain papers, and on went motions and resolutions, and every possible spring put in activity to excite a hostile feeling against the poor persecuted exile, whom your citizens kindly invited to become your guest, and who, upon this invitation, came down more than 600 miles, not without considerable expense and loss of precious time, to acknowledge the honor which you bestowed upon him by inviting him to be your city's guest.

Well, gentlemen, if those who did not hesitate upon the trick of a telegraphic dispatch to charge me with having committed a disloyal act, if they had published my Louisville speech, or at least the concerning part of it—if those unhospitable resolutions had been connected with a quotation of my words, I would not complain. I would say: "Well, the fact is stated, the matter is reported to the people—the people is put into the condition to judge by itself—the people is just—I rely upon its verdict with confidence and in humility."

But no—that was not done. My speech I made at Louisville on the 5th of March—to-day is the 30th, and yet those who have so disloyally charged, nay, insulted an unfortunate exile, have never given any notice of the real fact—they relied upon the circumstance that their readers would not read the papers belonging to an opposite party—where impartial justice was done to me; no, they misused the confidence of their political friends; they left them under the impression of their false report, and did not tell the truth, because the truth would have done me some good.

It is this against which I have to complain and appeal to the justice of your sentiments. But no, I do not complain. I have too high an opinion of the citizens of New Orleans to believe that it is I who will have to suffer from this foul play—and if so, well; let them rejoice in their triumph. I would, rather be driven away, with shame from your city, than triumph by such means."

I have one thing more to complain of. Let me tell you, gentlemen, that when I was about to leave England for the United States, some gentlemen prognosticated to me that I would be opposed by the Southern States. My answer was—no, that is impossible. The Southern States are very warmly attached to the principle of their State Rights; to the principle that every nation has the right to regulate its own institutions and to dispose of its own domestic concerns. It is this principle which I plead, and plead not only for my country, but plead it as a common law of all nations; because that principle is in jeopardy, the absolutistical powers of Europe having made a powerful alliance with the openly avowed purpose to crush that principle of State Rights everywhere, and to establish by force and violence in its stead, that arbitrary principle that every centralized Government, and every foreign power has the right to interfere against the State Rights of whatever people.

It is this principle of interference against which I plead, and which I will combat, all my life. I aimed upon the very ground which is the pre-eminent platform of the Southern States. If I lose my cause, I will have lost their cause. It is therefore, I said in England already —"No, the Southern States cannot oppose my principles; their own interest is connected with them. The Eastern and Northern States may support me; but the Southern States must support me, if they are not willing to abandon the ground upon which they stand.

And yet, curious, though I have warm political friends in the South, still it is indeed, I meet also more opposition in the South than I have met in other parts of the United States. How is this to be explained? I will tell you, gentlemen, with your kind permission, and here is my second complaint:

My enemies, unable to upset my arguments, resort again to falsification of facts and misrepresentation of principles. They represent me to you as a man attreating just that principle to which I am morally opposed. They charge me with being an intervention man, while I am soul and body for the principle of non-intervention. And besides some material nihil. I require but that principle of non-intervention secured, very soon to see my down-trodden country independent and free—because we do not ask others to fight our battles—we will fight them by our own hands, and all that we desire is not to have any interference, but "fair play."

It is, therefore, I raise my voice out of the bottom of my nation's distress, and Europe's oppressed millions join in my voice, exclaiming—"Is there no power on earth willing to maintain the laws of nations, when all the despots of Europe unite to violate them?" And I say to the great Republic of the United States, and I say it particularly to the Southern States, "Maintain the principle of State Rights and self-government—else, if that principle is crushed every where, the danger of centralisation and of foreign interference, will come home to yourself, and you will see my exhausting endeavors of nearly four months—more than four hundred speeches reported by hundreds of newspapers in more than a hundred thousand copies—resolutions passed by nearly a thousand public meetings, and by several State Legislatures, and the debates of the United States Senate—all this together could not secure me from being charged with loving what I hate, advocating what I oppose, and with thinking that very thing which made myself a homeless exile—my country a valley of desolation and nameless woes—in a word, charging me with wishing that which is the only impediment to the restoration of my native land to life, independence, freedom and prosperity.

It is sorrowful, very sorrowful, indeed!

But again, my enemies advise you not to support me. Why? perhaps because I am wrong. Oh, no; but because some absolutistical support my cause. Well, what have I to do with absolutism or anti-absolutism? Nothing in the world. That is not my matter; I am no citizen of the United States; I have neither the will nor the right to interfere with your domestic concerns; I claim for my nation the right to regulate its own institutions; I therefore must respect, and indeed I do respect, the same right in others. Now, is that principle right or wrong? Is it your principle, or is it not? If it be yours, and if it is right, how could you abandon it only because it is supported by those to whom you are on some internal questions opposed? Can there be no common ground to such as are in some respects opposed to each other?

Is not every man in the United States a republican to whatever party he may belong? See we not often Mr. Clemens, of Alabama, voting with Mr. Seward, from New York, as the last week, for instance, on the land grant question. If the Government of Russia should interfere with your republican institutions (as he assured he will if Europe be once crushed) if the despotic power would try to establish a monarchy in Mexico, (as surely they will try even sooner than in Mexico,) will you not oppose it then, only because also the abolitionists will oppose them? Will you not support republicanism only because the abolitionists also are republicans? Oh, my God! avert the doom from humanity that even free nations may, the only truly free nations on earth, not commit national suicide out of blind party spirit.

And again, I am convinced that if you maintain not the principle of non-interference, and a national protest against the principle of interference, and your protest will be disregarded, then you will be entangled in difficulties and even in war.

But no, quite on the contrary, your protest will not entangle you in any difficulties—involve you in no war—but if you do not protest, there you will be certainly led in difficulties, and have a war.

A protest maintaining the great principle that every nation has a right to regulate its own institutions, and choose its own form of government, and that no foreign power can dare to interfere with this right. Such a protest obliges you to do nothing, but leaves you free to do all, or so much as you deem convenient to do. It points out only a direction to your foreign policy, but does not impose how far you should go in that policy—and you have a thousand ways to add a practical weight to your protest without resorting to war—so, for instance, you can recognize every government de facto, established by a declaration of Independence, which toward Hungary you neglected to do, and thus contributed much to our downfall. You may by such a recognition empower the free governments of nations asserting their independence to carry on a lawful commerce with you, and even to issue for enterprising men letters of marque—you may establish the principle of true neutrality, which, (mark well, gentlemen) now you have not. The Czar of Russia—the unlawful Emperor of Austria—the usurper of France—every despot in a word—has the right to arm their vessels—to enlist volunteers to prosecute armed expeditions against their own people, but the unfortunate Polish nation—the outraged French nation, you do not permit to do the same. If I would fit out an armed expedition only out of my own fellow exiles, you would send me to prison for ten years. Is that neutrality? No, it is a submission to the despots—it is a charter granted to them against Republican sentiment of downtrodden millions; it is almost an alliance with Kings against nations. Once you were neutral; at the time of war between Spain and its formerly colonies.

You opened your ports to both parties—offered your commerce to both parties—that was neutrality; but now you are not neutral. Then again, you can add a weight of your national protest, by declaring that you desire your commerce with foreign nations to be protected, whether they be in a state of revolution or not—thus you empower your citizens to follow their natural inclination to join nations struggling for Republican institutions, which they are now forbidden to do. You see, therefore, gentlemen, that you have several means to add a practical weight to your national interest, and to ensure the success of the approaching European revolution, without either uttering that revolution which you can by no interference prevent, or without entangling yourself in any difficulties—least of all, in a war. You will neither prevent war on your own part—and will contribute to the speedy revolution of the European struggle and to the speedy establishment of a lasting peace, connected with a free commercial intercourse, so necessary to your prosperity.

On the contrary, if you do not protest now for the unalutainance of the principle of State Rights against foreign interference, then only two cases are passed till—either we will succeed in our European struggle—though you have forsaken us—or, we will succomb.

If the European nations succeed, then they must remember if that in the struggle for your independence, you have received such an aid from Europe—without which you scarcely could have succeeded to establish your independence. Still you have rendered Europe in that hour of its struggle for those principles upon which your own future rests—they will encumber that you have not even thrust the weight of a pretension the scale where the laws of nations were wished and Europe will isolate itself from you in the days of its happiness because you have isolated yourself from Europe in the days of its adversities. Whereas, on the contrary, if we in our struggle, succumb by want of your generative sympathy, then you will not only become entangled in difficulties, but by no means will be able to save a war.

The despots victorious over Europe will be forced by the instincts of self-preservation to check your powerful development, because you would be dangerous to them—first, they will exclude your commerce from Europe; they must do it because you are republicans, propagating by your very intercourse republican principles; secondly, because you are the most dangerous competitors of Russia in commercial goods in the European markets—whereas Europe freely offers an immense product for your commerce. Hungary, comparatively small Hungary forms a market of $100,000,000 to your cotton, where you now sell not for a single plaster.

Victorious despotism excludes you from the European markets, and only think for a single year—your commerce stopped, what an incalculable mischief to your country—brought home to every family, to every shop, every desk. Then you will see omnipotent despotism establishing a monarchy in your neighborhood in Mexico, and in Central and Southern America—cut off the mouth a battery against the mouth of the Mississippi—out of the Sandwich Islands made a barrier against you commerce with Asia, and you will see your internal dissensions fostered by foreign intrigues—your domestic tranquility troubled by foreign corruption; and then checked—your prosperity distressed in your commerce—surrounded by monarchies—weakened by party dissensions—you will see foreign interference stepping in with the declaration that you have silently consented to the principle of interference—your example is dangerous in monarchies—they therefore interfere against your dangerous example. It is thus you will have war, and a terrible war—because you will have to fight single handed and alone, against a whole world united against by all overwhelming resources.

Is it possible that the United States; is it possible that the South, so warmly attached to the principle of State Rights and of self-government, should remain indifferent to these interests—nay, even opposed to them, only because some enemies of mine have falsified facts and misrepresented my principles?

No, it is impossible—impossible chiefly in New Orleans, that glorious battle field of American Independence, consolidated by democratic energy.

Gentlemen—I have nothing to do with our domestic party questions, but I am permitted to know that in New Orleans as well as elsewhere, two great political parties exist.

The democratic party in general pronounced in favor of my principles, long before my coming in the United States.

As to the whig party of Louisiana, it a few days ago pronounced in favor of Mr. Fillmore as a candidate for the next Presidency—therefore for the principles of his Excellency, President Fillmore.

Now, what are these principles? Mr. Fillmore has declared them in his last message to Congress saying:

"The United States are forbidden to remain indifferent whenever the strong arm of a foreign power is invoked to repress the spirit of freedom in any country."

The principles of Mr. Fillmore besides, are declared by managing the department of foreign policy through Mr. Webster, who wrote the immortal letter to Mr. Hulseman, who pronounced so high-minded, noble principles on the occasion of the Congressional banquet I was honored with; and on the last meeting of the Horticultural Society in New York.

Now, that being the condition of both great political parties in New Orleans, it would be strange indeed to see New Orleans the first city refusing to support my cause, either politically or at least by private material aid, given from your wealth as an alms to the cause of national independence, freedom, and the unalienable rights of the principle of State Rights, the fate of which is to be decided on our next battle-field.

That national aid, at least, would not entangle you in war, I believe.

Gentlemen, we stand on Lafayette Square. What memory connected with the name? In leaving this place please to remember that name, and look back to history, and I am sure you will not forsake the poor exile whom you have honored by an invitation to your heart and home, but who, in thanking you heartily, begs leave to say:

"Nothing for me, gentlemen; but give, O give your sympathy to the cause I plead."

THE TEHUANTEPEC TREATY.—The arrest of Capt. Levy, who is under bonds for trial at Washington, is said to have occasioned much surprise and alarm in Mexico. The papers generally consider it as an evidence of the determination of the Government of the United States to insist on the Onray grant, and a ratification of the Tehuantepec treaty. The Trait d'Union lays particular stress on this point, and calls public attention to it. The Trait d'Union has always been in favor of recognizing the grant, and warned Mexico that she would get into trouble by annulling it.

In speaking of this treaty, "Ion" of the Baltimore Sun, writing from Washington, says:

The Mexican Government have, it is believed, offered to the United States a new treaty in regard to the Tehuantepec route. The treaty, formerly negotiated, was not ratified, and the time within its ratification could be exchanged, expired on the 25th January. The terms of the new treaty have not transpired. Whether it confirms the Garay grant, or merely guarantees the neutrality of the route and its freedom to all nations, reserving to Mexico the exclusive right to grant to any company the privilege of constructing the road, is to any parties, as she may please, is not known. Unless she has changed her policy, she will not conform the grant to Garay, without some compensation for it, either from the Tehuantepec company or from this Government, and the last intelligence would seem to show that the Government was determined to resist the prosecution of the road by force.

Had the Tehuantepec treaty, which was duly negotiated, been ratified, it would have sanctioned the Garay grant, according to our understanding of its provisions, though M. de la Rosa was of a different opinion. It is probably the policy of Mexico to temporise this subject, and to avoid any collision with the United States. But that she will grant us what we ask, as a favor, while this Government decides to her what is her due by right, is not very probable.

LATE FROM ECUADOR.—Advices from Guayaquil, the new capital of Ecuador, to the 28th of January have been received at NewYork. A letter from Guayaquil, of the latest date, says:

"The decree against Flores and his partisans has not been executed, because the Governor of Quito, Sr. Viteri, had made distributions of monthly contributions to individuals who were the enemies of Flores. More yet; His Excellency, who never fails to take any occasion to render himself amiable, without considering that the Governor of Tuerto was proceeding according to the instructions no doubt given to him, disapproved such conduct, and ordered that the sums which had been collected be returned to the original contributors. Gen. Vicente Aguirre, who occupied the first place among the contributors (for he paid $1200 monthly), made an energetic remonstrance, containing truths which, although bitter, were true. Owing to this protest, his Excellency has given orders to bring to Guayaquil, with an escort, the General who is bold enough to speak such naked truths.

"We continue to enjoy peace, which appears unalterable, but it is said it can not last long, for it is suspected, and not without foundation, that there is a tempest near, the bursting of which will be terrible. It was lately said that Gen. Obando intended to go to Lima by the Buenaventura, with the object of re-establishing democratic societies and some other things; but now it is reported that he is en route from Pasto to Popayan, only to pay a visit to the President, tien. Lopez, and that, on the 25th inst., a soldier arrived here with communications of said Obando, in which he required the expulsion of the Jesuits at the end of forty days, and that if the time elapsed without the execution of the orders he gave, he would enter the Equatorian territory with his army. If that is true, as I believe it is, it is a grave fact, and I do not know how our Government will act."

THE EXCLOSION AT NEWYORK.—By the Pleasure's telegraphic reports we have additional particulars of the explosion at Hell Gate, near NewYork. Mons. Mailleforte was not killed, as our correspondent stated. It appears that Mons. Mailleforte, on undertaking the blasting exploration, employed boats, one to contain the submarine battery and the other canisters of powder. He has guided the former boat himself and his assistants the latter.

Immediately after the explosion one canister, containing 120 pounds of powder, had been already sunk by his assistants, and was placed on the rock, while another canister was filled in the boat. Mons. Mailleforte, who is generally about forty feet from the boat containing his assistants, approached them for the purpose of receiving the wire which was attached to the canister in the water. Through some mistake the wrong wire, connecting with the canister still in the boat, was handed to Mailleforte, who, having removed to a proper distance, brought the wire in contact with the battery, when, as a natural consequence, the powder in the boat exploded, shattering it to atoms. The assistants in it were blown in various directions, and two were instantly killed. Theodore Southerd was horribly mangled, and it is thought he will die. The boat in which Mailleforte was standing was shattered. He also received several injuries. His brother-in-law was slightly injured. The force of the explosion was felt and heard for miles around.

EXTENSION OF THE AREA OF FREEDOM.—Several gentlemen residing in England and Ireland, fully convinced that the area of freedom should be extended, propose to accomplish that great object at a "shilling a head." They have organized a system of "material aid," and in their prospectus say: "We propose to collect a subscription of one shilling each from every earnest friend of freedom; one shilling yearly, if the continuance of the struggle shall require it; and that the sum so collected shall be paid into the London and Westminster Bank, to the joint credit of Joseph Maxzini and Louis Kossuth, for the use of the European Democratic Committee."

On the 1st of January, 1853, a list of subscribers, with the amount collected, is to be published. They do not solicit alms for any specific purpose, but are in favor of a general struggle of freedom throughout Europe, leaving each nation to select its own style of freedom. A truly magnificent scheme, and one which will, without doubt, put money in some pockets which are strangers to it now.

IMPORTANT FROM WASHINGTON CITY—ABOLITION PETITIONS—Baltimore, March 29.—The Senate to-day passed a resolution to lay on the table all future memorials and petitions for the repeal of the fugitive slave law, or relating generally to the abolition of slavery.

In the House, the bill providing for the establishment of a better system of discipline in the navy was defeated —yeas 76, nays 97.—[Eve. Pic.

AN OCTAGENARIAN CLERGYMAN.—On Saturday, March 14 the Rev. T. M. Cooley, D.D., pastor of East Granville, Mass., celebrated his eightieth year, on which occasion he preached a sermon from the 35th verse of the 19th chapter of the second of Samuel: "I am this day fourscore years old." He graduated at Yale College in 1792, preached his first sermon in 1795 in East Granville, and came quietly has been in his present charge fifty-seven years, and is the oldest minister in Massachusetts that a league.

DEAL GENTLY.... By MARY E. MILLER.

Deal gently, with my mother, Time,
Mark not too deeply her calm brow;
Ah! wait o'en yet a longer time.
Change not the raven tresses now.

Ah! let me gaze upon her form,
And mark no sign of its decay;
Oh, let her eye still brightly beam.
That smile upon her pure lip play.

As in those happy by gone hours,
I trip'd so gaily by her side,
When wandering forth we cull'd sweet flowers,
And she would pause to bless her child.

I thought not then that time would pass,
And rosy childhood would depart,
That care and withering blight would cast
Its darken'd shadows o'er my heart.

Yet it is so! change hath been here,
Around our household hearth no more,
The merry band is scatter'd now,
Some wander mid old ocean's roar.

Whilst he who watch'd my early youth,
Hath passed from this cold earth away,
To dwell, I hope forever blest,
Mid regions of undying day.

Ah! well do I remember when
They bore thee to that cold deep grave,
As earth to earth the funeral knell
Cast o'er my heart a lasting spell.

A spell of agony and woe,
As at thy grave we paused to pray,
And from my lone and pensive mind,
That spell hath never passed away.

Deal gently with my mother, Time,
Oh! spare to me my mother dear;
Ah! may she live for many years
My lonely heart with joy to cheer.

THE UPWARD FLIGHT.

Who would not go?—the world we leave is dark.
Its sunshine clouded and its sky obscured
By gathering gloom, its light a wandering spark,
That from its native sphere hath but been lured.

Who would not go?—the world above is bright;
Meridian suns and countless stars that trim
Their sightly lamps are shadow of that light
No gloom can darken, and no cloud can dim.

Who would not go?—the world we leave is cold—
The few warm hearts it holds are sadly chilled
By icy contact with a sterner mold,
Their generous throbbings all too early stilled.

Who would not go?—the world above us glows
With love, intense and holy, pure and deep;
No person there can selfish feeling know,
For slight or wrong no aching eye can weep.

Who would not go?—the world we leave is poor
And hearts that live on it grow lean and die,
It hath no heritage that can endure,
No food for spirits destined for the sky.

Who would not go?—the world above is stored
With treasures vast and various, large and free,
A rich inheritance—a shining hoard;
And, O, my soul! 'tis all laid up for thee.

Recollections of Bishop Bascom.

BY ONE OF HIS STUDENTS.

[Third paper.]

If Dr. Bascom succeeded well as President of Transylvania University, he succeeded still better in his chair as Professor. We shall devote this paper to a portraiture of him in this capacity. He took charge only of the senior class. He taught Mental and Moral Science and Political Economy, and lectured daily on Natural Theology, Evidences of Christianity, and Constitutional and International Law.

His instructions were unique, full of interest, and exceedingly attractive. He would not be satisfied with a superficial nequaintance with any subject presented, on the part of a student. He sought to cultivate views the widest, the most searching, and the most comprehensive. True, he did not readily ascertain how thoroughly the lesson had been studied. One could often recite as well without private study as with it. His questions led directly to the answer. But this defect was more than supplied in his own acute, far reaching, and eloquent remarks. In a very brief space of time he would cover every point of importance connected with the subject. Thought, clear, beautiful, subtle, eloquent, and eminently suggestive, flowed from him in one continuous stream. I say suggestive; for he did not exhaust the subject. He rather so unveiled the mysterics of truth as to reveal its inexhaustibility. The point of comparatively little importance before became a momentous principle; the tiny plant became a spreading forest; the drop, a boundless ocean; the ray, a spendid sun.

I can hardly imagine the students of the Portico to have hung with more pleasure on the lips of Plato than we often did upon the words of this magnificent man. I have known students the most indolent, of the most superficial and desultory habits of study, to have their attention awakened, and held without wearifess, throughout the recitation; and they have gone away with more satisfactory knowledge, and that more powerfully interwoven with the web of mind, than if they had devoted days to the closest study of the best text-books. He seemed to give them intense glimpses of their own minds, and reveal to them capabilities in themselves, of which they never dreamed before. Thus, he led them to cultivate proper habits of thought and study far more successfully than by the imposition of difficult tasks, and the infliction of punishment for their non-performance.

And, is not this failure to explain and illustrate a subject, so as to make it interesting and attractive to the student, that which peoples duncedom with so many learned fools! It is difficult to become proficient in any study unless it is pursued con amore. Abuse, railings, black-mark, and floggings, never made a good scholar. Teach the student to love his book, because he understands and appreciates its principles and beauties, and then the fear will be, not that he will study too little, but too much.

For text-books the Doctor had little use, farther than to suggest subjects for thought and remark, and afford a plan rather than subject-matter in its detail for private study. In the course of one recitation he would give you the outlines of a far better text-book than any within your acquaintance. In explaining and enlarging upon the study before you, he talks in an apparently loose and rambling manner, but every word tells. His sentences are brief and terse. They shoot like tongues of flame into the subject, and its deepest mysteries are bared to your gaze. There is no transcendentalism about him; not the smallest bit of moonshine. All is clear daylight, without fog, and unclouded.

The most abstruse principles and definitions lose their mystery and abstractness, and almost seem common-place, from the ease with which they are understood. It is as though one stood on Mount Blanc at sunrise. Below, mountain and valley are lost in the fogs of the morning; but, as the clouds retreat before the sunbeams, mountain after mountain reveals its summit; the craggy steeps are seen; the valley, with its cataracts, and streams, and villages, lies defined in minute outline, until the whole lovely panorama of mountains, and torrents, and towns, rivers, and groves, and vineyards and forests, all glowing in the morning sunshine, spreads out a boundless vision of magnificence and splendor.

I think I see him now. (On account of some affection of the head he usually wore his hat during his recitation.) His head is moving irregularly, his eyes flashing with thought, his whole body sympathizing with the movements of his mind. Those who have witnessed his pulpit efforts have been impressed as by a man of gigantic powers; but those who have not known him in the recitation-room are not prepared adequately to appreciate the man. In the pulpit he appears in all the awful energy of a great soul thoroughly aroused; an ocean stirred in its mightiest depths by fierce winds; a Vesuvius in eruption. In his professor's chair he appears in all the quiet calmness of a great soul in repose; the ocean in calm, with the beautiful heavens mirrored in its depths; the volcano without the eruption, clad with vines and purple fruitage, yet lifting itself from the vale in all the serene grandeur of the Indian mountain.

On the evidences of Christianity, natural theology, constitutional and international law, he delivered regularly written lectures to the class. Thus his other instructions these were less colloquial and more ponderous; yet the interest which they elicited was profound and unflagging. They were a brief, satisfactory, and eloquent presentation of every thing necessary to a complete understanding of each subject treated. Those who heard them will not be apt to forget them during life. We shall hope some day to see them published. We doubt not they will be hailed as invaluable acquisitions to political and theological science. With the principles of law he seems to have been thoroughly conversant, far more so than many eminent practitioners. This his lectures abundantly proved. He might not have made a good special pleader; but as a legislator, as a judge of law, we trow, he deserved to rank with many in high places.

We should notice his strange and interesting criticisms on books and authors. They were full of wit, discrimination, learning and power. I have often waded through the pages of a long review article without obtaining half so much insight into the merits of a book or author as were sometimes contained in a few of his weighty sentences. Occasionally he would show up the defects of a book; and then, shades of Jeffrey and Gifford! such merciless handling, such crushing exposure of unphilosophical statements, improper definitions, and puerile absurdities! We to the book over which the breath of his criticism passed in censure! It was like a Western prairie after the passage over it of consuming flames. It was left "utterly wasted and withered by the tide of fire he rolled over it." You felt, not only a sense of the entire defectiveness of the work, but a kind of pitying contempt for the author. To give an instance: He once had occasion to remark on Hedge's Logic. He exposed, in the most amusing manner the thousand inaccuracies, with which it abounds, and the utter incompetence of Mr. Hedge to write a book on logic. So scorching was the criticism that to this day Hedge's Logic is associated in my mind with learned stupidity and undiscriminating dullness.

We must not suppose from this that he was harsh or unkind to modest mediocrity. He willingly honored any one of however meagre talents, who honestly strove to fill the sphere for which they fitted him; but when he saw dulness aspire to leadership—a man without one clear idea in his head writing text-books on the exact sciences, the ass in lion's skin—his indignation was stirred; and with a few brief, sharp, emphatic sentences, he scattered his pretensions to the winds; and if complaint was made, he seemed to answer with old Dr. South, "If owls do not wish to be hooted at, let them keep on the inner boughs." What a magnificent review writer he would have made! His criticisms would have been read with avidity, and have given him a distinguished, if not the first, position among American critics. Oh, if such a purifier of literature could arise now, and be induced to enter heartily upon his work, what a change would come over the spirit of many an inflated author's dream. How many, who are now ranked among the literati, would be sunk to their proper level! How would pretentious stupidity be hooted into obscurity! Much that men now call literature would be considered little better than useless trash; intellectual food fit only for the maw of a fool. He would strip off the peacock-feathers, in which so many modern quacks strut about, and reveal the true jackdaw to the contempt and hisses of an outraged public. If the criticisms of such a man were to sweep over the literature of this land, the shores of the great deep of letters would be literally strewn with with stranded books. We need a review exercising such an influence as the Edinburgh Review exerted for many years after it was first established; and we need a Bascom to edit it. Then we might expect a literature worthy of our nation and our age.

But, to return: One thing we especially note, was the readiness of the Doctor at repartee. Several witty members of my class were in the habit of indulging their wit at the expense of the good-humored professors. When we began our recitations with the Doctor, they expected to continue their sallies. They tried it but once. One flash of his eagle-eye, one sharp sarcastic reply, accompanied by one significant shake of his finger, was enough. They cowered before him, and looked as though it would have been unspeakable relief to have crept from the room. His retorts were perfectly withering. He left his enemy literally peeled from head to foot. Yet, they only came when provoked, and were only bestowed where he thought they were deserved, and where no other instrumentality would have accomplished his end so well. He always retorted in excellent humor, so that, however cutting the retort, the student was not offended. He manifested usually a spirit of great kindness to all the class. He proved to each that he was deeply interested in his welfare; and thus bound himself to them by the strongest ties. He took up delight in searching out and displaying the weak points in a student; he sought rather to discover and develop whatever traits were redeeming in him. That mental constitution, whose strange versatility seems to have fitted him for every sphere he was called to fill, made him the best of instructors. The impressions received during my attendance in his department are linked indissolubly with my being; and, while thought lives in the temple of the soul, will they remain—flashes of pure intelligence—fruitage from the tree of intellect.

Cheap Books.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of the 14th of February, I see a contrast presented in the way of doctors differing, which, by the way, is not very marvelous, especially in these days of electric dispatch. The case above referred to is under the heading "Methodist Press," item, "Cheap Books," in which you call our attention to the articles—editorial—of Drs. Parsons and McFerrin, in the N. and L. Christian Advocate. This number of the N. and L. C. Advocate I have not seen, I presume; hence, all I know of their opinions in reference to the point under consideration, is what I gather from the N. O. Christian Advocate of the above date. And from what you have given us, it appears that Dr. P. is in favor of, while Dr. McF. is opposed to, reducing the price of our catalogued Methodist books. Now we do not like a great deal to come in contact with D. D.'s, but as you published an article of ours some time since upon this subject, it may be that this D. E. Q.—as Bro. R., of the T. W. Banner, would say—has condescended to notice our effusion, and if so, we wish not to retaliate, but also to give our opinions still further.

Now if we understand Dr. McF.'s argument from your extract, it is simply that superannuates, supernumeraries, widows and orphans are continually increasing upon the various Annual Conferences; that it "will not be found to operate so well" to reduce the price of our books, inasmuch as the profits arising from their sales are applied to the benefit of such necessitous cases. Now it seems to us that if the Dr.'s argument proves any thing, it proves too much; for if the present prices of our books do not meet the present emergency or demands, then the prices should be increased so as to meet the demands; for this appears to be the result of his argument, especially from the question he propounds, from the position he assumes of "continually increasing" beneficiaries upon us, namely, "But do the means of meeting their demands increase in the same ratio?" Now we propound the question to Dr. McF., if we are not correct in the above, how would he have "the means of meeting their demands increase in the same ratio," if the price of books is not also to increase in the same ratio as the demands are made upon us? We presume, however, the Dr. did not intend this much, and hence we are not disposed to attribute to him what he intended not. But if we follow the argument to its legitimate results, the Dr. will inevitably destroy that which he would build up. Let us examine it a little, and we shall see that it will not "look well on paper," and woe be unto it, when reduced to practical operation. It will not be found to operate so well."

It is known to every observing man, that it is the settled policy of the Church, as a body, as well as the unconverted portion of mankind, to get their books as cheap as possible. Suppose we bring our high priced books into competition with those published by the American Tract Society, what is the certain consequence? Will not every one readily perceive that ours must go by the board? This is no theory merely, it is what is daily and practically demonstrated. We have, time and again, gone into Methodist families and seen books upon books, published by the A. T. Society, lying upon the centre tables, and but few if any of our own publications, and when we have endeavored to supply them with our own books, we have time and again failed on account of the vast difference in the prices. Take our illustration: We sell Baxter's Saint's Rest at seventy-five cents; the A. T. Society at some forty or fifty cents a copy. I go to a brother's house and offer him our edition for seventy-five cents, and he will tell you, why, I could have bought it the other day from the colporteur for fifty cents. And what is the consequence! Why, of course, he will not be apt to give seventy-five, when he can get it for fifty cents. Besides this, he will begin to think that all our other works are of proportionable price, and consequently he buys none. "Do the means of meeting our demands increase in the same ratio" as when we can not sell the books to produce the means? If the sale of books be one of the means whereby we are to raise the funds to meet our demands, then we are to put them at such prices as will induce the people to buy them; and if the Dr. imagines that "the hints and suggestions that have been thrown out about cheapening our publications have naturally operated to curtail materially the sale of them," we, although no D. D., must beg leave to differ with him. And we here assert; not "the hints and suggestions," but stubborn facts already alluded to, seen and read by observation, "thrown out" long prior to "the hints and suggestions" about cheapening our publications, have "very naturally operated to curtail materially the sale of them." And now we say again, let our publications be put at such prices as will come within the reach of all our members, and we will guarantee that as the number of our superannuates, supernumeraries, widows and orphans increases, so in the same ratio will the means of meeting their demands increase. And instead of our people being fed with food from other pastures, they will be nurtured and brought up, rooted and grounded in the great and soul-reviving doctrines of that system of Bible truth eulogised as "Christianity in earnest." But if our present policy be continued, little or nothing will be the dividends accruing to the Church from the sale of our books, and our people will look to others to supply them with readable matter.

Another redeeming feature in a reduction of the price of books, is this: Our Discipline requires of preachers in charge of circuits and stations to take up a Conference collection in their respective charges, to meet the claims of the aforesaid persons. Now, when we offer our books at their present high prices for purchase to our people, we frequently tell them, as an incentive to purchase, that the proceeds of the sales go for the above purpose. Then when we apply for the Conference collection, they tell us they have already contributed to that purpose in the purchase of our books. We readily grant that this ought not so to be. Yet that admission does not change the fact at all. Yet so it is. Many of our people are ever ready to catch at every subterfuge they can to quiet their conscience for not giving to those charitable objects dependent upon them—hence here is another thing that operates very naturally to hinder "the means of meeting the demands" for the support of those already mentioned. Are there not other causes then, other than "the hints and suggestions that have been thrown out about cheapening our publications," that "have naturally operated to curtail materially the sale of them!"

We think, could the Dr. take a cruise through the country, after having been eleven years in his sanctum editorial, he might be prepared to view this matter in its more practical operations. He must remember that there have been many changes—sad though they may be—throughout the country within the last eleven years. And all we ask is, for him to see this matter with his own eyes, as it really exists, and we opine he would be in for progress, or reformation, as the term is now used. But enough for the present.

Death Will Come.

The Rev. Albert Burns, in an able discourse in the October number of the National Preacher, holds the following graphic language in illustration of the above caption:

"Death will come; he will certainly come. He cannot be evaded; he cannot be put back; he cannot be made to take his steps any slower. Oh, he will come! All that lives on earth will die—every beast, bird and creeping thing; the humming bird; the insect that flutters in the sunbeam; every tree and shrub and flower—the oak, the pine, the nenein, the moss that grows over the wall; every monarch, every peasant; every rich man, every poor man; every slave, every master of a slave; every man, every woman, every child; every old man that prides himself on his honors and his wealth, every young man that prides himself on his talents or his strength; every maiden that prides herself on her beauty. Oh, all will die! I am in a world of death; I am amidst the dying and the dead; I see not a living thing in all my rambles that will not die—no man, no woman, no child; no bird, no beast; no plant, no tree. The eagle that cuts the air cannot fly above it; the monster of the deep cannot dive below it; the tiny insect cannot make itself so insignificant that death will not notice it; leviathan cannot, with his great strength, struggle against it. The Christian will die; the sinner will die—yea, the sinner! Your wealth cannot save you; your accomplishments cannot save you. Death cares for none of these things; they are all trifles—gewgaws beneath his notice. He no more 'loves a shining mark' than an ignoble one; he has no more pride in cutting down the rich man than the poor man—the daughter of beauty and fashion than the daughter of ugliness and sin. He loves to level the thistle as well as the rose bud; the brambles as the magnolia; the brier as the cedar of Lebanon. He cares as little for the robes of ermine as for the beggar's rags; as little for your richest vestments and gayest apparel as for the blanket of the savage. You will die, and the fear of death will come upon you. Death comes just as he is—pale, solemn, fixed, stern, determined on his work. He hears no cry for pity; he regards no shriek of terror. He comes steady, certain, unchanged, and unchangeable in his purpose, to take you from your bed of down; to hurry you away from your splendid dwelling; to call you out of the assembly-room—taking you away from your companions, that will miss you for a moment, and then resume their dance, that you may die. Death will come. He has been advancing toward you since you began to breathe. He has kept on his way, always advancing to meet you, while you have been asleep or awake; and if you have gone north, or south, or east, or west, he has always put himself into your path—how near or how remote you have never known. Death will come. He has always been advancing, never receding, and soon his baneful shadow will fall upon your path. And that shadow will deepen and become more chilly, like an advancing eclipse; and then his dark form will stand right before you, between you and the light of the living world, and you will be in the dark valley. Death will come—fearful enough under any circumstances, even if you are a Christian—awful, unspeakably awful, if you are not."

Why People Drink.

Mr. A. drinks because his doctor recommended him to take a little.

Mr. B. because his doctor ordered him not and he hates quackery.

Mr. C. takes a drop because he's wet.

Mr. D. because he's dry.

Mr. E. because he feels something rising in his stomach.

Mr. F. because he feels a kind of sinking in his stomach.

Mr. G. because he's going to see a friend off to Oregon.

Mr. H. because he's got a friend come home from California.

Mr. I. because he's so hot.

Mr. K. because he's so cold.

Mr. L. because he's got a pain in his head.

Mr. M. because he's got a pain in his side.

Mr. N. because he's got a pain in his back.

Mr. O. because he's got a pain in his chest.

Mr. P. because he's got a pain all over him.

Mr. Q. because he feels light and happy.

Mr. R. because he feels heavy and miserable.

Mr. S. because he's married.

Mr. T. because he isn't.

Mr. V. because he likes to see his friends around him.

Mr. W. because he's got no friends, and enjoys a glass by himself.

Mr. X. because his Uncle left him a legacy.

Mr. Y. because his Aunt cut him off with a shilling.

Mr. Z. (we should be happy to inform our readers what Mr. Z's reasons are for drinking, but on putting the questions to him, he was found too drunk to answer.)

Class Meetings.

We learn from Malachi, the last in order of the minor prophets (397, B. C.) that "they that feared the Lord, spoke often, one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name, etc." Chap. iii—16, 17, 18.

This, taken in connection with Eph. iv—16, shows that the ancient communion of the Church was not merely the recognition of a pastor and their fellowship with him and their fellow communicants at the Lord's table, but elsewhere, and in a manner more personal and direct, free, open and familiar. Mr. Wesley, seizing upon this view of the subject, instituted the prudential regulation of class meetings.

After an experiment of more than a hundred years, the wisdom of that distinguished minister is clearly demonstrated in this means of spiritual growth. Here, in imitation of the ancient servants of God, they that fear (love) the Lord, meet often one with another—at least once a week—and converse freely of their trials, joys, sorrows, dealings and ways of God with them, progress of the Spirit's work in their souls, temptations, exercise of the life of faith, joy in the Holy Ghost, and hope of Heaven, and so encourage each other in their work of patience and labor of love. Here, too, the genuine followers of Christ; pray for each other, while tears of sympathy show—

"They share their mutual woes.
Their mutual burdens bear."

These meetings, properly conducted, have a tendency to unite the brethren strongly in the bonds of love and Christian fellowship, while they are inspired by the confidence of the piety and honest purposes of their brethren.

No association was ever more strongly united in sacred bonds than a class of holy and devout worshippers. The true doctrine, we believe, of the New Testament, has been embodied in this our practice. Were it possible to assemble the whole Methodist community, heart would meet heart in sympathy and love, and the entire vast brotherhood (of perhaps two millions, in all), would join in the same confession of faith, and would blend their sacred joys in harmonious songs of praise." Never shall we forget our early class meetings. Our hearts, warm in their first love, were cemented in Christian friendship with those we met in the social band, while angels seemed to sing around. Neither time nor distance, nor change of fortune, will ever erase from our memory, those tender and indelible impressions written upon the heart while we sung, or, when with the heart and one voice we joined in the noble sentiment of the poet,

"Our hearts by love together knit, etc."

"Together let us sweetly live, Together let us die."

And then the parting hymn still lingers in our memory: the tone, the emphasis, the sparkling eye, the flowing tears of each, are all vivid in our recollection, while with plighted hands we repeated—

"When we assunder part,
It gives us inward pain,
While each in expectation lives
And hopes to meet again."

Those were joyous days—times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Amid such scenes we first formed our attachment for Methodism, and contracted our love for Methodist usages.

Those were halcyon days—days spent, not in the crowded city, amid the noise and bustle of busy multitudes, pressing on in the pursuit of fortune, but passed in the calm of rural life. Those were days of simplicity and godly sincerity—when the members of the Church loved like brethren, and friendship and Christian confidence reigned in every bosom. We do not say it is not still the case: in many places we believe—we hope it is—though we think not so generally the case. It ought to be, and must be, if we would advance in all Christian piety, zeal and simplicity before God.

Dear brethren of the ministry, with one heart and with one mind, let us seek to restore our class meetings to their original simplicity and spirituality.

Members of the Church—brother, sister, we beseech you, in God's name, not to forget your class meetings. You will find it to be good. I speak from the experience of near twenty years. If as a Methodist you are cold in religion, your absence from the class room is in all likelihood one of the causes. One, all, we entreat you, by the love we have for you, in Christ Jesus, be punctual to your class meetings. Let no trivial circumstances or slight inconvenience prevent your attendance. Then will you see revivals spreading all over the land, and throughout the cities—revivals that will result in the sanctification of believers in the conversion of your children, friends and neighbors. For when the Church is pure and filled with the revival spirit, she becomes as terrible to sinners as an army of banners. And how shall this be brought about? Why, surely, by a due observance of all the means of grace, and "above all, taking the shield of faith," laying hold on the promises of God, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, aspiring after the fullness and constancy of the earnest of Heaven, till we shall not only catch, but retain in our hearts, the heavenly fire from the Spirit of burning.

DOMESTIC HAPPINESS.—"Six things," say Hamilton, "are requisite to create a happy home." Integrity must be the architect, and tidiness the upholsterer. It must be warmed by affection, and lighted up with cheerfulness; and industry must be the ventilator, renewing the atmosphere and bringing in fresh salubrity day by day; while over all, as a protecting canopy and glory, nothing will suffice except the blessing of God."

More of the Devil's Tempting.

Melancholy Christians are in danger of Satan's temptations. Melancholy is defined to be a black humor seated chiefly in the brain. The devil works much with his temptations upon this humor. Melancholy clothes the mind in deep gloom; therefore, unfits a Christian for the discharge of religious duties. Lute strings will give no sound when wet; so, a Christian is out of tune for spiritual exercise when the spirit is sad and depressed.

Melancholy sides with Satan against God. Satan tells the saint, God doth not love him, and the saint believes him; and then casts away his confidence, "which hath great recompense of reward." Melancholy knocks off the chariot wheels of the soul, and the saint loses his energy and the spirit of perseverance; that is, to use a common saying, "he gives up!" Melancholy breeds discontent, and discontent leads to sin; and thence to self-murder. And one would think, melancholy Christians tempt Satan to tempt them. God save us from melancholy! Give us happy and cheerful spirits, sanctified by grace!

The devil lies in ambush to do us mischief. He is not fully cast into prison; but is like a prisoner on bail. He is every ready to take his prey. He walketh about; he is never at ease; he is a restless spirit. He is like a Roman captain Hannibal speaks of: whether he was the conqueror or the conquered, he was never quiet. He works with his temptations upon the unbelieving. He who doubts a Deity, or denies a hell, what sin will not such a man be drawn into! He is a metal that Satan can cast into any mould—dye him any color. An unbeliever like this will stick at no sin.

Paul was afraid of none so much as them that did not believe; he prayed to be delivered from the unbelievers in Judea. Still, Satan is not quiet; by putting his own coloring upon the unbeliever, he goes about, not as a pilgrim, but as a spy. Satan follows with his temptations till the saint is about to set his foot upon the deathless shore of Canaan; even then the devil tells the dying child of grace that he is a hypocrite; and all his evidences, hitherto, of his acceptance with God were counterfeit. It is true Satan can not blot out the Christian's evidence of the pardoning grace of God; but he can throw sand in the eyes of faith, so that we can not always see it. This Satan often does when the saint is ready to die. Like a coward, he strikes when the saint is down; while death is striking at the body, he is striking at the soul.

Bible Society Report

Of the Executive Committee of the Ladies Bible Society of the First and Third Municipalities, adopted at the annual meeting of the Society, Jan. 5, 1852.

The Executive Committee of the Ladies' Bible Society of the First and Third Municipalities, in conformity with the 7th Article of their Constitution, respectfully present to the Society now assembled in general meeting, a report of their proceedings for the year 1851.

Agreeably to a resolution passed at a meeting held March 5, 1851, the Treasurer, on the 16th April, paid over to Mr. Packard, of the Bible Depository, the cash balance in her hands, amounting to $102 50, for the purchase of Bibles to be distributed in the First and Third Municipalities.

By the hands of the Rev. Mr. Baker and the late Rev. Mr. Z. Harmon, 17 Bibles and 100 Testaments have been distributed within our limits, (orders on Mr. Packard for this amount having been given to these gentlemen by your Committee.) Of these, 10 Bibles and 85 Testaments were in the English text; 3 Bibles and 7 Testaments in French; 3 Bibles and 6 Testaments in German; and 1 Bible and 2 Testaments in Spanish.

Fifty of these Testaments were distributed among the prisoners of the Parish jail of the First Municipality, and were received (says the report of Rev. Mr. Harmon) with emotions of gratitude, and he had been informed that they have had a salutary effect; the convicts were more quiet and some of them had asked for pious books. And here the Committee pause to render their tribute of respect to this venerable men of God—summoned, after a brief illness, to render an account of his stewardship. They had hoped, through his means, to reach a large number of the destitute; his peculiar kindliness of manner, and realizing earnestness of the importance of the work, fitting him so well for it. But he has "rested from his labors," and we trust has "entered into the joy of his Lord."

By the report of Mr. Packard there was standing to the credit of this Society on the books of the S. W. Bible Society, Jan. 1, 1852, $78 88. In the Treasury of the Society, same date, $10 50.

The Committee learn also from Mr. Packard, that the Colporteurs engaged by the Bible Society to visit the whole city, went over Lafayette and about two-thirds of the Second Municipality, and then both left the city—one in consequence of ill-health, and the other on account of domestic affairs—and that he is now looking for a person to complete the work. Therefore our own efforts, through Messrs. Harmon and Baker, comprise the whole of the distribution within our bounds, during the year 1851.

Mr. Packard further states that thirty Roman Catholic families are reading the Bible in the First Municipality, and some of them have commenced attending a Protestant prayer-meeting, and that every month brings new readers of the bible.

The collections of the year show very discouraging results. A large majority within our limits are unable, if willing, to contribute; many who have the means decline from various reasons; some say that they give their mite in the collections taken in the churches; others are forbidden by their church to aid in the distribution of the Bible.

In conclusion, your Committee regret that they have been able to effect so little, and request the selection of a new Board of Managers, by whose labors they trust happier and more efficient results may be attained for the year 1852.

MRS. S. HERRIMAN,
March 30, 1852. Treasurer.

Dying Words of Wilberforce.

"Come, and sit near me; let me lean on you," said Wilberforce, to a friend, a few minutes before his death. Afterward, putting his arm around that friend, he said: "God bless you, my dear." He became agitated somewhat, and then ceased speaking. Presently, however, he said, "I must leave you, my fond friend; we shall walk no further through this world together; but I hope we shall meet in heaven. Let us talk of heaven. Do not weep for me, dear F——, do not weep, for I am very happy; but think of me, and let the thought make you press forward. I never knew happiness till I found Christ as a Saviour. Read the Bible—read the Bible! Let no religious book take its place. Through all my perplexities and distresses, I never read any other book, and I never felt the want of any other. It has been my hourly study; and all my knowledge of the doctrines and all my acquaintance with the experience and realities of religion, have been derived from the Bible only. I think religious people do not read the Bible enough. Books about religion may be useful enough, but they will not do instead of the simple truth of the Bible." He afterwards spoke of the regret of parting with his friends. "Nothing," said he, "convinces me more of the reality of the change within me, than the feelings with which I can contemplate a separation from my family. I now feel so weaned from earth, my affections so much in heaven, that I can leave you all without a regret; yet I do not love you less, but God."

INFIDELITY, OLD AND NEW.—A writer in the Watchman and Observer, speaking of these "twain," thinks "the old is better." He says: "The old metaphysical infidelity seems to be thoroughly exhausted and confounded. The new infidelity admits the authenticity of the Bible in general terms, but denies its inspiration, scrap by scrap, under the pretended bidding of natural science. The new infidelity has a broad stripe of the hypocrite about it. It is far more saintly, and not half so honest, as Voltaire and Paine. It does not openly reject the Bible, for it would be at once and recognized overwhelmed. But it pretends to hold to the Bible, while it strikes off, or tries to strike off, sliver after sliver, with the hammer of geology, or cut or piece after piece with the rationalistic pruning-knife of Niebuhr and Arnold. There cannot be a doubt that attacks upon the truth as it is in Jesus are coming, as present and for the future, chiefly from that direction.

THE HOLY SEPULCHRE.—We find the following in the Debats: "According to the arrangements lately made on the subject of the Holy places at Jerusalem, the Ottoman Porte has decided on restoring to the French: 1. The key of the outer door of the great Church of Bethlehem and those of the side doors, so that the Christians will be no longer the prisoners of the Greek monks; they will be henceforth able to enter and go out freely. 2. Two gardens belonging to and adjoining the church, and which the Greeks had taken possession of. 3. In the Church of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem, the French will receive a portion of the lower part of the seven Arches of the Holy Virgin. For more than a century the French have not had the use of the gallery built over them. 4. The Franks and Latins will be admitted to share in the tomb of the Holy Virgin, placed under the brook of Cedron, in the valley of Jehosaphat. 5. Instead of exacting the restitution of the silver star, stolen by the Greeks on the 1st Nov. 1846, the French shall content themselves by replacing it by another, after the departure of the numerous pilgrims, who will this year flock to this place at the solemnities of Easter. By a coincidence which happens only every four years, these fetes will be celebrated simultaneously by all religious sects in the east and west. The French may, besides, build a church in the mixed and neighboring village to Bethlehem, called Beelu-Jella. They may also repair and enlarge the small convent in which they are kept imprisoned for the three months which they pass at the Holy Sepulchre. The same fathers may also repair the principal church of the convent, in which they reside at Jerusalem."

A GOOD STORY.—The following excellent story is told of Mr. Sheaf, a grocer, in Portsmouth, N. H.:

It appears that a man had purchased some wool of him, which had been weighed and paid for, and Mr. Sheaf had gone to the desk to get change for a note. Happening to turn his head while there, he saw in a glass, which swung so as to reflect the shop, a stout arm reach up and take from the shelf a heavy white oak cheese. Instead of appearing suddenly, and rebuking the man for his theft, as another would, thereby losing his custom forever, the crafty old gentleman gave the thief his change as if nothing had happened, and then, under the pretence of lifting the bag to lay it on his horse for him, took hold of it—he exclaimed—

"Why, bless me, I must have reckoned the weight wrong."

"Oh, no," said the other, "you may be sure you have not, for I counted with you."

"Well, well, we won't dispute the matter, it is so easily tried," said Mr. S., putting the bag into the scales again. "There," said he, "I told you so; I knew I was right; made a mistake of nearly twenty pounds; however, if you don't want the whole you needn't have it; I'll take part of it out."

"No, no!" said the other, staying the hands of Mr. S. on their way to the strings of the bag, "I guess I will take the whole."

And this he did, paying for dishonesty by receiving the skim-milk cheese for the price of wool!

Arkansas Mission, Alabama Conference.

To Rev. E. W. Sehon, D. D., Secretary of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South.

Dear Brother: I reached this work seven days after the adjournment of Conference, [illegible] was intimated by my predecessor, I [illegible] arrangement for the accommodation of my family. There was plenty of work to do, [illegible] of support, but no house to live in. I went to work and tried every scheme I could think of, or that others would suggest, to secure a house, but all failed. [illegible] condition matters stood up to the time Quarterly Meeting, and but for [illegible] of a good brother not connected with the Mission, brother Heard would have given me a discharge from any further obligation to keep the work; but by his [illegible] we have a home [illegible] though he is troubled [illegible] family, no doubt his is [illegible] portion than [illegible] of those who should, but [illegible] be troubled [illegible] the salvation of many souls involved in the act. It is due to remark some were more than willing to accommodate us, but were destitute of house-room.

We are endeavoring to relieve the Mission and Missionary of all this embarrassment by [illegible] a mission house. We have a subscription out and the prospect of success encouraging. It is the opinion of many that that is the only plan that will place these Canebrake Missions on a permanent basis, and I suggest to the brethren connected with these several Missions, that they look to this matter, and in due time take steps to secure a home for the Missionary who may from time to time serve this work.

The patrons of the work, so far as I have learned, have correct views as to the obligations of owners to furnish their servants with proper religious instructions, and though some of them do not enter into life themselves, they have no disposition to prevent their servants from entering in. But I have somewhat against some of the christian masters. There is with some too little faith in the success of the Missionary operation, and then a want of a faithful co-operation with the Missionary. The preacher is employed to serve the people not that they expect many, if any of them converted and saved, but that their own skirts may be clear. Well, that is a sufficient inducement to move any owner in the matter; but I doubt if the bare employing the Missionary will clear the skirts of the master. Are they not expected to sustain the effort of the minister by their "fervent effectual prayers," and are they not to look to God to make the word preached powerful unto salvation? If the Missionary had no higher motive in laboring among the slaves of the South than the acquittal of the master in the day of judgment methinks he would turn to some other field of labor, where he might expect souls to his ministry and souls for his hire. But he expects nothing less in these fields of labor as he goes from plantation to plantation, and to old and young dispenses the word of life.

The spiritual condition of the Mission is regarded encouraging. The fruits of the good seed sown by those who have preceded me is being manifest. The children are well advanced in the Catechism and are prepared for the lecture on the teachings of the Catechism. Many of the old ones have been awakened to a sense of their lost condition and are seeking redemption. Some have found peace and pardon and now rejoice in hope of the promised inheritance. A few have given hopes of being forever with the Lord. Two have died the last quarter, (died right.) Nine have been received on probation. Some have been lost by overhauling the classes; others by breaking up of farms and removals. Eleven appointments are served at this time; one more engaged, and prospects for still more when I shall have time to serve them.

May all the lovers of Zion pray for the success of the Colored Mission.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, April 10.

THE LOST NAVIGATORS.

On the 19th of May 1845 an exploring expedition sailed from England. It consisted of two ships, strongly built and well provisioned, under command of an experienced English captain. There were nineteen officers, and the conjoined crews of the ships amounted to one hundred and forty-nine souls. They went under instructions of the British Admiralty, in search of the long sought Northwest passage by sea from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. On the 12th July, of the same year the expedition was in Baffins Bay, within the Arctic Circle, whence the last letter was received from the Commandor.

Time sped. Neither the voyagers nor any tidings of them came back. In about eighteen months serious apprehensions began to be expressed for their safety. Several writers in newspapers and periodicals published their views on the subject. Public attention was aroused. A world-wide sympathy began to grow up. Various plans of relief were suggested, and many voluntoers came forward to executo them. From that time to this no subject has so steadily occupied public attention as the fate of Sir John Franklin. Every newspaper has a paragraph or more on the subject, and the interest is unflagging. As a lost child awakes the quiet hamlet and sets its humble denizens to searching, and interests the most phlegmatic soul for its fate, so have the voyagers of the "Terror" and "Erebus" excited the civilized world. Not only has America—full of tender and kindred feeling for England, notwithstanding all the hard words occasionally indulged—joined her ships in the search, but the rugged Bear—the Czar of Russia—has instructed his remote Siberian authorities to facilitate the search. The messenger that should bring the news of the discovery and relief of the lost navigators would be welcomed by the human family as no nation or tribe ever welcomed a messenger of glorious victory, of spoils and bloody war.

There is here something pleasing to contemplate. Are not these the effects of a humanising agent in the world. And is not that agent, preeminently, our blessed Christianity! The ties of brotherhood are being drawn closer about the family of man. Seas and dialects no longer so divide and alienate the various members of that family as once they did. Men are learning to answer for themselves the question, "And who is my neighbor?"

While regarding with unspeakable satisfaction these suggestive facts, we are led to inquire, May not the Church have her zeal quickened by these numerous, ardently-prosecuted and expensively-prepared searching expeditions? First and last, not less than a fleet of thirteen ships have been dispatched in this business, while ten thousand blessings have been showered on the noble souls presenting themselves for the hazardous enterprise, and ten thousand prayers have gone up to Heaven for their success. Nobody grudges this outlay. Nobody complains of the expense and sacrifice incurred in thus seeking and saving that which is lost.

Lo, the world is full of Lost Navigators! They dwell about the Artic and the Antartic circles. They dwell on the line of the tropics and on the Equator. They are shrouded in a deeper than polar night, the year round. They are drawing out a miserable existence "without hope and without God in the world." They dwell in a land of darkness as darkness itself. Go as we will, north, south, east or west, they are to be found: and not a few hundred souls, but thousands, millions—

Where the Arctic ocean thunders,
Where the tropics fiercely glow,

Impassable straits and iceberg barriers are not comparable to the sin, the ignorance, the dire superstition that shut them in. They wait on us for relief, for deliverance. The voice of their helpless woe comes up from every quarter; and can Christians keep back relief from them? Will not all volunteer to "go or send?"

Many ingenious speculations have been made as to the survival of Sir John Franklin and his companions. We have been told how they could escape, even though their ships should be wrecked, and how they could subsist in those dreary climes, even though their stores should be exhausted. But alas, those destitute of the bread of life! How can we allay our concern for their safety by similar speculations! There is but one Saviour.

These lost navigators may never return; that heroic woman, Lady Franklin, who has signalized herself in constant solicitude and noble devotion, may never welcome her Ulysses to his home again; the hardy seamen who adventured with him, may embrace their wives and children no more, and in beds of snow they may all find graves. They would have died anywhere. Death held a relentless claim upon them on all earthly continents. But oh, what a noble mission inspires the Church! how large the relief offered! what heavenly bounty she brings for perishing souls, saving from the death that never dies! Are there none to feel for other lost voyagers and to devise and execute prompt and liberal and perilous plans for their rescue from the doom that impends? Missionaries and the friends and supporters of missionaries, answer. The heart that throbs with evangelic philanthropy will answer.

May the day speedily come, when every ship that leaves a Christian port shall take out a herald of the Cross; when every white sail that greets heathen shores, shall be freighted with gospel supplies; and when all Christendom shall be all alive with fitting out Searching Expeditions for the Lost Navigators:

The nations call from sea to sea
Extends the thrilling cry—
Come over, Christians, if there be.
And help us, ere we die.

Editorial Absence.—After the next issue of the paper the editor expects to be absent several weeks. As he visits Boston during the General Conference, our readers may look for some full and late intelligence of the proceedings, etc. ☞ Will this not be worth a few scores of new subscribers within the next fortnight? ☜ In the meantime correspondents will please continue their favors, and address them as heretofore.

☞ Committees of Publication—Will meet at the office, 56 Gravier street, on first Monday in May.

A Father in Israel Gone.—The obituary of the Rev. Richard Holmes will be given next week.

Daily Zion's Herald.—We take pleasure in calling attention to the advertisement on third page.

METHODIST PRESS

Letting It Alone.—The editor of the Christian Observer (California) has been called on by the "Pacific" (a religious California paper) for an expression of opinion relative to the proposed Convention for changing the Constitution of the State. The Pacific refers to its own and the course of the California Christian Advocate as examples. It is generally admitted, we believe, that the proposed changes look to making a portion of California a slave State. Dr. Boring, after acknowledging the force of the examples, and admonishing his contemporaries of the religious press, that the Christian Church can be better employed than in legislating on slavery, thus marks out his course:

"Looking over the whole ground, and weighing the subject according to the best of our ability, we have come deliberately to the conclusion, since we cannot help ourselves, to allow the people to determine for themselves, presuming them to be competent, whether or not they need and desire a Convention; and in the event that one is called, we now think we shall permit every man to vote or not, and to vote on either side, as he shall think best; and presuming that they will do so, shall for ourselves, should life be continued, do likewise."

Our New Missionary to China.—President Collins, writing to the Zion's Herald, says of him:

"The new missionary to China, of the M. E. Church, South, Rev. Wm. G. E. Cunnyngham, has been selected from the Holston Conference. He is one of our ablest preachers, about 28 years of age, full of faith and the Holy Ghost; with a wife also deeply imbued with the missionary spirit. They are expected to sail from Charleston about the first week in April, and will carry with them the warm sympathies and ardent prayers of the Church."

Rev. J. Mathews.—This worthy representative of the Tennessee Conference, is en route via New York, for California. He took leave of his friends in Nashville on Sunday evening, 21st ult., at a meeting held for that purpose in the McKendree Church—Dr. McFerrin in the Chair. After the Missionary had spoken, Rev. F. E. Pitts, an old Missionary to South America, spoke. In the course of his remarks he said:

"However others may regard it, in my opinion, nothing has originated in our age equal in importance to this California enterprise. Why was the wealth of that country never discovered till the Anglo-Saxon race became its possessors? Why was it not given to the Monk and the Jesuit? Is there no providence in this—no gracious design towards our fallen world? True it is, we have no religion to brag of; but bad as we are, the Anglo-Saxon race is the best in the world. God is manager in the affair. He is levying upon the treasures of the earth for the redemption of its ruined population. The brother's remarks about the millenium are not so wide of the mark as we may think them. What are the few missionaries that represent the Christian church in the vast Asiatic world? A mere drop in the ocean—a few feeble stars struggling amidst the universal darkness. China is coming to California. The Chinese there are said to be industrious, peaceable, reliable citizens. They are coming there to be converted to Christianity. These will do more for Christianity than a thousand missionaries."

"Nimrod" concludes this very interesting sketch in the columns of our Nashville contemporary:

"The people who had long been waiting anxiously for the opportunity, and who always speak to the point and the purpose, made the concluding speech, inarticulate indeed, but solid in material, silvery in its tones, and much more effective than either of its predecessors; the peroration of which was fifty-seven dollars thirty cents and a watch-key. The whole thousand dollars could be raised, I believe, on the spot, and without much effort; but it was understood that other charges claimed a participation in the privilege and the glory, and we had no desire to deprive them of their right."

Pretty good—Nimrod.

Revival in Toronto, Canada.—The Christian Guardian, 24th ult., gives cheering intelligence of the continuance of the gracious work we noticed some time ago:

"We are happy to inform our friends that the revival which has been going on for some time in this city, in connection with the labors of the Rev. James Caughey, still continues without any abatement in its interest and success."

Disciplinary Change.—The editor of the S. C. Advocate, in discussing the perpetuity of the peculiarities of Methodism, suggests this change:

"Again: we would with great diffidence submit, whether the adoption of the English usage of allowing a preacher to be stationed three years continuously in one charge might not be an improvement upon the American disciplinary regulation, which limits to two years a pastoral charge. Of course the stationing power would judge as to the propriety of continuing the pastoral relation through the entire constitutional term then, as it does now. With our present convictions of the importance of the pastoral office, with our knowledge of not a few individual instances in which a third year's pastorate among the same people would be promising of better results than the two preceding put together, we decidedly incline to favor the policy which would give the Bishop the necessary liberty at discretion. This policy, we will add, by the way, was recommended by the Committee on Revision at the last General Conference, but the report was not acted upon, on account of the early adjournment of the Conference."

General Rules—An Opinion.—A correspondent of the St. Louis Advocate puts this to the editor:

"There are two questions in relation to class-meetings that we think important. The first is, is it made our duty to attend them by God in his word? The second is, can any thing be made a condition of church membership that is not made such in the Bible, consistently with the word of God?

"In the General Rules of our Discipline, we find this language: 'There are about twelve persons in a class, one of whom is styled the leader. It is his duty to see each person in his class once a week,' etc.; and in the conclusion of the General Rules there is this declaration made: 'These are the General Rules of our Societies, all of which we are taught by God to observe, even in his written word.'

And again: "All these we know his Spirit writes on truly awakened hearts.' And is it true that none are awakened—and if not awakened, we suppose not converted—but those on whose hearts the spirit has written the duty of going to class-meeting.

"Now, if any other sense can be given to the above quotations, we would be glad to see it, being very unwilling to believe that the last quotation embraces the rule on class meeting, and would be glad to know how to avoid the conclusion," etc.

To which, in part, the editor answers:

"We certainly differ very widely from him as to what constitute the General Rules of our societies. The section of the Discipline in which these rules are to be found is headed, 'The Nature, Design, and General Rules of our United Societies;' the 'General Rules' being prefaced in that section:

"1. With a concise history of the rise of these 'Societies;'

"2. With a statement of the objects of those 'Societies;'

"3. With an exhibit of the duties of the leaders of these 'Societies;'

"4. With a statement of the conditions of a membership in these 'Societies.'

"But none of these make any part of those rules of moral and religious conduct imposed upon the members of these Societies; and of which it is said, 'We are taught of God to observe, even in his written word,' etc. The rules to which this declaration refers begin thus: 'First, by doing no harm, by avoiding evil of every kind,' etc. So far as we now remember, this is the first time we have ever heard it intimated that the Methodist Discipline was susceptible of the construction the above writer seems to put upon it. The General Rules proper, do not say one word about class-meetings—not one."

Financial Plan—Alabama Conference.

"The plan has been adopted by a few of the Annual Conferences, where it has been found to work very well; in others not so well. In the Alabama Conference, during the past year, there was a serious defect in the working of the system. In missionary collections the Conference far exceeded the operations of any previous year, but in the support of the ministry it fell behind."

The above is from the N. and L. C. Advocate; and if the character and efficiency of the "financial plan" adopted by the Alabama Conference is to be effected in the judgment of the public, by the mistake into which the writer has fallen, it ought to be corrected. There was a "defect in the working of the system," just as there is in the Gospel when it fails to convert those to whom it is not preached. The plan failed because it was neglected by many and efforts made on the old principle! Whereas, those who adhered to this new plan, made much larger collections than the same congregations had been accustomed to give in former years. As to the success of our plan, if properly applied, I heard but one opinion among the members of the Conference.

The Virginian Colonizationist.—Believing that the time has come when a newspaper, discussing the subject of Colonization from the Southern stand-point, is needed: the Board of Managers of the Colonization Society of Virginia, propose to publish such a paper in the city of Richmond, to be issued monthly at $1 per annum. It will be called "The Virginian Colonizationist," and be under the direction of the General Agent.

PARIS CORRESPONDENCE.

Paris, March 18, 1852.

Wesleyan Methodism was introduced in France as far back as the year 1790, by some members of the French Societies in the Channel Islands, who visited various villages on the coasts of Normandy. In consequence of this, a preacher was stationed there some time after, and did a great deal of good. The French revolution having put to death many priests, and frightened away others, he had a large field of action, and was well received, not only by the Protestants, but also by the Catholics. He was, however, obliged to leave at the end of three years, on account of ill health, and was not replaced. But the class meetings he had established continued in existence, so that after an interval of twenty-two years, during which no minister had been stationed in Normandy, thirty-five members were still reported in the Minutes.

It was only in 1818 that the British Conference took to heart, in real earnest, the evangelization of France. Four missionaries were appointed, amongst whom was the Rev. Charles Cook, (now Dr. Cook) who is still amongst us as general Superintendent of all our stations in France. That year the number of members only amounted to twenty-nine. From that time there was a gradual increase until the year 1844, when there were in France and Switzerland 12 circuits, 24 missionaries and 1239 members. But the result of the labors of the missionaries ought not to be estimated only by the number of members in Society. Besides forming societies, and evangelizing whole districts, they had also awakened from its deadly sleep the ministers and members of the National Reformed Church; they had been the means of the conversion of many of its pastors, who have since preached the true Gospel of Salvation to their flocks; and they had stimulated Christian activity to such an extent that French Bible and Tract Societies were established, and even a Missionary Society, the seat of which is in Paris, and which employs actually eighteen missionaries in South Africa.

Notwithstanding these results, the Wesleyan Mission to France never was very popular in England, and in proportion as the claims of the heathen were more urgent, the Committee necessarily paid less attention to ours, and this seemed the more reasonable, as Wesleyanism, as a church, was not extending in France as rapidly as it was expected it would, and as the indirect results of its ministry were not sufficiently made known. Hence a reduction in the numbers of missionaries, which was followed by a falling off in the stations and members. Then came the revolution of 1848, in consequence of which a very great number of the English residents in France left the country, together with the Wesleyan English ministers. Our French societies suffered also very much from the political agitations; and these different circumstances brought us so low, that in 1849 we had only 8 circuits, 19 missionaries, and 807 members.

But it may be asked: How is it that Wesleyan Methodism having done so much good, did not extend itself as a Church, and did not receive as members all who were converted by its means? This is owing to various reasons, amongst which are the following:

The ministers of the Reformed Churches who have been brought to a saving knowledge of the Redeemer through the instrumentality of the Wesleyans, hold, many of them, the Calvinistic doctrine of election, though to a certain extent only; for pure Calvinism is now very seldom met with here. They could not therefore join us. Those who entertained the same doctrinal views as we do, generally thought that they might do more good by remaining where they were, than by seceding from the State Protestant Church. The converted members of their flocks naturally remained with their ministers, when these had become pious; and as to the converts from Popery, they also preferred uniting themselves to a church recognized by the State, than to one which not only was not recognized by Government, but was moreover a foreign church, so to speak, governed by an English Committee. Indeed one can hardly imagine what ideas have been entertained of the Wesleyans in France, on account of this. I have heard it said that their ministers were spies of the British Government, whose chief business was so obtain allies amongst the French to England. It has even been circulated amongst ignorant peasants in the country, that all the names entered in our class book were forwarded to the Queen of England as the names of so many persons who had made allegiance to her. This rumor has of course altogether ceased at the present time, still I believe it has formerly done us a great deal of harm.

Another reason for the small numerical results of our efforts in France is to be found in the fact that our ministers have never been able to employ such means of success as were imperiously needed, whilst on the other hand those means were employed by the Evangelical Society of Paris, and by other Christian Churches. Thus our English brethren have never helped us to open gratuitous Wesleyan Primary Schools, because education is very much spread in France; and therefore the children of our friends have had to frequent schools held gratuitously by Popish friars, by Infidels, or by Christians of other denominations, and in either cases, alienation from Methodism has been a very common result. Again, we never have had a Book Room, so that it has not been any body's particular care to issue books and tracts; the result is that Methodist literature amounts to nothing here, whilst the Calvinists have their book and tract societies. Again, we have not been able, from want of funds, to employ numerous Colporteurs, as other churches have done; and we have therefore spread but few copies of the Scriptures, and scarcely any books amongst the Ignorant Popish peasantry. Whilst the dissentors and the National Reform Church have each their normal school for training male teachers, we have none; whilst they have their theological seminaries, we do not know where to send our young men when they wish to prepare for the ministry by a course of conscientious studies.

Various efforts have been made to fill up these deficiencies. Had not the Missionary Committee of London been already overburdened by other wants, and the numerous calls from the heathen lands, it would have helped us, but this was altogether out of the question. At last a proposal was made which no doubt would have been acted upon long ago, had we belonged to American Methodism. A few months ago, the London Committee proposed that instead of governing us, stationing the ministers themselves, and apportioning the monies, as they have done hitherto, they should simply continue for a certain time their grant of money, and allow the French ministers to organize themselves into a separate Conference, altogether independent from the Committee and the British Conference, so that they could manage their own affairs, and use whatever means they thought necessary for furthering the spread of the Gospel, without having continually to write to London "to ask leave." Of course, guarantees would have to be given that Methodist doctrine and Methodist discipline should continue to be enforced.

If this proposal be acted upon, we shall become a French Wesleyan Church, and thus many of the objections made against us will fall to the ground. We shall also have more liberty of action, and I earnestly hope our ministers will make good use of it, to establish a Book Concern, a theological institution, a Normal seminary and primary schools. Funds we shall have to seek it is true, but with renewed efforts and more fervent zeal I trust we shall find them, (perhaps our American brethren would have no objection to help us?) and in time become a self-supporting Church.

This last sentence will no doubt astonish you. With you, I suppose, every thing is self-supporting; but here it is quite different. The State does every thing. When ever individuals want something important to be done, they do not set about it at once, as John Bull or Brother Jonathan are accustomed to do, but they ask the Government to do it. Thus railways belong to the State and not to private companies. Our annual exhibitions of paintings, or of industry, are all made at the expense of the State and by him. The Jewish rabbis, as well as the Popish priests and the Protestant pastors, are paid by the State, wherever they have a certain number of adepts. Hence individuals are not accustomed to give—hence our difficulty of obtaining money.

However we have good hopes for the future, for Methodism expands the heart. Very good beginnings have been made. We have collected as much as $3700 dollars in one year, exclusive of missionary monies; but we want four times as much.

I have said enough to show that the proposal of a separate Conference is a very serious one for us. I shall therefore make you acquainted with the successive decisions that relate to it. At a general District meeting, held last month in Nimes, (south of France) this proposal was unanimously adopted, and Dr. Cook was delegated to "confer with the Committee, to lay before them the opinions, feelings and purposes of the brethren, to consult with them on the subject, and then to call a general meeting of the District, whenever the arrangements proposed by the British Conference will have been prepared for final consideration and adjustment."

Our statistics for 1851 stand as follows: 10 circuits, 26 chapels and 66 other preaching places, 19 ministers, 2 of whom are on trial, 34 local preachers, 821 members and 52 on trial, 27 Sabbath schools, with 151 teachers and 1582 scholars; 5610 attendants on public worship.

The President of the Republic is increasing his power daily. The elections to the Legislative body have been all but unanimous in favor of his candidates. Seven only of the opposition candidates have passed, two of whom were nominated in Paris. In all the large towns the greatest liberty of voting has been allowed. In Paris, for instance, on the day preceding the elections, the walls were placarded every where with the names of candidates of different parties, and with t profession of faith; but in some of the country places it appears that matters are not altogether so free. There have been mayors and prefects who, in opposition to a very positive circular on the subject from the Minister of the Interior, have forbidden opposition candidates to publish manifestos. Had all been fair, the opposition would probably have passed a few more of its candidates, though a very great majority would still have been in favor of Louis Napoleon. As it is, the legislative body will be altogether devoted to the President. It now remains to be seen whether he will realize the promises often made to the country, that if the power were entrusted to him, he would cause trade to flourish and peace to reign over all the French dominions.

By recent decrees he has removed the immovability of the Magistracy, and of the Professors of the University, who are now to be named and dismissed by Government. Magistrates will have to retire from office when they reach the age of 72. Professors will lose their places whenever they have been ten years without lecturing to the students.

I have seen in English papers very absurd accounts of what the President is supposed to have done in reference to public instruction. The truth is simply this: As Thiers and others, who were members of the Supreme Council of Public Instruction, have been banished, the Council has been, not destroyed, but recomposed, with the same number of Protestants as before, and has actually been sitting this week. The whole system of public instruction has not been suppressed. Neither the College of France, nor the Faculty of Letters, nor the Ministry of Public Instruction, have been abolished, notwithstanding the earnest desire of the Univers: Protestant schools will not be shut up; church schools will not be more than heretofore under the inspection of the Bishops. It is moreover probable that greater liberty will be given to religious bodies, whether Catholic or Protestant, for the opening of free denominational schools. No decree will however be made by the President on the subject, but a law will be passed by the legislative body which is to meet on the 29th of this month.

The Philadelphia Annual Conference has addressed a letter of condolence to the venerable Bishop Hedding, who now lies hopelessly ill at Poughkeepsie, New York.

The Rev. Joshua Soule, senior Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has been formally requested to pay a visit to California. The request comes from the Missionary Society of the Church, South.

It is not to be wondered at that the Pope feels his position to be any thing but firm; for, instead of his having been dined in his place by real Roman Consent, he has been merely dabbed down where he is with a [illegible] plaster of Paris.

The library of Cardinal Mezzofonti, now for sale in Rome, can be bought for $4000. It is said to be one of the most remarkable philological collections ever offered, embracing some 60 languages and dialects. Efforts are making to procure it for New York.

Day of Fasting and Prayer.

Ma. Editor: It may be appropriate to the ministry and laity of the Church in Alabama Conference be reminded that a resolution of the Conference at its late session appointed the first Friday in May as a day of fasting and prayer, "That Almighty God may raise up and send forth more laborers into the harvest." This resolution was suggested from a knowledge of the scarcity of ministers, and we trust in obedience to the injunction of the great Head of the Church. A supply of faithful pastors is a blessing which we should always recognize the hand of the Lord and the especial operation of His grace, and should therefore in every time of need, turn our eyes to the hill whence cometh all our help. There are two considerations in the character of a true minister which show him to be the workmanship of God, and which entitle Him to our thanksgiving when we are blessed with the labors of such, and which should prompt us to supplication in need thereof:

1 The conscious obligation of the command of God which places him before us in the high and holy office. He does not enter because it seems to be one of many vocations eligible for the exercise of his talent and energy, although prompted by motives of general philanthropy. The man who bears in his hand the precious treasure of the Gospel should feel not only that he may go, that he ought to go, but that he must go. This was the experience of Paul, the great pattern of Christian ministers, who felt necessity laid upon him; yea, wo unto him if he preached not the Gospel.

2 The hallowed impulse of a true Christian ministry. His soul having gone through the pangs of repentance and experienced the renewal of the Holy Ghost, is constrained by the love of Christ to the prosecution of the labors assigned him. To this, add his love for souls and you have a minister who in "necessity and stripes" is not moved, neither counts he his life dear unto him so that he may finish his course with joy and the ministry which he has received of the Lord Jesus to testify the Gospel of the Grace of God.

Of these spiritual qualifications God is the author and judge, and therefore it is his prerogative to call men to the ministry. We want a true supply of a true ministry adequate to the present demands of the church which will create a demand for another supply; and so, going on, until the light of the Gospel shall break forth upon the darkness of the world like the light of the morning. Surely those who enjoy in their souls the blessing of the Gospel of peace will sanction the action of the Conference, and unite their prayers for an increase of laborers for the blessing of the world and the glory of God

What Became of Them?

Bro. McTyeire: Several very respectable Methodist gentlemen from the interior of the State were seen in this city on Sunday forenoon, but by night not one of them could be found! Whether violence has been done any of them is not yet known. But it is suspected by many of our citizens, that they were either forced on board the New Orleans boat or happened to be on board of it about 2 P. M. of that day, and that it went off with them. Something of this kind must have happened to them, for they are pious, exemplary men when at home, in East Alabama. Any information concerning them, that will assure us that they are sound in body, and in a healthy spiritual condition, will be thankfully received. Any person finding the above gentlemen and returning them to their friends, with a copy of the Methodist Discipline in the pocket of each, with the leaf turned down at page 24, will receive their sincere thanks. Papers favorable to the cause of religion, and especially the Texas W. Banner, are requested to give the above one or two insertions, and send their bills to the churches of which the lost gentlemen were members.

Arrival of More Missionaries.—By the steamer "Golden Gate," which came to the wharf about sunset on the 26th, four Missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, arrived, and will in a few days proceed to the interior of this State, where the work is awaiting their coming.

Of these Missionaries, two are from Georgia, and two from Alabama; the former, William Simmons and John C. Simmons, Jr. (brothers)—the latter, Dennis B. Leyne and E. B. Lockley, all in good health and high spirits.

We learn there are four more on their way from South Carolina, Florida and Mississippi. [Christian Observer, 28th Feb.

Recovery of a Lost Work of Franklin.—It appears by a statement published in a London periodical called the Notes and Queries, that a copy of the first work written by Benjamin Franklin, when 18 years of age and a journeyman printer in London, in 1725, has been found. All attempts to find a copy of it have hitherto failed, and it was supposed that they had all been destroyed. In Franklin's Autobiography, he mentions this as his first work. It was written partly in answer to Wollaston's Religion of Nature, and its title is, "A Dissertation on Liberty and Necessity, Pleasure and Pain, in a Letter to a Friend." It is addressed to Mr. J(ames) R(alph) and concludes, "Truth will be truth, though it sometimes proves mortifying and distasteful."

Steam Steamer.—On the 3d day of October, 1807, the first steamer for the Hudson river trade was launched. This was the earliest practical attempt in the United States. The steamer Comet, launched at Glasgow in the four years after, and intended for the navigation of the Clyde, was the first practical attempt in England. At the close of 1849 that country had in service 141 steam vessels, while, in the United States up to the same period there had been built 2600 of all classes, including foreign steamers. The voyage of the ocean between New York and Liverpool, prior to 1811, was a three months performance. Now the distance is overcome in less than ten days. Even with steam, the trip from New Orleans to Pittsburgh required twenty-eight days, while now it is performed in seven.

From Dublin to Holyhead in 1830, when Great Britain esteemed her appliances as next to perfect, eight hours were consumed; it now requires but three and a quarter. And such, in the brief space of forty-five years, has been the progress of this indispensable agent. The first steamship which crossed the Atlantic was the Sirius, from Liverpool, arriving in New York harbor on the 23d of April, 1838, and shortly after, on the same day, the Great Western, from Bristol, both vessels making the passage in little less time than would at present be required by one of our fastest clippers. This was the origin of the steam mail service between the United States and Great Britain, which has become an element of such consequence in our maritime progress.

D. A. Powell and Richard Asheraft, of Cincinnati, have subscribed $1000 each towards the erection of a new German Methodist Episcopal Church in that city.

Be Ready for Death.

It has become my sad duty to record the death of one of the most interesting young Christians I have ever known. On Tuesday night, the 10th inst., Emily Dowsing, the affectionate, confiding, sweet-spirited Emily, was suddenly called from earth to Heaven. She had for several years past been a child of affliction, but for a few months previous to her death she had been measurably relieved, and she and her friends were hoping that she might be restored. On Monday she attended her class in town, walking from her father's residence, about a mile and a-half; on Tuesday she was in usual health and spirits; on Tuesday night she retired to her room where she slept alone. In the morning, not rising as early as usual, her parents entered the room and to their astonishment found her a lifeless corpse! The earthly tabernacle was left without its tenant, her happy spirit having fled to the abodes of the blessed.

There is something remarkable in the evident preparation for death which she undervent immediately preceding her departure. Though always remarkable for piety and zeal, she frequently complained of her want of spirituality, and especially of that direct witness of the Spirit which many Christians enjoy. She had such a sense of her own unworthiness that she was sometimes cast down, and complained that she did not feel the lively enjoyment in religion that she desired. But the Sabbath before our last quarterly meeting, brother Dorman, her pastor, preached a discourse on self-examination, which was greatly blessed to her, and of which she frequently spoke. In the quarterly love-feast, on Monday night, she spoke at considerable length, a very unusual circumstance, and seemed to be greatly revived; spoke of the great profit she had derived from that sermon and the self-examination to which she had subjected herself since. All her friends discovered a remarkable advancement in her piety, and especially in respect to the witness of the Spirit and the joy of salvation.

The day before she died she spent several hours in her room in meditation, prayer and self-examination; and doubtless when death came he found her ready. True, she died alone, so far as earthly friends are concerned; her beloved father and mother were not permitted to minister to her in the last moments; her dying couch was not surrounded by her affectionate brothers and sisters; no praying circle of pious ministers and brethren bore her up when entering the cold waters of Jordan. But, glory be to God, she was not alone! He who said, "If I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again and take you to myself, that where I am there ye may be also," his rod and his staff sustained her, and she had nothing to fear. I have imagined I could see the room filled with the sweet ministering spirits of Heaven, gathered around one they loved, waiting to waft her happy spirit home; they whisper sweet words of encouragement to her ear; some gently aid in putting off the frail garments of mortality, while others wait with the robes and diadem of glory, with which to invest her, that she may be prepared to enter into the holy city and take her place among the worshipping millions who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

It is true she was not permitted to give her parting blessing to her weeping friends and kindred and assure them of her happy exit; but her whole spirit and conversation for some days previous, seemed like that of one ripening for glory; and especially did she solemnly and affectionately admonish one of her brothers-in-law, who was not religious, and for whom she always felt a deep interest, only the Sabbath before. May that faithful, affectionate appeal, made under such remarkable circumstances, prove like a nail in a sure place, fastened by the Master of assemblies, and result in his happy conversion to God. The subject of this obituary was the daughter of Major Wm. Dowsing, Register in the Land-Office in this place. She was born in the State of Georgia, on the 13th day of January, 1819. She professed religion when but nine years of age, and has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in Columbus, ever since. In her death her family and friends have met with a heavy bereavement; but "we sorrow not as those who have no hope." May her death be sanctified to her afflicted friends and deeply impress the young, as well as the old, with a sense of the importance of living in constant reference to eternity.

"Be ye also ready; for in a day when ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

MARRIED—In the county of Mobile, by the Rev. M. D. Thomason, on the 1st inst., Mr. HENRY C. L. KEITH to Miss SARAH E. LAPORTE.

Obituary Notice.

DIED—In Bossier Parish, Louisiana, MARY JANE, infant child of Julia A. Muggah and Rev. Stephen J. Davies, of the Louisiana Conference—born August 18, 1851, and died February 11, 1852. She lacked seven days of being six months old. The disease was a severe attack of the croup, complicated with an affection of the brain.

Our Brother and Sister D. have our hearty sympathies with their bereavements. All their lambs are 'folded' now. Accompanying this brief notice is a letter from the father so abounding with cheering Christian views under affliction, that we take the liberty of appending an extract:

BRO. MCTYEIRE: Again has my heart been pierced with sorrow. 'Tis but a short time since I sent you a notice of the death of my second child, which was the second time that I and my beloved wife had been called to drink the bitter cup of laying our children in the cold earth. We had one left—a lovely babe—around whom the dearest feelings of the heart were entwined. Hope whispered that we would be permitted to raise it. Its smile was sweet, and though very young, the parents found much that was interesting. When my mind was oppressed at the thought that two of my little ones were in the silent tomb, I would press this little one to my breast and feel consoled; certainly, I often thought, this one will be spared me. How futile are all earthly prospects! This one, too, is now wrapt in that sleep that knows no waking till the voice of the arch angel, with the trump of God, shall call forth the dead to life again. Immortality! O, thou glorious immortality, and eternal life, as revealed in the Gospel! How cheering the hope, when presented to the afflicted of earth. How consoling the promises when pledged to the tempest-tossed children of time. Without thee life itself would be a burden; and the earth, with all her variegated beauties, would be but a wide and desolate golgotha. Here the loveliest must perish, and how often it is that

"The flower that blooms the fairest
Is doomed the first to fade—
The form that moves the lightest
In earth is soonest laid."

Our children have died. Our hearts have felt what the hearts of parents only can feel. But religion consoles us: they were the lambs of the flock; the great Shepherd has taken them away from a land of storm and sorrow to the genial clime warmed by the Sun of righteousness and watered by the river of life. Our afflictions here, though severe, are but short lived, and sanctified by the Holy Spirit to our good, prepare us better for that inheritance where it is written over the entrance arch, "There shall be no more death."

EXPLANATION.—Our personal oversight of the paper ceases at its going to press. This accounts for an illegible card which some subscribers may have found on opening their last number. We hope it gave them less offence than it gave us on finding it out. It was folded in, at mailing, unknown to us; and too late discovered to be remedied. We regard such placarding with disgust—sans propriety, sans taste, sans every thing that is decent and right.

Information Wanted.

Respecting BERNARD RODDY, who emigrated to the United States, from the North of Ireland, in August 1817, in company with Messrs. John Kelso and John Morrow.

The friends and relatives of these gentlemen, and all others, are earnestly requested to forward the smallest information on this subject to the Rev. D. S. McTyeire, or Rev. J. C. Keener, New Orleans, State of Louisiana.

The Editors of all religious papers in the United States are respectfully and earnestly solicited to publish the above in behalf of four orphans, whose father died in New Orleans of Asiatic Cholera, in 1851, and the support of whose large and just legal rights now before Chancery in Ireland depends upon this information.

DAILY ZION'S HERALD,

FOR THE APPROACHING GENERAL CONFERENCE.

In accordance with what is believed to be a general wish and expectation of the Methodist public, the proprietors of the Herald have determined to issue, during the approaching General Conference in this city, a DAILY ZION'S HERALD.

The Daily will be issued at least five weeks, or until the adjournment of the Conference.

It will contain full and accurate reports of the Sayings and Doings of the General Conference, and of the various anniversary meetings that may occur during the session. The Editor will continue his "Characteristic Notes," which were received with so much favor in 1844 and '48. These "Notes," besides observations on the proceedings of the Conference, will embrace personal sketches of some of its principal members and visitors. We shall also give the news of the day, and interesting Foreign and Domestic Correspondence.

Terms, one dollar for the session. No attention paid to orders unless the cash is enclosed.

The first number will be issued on Monday, May 3.

General Intelligence.

HEAVY CLEARANCE.—There were cleared yesterday, at the Custom-house, 25,569 bales of cotton, of which 22,580 bales were for Liverpool, 2107 for Genoa, and 792 for Antwerp.

THE STEAMSHIP FANNY.—The steamship Fanny, which formerly plied between this city and the Brazos, has been sold at Baltimore for $30,000. She is to be sent to San Francisco.

COINAGE AT THE MINTS.—It is estiamted that during the last three months, there has been coined at the U. S. Mint in Philadelphia, $11,101,300; and at the branch Mints, $1,905,586. During the same time we have exported in coin, only $6,754,560.

THE NEW SILVER COINAGE.—The sentement that the new silver coinage, which the bill before Congress provides for, will have more alloy than the silver coins now in use, is incorrect. The fineness of the silver will not be altered, only there will be less silver in the new coinage.

TOMBIGBEE RIVER.—The Mobile Tribune states that a telegraphic dispatch from Aberdeen reports a rise of eight feet in the Tombigbee river. This is a subject of great rejoicing, as the merchants and planters in the vicinity of Aberdeen have but little chance as yet this season to ship their cotton or receive supplies.

A CELESTIAL ACCESSION.—The San Francisco Herald of the 24 ult. has the following: "Among the many Chinese emigrants who arrived a day or two since was Mee Atung. She landed on Pacific wharf, where she was graciously received by Miss Atoy. Miss Atung replied to the welcome in a few pertinent and feeling remarks, much to the edification of a large crowd of boatmen, who had gathered around to witness the scene. The two fair ones then formed into a procession and marched up Pacific street, attracting much attention."

An Oswego Druggist advertises four cases of "genuine sea-serpent oil, brought by Captain Seabury, of the whale ship Monongahela. Good for coughs and colds, and only $4 per bottle."

MASONRY IN EUROPE.—We see it stated that, in Saxony a proposition has been made to abolish the order of Free Masons, asking, at the same time, the intercession of the Government with the German Bund for the suppression of that order throughout entire Germany. The House of Prussia is greatly attached to that ancient order, the Prince of Prussia being himself first Master of the German Grand Lodge.

POWER OF IMAGINATION.—A year since, Elijah Barnes, of Pennsylvania, killed a rattlesnake in his field, without injury to himself, and immediately after put on his son's waistcoat, both being of one color. He returned to his house, and on attempting to button his waistcoat, he found to his astonishment that it was much too small. His imagination was now wrought to a high pitch, and he instantly conceived the idea that he had been imperceptibly bitten by the snake, and was thus swollen from its poison. He grew endlessly very ill, and took to his bed. The family, in great alarm and confusion, summoned three physicians, and the usual remedies were prescribed and administered. The patient, however, grew worse every minute, until at length his son came home with his father's waistcoat dangling about him. The mystery was soon unfolded, and the patient, being relieved from his imaginary apprehensions, dismissed his physicians, and was restored to health.

FISHING BUSINESS.—The citizens of Gloucester, Mass., engaged in the fishing business, state in their report that since the passage of the law granting bounty to vessels employed in the Cod Fisheries, different kinds of fishing had grown up, giving employment to more men, and consuming much more salt in the same time, than in the cod fishing alone; that these different kinds of fishing so mingle with each other that it is impossible to keep them separate without a very great sacrifice of earnings. In view of these facts they suggest an alteration of the bounty laws, so as to embrace all kinds of sea or bank fishing; and to require all vessels, excepting those which visit the Grand Bank, to be employed at sea five months, instead of four, as at present. A committee are instructed to forward the facts to Congress. According to the present construction of the laws, and the nature of the business, scarcely a vessel can obtain the allowance; and hence a movement in the matter.

NEWS FROM EUROPE IN FIVE DAYS.—The authorities of Newfoundland have granted to Mr. H. B. Tibbatts and associates, of New York, the exclusive right to construct and use the magnetic telegraph across that island, for the period of thirty years. The grant is designed to facilitate Mr. Tibbatts in his scheme for the establishment of steam and telegraphic communication between New York and Liverpool, or London, in five days. The telegraph is to extend from New York to St. Johns, from whence a line of steamers is to run to Galway, where another line of telegraph is to commence, extending to London. This latter line will, it is said, be completed during the current year. The distance from St. Johns to Galway is 1647 miles, or about five days' sail.

A NEW SIDE-SADDLE.—The New York Courier and Enquirer says: "We have seen a capital article, the invention of Disbrow, at his riding-school, No. 20 Fourth Avenue. It renders horsemanship perfectly safe to the ladies, by the addition of a new support to the outside of your crutch, against which the knee of the rider presses. At the same time that part of the saddle which heretofore rested upon the shoulders is cut out, saving the animal from those painful excoriations so frequently witnessed. This saddle holds the lady firmly in her seat, and she may safely trust herself on a restive horse, gallop, leap fences, and perform other feats which would be attended with some risk to an inexperienced rider occupying the common side-saddle. We are glad to see this invention, and we doubt not that the ladies will hail it with much pleasure.

"A SUM IN ARITHMETIC.—A correspondent of the New York Mirror calls attention to some of the extravagance and fashionable dissipation of that city, and asks this question of bank officers and merchants: "How can a young man, with a salary of $600 to $800 a year, spend $500 in dress—$1000 on a dancing girl—$1000 on entertainments—$1000 on traveling expenses, without coming to a defalcation sooner or later?" It is a problem in practical arithmetic, says the Mirror, which many of our young men would do well to study.

APPOINTMENT.—George B. Dixon, Esq., has been appointed Postmaster of Yazoo City, Miss.

A SQUAW SHOT.—Among the Indians recently captured in Florida was a squaw, who attempted to escape, and was shot by the volunteers. It is thought she will die of her wounds.

EXTRAORDINARY PASSAGE.—The London packet ship Northumberland, Capt. J. M. Lord, arrived at New York on the 31st ult., from Portsmouth, in a passage of fourteen days and three hours.

THE PUBLIC PRINTING.—It is said that the establishment of a Governmental printing office is warmly pressed by some members of the joint committee appointed to consider the subject.

GOLD IN AUSTRALIA.—A late letter from Sydney states that twelve thousand ounces were brought into that place as one week's supply, and that the Port Philip contribution was 20,000 ounces in a fortnight. These totals, however, must be presumed to be beyond the average, since they would show a production at the rate of nearly $5,000,000 per annum.

VISITORS TO WEST POINT ACADEMY.—Hon. Wm L. Goggin, of Virginia; Joseph P. Comegys, of Delaware; Col. Hammond, of South Carolina; Gen. L. C. Polk, of Tennessee; Rev. C. Miller, of Indiana; N. Wolf, of Kentucky; Gen. Hunt, of Texas; H. S. Dexter, of California; and Hon. Joel Eastman, of New Hampshire, are among the visitors to the Military Academy at West Point for 1852.

COURT MARTIAL AT WASHINGTON.—A court martial convened on the 1st inst., in one of the rooms of the War Department building, Col. Crane presiding, the object of which is to investigate certain charges preferred against Lieut. F. J. Thomas, of the 3d Artillery, for extraordinary expenditures made on the route from the city of Santa Fe to Washington last winter, and for certain alleged unnecessary purchases whilst commissary at Santa Fe.

G. HAND THOMPSON.—This notorious swindler, who is an escaped convict from the Kentucky Penitentiary, passed through Pittsburgh on the 29th ult., in charge of an officer, on his way back to his old quarters.

LIBERAL BEQUESTS.—Hans Wilson, one of the oldest residents of Steubenville, Ohio, died recently, leaving bequests to religious and charitable institutions to the amount of $125,000.

THE HUNGARIAN LOAN.—The Morning Register of Monday says:

"A considerable number of bills of this issue were purchased here on Saturday and Sunday. It was stated that our German fellow-citizens had bought up two thousand dollars' worth, and many of our quiet, unpretending men quietly laid small sums at par, which will be added to the Kossuth fund."

ARREST OF DAVID T. HINES.—This notorious scoundrel, who was pardoned out of the Penitentiary by Governor Walker a short time since, was arrested in Charleston on the 2d instant. From a paper of that city, we take the following account of him. It appears he has figured before in the Charleston courts:

"Some twelve years since, having been convicted in Louisiana of forgery, he was sentenced to fourteen years' imprisonment in the Penitentiary at Baton Rouge, where he remained until very recently, when the executive of that State, in consequence of his good behavior while in prison, remitted the unexpired term of his sentence, which was about two years. Upon being discharged, New Orleans had the honor of his distinguished company, where his gentle invention and great adroitness soon placed him in possession of funds sufficient to make a display. How many, and whom, he may have swindled in acquiring these means, we know not, as doubtless in many cases the victims, rather than acknowledge their verdancy, were content to put up with their loss. Not so, however, in the instance of Mr. Word, a Texan gentleman, who at the time of Hines's career was sojourning at the Veranda Hotel in that city, and upon whom Hines called, representing himself to be Col. A. Floyd, a brother of Governor Floyd, of Virginia, and having formed an acquaintance with him, succeeded, at different times, in obtaining some eight hundred dollars from him by means of deeds, bonds, etc., which have since been ascertained to be adroit forgeries. Mr. Word having discovered that he had been done, and that Hines was sans cil, determined at any cost to bring the swindler to justice, and started in pursuit. After tracing him to various places in the West, he got fairly on his trail at New York, in which city the redoubtable Col. J. P. Floyd had become quite a lion with the Upper Ten. Dining with, and, in turn, entertaining John Van Buren, Henry Weston, and others. But by some strange fatality Mr. Word missed his man, and again had to keep on the move. He, however, struck upon the right trail, and pursued Hines through Richmond, where full proofs of his rascality were developed, to this city, at which he arrived yesterday week, unconscious of being pursued. He took lodgings at first at one of our large fashionable hotels, but subsequently removed to a private boarding-house in Queen street. He seems, from the moment of his arrival, to have been busily engaged in his profession of obtaining money under false pretences, and we learn that on one occasion he called on a gentleman, representing himself to be a Louisiana planter, and stating that having lost his pocket-book he required a loan of $2000, for which he offered a collateral security in bonds and mortgages on property in Virginia.

The gentleman applied to, however, politely declined having any thing to do with the matter, and Hines had to depart and cogitate on whom else he might endeavor to devour, but unfortunately his cogitations were rather abruptly interrupted yesterday morning by his meeting at last with his indefatigable pursuer, Mr. Word, in King street. He tried to escape, but after running some considerable distance he was overtaken, and although he made a most determined resistance, was captured by Lieut. Symes and taken to the Upper Guard House, his much having been accomplished, a bail-writ was lodged with the Sheriff of this district at the suit of Word, who in company with George Duesenberry, who had been created a special deputy for the occasion, proceeded to the Upper Guard-House, took him into custody on the writ and said, and conveyed him to jail, where he was recognized by the jailor as the same individual, who had called on him a few days previously, and represented himself as Inspector of Jails, stating that he had received that appointment from the President of the United States. Duesenberry, at the request of Hines, then proceeded to his boarding-house in Queen street, with an order from him, signed Johnson, for the delivery of his baggage, and the money to pay for six days' board.

Mr. Word now naturally concluded that his victimizer was hors du combat, and that it was now out of his power to work further mischief—for the present, at all events; but he was oil-taken, as strange to say, he himself was again made the victim of this arrant deceiver's machinations. Hines having, with the most unparalleled audacity, had a warrant issued for Mr. Word's arrest, upon his affidavit charging that gentleman with having committed an assault with intent to kill, and Mr. Word being a stranger here, knew not, at the instant, where to procure bail, and consequently the pursuer and pursued occupy the same prison. The initiatory steps, however, we believe, were taken last night to effect his release, and we understand that in all probability he will be discharged on bail in the course of this morning.

COAL IN NORTH CAROLINA.—Professor Emmons, State Geologist of North Carolina, in a letter to the Governor, expresses the fullest confidence that there is almost an inexhaustible source of coal in that State. The preliminary examination at several points establish the fact that the stratum is seven feet thick, and the quality excellent.

RIOTS ON THE PACIFIC RAILROAD.—The laborers on the Pacific railroad, near St. Louis, have lately been concerned in a series of riots. Some of the overseers have been whipped; one or two of the contractors threatened with violence; the citizens and property along the line deprecated upon, and, worse than all, several persons have been found murdered on the road.

TELEGRAPHIC ITEMS.

NewYork Markets.

NEW YORK, Saturday, April 3.

There has been a fair demand to-day in the cotton market, and the sales embrace 3,000 bales at steady prices. Middling is quoted at 8¾c. Flour has been in good request at $4 43¾@$4 56 ℔ bbl. for State, and $4 62½@$4 91 for Ohio brands. Corn has sold at 63c ℔ bushel for prime white and 66c for prime yellow. Pork steady, with sales of mess at $17, and prime at $10 ℔ bbl.

Steamers' Movements.

NEW YORK, April 3.

The Chagres steamer, Prometheus has arrived here with $300,000 worth of gold dust. She brings no later news from California than that taken by the Georgia to New Orleans.

The Collins steamer Pacific sailed to-day for Liverpool with $2,000 in specie.

Steamboat Explosion—Loss of Life.

MEMPHIS, April 3.

The steamboat Red Stone blew up this afternoon, while backing out from Scott's landing, a short distance above Carrollton. The explosion completely shattered the boat and she immediately sunk in 21 feet of water. A large number of the passengers lost their lives, and of the officers and crew the Captain and Clerk only are saved. The former being very severely. And perhaps fatally injured. Eight ladies of the victims have as far been recovered. The exact number that have lost their lives is not yet ascertained.

Destructive Fire in Chillicothe.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, April 3.

A terrible conflagration occurred here last evening, and a large portion of the town is in ruins. The fire broke out in the Adam's block, which was entirely destroyed, including the Clinton House, and the extensive warehouses and other buildings east of High and north of Second streets. The flames next communicated to the Ross block and swept through the row of stores to canal street, destroying the Madeira House, and most of the business houses on the north side. Every house east of Walnut street to Mulberry street was destroyed, and a number as far east as Bridge street. The merchants had generally just received their large stocks of Spring goods, and their losses are immense, many being ruined.

The Post-office building and most of its contents were destroyed; but the books have been saved. The printing office of the Advertiser newspaper was saved. All the telegraph offices have been burned.

Steamboat Explosion.

ST LOUIS, April 5.

The steamboat Glencoe, while landing at the wharf here, on her arrival from Newtchezes, blew up with a tremendous explosion, bursting all her boilers, killing a great number of people of her own passengers and many on board the steamers Cataract, Georgia, and Western World, lying near. The Glencoe had on board one hundred and fifty passengers. She took fire immediately after the explosion, and burnt to the water's edge. It is yet impossible to ascertain the number who have lost their lives, but it is supposed to be very great.

Destructive Fire in Paducah.

LOUISVILLE, April 5.

A large fire broke out on Saturday morning at Paducah, originating in the livery Stable of J. G. Coles, and thence communicating to the Hayward House, north, destroying that and several wooden buildings on the south side. The Branch Bank was entirely consumed; there was a large amount of money in the vaults, the fate of which is unknown. The Journal newspaper office was saved, with some damage, and the Democrat office escaped without injury. About forty buildings have been destroyed, and the loss is estimated at $100,000.

Fire in Louisville.

LOUISVILLE, April 5.

The large soap and candle factory of Cornwell & Bros. took fire on Sunday night at midnight, and was consumed with a loss of about $40,000, partially insured. The fire is supposed to have been caused by an incendiary or by lightning.

NEW YORK, April 3.

The fugitive slave Horace, recently arrested here on the claim of his owner, of Baltimore, has been remanded to the custody of his master.

Later from Europe—Arrival of the Africa—Interesting Commercial News—Breadstuffs declining.

NEW YORK, April 7.

The Cunard steamer Africa has arrived here, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 27th March. The following is a brief summary of her news:

Liverpool Markets.

LIVERPOOL, March 27.

The Cotton market has been inactive during the week, and the sales reach barely 37,000 bales, of which speculations have taken 6000, and exporters 3000. The lower grades have declined about ¼d. since the departure of the Canada, while the better qualities maintained a degree of firmness. The quotations, as fixed last evening by the Board, are as follows: Fair Orleans 5¼. Middling Orleans 5. Fair Uplands 5¼. and Middling Uplands 4¾d. ℔ lb. Flour has declined 1s. ℔ bbl., and the quotations now are 19s. 6d. for Western Canal, and 23s. 6d. for Ohio brands. Yellow Corn has also declined: and is quoted at 28s. 6d. for Yellow, and 31c. ℔ quarter for White. Lard is rather lower, and is quoted at 49s. ℔ cwt. Trade in the manufacturing districts has been dull, and prices slightly declined. The stock of American cotton now on hand, is 159,000 bales.

England.

The political news from England is unimportant. The arrival of Col. Fremont had excited considerable interest. The Africa had arrived on Monday.

France—Signs of the Empire.

Previous to refusing a seat in the Assembly, General Cavaignac expressed a wish to consult Gen. Changier and Redsean, in Belgium, and he accordingly applied for his passports to visit them. He was informed that he could have them but that he would find the frontiers closed against him on his return.

On the return of the President to the Elysee, after the review in the Grand Square, he was saluted with cries of Vive L'Empereur. The relations between France and Switzerland are still in an unsettled state.

St. Louis Elections.

ST. LOUIS, April 6.

The elections yesterday indicate the success of the whig ticket, with probably three exceptions. The Mayor is re-elected.

A disgraceful riot has marked the election, during which one person has been killed and a number wounded. The military has been ordered out, but the city is now quiet.

Congress.

WASHINGTON, April 5.

In the Senate yesterday, the California Apportionment bill came up, and, after considerable debate, was agreed to. A bill was reported with instructions to the Secretary of the Interior to apportion the representation of that State according to the census of 1850, which was debated without action.

In the House, the resolutions approving of the Compromise, regarding it as a final adjustment of the questions it embraces, and deprecating further agitation, came up, and, after a stormy debate, passed by a vote of 101 to 64.

In the Senate to-day, a petition was presented from Henry O'Reilly, proposing to establish a mail and telegraphic communication between the Mississippi river and the Pacific.

Clark's non-intervention resolutions were debated and postponed.

In the House, a motion to reconsider the vote on the Navy Discipline bill was debated, after which the Homestead bill was taken up and debated up to the hour of adjournment.

Turkey.

A dispatch, dated the 14th March, states that 1700 Turkish troops entered a small town on the frontier, seized and imprisoned a large number of the Greek and Catholic inhabitants, and committed other outrages.

NEW YORK, Thursday evening, April 6.

The Cotton market has been rather quiet, and the sales are limited to 2300 bales, but prices are firm at previous quotations. Corn is steady, with sales of 8000 bushels at 66a 67c. per bushel for prime white. Mess Pork steady at $17 per barrel, and Prime at $10.

Missouri Democratic Convention.

ST. LOUIS, April 6.

The Democratic Convention has nominated Sterling Price for Governor, and D. W. Brown for Lieut. Governor. The other officers are divided between the Benton-ites and Anti-Benton-ites.

Rhode Island Elections.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., April 8.

The State Election has resulted in the election of Allen, democrat, for Governor, by a majority of 3000 votes. The whigs have a majority of two in the Senate and of eight in the House of Representatives.

Ohio River.

PITTSBURGH, April 8, Evening.

The river here is falling, with 10 feet water in the channel.

LOUISVILLE, April 8, Evening.

The river is still rising slowly at this place. The wharf is inundated, and the water now backs only 10 feet of being as high as it was at the great flood in 1847.

Shipwreck and Terrible Loss of Life.

BOSTON, Friday, April 9.

A large vessel has been driven ashore on Peaked Hill Bar, and lost with all on board. Her name is not yet ascertained. She went ashore during a heavy gale, and when no boat could live in the surf.

Congressional Proceedings.

WASHINGTON, April 9.

The Senate to-day concurred in the amendment of the House of Representatives appropriating $40,000 additional to complete the extension of the Capitol.

Cuban Apprehension.

NEW YORK, April 9.

Later accounts from Cuba state that there is much alarm felt on the Island, caused by a report that another expedition is fitting out in the United States for its invasion. The ships of war are sent out to cruise along the coast.

South America.

We take the following from the Valparaiso correspondence of the New York Commercial Advertiser. It is dated February 25:

This month has brought shocking intelligence from the Straits of Magellan.

First, from the Chilian colony planted at Fort Rubies. This is used for penal purposes, and, including the garrison with the prisoners, the last accounts gave the entire population of 688 persons. Near the close of December a mutiny occurred there, headed by a lieutenant. The Governor, a superior man, named Munoz Gamero, escaped with his life, in company with the priest and a few more, to the other side of the Straits. There they wandered about for many days, living on shell-fish and suffering every horrible. At length they were compelled by want to return to the colony. Instead of being treated with compassion they met the most merciless cruelty. A fire was kindled to burn the Governor alive. He begged to be spared such a horrible death, asking that he might be shot instead. This request was granted, but after shooting him they burned his remains, dancing and singing the national hymn around the fire.

An American vessel, under charter from this place, sent by the Government—the bark Florida—arrived while the Governor was wondering in such distress. Immediately she was seized. The owner, Mr. Shaw, of New Orleans, who was on board, was shot, without any provocation, and the captain was spared only that he might navigate the vessel. Also, a British vessel, the Elias Cornish, anchored the next day, was seized, and plundered of her cargo and nearly a hundred thousand dollars in treasure, she too, was seized, and pillaged, and the captain, named Talbot, the mate and the owner's son, were shot, having first been put in irons. After the directors returned and had been murdered, these miserable set fell. Some of their own company, however, soon rose against the leaders, bound them, and directed their course for a Chilian port.

When the news reached this place the British Admiral dispatched a war steamer, the Virago, Captain Hayes, and the frigate Theiis, Cantain Kuper, in search of the murderers. They are now all in the hands of the British or Chilian authorities.

The course they have pursued shocks every sentiment of humanity. Those after they had burned the body of the first officer, they killed, a cut and roasted it over the embers, and ate the flesh!

They have put to death quite a number of persons so far as I can learn, between twelve and twenty have fallen victims to their criminal schemes. One of these vessels shaped her course for Montevideo; but an overruling Providence frustrated whatever career of wickedness they designed.

The Raritan frigate is at Talcahuano. She came from Callao, at once on receiving intelligence of what had occurred. What her orders may be will be I am not now aware; but suppose we shall soon hear of them. The steam propeller Massachusetts is expected to come soon from California. Lieut. Parker, U. S. Navy, having been ordered thither to command her.

The other item of intelligence from the Straits is in reference to some English missionaries sent out under the auspices of the Patagonian Missionary Society. Their director was named Capt. Gardiner, R. N. He had with him two catechists, a carpenter and three Cornish fishermen. Their plan was to reach the natives of the shores and islands of the Straits, with the humanizing influences of the Gospel. At landing, in the close of 1850, the savages were inhospitable, and they felt compelled to live in two launches, which they brought with them, that were decked over. However, the scurvy broke out among them. By April, they were reduced to great want for food, so that they left Picton Island for Spanish harbor, where they all perished from starvation. A short time ago a British corvette, the Rhio, called at the Falkland Islands, and finding there thirty-six barrels of stores, sent for these missionaries, the captain sailed in search of them. It was his painful task to find only signals of the hard sufferings they had borne. Fragments of papers and two dead bodies, told the melancholy finale. The last notes of Capt Gardiner are of the 4th and 6th of September last. He had been then four days without food. He was sustained by the most delightful Christian hopes and consolations through it all, speaking over of the slightest relief as a deep and unmerited favor at the hands of God. A noble monument to their memory would be well sustained mission to those same neglected shores, which I hope may be formed. If their death shall thus call attention and efforts thitherward, I think they will not have led their lives in vain. Some will think that these men needly threw their lives away; but if compared with the hundreds that crowd to death on the battle-field, the advantages will certainly be with these soldiers of Christ, whose noble aim was not to destroy men's lives, but to save them.

The political condition of this country is tranquil. The President of the Republic is expected to visit the city soon, by invitation from the citizens. The hope is entertained that upon that occasion progress may be made in regard to a railroad between this city and Santiago. The President is decidedly favorable to the project, and the great question now is, about raising the funds. The report of Mr. Allan Campbell, the engineer, of Albany, N. Y., has been given in, and printed in English. It is a fair document. It makes out that the scheme is practicable by means of a road 110 miles in length, and with an outlay of $7,100,000. If it can be effected, it will be an improvement of incalculable value for the country.

The line of steamers now running on this coast from Valparaiso to Panama has been strengthened lately by the acquisition of two new boats, called the Lima and Santiago. Two more are looked for shortly, the Quito and the Bogota. In the month of April, these steamers are to commence semi-monthly voyages to Panama, bringing passengers and mails. Consequently, the days of departure will be changed. Instead of leaving Panama on the 23d of each month, they will, in April, leave on the 15th and 30th, at 6 A. M.

RAILROAD ACCIDENTS.—A writer in the New York Times thinks spoke of railroad conductors and railroad accidents; This late accident on the Harlem road is acknowledged to be the sole fault of a conductor, who did not know what trains were on the road, and acknowledged that a passenger put him right. "I will pledge myself to point out, on one road, forty conductors who are not fit to drive a two-horse team on a country road; and the reason why they are incompetent, is because the payis insufficient to induce good men to seek the situations. It is a fact that men who have daily charge of three or four hundred lives, and forty to fifty thousand dollars' worth of property, receive from forty to fifty dollars per month—most of them married men, and living at more than ordinary expenses, being so much from home. It is enough to merely mention this FACT, to account for the railroad accidents almost entirely.

In England, guards and enginemen have to give security to certain amounts to the Company, and a license from the Government, before getting an appointment; and it seems to me that the proper plan for our companies to adopt is to increase their salaries for conductors up to $1,000 or $1,200 per annum, getting bonds guaranteeing the company against any loss that may be sustained in consequence of the neglect, carelessness or dishonesty of the conductor; then ten times the extra amount of calamities which is now lost in collisions, etc., would be saved. An honest and deserving class of men would be anxious for the service, and life and limb would be comparatively safe; for none should be allowed to run except under a Government license, and all licenses should be revoked by a careless accident. This is but one branch of the subject of railroad mismanagement; if agreeable to you, you will hear from me again on this topic.

FROM THE RIO GRANDE.—We yesterday received through the mail, a copy of the Rio Bravo, which should have reached us the day previous. It does not contain any thing of much importance, but we clip a few items:

Mr. W. T. Cake, who was taken prisoner the day after the battle of San Juan, has been released, by order of Canales. Hence, some of the boys say he has turned liberator. We believe the truth is that private reasons, as well as public policy, dictated this measure. Perhaps it is a wise course for Mexican general officers not to court reprisals and retaliations. None of these gentlemen know how soon they may need the same protection themselves. Canales is aware of this. He has lived in a glass house for some time, and he is manifesting a disposition to fix things so that no one will throw stones at it.

In noticing the departure of Wheat and others for New Orleans, the Rio Bravo says: We are happy to announce that Avalos slept well the night after the filibusters left for New Orleans, and has continued to rest well since. We do not know that their absence has caused this result—rather think it has nothing to do with it.

The Rio Bravo also has the following: When Col. Cruz inspected Wheat's old 12, he said he would not fire it off for all Mexico. All Mexico, however, knows, by this time, what Col. Cruz's opinions are worth.

We understand that Gen Canales has laid in his claim to the gun by right of conquest. This claim is resisted by the Alcalde of Camargo, who sets up the right of discovery.

IMPORTANT DECISION.—A decision of considerable importance to steamboat managers and passengers was recently rendered by the Court of Over and Terminer, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. A gentleman by the name of Whitfield, belonging to Poughkeepsie, took passage at New York on the steamboat Oregon, buying a through ticket for Albany, as, owing to the competition a through ticket could be bought for a less price than a way ticket. When the boat reached Poughkeepsie, Whitfield offered his through ticket and attempted to go ashore, but the officers of the boat forcibly resisted him against his will to Albany. Whitfield brought a suit against the owners and officers of the boat for assault and false imprisonment, contending that a through ticket entitled the holder to land wherever he pleased on the way. The Court sustained this position; ruling that a through ticket entitled a passenger to land at any place where the boat stopped; and that, in fact, all the passengers had a right to walk ashore at any place; that a passenger not paying his passage when demanded, was not liable to be put on shore immediately; but if the steamboat cease to Poughkeepsie or any other dock, a passenger who had paid his passage had a right to go on shore without any detention from the owners or employers of the boat; and that in fact the owners must collect the passage money before starting; and if not collected at that time, it was a debt, and to be collected, as other debts; and that it was false imprisonment to detain

A PROPHECY.

The skies have wept and smiled,
And the earth is waiting mild;
And the little seeds grow wild,
Lying quick beneath the heather;
Each their God is in the skies;
To his buried world he cries,
Awake! Arise!
'Tis the sweet Spring weather.

On the sun-entreated hill,
By the water-witching rill,
They are riding, strong and still—
Blooded hosts of grass and heather,
There are creatures about;
Marsh winds have found them out,
With a merry mocking shout,
For the shy Spring weather.

In the spirit's longing mood,
Making brokenness every weed,
In the violet land they feed,
Stepping hushful up together:
In the sun's more generous shine,
In the air as rare as wine,
There are prophecies divine
Of the sweet Spring weather.

ARRIVAL OF THE GEORGIA.

FIFTEEN DAYS

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

The steamship Georgia, Capt. D. D. Porter, arrived on Sunday from New York via Havana, bringing the California mail with dates from San Francisco to the 2d ult.

We give the following under the head of general news, from the San Francisco Picayune, in addition to which we append a variety of items which we find in our other exchanges:

The conflagration in Brownsville is one of the most important events that has occurred in California during the last fortnight. This sad occurrence took place on the 21st ult., about half-past 11 p. m., in the Magnolia, or the bakery shop of Messrs. Montagne & Co. It spread with unparalleled velocity in all directions, leaving every part of the town in complete ruins, but the suburbs, in which the fire was located most of the warehouses.

There is a list of the principal sufferers:

[illegible], $3000; Gardner & James, 4000; [illegible] & Co., 2000; Hall & Co., 2000; Barker & Co., 2000; Hansbrough, 3000; Myers, 2000; Miller, 3500; Craycroft, 30,000; J. Gardner, Dr. [illegible]y, 1000; McGinnity, 1500; E. W. Hackett, 5000; Chapman & Co., 3000; Tobin & Co., 1500; D. J. Wood, 10,000; Barker & Co., 7000; O. Farrel & Co., 3000; Walton, Hall & McKenzie, 4000; McNulty & Co., [illegible]; [illegible] & Co., 1000; Rice & Co., 7000; Delmas & Co., 11,000; [illegible] & Co., 800; Chase & Co., 5000; Newman, [illegible], 4000; Dupont & McKenzie, 6000; Prnin & Co., [illegible] & Co., 3000; Hall & Co., 2000; Barker & Co., 2000; [illegible] Howard, 3000; D. Hunter, 2000; McDonnel, 1000; French Lester, 2000; Rosenheim, 1500.

There is very little Legislative intelligence to record since our last summary was dispatched to the Atlantic States—the members of both branches of the Legislature, with the principal politicians in the State, being engaged at the Whig and Democratic State Conventions, both of which have just been held at Sacramento.

The Convention met on the 20th ult., and after a stormy session of three days, elected the following gentlemen to the National Whig Convention: W. E. Stuart, J. O. Goodwin, J. H. Clay Mudd, and R. W. Heath. The following gentlemen were elected substitutes: Messrs. Whittier, Morgan, Lisle and Davis.

The following gentlemen constitute the Whig State Central Committee: Dr. Morse, of Sacramento; E. J. C. Kewen, of do.; Todd Robinson, of do.; J. N. Hoag, Esq., of Yuba; Gen. J. Wilson, San Francisco; H. A. Crabb, of San Joaquin; J. H. Johnson, Sacramento; Thos. Robinson, Placerville; E. H. Taylor, Yuba.

The Democratic State Convention met on the 23d ult., and after a disorderly session of four days, elected the following gentlemen as their delegates to the Baltimore Convention: Richardson, Covarrubias, Holden, of Tuolumne; Judge Lyons, San Francisco.

There is a list of substitutes or alternates [illegible] Democratic Convention: E. D. Hammond, of [illegible], T. Baird, of Nevada; M. M. Ward, of [illegible], Doring, of Solano.

Conventions instructed their delegates as to their votes for President and Vice-President.

The attempt to call a Convention to revise the Constitution, is still being prosecuted with energy. A bill for that purpose has been introduced into the House of Assembly, but no definite action has yet been taken upon it. It is generally supposed that the principal alteration desired by the proposed Convention is in the provision of the Constitution which prohibits slavery in the State.

Considerable defalcations have lately come to light in the accounts of some of our public officers. The Treasurer of Calaveras county is said to have absconded with $30,000 of the public money; the Treasurer of Tuolumne, with [illegible] very large sum; and the Treasurer of Sacramento is accused of a similar offence. The securities of some, if not [illegible] of these men are represented to be men of straw. These acts of dishonesty, however, cause little astonishment to those acquainted with the tenements in the public offices in California—consisting, as they do, to a large extent, of the unskreened and unprincipled politicians from all States in the Union.

The report of Bartlett, of the Boundary Commission, who came overland by way of the Gila, Colorado and the Mission, from Utah, lately arrived in San Diego, having lost nearly all their animals by death. They found water on the margin of the Desert by digging. Mr. Bartlett, with some other members of the Commission, is now, we believe, in San Francisco.

The yield of gold from the mines is somewhat diminished owing to the scarcity of water. Very little rain has fallen during the last fortnight.

Crime has been rather on the increase of late, particularly in the cities. Burglaries and robberies have been of frequent occurrence in San Francisco. They have not been attended, however, by violence.

The [illegible] continues beautiful, and the spring crops are sprouting up luxuriantly.

We have dates from Oregon to the 21st ult.

We have dates from China to the 8th of December. The Game Cock made the run from San Francisco in thirty-four days—the quickest trip ever made—and the Flying Cloud in thirty-five days. The Game Cock brought European intelligence of a more recent date than had been received there by the Overland Express from England. The rebellion in China still continues. The accounts are not very full or satisfactory, owing to the difficulty of obtaining reliable information. It would appear, however, that the rebels are very formidable. The Friend of China says:

On the 25th Oct., four vessels that left Canton four days previously, with provisions and money for the imperial troops stationed on the borders of Kyang-si, just as they reached the Wang-chow-ou river, in the department Keiling, were captured by the rebels, who killed several of the crew, and wounded the commander. After taking possession of the specie, viz: 200,000 strings of copper cash, and 100,000 taels Spoon Silver, the vessels were set on fire and left to the water's edge. The Governor has determined that the sum lost shall be made up by the people of the district where the plunder was effected.

One of our Chinese correspondents tells of a successful attack made by a body of 5000 rebels on the chief city of the Wing-an department, in the province of Kwangsee. Two or three hundred of the insurgents, dressed respectably and purporting to be traders, had entered the city at various times, and were ready to co-operate with the main body when they made the assault, which occurred on the 23d ult. The imperial troops, stationed in great numbers in this city, suffered severe loss. The following casualties are reported: Killed—the Governor, one General of Division, two Colonels, one Major, eight Captains, a Graduate, and nearly three thousand soldiers. The whole contents of the government treasury fell into the hands of the rebels, who allowed the prisoners in the jails a general delivery. The whole of the rich families in the neighborhood were also laid under a smart contribution.

The residents at Ningpo are experiencing a more than usual unhealthy autumn, which has occasioned a great deal of sickness among the Chinese. The principal epidemic has been Cholera, which is yet very prevalent. Notwithstanding the bad weather, the first crop of rice was a very good one, and the second crop, which by this time has been harvested, promised also to be abundant. Rice is in consequence very cheap; 1000 to 1100 cash per picul, which is cheaper than it has been known for many years.

We have dates from Van Diemen's Land to the 29th Oct., but no intelligence of interest.

Shocking Case.—The Calaveras Chronicle gives an account of the arrest of an old Mexican on the charge of poisoning all [illegible] gold;

"The amalgam consists of spelter, a small quantity of silver and quicksilver which being rolled among gold filings and pressed by means of a cloth, is then allowed to harden. It is next placed in a retort, where the quicksilver is dissipated, and it is then brought forth, apparently a beautiful specimen of pure gold. In his possession was found a piece of amalgam weighing nine ounces."

Vigilance Committee.—The many robberies and murders which have been committed at Campo Seco and vicinity, have induced the citizens of that town to form themselves into a mutual protection association.

Execution by Indians.—On Saturday, the 15th instant says the Marysville Herald: A meeting of miners was held at Barker's Ranch, on the Onion Valley road, to take into consideration the state of affairs in that vicinity. The various murders recently perpetrated by the Indians in the [illegible] of country were detailed to the meeting [illegible] it was determined to proceed at once [illegible] rendezvous of the tribe, and secure, if possible, the [illegible].

A company of one hundred men was immediately formed [illegible] Bonnel being called to the command. [illegible] Shrimpin, the Indians manifested a hostile [illegible] but upon being assured that the object of [illegible] only to punish those who had been guilty [illegible] the chiefs ceased the arms to be laid aside [illegible]

Mining Intelligence.

A New Discovery.—The Calaveras Chronicle says: A party of three men have been at work for a short time past, at Vallecita, near Murphy's, and on Saturday last they struck the bed rock, at the depth of about 60 feet from the surface. On the forenoon of that day they washed out twenty-one ounces. A report of their success having got abroad, the miners from the adjacent diggings rushed to the spot, and immediately claims were staked out, extending far away in every direction, and the greatest excitement prevailed in the neighborhood. Being a short distance from the villages, there was but a single tent on the ground, which was immediately dignified as a restaurant, and on Sunday it was thronged all day with customers. When our informant left, there were over 150 waiting their turn for dinner.

Quartz.—The Sacramento Union learns that a valuable discovery of Quartz rock has been made near that place, on Weber creek.

Murphy's.—Within a short time past new diggings were opened on the south-east side of Kenton Hill, or Mount Pleasant, which promise to pay remarkably well.

Frenchman's Corral.—New and rich diggings have been recently discovered at Frenchman's Corral, above Marysville. The Herald states that the new diggings cover a flat about twelve miles long, and half a mile wide, and that the dirt has uniformly paid from $20 to $100 per man.

Carson Caper.—A few days ago a specimen of quartz was picked up in one of the ravines leading from the celebrated quartz mountain, weighing thirty-nine ounces. The lucky hombre refused $300 for it.

A company has been formed at Placerville, called the El Dorado Mining, Manufacturing and Water Company, for the purpose of conveying the waters of the South Fork of the American river into Placerville, Cooh Hollow, Diamond Spring, and other adjacent places.

Shasta Intelligence.—From Oregory's Messenger, direct from Shaste Olly, we learn that a very great excitement exists in regard to Smith's and Rogue river. These rivers pay extraordinary well, while the excitement for claims is much greater than was manifested last year about Scott's river.

From the Sandwich Islands.

The steam propeller Constitution arrived at San Francisco, bringing dates from Honolulu to the 7th February.

We learn from the Polynesian that the Constitution returns because there was not sufficient inducement for her to ply as a coaster among the Islands. The causes assigned in that paper are: the unprecedented stagnation of business generally; the scarcity of money; the want of a market for Polynesian products; the general feeling of depression these causes have produced in the community; and that the Constitution is regarded as too large and expensive a vessel for the present amount of patronage.

The Polynesian says: "A smaller boat, we are informed on good authority, is to be substituted, as soon as it can be procured from California. In about sixty days therefore, we may expect a boat to be employed permanently as a coaster in furtherance of the contract between Capt. Howard and this government.

We also learn from the same authority that the Constitution will continue to run between this city and San Francisco, and should the patronage be sufficient, another steamer will be added to perfect the arrangement. This will be the first step towards the trans-Pacific line, which there is little doubt will be in operation before the expiration of the year 1852."

The first trip of a steamer between two ports of the Islands was made by the Constitution before her departure for San Francisco. She left Honolulu at 5 o'clock, p. m., on the 31st of January, 1852—reached Lahaina on the 1st of February, and returned to Honolulu at 9 a. m. on the 2d.

Reciprocity with the United States.—An effort is being made to obtain from the United States a modification of the treaty entered into between the Hawaiian Government and our own on the 20th December, 1849, so as to admit, for a proper equivalent, the sugar and tobacco of the Islands free of duly into the ports of California coffee being already free. The following is the substance of a letter from Mr. Wyllie, on this subject, to Mr. Stephen Reynolds, President of the Royal Hawaiian Agricultural Society.

Foreign Office, 31st January, 1852.

Sir—In the absence of the Honorable Wm. L. Lee, President of the Royal Hawaiian Agricultural Society, I have the honor to submit to you as Vice President of the same, for Oahu, the documents undermentioned.

I am strongly induced to the opinion, that for a proper equivalent for the produce of California here, the U. S. Government might be induced to admit our sugar, coffee, and tobacco, free of duty in the same ports.

The information sent to me by Mr. Jarvis, on the subject of his interview with the Honorable Mr Clayton and with Mr. Hunter, and the declaration to Mr. King by the present worthy Commissioner of the United States at his reception on the 17th of January, 1851, remove all doubts as to the spirit of liberality with which the Government of the United States will receive all proper suggestions for the amelioration of the subsisting treaty engagements with this kingdom.

The clipper ship Typhoon, Captain Salter, went to sea on the 5th February, bound for Singapore and Calcutta; thence to England and the United States. The Typhoon, the largest merchant ship that was ever seen inside the reef at Honolulu, was visited by a large number of persons before her departure. The marine officers of the Vandalia were engaged in drilling the native troops at the Fort in Honolulu.

The weather throughout the Islands had been very unsettled. The winds were light, and mostly southerly or westerly, with frequent calms—the trade winds being wholly interrupted.

Honolulu Markets.—With the exception of lumber, says the Polynesian, the demand for merchandise continues as dull as at any other time for the past three months. Sales at auction in small quantities, and in many articles, of a strictly retail character, and prices even in this small way, are almost invariably below the invoice cost. Goods are abundant and importations continue—all of which have to be stored, to be worked off as time best may be.

Remarkable Phenomena.—On Wednesday evening last, at 6 o'clock, the sea at Waialua, on this Island, was observed to be rapidly rising, and wave after wave rolled in, each higher than the preceding, until the usual boundary of the highest tide was passed and the ordinary dry land was submerged.

We have no authentic account from any resident at that place; but from what we learn verbally from a native, the tide must have risen some twenty or twenty-five feet above its usual bounds. Five houses were swept away, and fences and other property destroyed to a considerable amount. A small vessel at anchor was completely submerged; her scope of chain not allowing her to rise sufficiently to float clear. For about ten hours the high water continued, and then began to recede.

No premonition was given of this unusual phenomenon; nor has such a thing ever been known before at that place. It was probably the effect of some submarine eruption, in connection with the volcano, and its limited action at Waialua alone, while other parts of the same island are unaffected, is a mystery not easily explained. We remember a similar rise of the sea at this place, one of Maui and one at Hilo, on Hawaii, all occuring several years ago, and each isolated and distinct from each other. This at Waialua appears to be another of the same description, and owing to the same cause which has usually been attributed as above stated, to volcanic action. [Pol.

From Panama.

A New Land of Gold Discovered.—The Panama Star of March 11 makes the following announcement:

Some months since, an exploring party visited the coast of Choco, for the purpose of examining the gold mines in that section of the country; the director of the party unfortunately became sick, and the object was abandoned. This discouraged the parties interested, and the matter has never been taken up since. On Tuesday last, however, the excitement through town was renewed by the report that a large quantity of gold dust had just been landed from Choco. We soon afterwards ascertained that Messrs. Garrison & Frets had purchased it; and we, of course, visited their counting-room to inspect it and give our opinion thereon—half fearing, meanwhile, that the whole thing was a hoax. Great was our surprise, on entering the office, to see about 1500 ounces of the pure article, superior to, and clearer than, any we ever saw in California. It is of that fine scaly description so much admired for its beauty, and so prized for its purity. We inquired whether it was not California gold, but had our doubts at once removed by an invoice thereof being presented to us, from one of the first houses in our city, representing it to be Choco gold. Now, therefore, the matter is settled, and there is no more doubt about the Choco mines and the practicability of working them.

The Province of Choco is situated in the southern part of this Republic, the boundary line of which commences about 150 miles from this place. The town of Buenaventura is one of the principal on the Choco coast. There are several ports accessible for small vessels, and not more than two or three days' sail from Panama under ordinary circumstances; and all kinds of provisions are to be procured in most bountiful abundance along the coast. We speak from experience.

From the Star, of the 11th, 16th, 18th March, we take the following:

Search for Sir John Franklin.—We learn that Capt. M'Clure, Dr Simpson, Mr. Jaco and Purser Hull, gentlemen engaged in the English service, are now in this city, on their way to join the English ship Plover.

This vessel is at present in Behrings Straits, and will be taken charge of by Capt. M'Clure, as soon as he can reach that point. The ship will then proceed on the expedition, in search of Sir John Franklin, and as the above gentlemen are taking with them a large supply of India rubber boats and other articles necessary for the undertaking, we presume it likely that a trip across the Russian possessions is in contemplation.

Navy Bay.—We learn that Mr. George Law has issued instructions for all steamers on the Atlantic side, with which he is connected, to anchor in future in Navy Bay, so that Chagres may now be looked upon as used up. Aspinwall City, to which we alluded in a previous number, will doubtless take the lead; and as it will be an American city, from its foundation upwards, we fancy its success is tolerably certain.

Loss of the Splendid New Steamship North America.—The steamship Oregon brings us the deplorable intelligence of the total loss of the steamship North America, Captain Blethen, which vessel belonged to Mr. Vanderbilt, and was employed on the new line between San Junn and San Francisco.

It appears that on the night of the 28th February, this splendid vessel ran on a sunken reef about seventy miles south of Acapulco. The night was fortunately calm and clear, which enabled all the passengers and crew to get ashore in safety. The vessel was bound from San Juan to San Francisco, and had on board about 800 passengers. These unfortunate people, with the crew, had made their way to Acapulco by land.

Murder of a Priest.—We understand that a few nights since some natives, in a village a short distance from Panama, entered the house of a priest and shot him while he was asleep. The priest died immediately afterwards of his wound.

Fire.—A fire—the first known in Panama since 1838—has consumed some thirty huts. Loss inconsiderable.

From Havana.

We have received our Havana files by the Georgia up to the 31st ult., but they contain very little matter of general interest.

A letter from Yaguny states that a most terrific hail storm occurred in that part of the country on the 9th ult. The crops of all kinds, which before were extremely flourishing, were entirely destroyed, and the fields presented an appearance, to use the words of the writer, "like that of the Sierras de Moncays in Arragon in the month of January." One of the stones was found to weigh six ounces three drachms and five grains. Many others weighed three, four and five ounces, and the generality were an ounce in weight.

Commercial.—El Diario de la Marina, in its review of the sugar market for the week ending March 27, says: The news from the country, arriving daily, show with sufficient certainty that the present crop will be very short even below that of last year, by not less than 300,000 boxes; a fact that, without doubt, will have an important effect upon current rates. The exports of the week ending to-day are, 19,706 boxes, of which were taken for New York 5300 boxes; Santander, 2587; Barcelona, 1501; Malaga, 1371; Cowes, 1327; Seville, 1013; Philadelphia, 1000; Havre, 1201; Falmouth, 1207; and New Orleans ——

The quotations are as follows: cucuruchos, 3@3¼; brown, inferior to good, 4@5¼; superior to fine, 5¼@6¾; white, inferior to fine, 6¾@8¼.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival Tuesday of the steamship Meteor, Capt. Forbes, we have received Galveston papers to the 24 instant, and a portion of our exchanges from the interior. We have not, however, seen any San Antonio papers.

On her last trip, the Meteor made the run from New Orleans to Galveston in twenty-nine hours, the quickest trip ever made.

The Wreck of the Independence.—The Galveston Journal, speaking of this disaster, says: The passengers saved no baggage—every thing was lost. The condition of the deck passengers and emigrants is distressing, being left entirely destitute.

The beach is strown with goods. The wreck is to be sold on the 1st April, as she lays, but is not worth much, as every thing of value has been washed overboard.

Fact.—On the 18th ult., there was some damage done in the Valley of the Guadalupe by frost, but the opinion is expressed that the planters, by some extra labor, will be able to make good crops.

The Farmers.—The freshets in the Colorado river and its tributaries have done an immense amount of damage and it is reported that several persons have been drowned. Several grist mills in the neighborhood of Austin were carried away. At Austin, the Colorado rose thirty-three feet in two days, the 11th and 12th ult.

Drowned.—Captain Thompson, of the steamer Yacht, was capsized in a boat, and lost three of his men, on the bar at Bronos Santiago, a few days since, in attempting to sound the water in the channel.

Fatal Disease.—We learn from the Huntsville Item that a disease resembling the Asiatic Cholera broke out in the vicinity of that place about three weeks ago, and was very fatal in several families. Colonel John Hume lost thirteen of his negroes, and a son about seventeen years old, a most intelligent and promising youth. There were eight corpses on his premises at one time! The afflictions of Col. Hume have been truly heavy and disastrous; for, in addition to the above, the Item says, "his fences have been all blown away, and his fields, where the corn and cotton should be growing, are overrun with stock, and the work of the past two or three months completely destroyed." The disease, we understand, first appeared among a gang of negroes recently arrived in the neighborhood from Georgia, several of whom died. The Item, of the 20th instant, says the disease had then disappeared and that the health of Huntsville was good.

The New Capitol was commenced at Austin on the 9th ult. Gov. Bell, Mr. Shaw, the Comptroller; Mr. Duval, Secretary of State, and other gentlemen, aided in digging a part of the trench for the walls.

Halifax Telegraph Office, March 30, 1852.

The Royal mail steamship Canada, Capt. Long, arrived here this morning at half-past 7 o'clock, with dates from Liverpool to March 20. She brings 63 passengers, $75,000 in specie and a good freight. The Canada sailed again this morning, at a quarter before 9, for Boston.

The Royal mail steamship Cambria arrived at Liverpool at 11 a. m., on the 16th inst., and the Collins steamer Baltic at 9 a. m. on the 19th. Both steamers encountered strong easterly gales on the passage.

ENGLAND.

The proceedings of Parliament were not of any moment. If we except the explanations touching the renewal of the Corn Law, given by the Premier in the House of Lords, and by Mr. D'Israeli in the House of Commons.

On the 16th inst., Lord Derby said that the question at issue between the Free Traders and Protectionists would be decided at the ensuing general election. He repudiated a factious opposition, and declared he had no desire for the law of 1846, or a wish to recur to the law of 1842. He castigated the proceedings of the Anti-Corn Law League—implored their Lordships to apply themselves not to the renewal of Free Trade, but to such modification of the system as would mitigate the blows inflicted on the agricultural portion of the community, and alleviate the injustice from which they suffered. He expressed the opinion that in regard to those who had suffered from the changes made, and being left without a corresponding alteration in the expenditures thrown upon them—the moderate imposition of a duty, producing a large revenue, and thereby enabling other taxation to be taken off, with hardly an appreciable effect on the food of the people, would be a most just, a most economical, and for the country, a most advantageous mode of allowing relief. Lord Derby concluded by declaring his determination not to, flinch from performing his duty. The subject then dropped in the Lords.

On the following evening, Lord Derby promised to appoint a committee to investigate the movements of the Irish National Education Board, with the view of mitigating the opposition of the Irish clergy.

Mr. Napier, the new Irish Attorney-General, has moved for, and obtained a committee to inquire into the Ribbon system in Ireland.

Great uncertainty prevailed as to the period when Parliament would be dissolved, nevertheless, the two great parties—Protectionists and Free Traders—were busy preparing for the electioneering campaign, and all the leading constituencies had been addressed by candidates aspiring to the office of representative.

Mr. Frederick Peel had been visiting the electors of Bury—his opponent is Lord Duncannon.

Sir Thomas Dirch had retired from the representation of Liverpool. Mr. Cardwell would contest the next election of that town.

The Conservatives have got up a requisition to Mr Wm. M. McKenzie, Secretary of the Treasury, and Mr Charles Turner, Chairman of the Liverpool Dock Committee.

Lord Eglington had held his first levee and drawing-room as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; they were most numerously attended, far beyond anything known since the days of Earl Grey's Vice Royalty.

Lord Naas had gone down to canvass the electors of the Cokeraine, vacant by the resignation of Dr Boyd.

The termination of the Cork election had not reached Liverpool when the Canada sailed—it was the general impression that Mr Scully would be returned.

The Parliamentary Committee of the Catholic Defence Association had issued an address to the Electors of Cork, eulogising Mr Scully, and deprecating the consistency or ability of the Protestant candidate, Sir Tremain. From the tactics adopted by the Defence Association, three-fifths of the counties will be completely in the hands of the Priests at the approaching election.

Lord Clonourry had addressed the people of Kildare, regretting that the candidates for its representation had not said a word about itpeal—the one thing needful—and gone by ballot.

FRANCE.

M. Carnot, opposition candidate, had been elected for the Fourth Conscription of Paris.

A Presidential decree had been issued authorizing the Minister of Finance to reimburse rents of 6 per cents, at the rate of 100 francs, or to effect their conversion into new rents of four and a half per cents.

The government proposes to place an the retired list a considerable number of officers of various ranks, on the same principle that has been applied in the suppression of a number of the judges.

The Bishop of Orleans had declined to accept the post of Supreme Counsel of Public Instruction, to which he was appointed.

SPAIN.

General Cabrado, who supersedes De Concha as Governor of Cuba, was to sail from Cadiz on the 20th of March. The cause of Concha's dismissal was not made known. Extensive dismissals and reorganizations were taking place, both in the civil and military services.

PORTUGAL.

The Portuguese Cabinet has been completed by the acquisition of Viscount Delmurda Garrete and M. Labra. A Ministry so favorably endowed with talent and oratorical powers had not existed at Lisbon for many years. The Reform of the Charter was likely to be carried.

HOLLAND.

The Second Chamber had rejected one of the most important clauses in the bill for establishing an income tax. The Ministry, therefore, withdrew the measure.

AUSTRIA.

Lord Derby's accession to power in England had given great satisfaction at the Court of Vienna. The Government had resolved to abstain from the reprisals upon English travelers previously threatened, in consequence of the countenance given in England to the continental refugees.

INDIA AND CHINA.

The Overland Mail had arrived in London. It brings but little additional news respecting the Birmese war. The Governor-General is anxious to avoid further hostilities.

The war continued in the south of China.

A large piratical fleet had arrived off Ningpo. British vessels were on the spot to render such assistance as might be necessary.

AUSTRALIA.

Sydney advices to the 18th December had been received in Liverpool. Provisions there were exceedingly dear, though not scarce. The place was comparatively deserted, a great many of the people having gone to the diggings, where gold is still found in great abundance. Women get ten shillings a day for discharging vessels.

March 21, the Canada exchanged signals with the steamship Africa hence for Liverpool.

The Late Sir John Harvey.—We have already announced the death of Sir John Harvey, Lieut. Governor of Nova Scotia. We find in the New York Herald the following notice of him:

Sir John Harvey entered the military service upwards of half a century ago, and was with the British army which marched overland from India and joined the forces in Egypt, where he subsequently served during the campaign which terminated in the expulsion of the French from that country, and had charge of the French savans, whom he accompanied to the pyramids.

During the last war between this country and England, he served in Canada as Lieut. Adjutant General, where he was opposed to General Scott, then, like himself, holding a subordinate rank in the army; and so conspicuous was he for his gallant bearing, that the latter directed his men not to fire at such an enemy; owing to which he probably escaped unscathed. After the close of the war, he returned to England, and was appointed to preside over the police force in Ireland, where he conducted himself in such a manner as to gain the affections and win the esteem of the people of that distracted and unhappy country.

About seventeen years since he was appointed Lieut. Governor of Prince Edward Island, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, at which time he held the rank of Colonel. In 1837 he was promoted to the Government of New Brunswick, when he obtained the rank of Major General, and was the first of the Colonial Governors who was called upon to carry out the enlightened policy of the British Ministry with reference to what is termed "responsible government"—a task of much delicacy, but one well suited to his liberal turn of mind.

During his government of that province, the excitement took place in Maine, with reference to the northeastern boundary; and it is owing to the judicious and conciliatory course pursued by the subject of this obituary notice and General Scott, that their respective governments are indebted for the preservation of peace, at a time when the slightest act of hostility or indiscretion would have precipitated a war. An arrangement was entered into by those gallant men, by which the troops and militia were to be withdrawn from the disputed territory, as it was termed, until an arrangement should be entered into between the general government of the United States and that of Great Britain, an indirect infringement of which led to the recall of Sir John, the particulars attending which will probably now, for the first time, be made known to the American public.

Owing to an inroad from Maine, unauthorised by the authorities there, Lord Sydenham, the Governor-general of Canada, sent a regiment to Madawaska, in the disputed territory," and Sir John, actuated by the high and chivalrous feeling that belongs to his profession, lost no time in explaining, by letter to the Governor of Maine, that the act was that of his superior in command, for which he could not be considered responsible. This step the Governor General considered as disrespectful to himself and the consequence was a representation to the government in England, that produced his immediate recall.

The explanations of Sir John, on his arrival in England, satisfied the British ministry that the procedure by which he was removed from his government was not only precipitate but unjust, and he was immediately appointed Governor of Newfoundland, being the first military officer who had ever filled that station there—the government of the Island having been previously held by a commander in the navy.

A Resurrection.—In 1800, the 31st regiment was serving in Holland, and at Egmont-op-Zee crossed bayonets with the French regiment bearing the same number. A ball fired during the retreat of the latter regiment passed through the jaws of a soldier of the 31st, named Robert Hullock. In the course of the afternoon he was buried in the sand hill where he had fallen, by a soldier of his regiment, named Garnes. During the night Hullock recovered, and having been lightly covered with sand crept out and crawled to a picket of his regiment posted near. He was sent to the hospital, recovered, and was serving with his regiment in Malta in 1806. His face having been much discolored, and his voice scarcely intelligible, (a part of his tongue and palate having been carried away,) he had for some years served as pioneer to his company. A soldier of it died, and Hullock, as part of his duty, dug the grave, in which he was found, on the arrival of the body for interment, still at work, though then near ten feet deep. On being drawn out and asked his reason for making it so unusually deep, he replied—"Well, sir, it is for poor John Barnes, who buried me; and I think, sir, if I get him that deep, it will puzzle him to creep out as I did." On the burial service being read, he proceeded to fill up the grave, and actually buried the man who ten years previously had buried him. Hullock was discharged and pensioned in 1814. Value of an Acre of Coal Land.—The Pottsville (Pa.) Mining Register, alluding to the cheapness of land in Coal quarter a few years ago, says now an acre of coal land is worth $18,000.

Many set down a higher figure. In the South Basin, (that is, from the Sharp Mountain to the Mine Hill,) where we have all the veins viz: thirteen, including red and white ash, the whole thickness of the coal is ninety feet. Allowing one-half of this for fault and waste in mining, we have 45 feet, or 15 yards in thickness, of merchantable coal. There being 48,000 square yards to the acre, we have, by multiplying the number by the thickness, 72,000 square yards or tons of coal per acre, which at a rent of 25 cents per ton, brings $18,000. This is a fair estimate of the real value of an acre of our coal land, without exaggeration or embellishment. It is not strange, therefore, that our lands have, and are still, increasing so largely in value. In England, coal lands, not possessing near the intrinsic value of ours, sell at from one to two thousand pounds sterling per acre.

Post-Office Robbery.—At Havana, Chemung county, N. Y., three small boys were arrested for robbing the post-office at that place. One of them was the son of a hatter residing adjoining the post-office, and he, in company with another boy, succeeded in getting into the office, while the post-master was gone to dinner, by removing a board from the partition between the two cellars. They first found a draft, which they showed to another boy to ascertain whether it could be cashed or not, and he consequently became leagued with them. They followed up their depredations until they obtained about $700 in money. Whenever a letter contained no money they resealed it and sent it back. The hatter's son confessed the whole affair, and they are all locked up for trial.

The Virginia State Treasury Empty.—Mr. Goode announced in the Virginia House of Delegates, on the 29th ult., that the State Treasury was empty, and offered a bill which was engrossed, authorising the Board of Public Works to lend to the Commonwealth, for a limited time, all money now in their possession, to be returned from the income of the State in July or December.

Poisoned by Accident.—Mrs. P. T. Barnum, of Bridgeport, Conn., the wife of Mr. Barnum of the Museum in New York, swallowed, by mistake, on the 26th ult., a spoonful of most deadly poison, akeaine, or wolf's bane, for some simple medicine. A powerful emetic rescued her from the very jaws of death. Some years ago, a heavy dose of morphine, taken by mistake, very nearly sacrificed the life of the same lady.

Various Statistics.—The railways of Britain have cost twelve hundred millions of dollars; the canals thirteen hundred millions; the docks one hundred and fifty millions. There are 35,000 merchant vessels; 385 war vessels; 520 yachts. All together represent a tunnage of 4,763,000 tuns, and are manned by 290,000 men. An average of one vessel is lost at every tide.

The amount of coal mined in Pennsylvania during the year 1851 was 1,400,000 tons of bituminous, and 1,000,000 of anthracite, of which the aggregate value is $22,000,000. The coal fields of Pennsylvania nover 15,000 square miles. Those of Great Britain cover 11,000 square miles. The first are above or within the water level; the second from 900 to 1800 feet below the surface of the ground.

Gambling in Washington City.—The Common Council of Washington City, have adopted a resolution, asking of Congress the passage of more effective laws for the suppression of gambling, or the granting of such power to the city authorities.

Affidavit Against Kossuth.—The Jackson (Mi.) Star says that while Kossuth was in that city on a visit to Gov. Foote, a distinguished citizen of an adjoining county made an affidavit against him, charging him with a violation of the neutrality act of 1818, and praying for a warrant to this arrest. The application was refused.

An Alum Spring.—A spring of water, having all the properties, it is said, of the celebrated Alum Springs, has been discovered two miles from Norfolk, Va.

An American Steamer Fired into by Mexicans.

Just before the steamship Yucki, which arrived here last evening, left the Brazos, Capt. Thompson was informed by Capt. Kennedy, of the steamer Orampus, that information had just been received from a reliable source, that the steamer Camanche, during her last trip up to Roma, had been fired into by a party of Mexicans on their side of the river, sometime about the 25th or 26th ultimo. The circumstances as near as could be learned were as follows: The Comanche, Capt. King, left Brownsville with about forty passengers and a full freight; among the passengers were Gen. Carvajal, Judge Arrington, the Hon. Mr. Grinstead, and several other State officials; besides several ladies and merchants. After leaving Brownsville, the passengers on board observed that many Mexicans, believed to be soldiers, were following the boat along the bank of the river. Captain King avoided as much as possible going near the Mexican shore, and then only when he could not avoid it. Nothing occurred until about the 25th or 26th ult., when a party of Mexican women came down to the river and hailed them, saying that some soldiers above were going to take the steamer at or near the point stated by them.

The steamer was fired into by a party concealed in the chaparral, and out of five shots fired, three took effect on the boat—not injuring any person, however, which was very fortunate, as nearly all the passengers were lounging about the decks, and among them the ladies. It is supposed the shots were intended for Gen. Carvajal, it being known that he was going up.

This occurrence took place in the vicinity of Rancho de las Cuevas, some forty or fifty miles below Rio Grande City.

From Venezuela.—The New York Express has received advices from Caracas to the 10th of March:

Congress still continues in session. A canal of sixty-six miles in length, and a railroad twice as long, are in a state of active formation; and a fine steamer plies every alternate day between Leguayra and Puerto Cabello. The President, Monagas 2d, has succeeded in suppressing disorder and revolution.

Capital Punishment.—A report of the select committee to the Pennsylvania Legislature, on the abolition of capital punishment, says, that in fifty-four years, seventy persons have been executed in that State for murder. Of one hundred and eleven persons who have been charged with murder in Philadelphia county, only ten were capitally convicted; three of these were pardoned, two died before sentence, and only five were executed, being one in twenty-two of the indicted. The committee, after a careful consideration of the subject, have come to the conclusion that the death punishment, as a penalty for crime, ought to be abolished.

Pneumonia.—The Petersburg (Va.) Intelligencer says that Pneumonia has for several months prevailed in Petersburg, and, as far as we can learn, throughout the country to an unprecedented extent, and with a malignity and fatality unknown to our oldest inhabitants. It has visited us in the form of an epidemic, and its ravages have been dreadful. We do not believe that the cholera, when it was among us, swept away as many victims as the terrible malady of which we are speaking has done.

Reduction of Taxation.—A bill has been introduced into the New York Legislature, reducing the rate of the State tax from one to one quarter of a mill upon the dollar, which will probably become a law. This act is the result of the law passed recently to secure a more equal assessment of property.

Piota Territory.—The inhabitants of Carson's Valley have applied to Congress for the establishment of a territorial government over that region which lies between Utah and California. They propose the name of Piota for the new territory. The region is said to be capable of maintaining a large population, and probably it may, in a few years, form a new State.

The steamer Brother Jonathan, which was to have sailed from New York on the 26th ult. for Chagres, has been withdrawn from the line. It is understood that she has been bought by Commodore Vanderbilt, who intends her as an addition to his line of steamers running between San Junn and San Francisco. Her passengers were transferred to the United States.

Interesting to Ship Masters.—The Spanish Government has issued a decree placing on the same footing with Spanish vessels, in regard to the payment of navigation and port duties in that peninsula and the adjacent islands, the vessels of all nations who concede the like benefit to the Spanish marine.

A Good Example.—The Legislature of New Jersey—a free State—has passed a bill appropriating one thousand dollars a year, for two years, to aid such colored persons in that State as may desire to remove to Liberia, under the direction of the New Jersey Colonization Society.

A FUNERAL THOUGHT....By BAYARD TAYLOR.

When the pale genius, to whose hollow tramp
Echo the startled chambers of the soul,
Waves his inverted torch o'er that wan camp
Where the Archangel's marshaling trumpets roll,
I would not meet him in the chamber dim,
Hushed, and o'erburthened with a nameless fear,
When the breath flutters, and the senses swim,
And the dread hour is near!

Though love's dear arms might clasp me fondly then,
As if to keep the summoner at bay,
And woman's woe and the calm grief of men
Hallow at last the still, unbreathing clay—
These are earth's fetters, and the soul would shrink,
Thus bound, from darkness and the dread unknown,
Shrieking its arms from death's eternal brink;
Which it must dare alone!

But in the awful silence of the sky,
Upon some mountain summit never trod,
Through the bright ether would I climb, to die
Far from mortals, and alone with God!
To the pure keeping of the stainless air
Would I resign my feeble, failing breath,
And with the rapture of an answered prayer
Welcome the kiss of death!

The soul, which wrestles with that doom of pain,
Prometheus-like, its lingering portion here,
Would there forget the vulture and the chain,
And lead in freedom from its mountain-bier!
All that it ever knew, of noble thought,
Would guide it upward to the glorious track,
Nor the keen pangs by parting anguish wrought
Turn its bright glances back!

Then to the elements my frame would turn.
No worm should riot on my coffined clay,
But the cold limbs, from that sepulchral urn,
In the slow storms of ages waste away!
Loud winds and thunder's diapason high
Should be my requiem through the coming time,
And the white summit, fading in the sky,
My monument sublime!

The Missionary Cause in India.

Rev H. N. McTyeire, Editor N. O. Christian Advocate.

DEAR SIR: The following extract from a communication recently received, possesses, I think, a general and unusual interest. It is from a Missionary distinguished for his learning, fidelity, industry, and long experience in the extended and important field he in part occupies.

His acquaintance with the languages and dialects of Hindustan and Thibet, his extensive travels through those regions, his long residence in India and accurate information concerning the religions, manners and customs, governments, literature, etc., of its diversified inhabitants, all fit him to judge as to the correctness of the statistics he gives.

The writer is Rev. Jesse M. Jamieson, of Ambala, Northern India, whose noble manifestations of the expansiveness of true christian benevolence have won him the confidence, friendship, and frequent and munificent aid of the representatives of British authority in India. His statements, therefore of what christianity has done and is doing for the illumination and salvation of those intensely heathen countries may be relied on, even though they far exceed what we have been accustomed to account the sum of its achievements there.

Thinking you might be pleased to give these statements to your readers, I send you that portion of Mr. Jamieson's late letter which contains them, and am, dear sir, very truly your friend, etc. J. S. COPES.

New Orleans, April 13, 1852.

AMBALA, December 29, 1851.

MY DEAR DR. COPES: I owe you many apologies for not replying to your long and interesting letter of December 30, 1850, before this time. I did, however, in letters to you and Mr. Stanton, written and sent off before the receipt of your last, refer to most of the topics which it contains. I write now to give you some interesting facts and statistics relative to the Missionary work in India.

They were carefully prepared by a Missionary in Calcutta, and are the latest and most authentic extant. Within the last fifty years 200 Protestant Mission Stations have been commenced and carried on efficiently in Hindustan. These now engage the services of 403 Missionaries, who belong to 21 Evangelical Societies in Europe and America. Of these 22 are ordained natives. Besides these, there are 551 assistant native preachers who proclaim the Word of God in the bazars and villages. There are 309 native churches containing 17,356 members in full communion. These form a nucleus for a community of 130,000 nominal christians who enjoy the blessings of the Gospel. In addition to these there are many thousands of native christians not connected with any Missionary Societies and whom it is impossible to find out. Under the superintendence of the above Missions there are 1,345 vernacular day schools, in which there are 83,700 youth instructed in the religion of the Bible and useful human science. Also, 73 boarding-schools containing 1,992 boys trained up under the eye of the Missionaries. Besides those there are 128 English day schools, in which 14,000 boys receive instruction in the higher branches of science and the Word of God.

The Missionary efforts in female education embrace 354 day schools containing 11,500 girls and 91 boarding schools with 2,450 girls, all under direct religious influence. The entire Bible has been translated into ten languages and the New Testament into five others. About 50 original tracts have been prepared with special reference to the wants of the Hindus and Mahomedans, besides many translations of books and tracts of a direct religious tendency. For printing these there are 25 printing establishments. The total cost of this vast Missionary Agency during the past year was £187,000, or $830,280. Of this, £33,500 were contributed in India. These sums in the aggregate seem large, but they are not a tithe what they should be for so great a work. The Governor General of India alone costs the East Indian Company more annually than the expense of the whole Missionary Agency in the Presidency of Bengal and Agra. His salary is £24,000 per annum, and his allowance for travelling is £45,000—$69,000, while the whole expenditures of the 159 Missionaries in the above Presidency are £68,000. But I must leave you, dear friend, to set these facts, so as to tell. My own mind has been much interested in them, and I hope they will stir up God's people to more earnestness in this cause. * * * * * *

THE IVY IN THE DUNGEON....By CHARLES MACKAY.

The ivy in a dungeon grew,
Unfed by rain, uncheered by dew;
Its pallid leaflets only drank
Once moistures foul and odors rank.

But through the dungeon-grating high
There fell a sunbeam from the sky;
It slept upon the grateful floor
In silent gladness evermore.

The ivy felt a tremor shoot
Through all its fibres to the root;
It felt the light—it saw the ray—
It strove to blossom into day.

It grew, it crept, it pushed, it climb—
Long had the darkness been its home;
And in the currents of the air
Its tender branches flourished fair.

It reached the beam—it thrilled—it curled—
It blessed the warmth that cheers the world;
It rose towards the dungeon bars—
It looked upon the sun and stars.

It felt the life of bursting Spring,
It heard the happy sky-lark sing,
It caught the breath of morns and eves,
And wooed the swallow to its leaves.

By rains and dews and sunshine fed,
Over the outward wall it spread;
And in the day-dream waning free,
It grew into a steadfast tree.

Upon that solitary place
Its verdure threw adorning grace;
The mating birds became its guests,
And sang its praises from their nests.

Would'st know the moral of the rhyme?
Behold the heavenly light, and climb!
To every dungeon comes a ray
Of God's interminable day.

Next General Conference—Episcopacy.

MR. EDITOR: The third quadrennial session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is to be held in the city of Columbus, Ga., May, 1854—more than two years from the present time. For this grave, wise and dignified body there will be some work to do. What that work is, and the manner of its performance, are questions which we may discuss even now, with great propriety. The Episcopacy must be strengthened by increasing the number. To what extent, is the question? To answer this correctly, let us ask, What are the duties of our Bishops? Briefly, to preside in the Annual Conferences, and travel at large, to oversee the temporal and spiritual interests of the Church. An increase of the number of Bishops may secure the performance of the first duty, but will it of the second?

Suppose we take a medium number, say seven, and that we have twenty-one Annual Conferences—three to each! Now, will a journey from home to the sites of these Conferences, made on steamboats, railroads or mail stages, be such a traveling at large through the Connection, as the law of the Church contemplates? The answer is obvious. But they must travel! Travel? How, where, when, and for what intent? Who is able to answer these inquiries? We might say, travel by private conveyance, make easy stages, and stop with the brethren, preach as they go, especially every Sabbath.

2. Travel to those places where they are most needed. But who is to determine that? The General Conference can not—the Bishops themselves will often be in the dark if left to the preachers—each will insist that his field is entitled to special attention. Here is a real difficulty.

3. But they must travel, when? All the time—this would be an unreasonable burden.

4. But for what intent must they travel? To supervise the temporal and spiritual concerns of the Church. To do justice, they should visit every preacher and his charge during each year. This would be impossible. But let us suppose all this possible, what then? We should then have Diocesan Bishops, instead of General Superintendents. As a strict constructionist of all constitutional law, I could never consent that the General Conference should do that indirectly which it can not do directly. It has no power to do away a General Superintendency; and any considerable increase of Bishops must do this thing necessarily. I therefore conclude that unless disease and death should make sad havoc among the bench of Bishops, ONE more is all that the Church will really need.

So the number one or more, how should the electors be governed in making their choice? I answer, we want a wise man, a pious man, a working man. We have many such. The nature of the work to be done demands that a Bishop should be a sound doctrinal, experimental and practical preacher; and secondly, he should be a business man, and born to govern, as well as apt to teach. It is not every ornament to the pulpit who can fill with dignity and success the chair, nor can every business man grace the pulpit. A combination of these qualities is what we want.

From this view it will be seen that it is no pleasurable pastime to make a Bishop! The occasion, therefore, should occur as seldom as possible; therefore the age and bodily health of the man should be taken into the account. And I think our history as a people demonstrates that no man should have this office conferred upon him who has reached his fiftieth year, or upwards. Another objection to an increase of Bishops, is that a scandalous Bishop is a very scandalous thing. From this scandal, up to the present, our Church is entirely free. This is not true of those churches which have dioceses. Let us not, then, increase the probabilities of this odium coming upon us, by increasing the number of men called Bishops.

I have condensed these views, to which you will not object, nor will your readers; and I have only to ask any one who thinks proper to review, that he will take no advantage in this regard.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

A Leaf from 1848.

BY LIZZIE NEWTON.

"Mary S—— was married on last Thursday night—the party was large and very pleasant." Such was the short notice, from a friend, of the nuptials of an old school-mate—the reflections which it produced were far less laconic. She was an old friend; beside our acquaintance in the school-room, we boarded together, and I being the elder, was her mentor and confidant. Mary was an only daughter, and had been greatly indulged. She was quick, rather witty, and had an excellent mind; but it was uncultivated, for though she had been in school from her infancy, it had been very nearly to no purpose. She seemed to be equally compounded of good and evil, and yet had she been blessed with proper training, would doubtless have proved an ornament to society. The influence which I possessed over her was very great, and though her feelings and passions were strong, in my presence she maintained the most perfect command of them, and a few words would divert her from any contemplated action, to pursue the course which I thought best. Though often willful and perverse, she had many friends, and but few decided enemies. Before her education was completed, she left the village, and I saw her only a few times afterwards, the last being just before I returned to my woodland home. She was then "engaged," though but a child, with the full consent of her only parent. As might be expected, her ideas of marriage were but little in accordance with real life, and poorly fitted to prepare her for its trials and perplexities; she had no thought of the responsibilities she would assume, nor of the duties which would necessarily rest upon her.

In a few months I learned the expected marriage would not take place, but that she would be united to Harry Sims, and the next tidings were that the betrothed was a bride, the daughter a wife; and now, 'tis said, "Mary seems to be happy; she and Harry do very well." It may be so, and I hope it is; but I can not hope, believing. I never knew Harry Sims, but I can not think of him without unpleasant feelings; for the only time I ever saw him was but little calculated to make a good impression, and I well remember, when the quiet of our little village was so seriously disturbed, for several successive nights, his name was numbered among the rioters. But he has joined the "Sons," and it is said reformed. I hope, for Mary's sake, that it is true; and yet I can not but fear he is poorly qualified to make her happy. She needed a strong arm to lean upon; and if his character is such as represented, he should have married one capable of strengthening his good impulses, and of leading him, by her influence, to seek happiness at home. Self denial and forbearance are virtues rarely exercised by Mary, and yet were her husband a different man, I would have much confidence in her as a wife. True, she is ignorant of many duties, and has many faults, but she is young, affectionate in her nature, and her husband would certainly possess unbounded influence over her.

It was but a little while ago that a party of light hearted girls gaily promised to attend each others' weddings; and now what changes have come upon them! One has married, but none of that group were present; one sleeps with the dead—and so with all, time has been busy.

Again I see Mary's bright face, and hear her merry voice, as she exclaimed, "Now, Lizzie, promise us;" but ah, another thought—the school girl is a wife, has thoughtlessly taken upon her life's heaviest responsibilities, and forever sealed her weal or woe! And now should this union prove an unhappy one, will Mary's mother be free from censure? Could she not have taught her to look upon life more seriously, and marriage as "a figure and an earnest of holier things unseen?" Surely, surely she could, for

"Character groweth day by day, and all things aid it in unfolding,
And the bent unto good or evil may be given in the hours of infancy."

O, how nearly does the destiny of a child lie in a mother's hands, and with what fear and trembling should she begin her duties—how closely should she wait upon Him who giveth good gifts to them that ask Him, and how often commend to His care the little ones He has consigned to her keeping. The extent of a mother's influence who can know, and how much will be required at her hands none may tell! May He who blessed little children bless all who need grace and strength to rear them.

Church Sleepers Rebuked.

A Sunday evening or two ago, the lecturer at St. Peter-at-Arches Church, Leicester (the Rev. Mr. Thorold) stopped in the middle of his sermon, and addressed his congregation pretty nearly as follows: "Brethren, I see many of the congregation asleep, and I must request parties sitting near to them to wake them, or I shall have to send some one to them. To find people asleep is most disheartening to me, but above all, it is most insulting to the Almighty. I can make an excuse for parties accidentally falling asleep from the heat of the day—that is a misfortune which may happen to any one—but the parties who regularly go to sleep in the house of God, would be very much better at home. This is an unpleasant thing to say, but I must discharge my duty, and, it is my duty to give this warning." In the course of his sermon Mr. Thorold reproved the slovenly and irreverent practice of sitting or lounging when the congregation ought to be kneeling, and the practice of sturing around when they ought to be praying. The reverend lecturer begged of his congregation to join audibly in the response, and not to leave the service to a kind of duet between him and the clerk. It is almost useless to add that, after the sleepers were aroused, they did not get a wink of sleep during the remainder of the sermon.—[London Inquirer.

GATHER RIPE FRUIT, OH DEATH!

BY J. JENNIE WARNER.

Hover not thou, with thy sombre wing,
O'er the beautiful buds of earth,
Gather not thou what the angels bring,
Blight not the flowers at birth—
Childhood hath roses that fade at thy touch
Voices that hush at thy breath;
Linger not, then, 'mid the early flowers—
Gather ripe fruit, oh Death!

Visions are wreathing the brow of youth
With a deep, mysterious spell,
Pulses are throbbing whose joy and truth
Have meanings too deep to tell—
Youth hath fountains that chill at thy touch,
Gushings that freeze at thy breath;
Linger not, then, 'mid the summer flowers—
Gather ripe fruit, oh Death!

Majesty reareth on manhood's brow,
The fever of life on his heart.
Hope hath enchained with eagerness now,
Till fled her spirit depart—
Manhood hath missions that yield to thy sway,
Fires that are quenched at thy breath;
Linger not, 'mid the blossoms of day—
Gather ripe fruit, oh Death!

Sadness hath crept o'er the dream of age,
Bitterness lies at his heart;
Tempest and mildew have blotted life's page,
Bid the worn spirit depart.
Wings that are fettered will plume at thy call,
Shadows will flee at thy breath:
Come, then, in mercy, with sceptre and pall—
Gather ripe fruit, oh Death!

Peacefully reareth the crown of years
On the Christian's hoary head;
Faith, in its fullness, has silenced his fears,
The tumult of passion has fled.
Holy the visions that over him roll.
Prayer is the voice of his breath;
Rend thou the temple that prisons his soul—
Gather ripe fruit, oh Death!

Family Prayer.

Reader, a few words with you, if you please, about family prayer. Do you, sir, pray in your family? I have been thinking of the benevolence of God as manifested in the institution of marriage; of the obligations men are under to God for domestic comforts. How many and how great are these comforts, where the marriage relation is religiously sustained, and its duties faithfully discharged! Have not your own domestic blessings laid you under peculiar obligation to God? What could tempt you to part with wife and children, and find your house left unto you desolate! If these blessings are yours, know you not that God is their author? Is it right you should receive the blessings, forgetful of the glorious Giver? Let me tell you that you can never throw off the obligations which these blessings impose. Neither the cares of business, nor the culls of friends, nor the pressure of other duties, will afford any just reason for neglecting your obligations to God. You are bound to acknowledge domestic mercies in the midst of the family circle. I repeat the question, then, Do you pray in your family? What avails it to say you have no time, or you are hurried, important business, or this cross is burdensome to your flesh and spirit? Will these apologies satisfy your Judge? Certainly not. The question will present itself: Do you pray in your family; if not, why not? Give a reason, a substantial reason, or else confess honestly that you are living in open and daily neglect of an important known duty, and having confessed your remissness, forsake it, and set up the family altar at once. But perhaps you have an altar and do pray.

But when do you pray? The Bible teaches you to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and implies that God deserves the homage of your soul, in the fullest vigor, and in all the freshness of its powers; that he deserves the earliest and best hour in each day. The morning should therefore be preferred for the duty of family prayer. Then, if ever, the soul is calm, and all its energies fresh and vigorous from recent sleep. How fit that holy faith should lift her eye and plume her wing for a flight to heaven at that hour, that she may bring down blessings and secure mercies for the day!

Some put off prayer till every other call is answered, and every other duty done; till the mind, engrossed and occupied, fatigued and jaded by care and anxiety, and the body, wearied with toil and sympathy with the mind, both yearn for repose; till the evening is far spent, and all the younger members of the family are sunken in slumber, and think to satisfy God or conscience by a few drowsy petitions offered then. Is this your time for prayer? And is it right to make this your only time for prayer with any member of your household? What if your wife kneels with you at the altar? Is this family prayer?

But how do you pray? Granting that you do pray at the domestic altar, and at the morning hour; in what manner do you approach the mercy seat? Some bow down humbly, with child-like reverence, and pray in faith, with holy earnestness and importunity, feeling that the blessings they crave are indispensable; that they must prevail. They wrestle with the Angel of the Covenant; they can not, they will not let him go without a blessing. Others there are who take the attitude of suppliants, and repeat a dull, heartless form, a frigid mummery of the words, a mere mockery, and having nothing in the world to command but the holy tone in which they draw it out, if indeed this be a commendation. Their confessions, their thanksgivings, their petitions, are all general, as if it were just as well to pray for one thing as for another. They are full of vain repetitions, learned and conned by rote; words which have been repeated a thousand times without even once engaging the understanding or the heart; set phrases, stereotyped, ready for use at all times, and equally fitted to all occasions. How do you pray? God regards the manner of prayer, and demands in us, when we approach him, a spirit of prayer.

Finally, with whom do you pray—I mean at the family altar? Do you gather all the members of your family there? Are you conscientious in this matter? Some seem to be satisfied if only one or two members are present at prayers, while others are engaged in something else, which they greatly prefer. Is this family prayer? Is this your custom? Do you leave it optional with the members of your family to attend at the domestic altar or not, as they choose? Can a father—can a Christian father satisfy his conscience—can he have a heart to mock God by pretending to worship him at the family altar, without requiring of his children and household a regular, habitual and prompt attendance on the exercises of family worship?

I have known family prayer, so called, to be performed in all the ways above mentioned. Judge now, fathers and brethren, who stand at the heads of interesting families, which way is right. What is the proper course to be pursued in this matter, in order to secure the Divine blessing, and to build up your families? Judge which course is right, in order that your personal influence may be most deeply and widely, and permanently felt, in order that your households may present to the Church and to the world their brightest ornaments and most valuable members. And having decided what God demands of you, what is duty, and your duty, determine in the strength of Christ that at all hazards you will do it. For there is no more lovely or interesting sight in this world than that presented by an affectionate family group, all gathering from day to day, with one accord, around the family altar, to adore and worship the Father of mercies, in the name of Jesus, and committing daily their feet, their hands, their heads, their hearts, to the guidance of his Holy Spirit. Mesopotamia Female Seminary.

This institution is located at Eutaw, the county seat of Greene, Alabama, and is, without doubt, one of the most beautiful locations for a school of that character in the South. The premises cost at first more than ten thousand dollars. The spacious and commodious edifice stands in the midst of a large oak grove, and has in front an elegant piazza extending at full length of the building, with a row of fluted columns supporting the roof; the whole presenting a grand view.

The young ladies are accommodated with convenient rooms in the building and furnished, besides, a boarding hall for those who choose, rather than boarding in private families. It has a philosophical and chemical apparatus sufficient for all purposes to illustrate and simplify these branches, as usually taught in like institutions. A supply of text books is kept on hand at a reasonable price, being ordered from New York, of the most approved authors. So that students need be at no trouble to supply themselves before leaving home with the expectation of making better bargains. All the solid and ornamental branches necessary for a young lady to graduate with the highest honors in any college of the kind, are taught here.

As a gentleman and a scholar, Mr. Winchell, the Principal, stands high in the community. It is the opinion of competent judges who have patronized former teachers, that he has never had his equal here as an instructor of young ladies. It is only a finished scholar that can impart a thorough education, and this is done by moulding the youthful mind into his own, as the melted wax receives the impression of the seal. In order for this, the pupil must have full confidence in the ability of the teacher, at once fearing and respecting him. All of the above may be said of Mr. Winchell, who, for his gentlemanly deportment and untiring zeal manifested in their education, secures the highest esteem of his pupils.

The Seminary is about one mile and a quarter from the business part of the town, which makes it sufficiently excluded from all temptations. The scenery is delightful to the eye on every side—grounds for amusement and promenading are not surpassed any where, as walks extend along, shaded with trees, any reasonable distance for evening exercise. What makes this institution so desirable, is the excellent taste that is displayed by the inhabitants in horticulture—in the cultivation of shrubbery and flowers—the beautiful rows of hawthorn hedges are cultivated to perfection. Nature and art spread out in so uniform beauty, must always make a deeper and more lasting impression on the mind, than can be learned from books only. It is certainly a very important item in a finished education—it not only infuses purity of ideas and thoughts in the hearts of youth, and elevates their moral feelings, but also inspires them with a reverence for the great Author of their being. The morals of the people in the vicinity of the Seminary are excellent, being decidedly religious, and would countenance no amusements or innovations that would be demoralizing to the scholars.

This institution deserves the patronage of the Methodists, though the school is not designed to be sectarian. Yet, the Principal being a member of that denomination, would look to that Church for support. If the members of the Methodist Church do not take a decided stand in the support of their schools, who will? A very small part of the church, patronize the Conference institutions. If competent teachers who are members of that church set up schools of education expecting help from where they have a right to expect it, and where reason would dictate—certainly in preference to any others—they should receive the fostering care of the Church. And when she looks to her own interest, at the same time the community are receiving a like benefit. This notion of Methodist parents sending their children to the schools of other denominations and call it liberality, is in reality employing others to perform that work which especially belongs to them.

There are some important places for usefulness in towns and wealthy neighborhoods in the bounds of the Alabama Conference, which are gradually losing their Methodistic influence through the inactivity of the Church to support her own schools; where, too, she has a superiority in numerical strength and wealth. Let Methodist families be zealous in maintaining religious instructors of their own faith, since education is the handmaid of religion, and since other denominations will do the same. V. L. H.

LITTLE THINGS AND LITTLE PEOPLE.—Little things and little people have often brought great things to pass. The large world in which we exist is made up of little particles, as small as the sands on the sea shore. The vast sea is composed of small drops of water. The little busy bees, how much honey they gather! Do not be discouraged because you are little. A little star shines brightly in the sky in a dark night, and may be the means of saving many a poor sailor from shipwreck; and a little Christian may do a great deal of good if he or she will try. There is nothing like trying....[Dr. Chalmers.

The Wearing of Gold, How far Sinful?

DEAR BR. MCTYEIRE: I do not believe that you would object to a calm attempt at an exposition of a doubtful portion of Scripture, even if opinions were held in which you could not fully concur. I do not think you would be afraid of an examination of Scripture conducted in the spirit of fair inquiry, and in the pure pursuit of the truth. I propose such an examination now; and, if I am wrong, I desire you, or some other good brother, to set me right.

It is a fact too notorious for concealment that the members of our Church wear gold, in opposition to what is generally conceived to be the teaching of the Bible upon the subject. It is a subject worthy of special attention, to inquire into the causes of the very general departure, upon the part of those who are undoubtedly Christians, (giving evidence in other respects of all the marks of the Christian,) from what is looked upon as plain Christian duty. You will allow that the cause of Christ may be as deeply injured by teaching too much as by teaching too little. The fault of the Catholic religion is, that it teaches too much. I think that the received doctrine upon the subject of wearing gold goes farther than the Bible goes. And that, I think, is the reason why so many excellent Christian men and women wear gold.

If you will bear with me, I think I can show that the Bible nowhere prohibits the wearing of gold. My authority is the Bible. Will you hear it? I appeal to the Word of God. Will you hear my appeal? My first argument is drawn from the offerings of the Children of Israel, as contributions for the Tabernacle of the Lord, and accepted by the Prophet of the Lord. They consisted largely in personal jewelry: "Men and women, as many as were willing-hearted, and brought bracelets, and ear-rings and rings, and tablets, all jewels of gold"—Exod., xxxv, 22. The people of God were those things then, in the wilderness, and they were accepted as offerings for the Tabernacle. The habit then was not condemned. Now, I go at once to the strongest Scripture on the subject in favor of the received teachings. It occurs in the letter to Timothy: "In like manner also that women adorn themselves in modest apparel with shamefacedness and sobriety, not with braided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array;" "but with good works." Now, if you give this Scripture a literal interpretation, you would exclude every kind of clothing; as women are directed to be clothed "in good works." The teaching is figurative, and means that the principal ornament and distinguishing trait of godly women shall be "good works," and not gold, or pearls, or costly array. With women professing godliness "gold, and pearls, and costly array," are to be secondary considerations. They are to be worn as subsidiary to godliness, or "good works."

Peter gives similar directions, and is plainer himself, and makes this teaching of St. Paul much plainer. Peter says: "whose adorning," speaking of wives, "let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on apparel." Now, if you give this a literal interpretation, its direction to married women is, to go without any apparel at all. It teaches to go without apparel as positively as it teaches to go without gold. But, in reality, it teaches neither. It only teaches this: that married Christian women are not to make the gold, and the plaiting of hair, and apparel, which they wear, their adornment—not at all. They are to have something above it. Their adornment in reality is to be the "hidden man of the heart." Just as if a Christian father were to say to his daughter, dressed in fine apparel, "My daughter, I do not wish your apparel to be your adornment; I wish your adornment to be amiability and propriety of behavior." That does not exclude fine apparel so much as it recommends the superior adornment of the grace of the heart. I think all these Scriptures are designed to teach the superior importance and superior excellence of vital godliness to external decorations. Get the heart knit to God, and the external decorations will be modest and appropriate.

There is nobody silly enough in the world to think there is any harm in gold, of itself. If there were any harm in it, God would never have made it. The harm lies in the abuse of it; like every thing else which God has made. I think it very unbecoming in a Christian to be gaudily and extravagantly dressed. I think it indicates the want of Christian humility.

The inspired writers were more intent upon the graces of the soul than upon dress. The whole spirit of the Bible teaches that the Christian who has the graces of the soul, and who wears costly apparel, is more acceptable in the sight of God than he who is spiritually nude, and whose external adornment is plain enough to suit any Pharisee in the land. It is to be noticed that these directions with regard to gold are confined to women. Were the use of gold, as an ornament, in itself sinful, the prohibition would not have been confined to the Christian ladies.

If we are wrong, please set us right. You may be certain that, if we have interpreted the Bible right, there can no harm come of it, however it may differ from the common opinion on the subject; and if wrong, it can be easily shown. JETHRO.

WOMEN AND NEWSPAPERS.—We endorse almost every word of the following from the Boston Republican:

"Women are the best subscribers in the world to newspapers, magazines, etc. We have been editor now going on for eight years, and we have never yet lost a single dollar by female subscribers. They seem to make it a point of conscientious duty to pay the preacher and the printer—two classes of the community that suffer more by bad pay, and no pay at all, than all the rest put together. Whenever we have a w[illegible] on our book, we know it is just as good for two dollars and a half as a picayune is for a ginger-cake. Besides, whatever they subscribe for, they read, whether it is good, bad, or indifferent. If they once subscribe to a paper, they are sure to read it, upon the principle, we suppose, that if they did not, their money would be thrown away; as an old lady whom we once knew, for whose sick servant-girl the doctor had prescribed a dose of oil, she took it herself, rather than it should be wasted. Hence, we say they are the best readers. For these reasons we had at any time in the world rather have a dozen women on our books than one man.

Striking and Suggestive Anecdote.

The most magnificent anecdote to illustrate the religious impressions made upon his (the late Dr. Channing's) mind, in childhood, is one thus related by himself: His father, with the view of giving him a ride, took William in his chaise one day as he was going to hear a famous preacher in the neighborhood. Impressed with the notion that he might learn great tidings from the unseen world, he listened attentively to the sermon. With very glowing rhetoric, the lost state of man was described, his abandonment to evil, helplessness, dependence upon Sovereign Grace, and the need of earnest prayer, as the condition of receiving this Divine aid. In the view of the speaker, a curse seemed to rest upon the earth, and darkness and horror to veil the face of nature. William, for his part, supposed that henceforth those who believed would abandon all other things to seek this salvation; and that amusement and earthly business would no longer occupy a moment.

The service over, they went out of church, and his father, in answer to the remark of some person, said, with a decisive tone, "Sound doctrine, sir." "It is true, then," was his inward reflection. A heavy weight fell on his heart. He wanted to speak to his father; he expected his father would speak to him in relation to this tremendous crisis of things. They got into the chaise and drove along, but absorbed in awful thoughts, he could not raise his voice. Presently his father began to whistle! At length they reached home. But instead of calling the family together, and telling them of the appalling intelligence which the preacher had given, his father took off his boots, put his feet towards the fire-place, and quietly read a newspaper. All things went on as usual. At first he was surprised; but not being given to talking, he asked no explanations. Soon, however, the question arose, could what he had heard be true? No; his father did not believe it! It was not true! He felt that he had been trifled with; that the preacher had deceived him; and from that time he became inclined to distrust every thing he heard. [Memoir of Dr. Channing.

MARKET FOR YOUNG WOMEN IN HUNGARY.—Every year, at the feast of St. Peter, which comes on in the latter days of June, the peasantry of this district (Bihar) meet together at a certain place, for the purpose of a general fair. This fair has a very peculiar interest for the young men and the young maidens; for it is there that, while purchasing household utensils, they choose for themselves partners, and conclude marriages. The parents bring their marriageable daughters, with each one her little dower accompanying her, loaded up in a small cart. This dower is, of course, proportionate to the lowly condition of these mountaineers, some sheep, sometimes a few hogs, or even chickens. These girls are attired in their best, or what places of gold or silver they may possess, are strung upon a string, and neatly attached to the braids of their hair.

Thus fitted out, every girl who desires to find a husband betakes herself to the fair. She quits the house of her father, perhaps forever, and bids her mother adieu, quite ignorant of what roof is to shelter or what fate awaits her journey's end. As to her fortune, it is in the little cart that attends her. The object of her journey is never mistaken, nobody wonders at it, nor is there occasion for a public officer to make a record of the deed. On the other hand, the youths who wish to procure themselves wives, hasten to the fair, arrayed in the very best skin garments their chests contain. These savage looking chaps, who would be quite enough to make our young ladies run and hide themselves, proceed with a good deal of interest and zest, to inspect the fair mountain lasses that are brought thither by their fathers and their uncles, casting many side glances and wistful looks toward the captivating merchandise.

He gives his fancy a free rein, and when he finds one that seems to claim his preference, he at once addresses the parents, asks what they have given her, and asks what price they have set upon the "lot" so exposed for sale—at the same time stating his own property and standing. If the parents ask too much, these gallant "boys" make their own offer, which, if it does not suit the other to agree to, the fond lover passes to seek some one else.

We may suppose that the proud young men always keep a "top-eye" open to the correspondence of levelness upon one hand, and the size of the dower upon the other. At last he finds one for whom he is willing to give the price, and a loud clapping of the hands together announces to the bystanders that the bargain is complete.

What a heavy blow this must be for some lazy rival who has not decided quick enough, who is halting and considering whether she will suit him, and whether she is as lovely and accomplished in household matters as some of the others. However, the deed is done and the bargain is completed, and forthwith the young girl (poor thing) proceeds also to clasp the hand of her future husband. What a moment of interest and anxiety to her! The destiny of her life is sealed by this rude clasp of the hand. In this act she as much as says, "Yes, I will be yours for life, and I consent to partake of your joys and your troubles, to follow you through weal and through woe!"

The families of the betrothed pair then surround them, offering their congratulations, and at once, without delay, the priest, who is on the ground for the occasion, pronounces the nuptial benediction. The young woman presses the parting hand of that family who have reared her, but of which she is no longer a part—mounts the car of her new husband, whom but a few hours before she never so much as knew, and escorted by her dower, is conducted to the house henceforward to be her home.

The Hungarian Government have long tried, but in vain, to suppress these fairs [illegible] girls. Positive orders have been given, that they should no longer take place, but such is the force of long-established custom, that in spite of the necessities of this pastoral race, these such orders have been disregarded. The fair still continues, and every year such [illegible] as we have described may be seen [illegible] into the plains of Kaliusza, there to [illegible] these precious jewels of the household. NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, April 17.

Death of Bishop Hedding.

The Picayune of Saturday evening last published this telegraphic dispatch, dated New York, April 10, 10-45 A. M.:

"Bishop Hedding, the senior Bishop of the M. E. Church, North, died yesterday."

The Church is prepared, by previous intelligence, for these sad tidings. "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel."

We subjoin an account, from the Christian Advocate and Journal, of the bodily and spiritual condition of the venerable man at a late date. It is hy the editor:

"On Saturday (3d inst.) we made a trip to Poughkeepsie, in company with Bishop Janes, for the purpose of a final interview with our beloved and venerated senior Superintendent. On Sabbath morning we entered his room, and were happy to find him much relieved by the discharge of a large quantity of water, which had forced openings through the skin of his legs. He had rested tolerably well, and was able to converse for ten or fifteen minntes at a time. Ho is feeble in body but strong in spirit. When animated, his eye resumes its natural expressiveness, and he seems to have lost nothing of his great intellectual strength.

"Upon entering the room, he reached out his hand, giving two fingers to Bishop Janes, and indicating that the other two were reserved for us. When he had in this manner taken our hands, he said, 'I am more glad to see you than I can possibly express. I am full of disease—old diseases and new ones are upon me—and I am prostrated. I am so feeble that I can not talk much. I would be glad to ask you many questions about the Conferences and the preachers, but my strength will not admit.' Pausing a little, he then resumed his remarks, and said: 'One thing I wish to say now, lest I should not be able to say it at any future time—for I may drop away at any moment—and that is, that God has been wonderfully good to me; his goodness has been overwhelming—overwhelming.' Here his utterance was stifled by emotion, and he wept freely. When he recovered himself, he resumed: 'To think that such a poor miserable sinner as I am should be so favored, so filled with the goodness of God, so completely saved from the fear of death, so filled with the hope of a glorious immortality!' Here again utterance failed, and the whole frame of the once strong man seemed on the point of falling to pieces with emotion. 'Dont weep so, husband,' said his excellent lady, 'you will become exhausted.' 'I am not weeping for sorrow,' added he, 'but for joy and thankfulness.'

We now took leave of this truly sublime scene, until five P. M., when we had the favor of another interview. He was now seated in an easy chair, and consecutively uttered a series of sentences which seemed almost as weighty as though they had come from the land of spirits. 'I suffer severely,' said he; 'and although I have no fear of death, I have some dread of pain. The flesh repines: the flesh of the Saviour repined.' He said, 'O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless not my will, but thine be done! Could I live, I should desire to do so only that I might preach Christ. O, to preach Christ! I would rather preach Christ any where—on the hardest circuit—than to have all the wealth and the honors of the kingdoms of this world.

"'O for a trumpet voice,
On all the world to call,
And bid their hearts rejoice
In him who died for all.'"

"Here he paused, and for some time gave vent to his feelings in tears. Recovering the power of utterance, he proceeded: 'When I think of the dear preachers with whom I have become acquainted, all over the length and breadth of the land, it seems hard not to be able to visit them again. But the will of the Lord be done; my will is lost in his will; I have no will of my own.' After a short pause, he said: 'Fifty-two years ago, last December, I gave up my all to God, and I have never taken back the gift. I have been a most fallible creature, and have committed many involuntary offences, but have never willfully departed from God. I have always needed the atonement of Christ, and have trusted in that alone for the forgiveness of all my shortcomings. I feel that I can sing with Mr. Wesley—

"'I the chief of sinners am,
But Jesus died for me.'

"I used to wonder how it could be that Christ could have mercy upon such a poor, miserable sinner as I am, and save me. There was a kind of mist over the subject, but within a few days all this mist has been cleared away. I now see such goodness, such glory, such power—such power'—repeating the word with great emphasis—'in the Redeemer, that there is now no difficulty in it!' We remarked, 'Your spiritual vision is now clear?' 'Yes,' responded he, 'it is plain now.' During the conversation, he remarked: 'Since this dreadful disease struck me, more than a year ago, I have not had one really dark hour, or one pang of guilt.'

"We retired from the room with the strongest feelings of admiration of the humility, the deep and unaffected piety, and the gigantic intellectual strength of our venerable senior Bishop. We have known and admired his real greatness from the period of our first acquaintance with him. But if he was great in the field of action, he is still greater in the hour of suffering, and in the prospect of death."

Rev. T. C. Stanly, a member of the Georgia Conference, and a Chaplain in the U. S. Navy, has been ordered to the Pensacola station. We congratulate that community upon the arrival of that gentleman among them.

Poor Thing!—A Catholic woman lost her rosary, and in her despair cried out, "Lord, have mercy upon me," "Christ have mercy upon me." "I lost my crucifix, and now have nothing but God Almighty to trust to!"

Wanted—A List of Postoffices.—Preachers in charge of circuits within the bounds of our circulation, will much oblige us by forwarding, at their earliest opportunity, a list of the post offices within their charges. Set down, brethren, on reading this, pen in hand, and you can make out directly what will be of great advantage to our office.

Superfluous Ornaments.—The editor does not hold himself responsible for the opinions of his correspondents. This caveat is entered especially in reference to the article on "Wearing Gold." It is admitted for the sake of what truth there is in it. But there are some exceptionable expressions in it. The sermon of Bishop Morris, on the Way to Heaven, may always be read with profit on the subject of "Superfluous Ornaments." It is powerful for making the vainly attired shed off. Jethro certainly does not propose the Israelites, just escaped from centuries of bondage, with their bread troughs and trinkets as models to Christians of this day.

Anti-Lay Delegation.—The Methodists of Philadelphia, opposed to lay delegation, have held a meeting and called a Convention, to meet in that city on the first Wednesday in May next.

Losing Business.—Two of our subscribers have got married, and written to us that one paper will do them hereafter.

College Agency.—Rev. J. W. Fields, agent of the East Texas Conference for the literary institution under its patronage, and now in successful operation at Henderson, Texas, has spent a few days pleasantly with us, and left up-the-riverward, on Monday. The aid he calls for is reasonable, and the cause a good one. He ought to succeed, and we hope he will. We intended this notice last week, and to recommend the excellent agent to the most liberal consideration of the public. It was inadvertently omitted then, and we do it now.

Death of Rev. Dr. Potts.—Reverend Dr. Boyle furnishes the following to the St. Louis Christian Advocate, 31st ult.:

"On arriving at the steamboat landing this morning, after an absence of a few weeks in the South, for the benefit of my shattered health, the tolling of the bell of the second Presbyterian Church announced to me the mournful tidings of the death of its most excellent pastor, Rev. Dr. Potts. With a heart deeply touched, I repaired to the desolate sanctuary, hung round with the sable drapery of mourning, to mingle my tears and sympathies with his bereaved and sorrowing congregation.

"For nearly ten years I had the pleasure of an acquaintance with this eminent minister of the Gospel, and in common with all who know him well, esteemed and loved him for his personal worth, and for his work's sake, and mourn his transfer from the militant church as a common loss, not to Presbyterians only, but a common loss to all who are interested in the spread of the Gospel of Christ, our common Saviour."

A Valuable Pastor.—Under the itinerant system, Rev. Mr. Cummings lately left the Hanover Street Church, the first Methodist Church, in Boston, to go and build up some other part of Methodism. By the way, what a blessing is the system which passes such a man round! The young men, and other friends of the charge, had an interesting meeting with the retiring pastor, in the vestry. After appropriate religious and other services, a presentation took place:

"This consisted of a silver Tea Set of four pieces, with a waitor of papier mache inlaid with pearls, a certificate of life membership in the new organization in this city called the Young Men's Christian Association, and a hundred dollar bank note, enclosed in a letter containing the names of some forty young men, donors of this valuable present.

"The Church had prospered under the labors of Rev. Mr. Cummings. 72 persons had been received on probation during his connection with it, and 82 by letter. 45 have been added to the church in full from the probationer's list. On his going there, the society numbered 344, including probationers. During the time of his connection, 87 or more have removed with certificates and otherwise. At present the society numbers 395, including 35 remaining on trial. During the past winter some 15 persons have professed to be converted, but most of them went to other churches to swell the number of those who would be represented as their converts. The financial condition of the church is much improved. At the commencement of his term, the debt on the property of the church was $27,000. The debt is now reduced to $15,000."

Church Herald.—Our exchange list was welcomely increased last week by the Herald. It is issued at Vicksburg, Miss., under the patronage of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in accordance with the following resolution, adopted by the Convention of the diocese of Mississippi, held in Canton, May last:

"Resolved, That the Revs. Mr. Patterson, and Messrs. Yerger and Smedes, be, and they are hereby requested to commence the publication of a semi-monthly or weekly paper, to be devoted to the cause of the Church; and that we, the members of the Convention, pledge ourselves to endeavor to circulate such paper as extensively as practicable throughout the diocese."

It may be of interest to our readers in Mississippi, and the Southwest generally, to be apprised of the position of this new organ, which promises, from this specimen, to be ably and weightily conducted. On the general subject of teaching the whole counsel of God, the editors say:

"We shall take the Bible as expounded by the apostolic churches of the first centuries of Christianity, and by the Book of Common Prayer, (which in fact is but the embodiment of Catholic antiquity) for our guide."

Baptism is treated in an elaborate article, from which we extract:

"We believe that baptism is one of God's holy sacraments, expressly 'ordained by Christ himself;' that it is the 'outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace given unto us;' that it is 'a means' by which we receive this grace; and is 'a pledge to assure us' that it has been given."

"We believe it to be, in general, 'necessary to salvation,' and so of inestimable importance. 'He that believeth and is baptised, shall be saved,' (Mark xvi. 16) is the expreee declaration of our Lord, in which he himself affixes baptism as a condition of salvation; not as conferring salvation, but necessary for its attainment."

"We believe that in baptism we are made 'members of Christ, children of God, and inheritors of the kingdom of heaven.'"

"We therefore do not believe that baptism is a merely external rite, changing alone the state and relation of the recipient; but we believe it to confer 'an inward and spiritual grace,' peculiar to, and given only in this sacrament, which with great propriety may be called 'baptismal grace;' our heavenly Father having condescended to institute this sacred mystery as a token or pledge to his obedient children, that they have received this precious gift of heaven that flows to man only through this Divine channel."

Southwestern Bible Society.

Mr. Editor: You will please announce to the public, through your widely circulating columns, that Rev. E. H. Hatcher and Rev. John W. Harmon are the duly accredited agents of the Southwestern Bible Society of New Orleans, and fully commissioned to present to the people the great objects of the Bible Society, and especially to solicit aid and co-operation in the erection of a permanent Bible House in this city.

Conclusion of the Matter.—It seems that some of the Southern Conferences are already advanced in the matter of lay delegation nearly or quite as far as the most liberal advocates of reform propose for the Northern Conferences. Zion's Herald, in defining their position in the present agitation, thus remarks:

"We have nothing to add to the few positions we have heretofore so fully discussed, except to remark that the introduction of lay co-operation into the Conferences, as exemplified in the plans of Virginia, South Carolina and Alabama Conferences, would, we believe, be the best mode of experimenting the question."

Florida Conference might be added. It has gone as far as any.

The New Baptist Version.—The Convention favorable to a revised and corrected edition of the English Bible, met in Memphis, Tennessee, 2d inst. Over a hundred delegatee were present from several States, of which Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri and Mississippi were most largely represented. Rev. J. L. Waller, of Kentucky, the champion of the cause, was elected President. We have the history of the first day's proceedings in Memphis Advocate. The "Old Man" pitches into the Convention in the most native style. He does it con amore. They were brave to hold their meeting right under his battery. In reply to an invitation to participate in the proceedings of the Convention, Dr. Page, rector of Calvary Church in the city, replies in a clever letter:

"I must beg leave very respectfully to decline it, and must be pardoned, if, with an eloquent and learned critic, I regard our English Bible as a most wonderful and incomparable work, equally remarkable for the general fidelity of its construction, and the magnificent simplicity of its language."

Our friend and brother, Chapman, pastor of the Methodist Church, also declines, for reasons. Among other telling things, he quotes in his letter of declinature that admirable eulogy of Dr. A. Clarke, on the present received version of the Holy Scriptures:

"Those who have compared most of the European translations with the original, have not scrupled to say, that the English translation of the Bible, made under King James the First, is the most accurate and faithful of the whole. Nor is this its only praise—the translators have seized the very spirit and soul of the original, and expressed this almost every where, with pathos and energy. Besides, our translators have not only made a standard translation, but they have made their translation the standard of our language. The English tongue, in their day, was not equal to such a work, but God enabled them to stand as upon Mount Sinai, and crane up their country's language to the dignity of the original; so that, after the lapse of two hundred years, the English Bible is, with very few exceptions, the standard of the purity and excellence of the English tongue. The original, from which it was taken, is alone superior to the Bible translated by the authority of King James."

College Revival.—Rev. P. F. Auguete, the College chaplain, gives a cheering communication in the Richmond Advocate of a work of grace at Randolph Macon College, Virginia:

"We have been conducting a series of meetings here since last Sunday week. There have been thirty-seven converts up to this time, and others are yet seeking as penitents. We are greatly pleased with the character of this work, as well as with its results. From the first to the present there has been no undue or great excitement. The penitents, we believe, have been as earnest as they could be, and the conversions, as far as we can possibly judge, truly genuine. It is a happy time with us; but generally our happiness in this revival is more of a deep and holy satisfaction than joyous ecstacy."

Somebody speaks of the people of Maine as being in the situation of the "Ancient Mariner" of Coleridge:

"Water, water, every where,
And not a 'drop' to drink."

Studies on Slavery. In Easy Lessons. Compiled into eight studies, and sub-divided into short lessons, for the convenience of readers. By John Fletcher, of Louisiana. Published by J. Warner, Natchez, Miss.: 1852. 8vo., pp. 087.

The public has been advertised of this work, as about to appear, and by the courtesy of the publisher our table is supplied with a copy. The job is highly creditable to Mr. Warner. We are always glad to see, in the South, not only an ability to make books, but to print them, too.

Mr. Fletcher makes his way into the subject by combatting the views of Wayland, Barnes, Paley, Channing, and others. This discussion occupies more than a third of the volume. It is rather diffuse, and not always fair or successful, but shows extensive research, and acquaintance with opposite views, and presents some striking views and statistical and historical facts, carefully gathered. The strain of argument is rather spirited than profound, and the style seldom elevated above pamphlet order. The studies in which the author gives the doctrine and action of the Church, on the subject of slavery, are both curious and valuable. His large book-knowledge comes in well here. The decisions of councils, the letters of popes and bishops, the sentences of fathers from a very early time, are given, and frequently quoted in the original. The compilations on this point are an accession to the literature of this subject, and can only be the result of much labor and learning.

On the ethnology of the subject Mr. F. is not full, but very explicit. Ham, the son of Noah, married a daughter of doomed and marked Cain. The descendants were black, an inferior race, fit only for servants, and slavery is both their fixed condition and their blessing. The philological criticisms are ample and well sustained, establishing the meaning of the Greek word doulos, in the New Testament, as slave. On this point, the literature of the days of the Apostles is investigated at great length, and large proofs adduced.

Such is a very brief and imperfect description of a book, which has been gotten up with becoming toil and patience. We wish the learned author a generous reception with the public.

Quarterly Review of M. E. Church, South. April, 1852. Contents:

1. Remarks Exegetical and Doctrinal, on Gal. iii. 6:21.
2. Power of the Soul over the Body.
3. Life and Correspondence of Thos. Arnold, D. D.
4. Hannah More.
5. Relation of the Church to Missions.
6. The Divine Government.
7. Sketches and Skeletons of Sermons.
8. New Books.
9. Periodicals and Pamphlets.
10. Biblical, Literary and Scientific Summary.

The editor, Dr. Doggett, regards this issue of the Quarterly with just satisfaction. The first article is from the late Moses Stuart, of Andover; the third from Prof. Hardy, of Lagrange College, Ala.—no teacher can read it without having an enlarged and elevated view of his great mission. The fifth is from the elaborate pen of Prof. Sasnett, of Emory College, Ga. Nothing is wanting to sustain a Quarterly worthy of the Church but a proper subscription list.

The Chariot Throne—

A sermon that was to have been delivered before the last session of Tennessee Conference, by Rev. E. H. Hatcher, but his illness prevented. It is very neatly published at the Nashville Advocate office. It is in the pulpit style of the author—fervid, chaste, and often eloquent. Text—Ezekiel, xi. 22.

Minutes of the Alabama Conference.—In reference to the inquiry, "Where can they be had?" I would hereby say to all our brethren that the committee appointed to publish them had fifteen hundred copies struck off, and put up in packages of one hundred and fifty, and sent to each Presiding Elder, of whom they may be had.

Bridgewater Paint: We have had the pleasure of personally inspecting specimens of this paint in the office of Mr. Bogert, 70 Camp street. It seems to be just the thing it is cracked up to be. Yet, it does not crack. The references are known to be the very best. See card.

Two Forms of Doctrine.

"And even among those who make theology a study, there is often one form of doctrine for speculation, and another, simpler and truer for the closet. Metaphysical distinctions are forgot in prayer, or under the pressure of real conviction of sin, and need of pardon and Divine assistance. Hence it is that the devotional writings of Christians agree far nearer than their creeds. It may be taken for granted that that mode of stating Divine truth, which is most in accordance with the devotional language of true Christians; which best expresses those views which the soul takes when it appropriates the doctrines of the Gospel for its own spiritual energies, is the truest and the best." [Dr. Hodge.

This is one of the most remarkable admissions that we have met with; and yet, as the writer spoke from experience, we have no doubt of its truth—so far as it relates to one class of theologians. We have often wondered what the class of divines to which this writer belongs, thought of some of their doctrines, when they saw their utter inapplicability to many of the conditions and wants of man, and what they did with them in giving certain directions and exhortations, and meeting certain objections. Here we are informed, they have two forms! Well, would it not save trouble to drop the useless, troublesome form, and work only with the available one? It would save trouble, and avoid much that has the appearance of double dealing. We have long known that certain doctrines were directly in the way of experimental and practical religion, but we did not think that their advocates thought so. We hope for an improvement.

Paulding District, Miss. Conf.—The P. E., writing on business, concludes:

"I have been around my district once; we have had some good times; at several meetings we have had almost a revival; a goodly number of accessions, and several conversions; the Church revived and strengthened. We have a good church at this place; our Quarterly Meeting is in session here, but it was a rainy time yesterday. To-day we had a very feeling time; the preachers are all at their work, and appear to be men of one work. Our Quarterly Meeting will embrace the second Sabbath in June for Biloxi Circuit.

Yours, J. Nicholson.

Biloxi, April 10, 1852.

Opelousas District, La. Conf.—The P. E., Rev. D. Kinnear, in a friendly correspondence, thus communicates. We rejoice in his spirit, and wish him abundant success in the Lord:

"My own health is very feeble; but I am still able, by great exertion, to fill all my appointments and do all my business. I am happy in God continually, and enjoy perfect love to God and man. On last New Year's day, as usual, I renewed my vows to the Almighty. I dedicated to him my mind, my heart, my body, my time, my wife, my influence, my all; to do his will, his whole will, and nothing but his will; to labor for the public good, and feel my own interest promoted in promoting that of others. Glory be to God for his goodness to me. I believe that much good is being done on this whole district. And we are laboring and praying and looking for a general revival of religion, and God has promised to be with us and bless our labors.

"We purpose to hold a camp meeting on the 28th-31st of May next, in St. Mary's Parish, six miles below Franklin, in a most beautiful grove, containing about ten acres, bounded on one side by the Teche, a beautiful navigable stream of pure water, and on the opposite side by the State road, so that the people can come by water and land. This lovely place is surrounded by the most fertile land, in a high state of cultivation, a wealthy community, the most healthy climate, the most beautiful country, and high-minded, benevolent people, who will, no doubt, contribute amply and do their part nobly, and rejoice and glory in the success and prosperity of our camp meeting. It has been and still is customary, among all people and nations, upon the important interest of the community, to hold mass meetings of the people, and thereby wield a more powerful influence than could be done in any other way. And God required the Israelites to hold the annual feast of tents, or tabernacles, and to dwell eight days under tents of branches, in memory of their fathers dwelling forty years in tents, as travelers in the wilderness, and also to renew the acquaintance, correspondence and friendships of their tribes and families, coming from the several towns and parts of the country once a year, to their great camp meeting. We purpose, in this respect, to follow their example."

St. Frances Street, Mobile.—The pastor, Rev. J. Hamilton, under date of 6th inst., writes:

"We have not seen great results from our meetings, though there have been several conversions, and considerable quickening in the Church. We still continue them, and hope on. I have received twenty-seven into the Church thus far, and expect to receive several more soon. Many of the above number joined by letter."

Macon Circuit, Ala. Conference.

Rev. H. N. McTyeire: Dear Bro.—Please let all Israel know that Tuskegee Circuit has not folded her hands in despair, but that our hearts beat warm for the Banner in the cause of missionary glory and the glory of God.

Dear Sir, at our third quarterly meeting, last year, there was a committee appointed to say what should be done to perpetuate the spirit of liberality in the cause of missions in this circuit; and they reported that the plan of holding two days missionary meetings, at every appointment, had worked so well that they could not give it up for any other; therefore at our first quarterly meeting, held the 3d inst., at Asbury Church, the subject was brought up again. The P. E., Bro. G. Garrett, hoped that the work would not cease, and that some prophets to that effect might be found false prophets, which was sanctioned by all; and after several warm, heart-cheering speeches, the same plan was adopted as the modus operandi of this year also; whereupon I moved that a committee be appointed to arrange the meetings, the preachers to preach the missionary sermon at each place, and say who should be the speakers on these occasions, and that the report should be sent to the S. and the New Orleans Advocate for publication: seconded by Rev. A. F. Moore, and adopted, and five brethren, Revs. W. C. Turner, A. F. Moore, Wm. Barrow, E. B. Zackery and Dow Perry, with the preachers on the circuit, were appointed that committee, and met at 8 o'clock at W. C. Turner's, and made the following arrangement and appointments, which we now send for publication. You will see that there will be two missionary meetings, simultaneously, at different parts of the circuit, one superintended by myself, (Wm. P. Miller) and the other by Bro. J. S. F. Freeman.

Appointments superintended by Rev. Wm. P. Miller.

1. At Pinyac Ch., held May 1 and 3. Sermon, Wm. P. Miller; speakers, E. W. Story, J. W. Motley.
2. Warrior Stand, May 8 and 9. Sermon, Rev. Dow Perry; speakers, R. Adams, Wm. Barrow, A. F. Moore.
3. Mount Nebo, May 15 and 16. Sermon, E. W. Story; speakers, P. Willis, A. F. Moore.
4. Rocky Mount, May 22 and 23. Sermon, E. B. Zackery; speakers, W. C. Turner and Michael Durr.
5. McKendree Ch., May 29 and 30. Sermon, Wm. P. Miller; speakers, Dow Perry, R. Adams, J. W. Motley.
6. Will be our Q. M., held at Mount Zion, June 5 and 6. Sermon, G. Garrett, P. E.; speakers, Dr. Ellison and Dow Perry.
7. Asbury Ch., June 12 and 13. Sermon, Rev. R. Adams; speakers, W. C. Turner, E. W. Story, E. B. Zackery, M. Durr.
8. Notasulga, June 19 and 20. Sermon, W. C. Turner; speakers, E. W. Story, W. W. Broedlove.
9. Franklin, June 26 and 27. Sermon, Wm. P. Miller; speakers, R. Adams, W. Barrow.
10. Cotton Valley, July 3 and 4. Sermon, Wm. Ellison, D. D.; speakers, R. Adams, A. F. Moore, Dow Perry.

Appointments superintended by Rev. J. S. F. Freeman.

1. Society Hill, May 1 and 2. Sermon, Wm. Ellison, D. D.; speakers, W. C. Turner, P. Willis.
2. Loacherpoker, May 8 and 9. Sermon, W. C. Turner; speakers, E. B. Zackery and M. Durr.
3. Soule Ch., May 15 and 16. Sermon, Dow Perry; speakers, Wm. Menefee, W. N. Sears.
4. Perry Ch., May 22 and 23. Sermon, Joseph T. Talley; speakers, J. W. Motley, J. Williams.
5. Texas, May 29 and 30. Sermon, J. S. F. Freeman; speakers, W. C. Turner, W. Barrow.
6. Providence, June 12 and 13. Sermon, A. F. Moore; speakers, Wm. Menifee and W. N. Sears.
7. Baldwin's, June 19 and 20. Sermon, Dow Perry; speakers, Wm. Menifee, J. Motley.
8. Fort Hull, June 26 and 27. Sermon, E. W. Story; speakers, D. Perry, A. F. Moore.
9. Segrest Ch., July 3 and 4. Sermon, W. C. Turner; speakers, E. B. Zackery, W. N. Sears.

For any brother's sake who may wish to adopt our plan, I would say we do not lose any appointment; we go round and round every four weeks, as usual, from one missionary meeting to another, sometimes preaching twice a day. Wm. P. Miller.

"Brevities."

Under this caption, and over the signature of "H," I noticed in the last number of the Christian Advocate a very spicy article—a "brevity, indeed—in reference to the effort Bishop Hughes is making to prove that this is not a Protestant country. I concur most heartily with the writer, that if the Bishop even at the expense of 'words and sweat,' could convince the world of this, it "would be something more than a Kossuth feather in his cap," and might even hasten the coming of that long expected Cardinal's hat that the "old mother of harlots" has been so long holding out to him as the reward of his toil.

But I must say that I cannot agree so fully with "H" in what he says of the Irish poet. He has not been so successful in that case as in the case of the Bishop. Perhaps it may be owing to the fact that "H" is more of a divine than a poet, himself, and may be much more eligible to a seat among the Prelates than among the Muses. But, judge for yourself; speaking of Moore in connection with J. F. Cooper, he says "neither of whom ever planted a virtue in human nature, or wrote a line of permanent value to the race." That Cooper and Moore wrote many things of no permanent value," I am prepared to admit; but, that the latter never wrote a line of permanent value," is strange news to come of us; and very strange it seems to us, when our good Dr. Summers has given us many lines from the pen of Moore in our excellent book of Hymns, with which we praise God from day to day. How could Dr. S. so impose upon his brethren, or come so wide of the mark of what was of "permanent value," I cannot conceive! Now, if "H" was a D. D., I might account for it by the old adage, "doctors will differ."

That "Brovity" about Moore smacks very much of a certain article that appeared some years since in the Southern Christian Advocate on Shakspeare, which called forth from the pen of the then assistant editor of that paper an elaborate editorial in reply. If it should happen to be from the same source, I would suggest that he let the poets alone, but give it to the Romish Bishop as much as he pleases, or Dr. Summers might take up his pen again, and if he does, "H" is perfectly demolished, "used up," as we are wont to say. Dr. S. is too well versed in poetry and hymnology, and too great an admirer of the lofty flow of thought and sentiment that fires the imagination, and warms the soul, to let such assaults pass unrebuked, more especially when several of our best hymns are thereby proscribed as valueless. Watchman's Notice.

Dear Sir: If your correspondent "Watchman," writing from Mobile, would restrict the range of his visual organs, it is probable that he would find some of his own flock wandering; or, rather, drawn by the wizard spell of the "Professor" within the magic ring that circles round the foot-lights of our theatre. But it is more than likely that his mind, being peculiarly wrought upon during the late revival, he feels himself especially called upon to watch over the churches and membership of Eastern Alabama, thinking, doubtless, that the revival influence has dispelled all inclination on the part of his own flock to wander into forbidden paths,

The Movement.

Dr. Summers, speaking of the Philadelphia movement, in the April number of his paper, says if he was convinced that the laity generally were in favor of it, and he could be assured that the lay delegates, when elected, would so attend the Conference as to give each section a just representation, and that there would not be difficulty in defraying the additional expense, he does not see any reason why the ministry should not desire the aid of the laity in the General and Annual Conferences, as well as in the Quarterly. This is sufficiently qualified, we should think, to satisfy almost any mind. But it admits that so far as the writer can see—and who sees further?—the presence and counsels of our lay brethren in our higher ecclesiastical assemblies would do us no harm, and would likely do us good. Who can doubt it, except Dr. Bond & Co.? And the Doctor thought, in 1844, that both his presence and opinions in the General Conference were needed.

April 12. South.

The Great Northwest.—It has been computed that the Northwest Territory belonging to the United States, and now without white inhabitants, if as densely populated as Belgium, would support over one hundred and ninety-seven millions of souls!—Here is food for thought. No one here has any adequate conception of the immense tract of country above us yet to be inhabited. From the rich quality of its soil, good water, and the most invigorating climate, it must some day be filled with people possessing the highest grade of civilization.

The sum of £7291 has been subscribed by the Methodists in England for a testimonial to the Rev. Dr. Bunting and the Rev. Dr. Newton. It has been resolved to give the reverend gentlemen an annuity of £200 each for life, with reduced annuities to their daughters while unmarried.

Methodist Episcopal Conference.—The Philadelphia Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, held at Philadelphia, adjourned on the 2d inst., after a session of nine days. Some portion of its time was occupied in discussing the subject of Temperance, that question being presented in a series of resolutions in favor of the "Maine Liquor Law." The subject was finally laid upon the table, the majority deeming it unadvisable to commit the Conference, as a conference, upon this or any other political measure. The members, individually, it is said, very heartily approved even of a prohibitory law.

General Conference Delegates.—The following brethren have been elected by the Philadelphia Conference delegates to the General Conference of the M. E. Church: Rev's. Francis Hodgson, Levi Scott, John P. Durbin, J. Daily, T. J. Thompson, William Barnes, E. Miller, John Cunningham. Reserves, T. J. Quigley, R. Gerry.

The Stewards reported the amount (embracing the ten cents and Conference collections, the chartered fund, etc.) for the benefit of superannuated preachers, and the widows and orphans of preachers, for the year, was $3200. It was remarked, deprecatingly, that these collections are gradually falling off, and that the Conference could this year only pay 25 per cent. Last year they were enabled to pay 37 per cent, and it was only some half dozen years since they had been able to pay 50 per cent.

The Unforgiven Man.

The bread between his teeth, his daily bar-queting, his sleep and toil, his study and his pleasure, his home and his kin—all are accursed. Like the food of the murmurers who perished, with the quails for which they clamored yet unchewed, we are, if impenitent and unpardoned, but feasting to fill our destined and honored and hopeless places with Kibroth Hatanvah, the graves of lust. Like Dives, the sumptuous fare but ushers in the torment of the parched tongue, and the upward darting of the quenchless and intolerable burning. Unpardoned, our prosperity but fits the glory of Herod, when the acclaim of the mob was yet ringing in his ears, while the writing of vengeance were fastening on the heart—like the feastings of Belshazzar, on whose drunken revelings flashed the cimetar of the Persian slaughterer, and riot lay crushed under sudden doom. Let God withhold what he may of earthly good—health, knowledge, freedom and honor—if he but grant the pardon of sins, and the renewal of the heart, and acceptance in the day of the Lord Jesus. If he but forgive though he give not, then all earthly losses and crosses, however severe, however many, however long, are but the brief and salutary pain inflicted by the skilful oculist as he couches the cataract—a sharp pang, soon past, and letting in at once on the sufferer's eye the flood of new day. But if, on the other hand, my grovelling and covetous heart choose earth and delight the skies; if I virtually say to God, give, only give, but I care not to have thee forgive, then all my treasures and honors and achievements here are but as the tuft of grass which the ox snatches by the roadside, ere it is driven unconsciously to the shambles, a morsel whose sweetness is not long to be enjoyed, and that will not ward off the final death stroke, or lull the agonies of impending dissolution. With an Alexander's sway and an Alexander's fame given me, but my soul not, through Christ, forgiven me, better had it been for me that I had never been born.

The Fall of Rosas—Commerce of Para.

The fall of the tyrant Rosas, whose rule has for so many years shackled the commerce and kept locked up the resources of the Argentine Republic, is an event of the great commercial importance to the United States and the position of South America should at once receive the serious attention of our Government. The mouths of the River de la Plata, the Parana and their tributaries are this change in the destiny of the Argentine Confederation, unlocked to the world, and a field for a highly profitable commerce thrown open. The downfall of Rosas is an era in the politics and interests of South America, which has a hearing on the interests of the United States greater magnitude than any event which has ever occurred in that country. England, with her characteristic promptitude in availing herself of all opportunities of extending her commerce and influence, has already moved in this important matter, and the subject has been brought before Parliament. Although within the few past years, she has through her representatives sought with marked avidity to ingratiate herself into the good graces of Rosas with the view of obtaining in that country a commercial position more favorable than other nations, she is the first to take steps towards circumventing the tyrant's conquerors. Late advices from Europe bring us the intelligence that the English Ministry have already made overtures to the French Government with a view of inducing a joint action in perfecting new and more favorable commercial treaties with the new powers in Buenos Ayres and the Republics lying south of Brazil, and we doubt not that the English agents are now vigorously at work to secure special advantages to their country under the new state of affairs. The enterprise of American merchants, as well known to the world, is the only rival to be feared, and the first steps will be marked by the policy which this knowledge suggests. With these facts before us, our Government should lose no time in looking after its commercial interests and securing a position the most favorable to those interests. Mr. Edward A. Hopkins, our Consul to the Republic of Paraguay, is now in New York soliciting aid in the formation of a company to carry steam navigation into the heart of that Republic, and he has published a pamphlet showing beyond a doubt the immense profits which would inevitably result from such an enterpriss. The monopoly of the steam navigation of the rivers of Paraguay is insured to the first steamer which enters her waters from the Atlantic seaboard, and the Government of Santa Cruz, offers a premium of $20,000 to the first steamer who reaches her waters from the Atlantic, and offers to each emigrant a grant of fifty to fifty square miles of good land. Paraguay abounds in articles of profitable commerce, and she can soon be made a customer for our manufactures on the most advantageous terms.

Condemnation of Dr. King, U. S. Consul at Athens. A letter from Athens, in Greece, announces that Dr. Jonas King, a missionary of the American Board, and U. S. Consular Agent, at that place, has been tried and condemned to fifteen days' imprisonment, and then to go out of the Kingdom of Greece, for having preached in his own house against the doctrines of the Greek church, and also for having published a book against said church. King was defended by two of the ablest lawyers in Greece, and both members of the Greek church; while all the leading citizens testified in his behalf. The priest appeared against him are said to have been of the most vile and profligate character, and appeared to be actuated embittered against him from the fact that he is an American, although he has resided in Greece for 20 years. The prison to which he was consigned is of the most filthy some character, and the gendarmes had to accompany him thither, in order to protect him from popular violence.

John B. Gough, the temperance lecturer, is campaigning in Ohio.

The emigration from Missouri to California is said to have been immense in the past six months.

The wife and children of the Rev. J. W. Lindsay, who is now in Moyamensing prison, on a charge of killing, are subsisting upon charity, in Baltimore.

MARRIED—By the Rev. J. B. Walker, 14th April, Rev. C. T. FRENCH, of Mississippi Conference, to Miss SARAH W. BREWSTER, of Covington, La.

Obituary Notices.

A Father in Israel has fallen. A faithful Soldier of the Cross hae put off his armor and entered into his rest.

The Rev. RICHARD HOLMEE diod on the 8th of January, at 8½ o'clock, P. M., at the advanced age of eighty-two years.

Father Holmee (as he line been familiarly and endearingly called for many yenre) was born in Brunswick county, North Carolina, in 1770. He moved to Georgia in 1805, and settled in Monticello, Jasper county. He was a preacher when he came to Georgia, and had preached for years before, but the writer is unable to learn the date of his license.

He early professed religion, and joined the Methodist Church. He ave in heart and soul a Methodist, and defended the usages of the Church, not only by argument, but also by a cheerful and ready compliance with all her regulations. His life was a triumphant vindiention of the soul-purifying and invigorating effects of a constant attendance on all her ordinances. The class-meeting was his delight, and till his death he never allowed an opportunity to puss of enjoying this means of grace when his strength would enable him to attend. It was to him a precious foretaste of celestial joye. How many might profit by his example!

Father Holmes, as a man, is seldom equalled in all the noble traits that elevate and adorn our race. His unwavering integrity was ever vindicated by all his intercourse in every relation of life. He carried every where the influence of unfaltering virtue. In public and private his influence was ever on the side of Christian morality. He was n staunch democrat of the old school. For several years he was a member of the Legislature of North Carolina, and after he came to Georgia, though he took no active part in politics, but devoted himself with great zeal and energy to the great work of the ministry, yet such was his high standing and popularity that his fellow-citizens honored him with a seat in the legislative councils of his adopted State. He most highly esteemed the privilege of giving a freeman's vote, and, even in his luet years, was ever present to deposit his voto for the various offices of government. He was a Christian patriot. While he was firm and unyielding in his own principles, he accorded to others what he exercised himself, untrammelled freedom of opinion.

As a preacher of the Gospel, Father Holmes wes in former years one of the most popular and effective. Thirty years ugo he exerted great influence over Central Georgia, and the prevalence of Methodism over this region is owing, in no sunll degree, to his exertions. There are many witnesses now living, who were first brought to bow at the altar of God through the agency of his eloquent uppeals. Father Holmes was not what would be called a learned men, but he was a well read man. His knowledge of history was accurate, especially so fnr as it bore upon the Bible, und was often used by him with great effect. His preaching was simple, practical, und energetic. Its power lay in the simple truths themselves, falling upon the conscience in their inked simplicity, unobscured by any worse than useless rhetorical flourishes. His hearers always felt thut he had a message for them, and that he must deliver it.

In conversation on religious subjects Father Holmes was an extraordinary man. He understood the workings of the human heart in all its relntions. He would expose sins in all their hiding-places, and expose with consummate skill the deep-seated depravity of the human heart. He would with great success administer consolation to the spirit of the troubled believer, and pour joy into the soul of the tempted and oppressed.

With no appearance other than that he was uttering the most common truths, he would exhibit with great clearness the profoundest truths of theology. His study was the human heart and the Bible, and his skill was exhibited in using the one to the breaking up and cleansing the other.

The last days of Father Holmee were passed in a stato of unconsciousness. He was attacked very violently, and his mind was soon prostrated by the ravages of disease. During the afternoon of the day on which he expired he countenance indicated much suffering: but, two or three hours before he died u most remnrable chnnge cnme over his countennnce. From the indications of suffering it passed to an expression of the most perfect happiness. It seemed as though he had caught a glimpse of the scene of his futuro joys, or the ministering spirits were hovering around him, and with notes of gladness charming his spirit from its tenement of cluy, and, although his tongue would utter no werd, hie countonnnce expressed to surrounding friends that all was well, and without n' chnuge ho ceased to brenthe, and passed without a struggle from the scenes of time to that bourno whence no traveler returne. His flesh rests in hope.

DIED—Of consumption, at the residence of his father-in-law, John S. Childers, in Pleasent Hill, DeSoto parish, Louisiana, on the 19th March, 1852, HENRY B. HUDSON, in the 29th year of his nge, in truly Christian triumph. He was a nativo of South Carolina, and for the last twelvo months n oitizen of Louisienn. He joined the M. E. Church in his twenty-third year, and during the short period of six years he filled the office of class leeder, steward, Sunday School superintendent, and ever faithfully and willingly responded to any call of public duty that the Church required of him.

For the gratification of distant relatives and friends we deem it proper to enter somewhat into the particulars of our brother's brief history. About twelve month ago he left Georgin, apparently possessing moderate health, to seek a new heme in the West; he reached Louisiana in the spring, and entered with industry upon the arduous labors of an emigrant's life. But unusual, yet unavoidable, exposure to the inclemency of the seasun soon caused his disease, which had only evidenced its presence by premonitory symptoms, now to develop itself in a more threatening form. Such, however, is the nature of that disease, which flatters its victim while it preys upon the vitals, that, by the advice of his physician, he was induced to believe that an escape from the severity of our winters to a more Southern clime would effect a radical cure, or at least prolong his life. Cuba was the place of his choice, and with rather strong hopes of the restoration of his health, he left home on the 16th December, 1851. For a time the change seemed for the best, but this hope was only delusive.

Through the untiring attention and Samaritan kindness of strangers, and one in particular, (whose memory we shall ever cherish) who by chance becamo hie companion, he was enabled to reach again the city of New Orleans February 12, 1852. Here he was met by his family and kind friends, and hurried home to die! Doubtless the the inquiry often arose in his mind as he was rapidly borne up Red River, with his coffin on board, and all the neeessary preparations for hie interment, "Are we almost there?" A kind and merciful Providence, that had attended him in all his perilous and uncertain journey, prolenged his life just long enough to reach home and die. Retaining his consciousness to the very last moment, he gave every evidence that he was fully prepared for the change. Occasionally, seized with shortness of breathing, he thought his hour had come, and shouted "Glory to Jesus! my sufferings will soon be at an end." And when he felt the cold waters of death chilling his extremities, straightening himself and raising his hands, he faintly whispered "Jordan! Jordan!" and fell aslgep.

We shall attempt no eulogy on his character—it needs none. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is pence." R. L. C.

General Intelligence.

New Orleans and Jackson Railroad.

A very large number of our most respectable and influential citizens assembled at the American Theatre Friday evening, to receive the report of the Provisional Committee on the New Orleans and Jackson Railroad, appointed about one year since, and all seemed to enter warmly into the subject of this proposed work, so important to the commercial interests of our city. We regret exceedingly that the crowded state of our columns this morning, prevents us from giving a full report of the proceedings. Mayor Crossmen was called to the Chair, and after explaining the object of the meeting, Mr. Benjamin came forward, and on behalf of the Provisional Committee submitted a detailed report of the steps which have been taken by that body since its organization. From this report it appears that with the advance of five per cent., which was obtained on the $400,000 subscription last spring, surveys have been made, plans drawn, and every preliminary arranged so that nothing now remains to he done but to organize permaneatly and commence operations. Having compared the different lines of survey, including that of the old Nashville road, the Committee has given the preference to a line running up to the river on the back slope of the highland fronting the stream, to Minor Kenners plantation, and thence across through the swamp to the highlands on the other side of the Lake. Forty-six miles of road will have to be built to reach this point, sixteen miles of it running on the highland fronting the river, ten miles through a lower grade, and twenty miles through swamp.

The Committee has been unremitting in its labors, and by a most careful collection of data on which to make calculations, they have been enabled to lay before the public an estimate of the cost of each mile of road through the different kinds of land, which, we doubt not, will vary but little if any from the actual results Going into all the minutiæ of the expense of embankment, wood-work, rails, etc., it is estimated that the first sixteen miles of road from New Orleans can be made for $8760; the next ten miles for $9860 per mile; and the twenty miles through swamp for $18,247 per mile; in the latter the estimate, being made for both piling and embankment. This would make the cost of the forty-six miles, to the high land beyond the Lake, about $618,000. From this point, the whole distance to Jackson, (one hundred and fifty-five miles) the line runs through a level, finely-wooded country, with only two or three short bridges to build, and every facility at hand for a rapid and cheap prosecution of the work. The estimate of the entire cost of the road to Jackson, a distance of two hundred and one miles, is $2,200,000, leaving a margin of $800,000 on the capital stock of the company for the purchase of locomotives, cars, and other appurtenances to put the line in working order. Mr. Benjamin impressed upon the minds of the audience that these estimates were by no means the result of guess-work, but that they were founded entirely on well known data, derived from actual experience. In a brief address, he poluted out in a lucid manner the great benefits which the commerce of New Orleans would derive from the consummation of this enterprise, and the importance of our citizens at once coming forward to its aid.

Crist alias Coleman arrived at Mobile on Monday, and has been committed for trial.

GOOD PRICE SOLD.—A large sale of United States Bank property took place at Mobile on Monday. The bidding was spirited and the lots brought good prices.

ARRIVAL OF CUBAN PRISONERS.—The ship Southerner with thirty-five of the returned Cuban prisoners, who, as we have already published, arrived last evening from New York. The "Lillibuster" in town had a cannon taken on board the ship, and a salute fired in honor of the arrival.

A METEOR.—One of the most brilliant meteors we have seen dashed over our city about 11 o'clock last night. It came from the South, and whirled through the air like a sky-rocket. To those who were on the Levee, the bright and sudden light which it shed was startling.

DANIEL WEBSTER'S WORKS.—The works of Daniel Webster, with a life of the author by Edward Everett, prefixed, have at length been published in Boston.

The reader will be greatly interested in the touching dedications of the several volumes, six in number. Volume one is dedicated to his nieces, Mrs. Alice Bridge Wiggin and Mrs. Mary Ann Sanborn, daughters of Ezekiel Webster, the brother of Daniel; and this not only for the love Mr. Webster bears for them, but from the desire he expresses it, that his brother's name might be associated with his own so long as any thing written or spoken by him should be regarded or read. The second volume is dedicated to Isaac P. Davis, Esq., as "an affectionate and grateful acknowledgment" of warm private friendship: the third to Caroline Le Roy Webster, his wife, as a tribute of his affection, and some acknowledgment of her deep interest in the productions they contain; the fourth to Fletcher Webster, his son, "his only surviving child, and the object of his affections and hopes;" the fifth to J. W. Paige, Esq., as a grateful token of long friendship. The last we copy entire, to show the felicitous manner of these dedications:

"DEDICATION OF THE SIXTH VOLUME.

"With the warmest paternal affection, mingled with deeply afflicted feelings, I dedicate this the last volume of my Works, to the memory of my deceased children—

"GRACE WEBSTER APPLETON,

"beloved in all the relations of daughter, wife, mother, sister, and friend; and

"Major EDWARD WEBSTER,

"Who died in Mexico, in the military service of the United States, with unblemished honor and reputation, and who carved that service solely from a desire to be useful to his country, and to do honor to the State in, which he was born.

"Go, gentle Spirits, to your destined rest;
While I, reversed our Nature's kindlier theme,
Pour forth a Father's sorrow on your tomb
"DANIEL WEBSTER."

KOSSUTH IN CHARLESTON.—Kossuth and suite arrived in Charleston on the 10th, and left on the same day on the Wilmington boat for the North. No excitement or public demonstration attended his reception, and the Courier attributes, in a measure, his early departure to this fact.

A CUSTOM-HOUSE CHAPLAIN.—The Boston Mail says that Rev. Mr. Alvord, who recently resigned the pastoral charge of the Phillips Church at South Boston, on account of ill health, has been appointed by Collector Greeley to act in the double capacity of Inspector and Chaplain of the Custom-house.

THE CONSTITUTION OF CALIFORNIA.—The following is an extract from the report of a committee in the California Legislature, on the Constitution of that State:

"While all were bent upon gathering the golden harvest, and lost to every thing but a rapid accumulation of wealth and a speedy return to their homes and their families, a bevy of hoary politicians locked calmly on the scene; and amid the din of picks and spades, of rumbling rockers, of noisy monte-dealers, and shouting muleteers, conceived the grand project of creating a government, and appropriating the offices incident thereto to their own exclusive use and behoof. A fabric of government conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity, it is not to be supposed, can stand the test of time, the scrutiny of experience, or the touch stone to practical operations."

"THE STATE OF BALTIMORE."—This expression occurs in an elaborate leading article in the Westminster Review, on the subject of "Representative Reform," as does also the statement that each number of Congress represents thirty thousand adult males. Such blunders, however, are quite common in the productions of English writers.

BUENOS AYRES.—Advices from Buenos Ayres, dated March 2, received at New York, state that the city had surrendered to the allied forces, that Urquize had been appointed Governor, and that the troops had sacked and burned many houses.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN SAVANNAH.—The Charleston Courier of Monday says: The steamer Jasper, arrived here yesterday, from Savannah, reported that an extensive fire was raging there at her departure. We understand from a private dispatch, that at about two o'clock yesterday morning flames were discovered issuing from the shed adjoining Mr. C. A. Lamar's Cotton Press in that city, which, the wind being high, spread rapidly, and entirely destroyed Mr. Lamar's warehouse, containing cotton presses, and between four and five thousand bales of cotton. The ships Jane Hammond and Isabella, which were aground at the wharf could not be removed, and we regret to learn that the former was nearly consumed, together with the cotton on board. The Isabella was also injured. Mr. Lamar's sheds and press, which cost $50,000, were only insured for $20,000. His books and papers, which were in an fron safe, were also entirely consumed. He also lost a horse valued at $1500. Messrs. Allen & Ball lost 1000 bales cotton, which, however, were insured. Messrs. G. W. Garmany & Co. lost 800 bales, and Messrs. E. Molyneaux, A. Low & Co., Wm. Battersby, and several other firms had different amounts of cotton destroyed, but we are gratified to learn that all were insured. The total loss is estimated at $300,000. How the fire originated, or what insurance offices are affected, we have not learned.

DEATH FROM SWALLOWING PINS.—The London Lancet records the death of a tradesman's wife from eating pins. Upon a post mortem examination, the stomach was found to contain in its lower half, nine ounces of pins of a purple black color, not corroded, all bent or broken, many very pointed. The contents of the stomach were much thickened. The intestines contained a mass of pins, very tightly packed, of various shapes similar to those found in the stomach, and wholly obstructing the tube. Their weight was about a pound.

THE EXPEDITION TO JAPAN.—The London Times, of the 20th ult., has a long article on the expedition to Japan, which it takes for granted is intended to break up the exclusivism of that Empire, and says if it is carried on in this spirit of humanity, and under the impression that the Government, and not the people, are at fault, Com. Perry will be backed with the sympathies of all European nations. It compares this expedition to the English operations in China, and wishes it the same success.

MINNESOTA AFFAIRS—Polygamy.—The Minnesota Pioneer says: "At every session of our Legislature applications are made by white men to be divorced from Indian wives. One of these cases, the application of a Mr. Reinville for a divorce from Yah-ho-pee, his wife, was indefinitely postponed. It appeared that Mr. Reinville had taken another squaw, since he had repudiated Yah-ho-pee. As applications therefore are likely to come from Mr. Reinville for a divorce, as often as he gets tired of new wives, Mr. Richards moved that the petitioner be invited to remove to Utah, where polygamy is a virtue. On Saturday, the vote to indefinitely postpone was reconsidered, and the case passed through the House, as well as Mrs. Mary Ann Alexander's."

CALIFORNIA EMIGRATION.—All accounts from California concur in the statement that every kind of labor is overstocked, and that thousands of poor young men who have given up comfortable situations to go there, are in many instances reduced to the most humiliating and extreme measures to obtain the actual necessaries of life. San Francisco, and indeed every large city in the State, are thronged with men who are unable to procure a day's work at anything. There are thousands in California who probably will never return to the Atlantic States, but who would gladly do so if they had the means. No man ought to go there without carrying with him the means of returning if he does not succeed.

Foreign News by the Africa.

As early as possible after Easter, or, at the latest, soon after Whitsuntide, ministers will consent to the dissolution of Parliament.

Between 9000 and 10,000 of the engineers have signed the employers' declaration and returned to their work.

The contractor for removing the wreck of the U. S. steam frigate Missouri, sunk in the bay of Gibraltar, reports that all the machinery has been removed except the shafts, which he intended to hoist early in the spring. Nothing is left of the woodwork but her keel and some of her floor timbers. There is now not less than 18 feet of water over all portions of the wreck.

A letter has been received by the Admiralty from Hr. Rae, dated Riddel House, Detroit, U. S., in which that gentleman announces his arrival at the above locality, after a fruitless search for Sir John Franklin. The furthest point reached was 70 deg. 30 m. N. lon., 101 deg. W. on Victoria Land. Arrested by ice, and despairing of being able to push on further, they commenced their return on the 19th August. On their way to the Copper Mine River, they picked up two pieces of wood, the one oak, the other pine; the former something like a stanchion, having a hole through the upper end, through which a chain had evidently passed.

The pieces of pine was certainly the butt end of a small flag staff, belonging to the British service, having upon it certain government marks. It is to be hoped, by the Admiralty for inspection immediately on the arrival of Hr. Rae in England, for whom we may look every day. He has examined about 500 miles of new coast.

A Vienna letter states that the Austrian Government has ordered a severe control to be exercised, in order to prevent the gratuitous distribution of Bibles, which have been sent out to Austria by Biblical societies in London, with a view of making proselytes to the Protestant religion.

The third Royal Levee of the season took place at St. James's Palace on the 24th. The Queen wore a silk train, brocaded with silver, and trimmed with silver blonde and pink satin ribbons. The petticoat was of white satin and tulle, trimmed with pink satin ribbons and silver. Her Majesty's head dress was formed of diamonds, with a green wreath. All the corps diplomatique, including the American Minister with Mrs. Lawrence, were present.

The Committee of Ministers on memorials appointed by the Conference, and several hundred lay gentlemen invited by the President are now in consultation together in London as to the changes requisite in order to give the popular demand for a reform in Methodism.

Arrival of the United States.

EIGHTEEN DAYS LATER FROM CALIFORNIA

The steamer United States, Charles L. Petty, Commander, arrived here yesterday morning from Aspinwall. Sailed Boy, on the 7th, and three days and a night in hours from Kingston, Jamaica. We have been furnished with the following memoranda:

The steamship Whitehall Sept. 21, Captain Coddard made the run from New York to Panama in 25 days, being the shortest passage ever made by any steamer.

We learn from a gentleman who came passenger from San Francisco to Panama in the ship Trade Wind, Capt. Hogood, which sailed hence on the 3d ult., and arrived on the 5th inst., that the passage was very pleasant until the 17th March, when in lat. 16, and 74 W. a fire broke out on board of the ship by the spilling of alcohol in the store room, which caused great alarm among the passengers. The damage to the ship was trifling; one colored person belonging to the ship was burned to death the store-keeper and one of the hands were badly burnt and were left at Panama in the Hospital.

The steamer Sierra Nevada left Kingston at 6 o'clock, a. m., on the 10th inst., with 250 passengers for New York.

The steamer El Dorado left Aspinwall with the treasure of the passengers per steamer California, from San Francisco, April 3, at 6 p. m.

By a regulation of the Post-office Department, the mails can only be forwarded by way of Havana, and as the El Dorado was bound for New York direct the mails were detained for the next steamer. The U. S. Mail steamer Cherokee arrived at Aspinwall on the 6th inst., and left with the mails on the 7th inst., at 6 a. m., for New York and New Orleans, via Havana. This arrangement, says the report of the U. S. Mail Agent, must cause much confusion and annoyance to the commercial community, and especially to the consignees of the El Dorado, as they will not probably receive their letters until six days after the arrival of the treasure.

By the last accounts from Panama there were four steamers in port bound to San Francisco—Winfield Scott, California, Tennessee and New Orleans, which is more than sufficient to take all the remaining passengers on the Isthmus for California. There were also three or four clipper ships bound to San Francisco.

The steamer Tennessee, being the last arrival from San Francisco, with dates to 20th March, no later intelligence was received at Aspinwall after the departure of the Cherokee.

The San Francisco Picayune has the following:

The most important piece of intelligence we have to record, since the issue of the last steamer paper, is the overflow of the Sacramento, American, Yuba, Feather, Mokelumne, Calaveras and San Joaquin rivers, by which Sacramento City, Marysville, Downieville, Nevada and Stockton were inundated. An immense amount of property was destroyed, and there was considerable loss of life.

The waters have completely subsided, and the roads are again becoming passable. The flood was higher than has been known for years, not only in the northern mining districts, but in the agricultural countries at the south. The abundance of rain has given an impetus to mining operations, and it is thought that the loss of property will be more than counterbalanced by the advantages gained from a sufficient supply of water. The effect will be very beneficial to agriculture. A large extent of the finest land, parched by the long drouth, was too hard for cultivation; now it will yield readily to the plough, and save from ruin many a farmer. In some places where the seed was put into the ground, the rain may prove injurious.

The Legislature was still in session. A bill has passed, known as the Cooly bill, by which contracts, made without the State, with Chinese Sandwich Islanders, and other Islanders of the Pacific, for the performance of labor within the limits are made obligatory. There are two such bills before the Legislature. The one limits the contract to ten years, and the other to five. The contract for this labor, if proven oil at $50 per year, is made binding. A public meeting has been held in Sacramento, condemning the Cooly bill in the strongest language.

Full particulars have been received at San Francisco of the terrible fire at Hong Kong, China, on the 20th December. The whole Chinese portion of the town was consumed, and the loss of property is estimated at $4 000,000. A large number of lives were lost, principally Chinese.

Col. Matthews, belonging to a British regiment stationed there, and a lieutenant belonging to H. B. M. ship Hastings, with two other British subjects, lost their lives at a house which was blown up.

Sir Wm. Bromer called a special meeting of the City Council immediately after the fire, at which it was unanimously resolved that no building should be erected of wood or bamboo thereafter, and that the Chinese streets should be of the same width as that of the Victoria road.

From the Isthmus.

The Panama papers contain no local news of interest. The Echo of the 4th inst. informs us that about seven hundred of the North America's passengers were still at Acapulco.

The brig Margaret, from Panama, with one hundred and eighty passengers, put into San Blas on the 19th of March, short of provisions and water, having been out fifty-three days—to sail for San Francisco about the 23d.

The steamship United States left New York on the 20th ult., at a quarter past 3 p. m., and arrived at Navy Bay on the 31st inst., at half past 8 a. m., having completed the passage in seven days and nineteen hours—being the shortest passage to that port or Chagres on record.

The passengers by the mail line that left New York on the 24th March, per steamship Georgia, via Havana, arrived at Aspinwall on the 6th April in the steamship Cherokee.

The United States was the first independent steamer that landed passengers at the railroad, and hereafter all steamers will land at that point, instead of Chagres. Sixteen and a half miles of railroad are completed, and in about one week three miles more will be added, which will reach Buena Vista. The time occupied on the road in transporting passengers to its present terminus is one hour and a half, which saves thirty-six hours' travel by the river from Chagres.

The cars do not run as fast as was intended, on account of the working trains on the road, which in the course of a short time, when the filling in is completed, can be dispensed with.

The fare on the road is five dollars, and two dollars by boats to Gorgonn.

The usual fare from Chagres to Gorgona was from six to ten dollars, and from one and one and a half to two dollars boat hire for landing from a steamer, with at least a small chance of being drowned.

Two wharves are now completed for the accommodation of steamers and other vessels, and two more are soon to be constructed for the American and British lines of mail steamers. The demolition of Chagres has already commenced, and the wharves at Aspinwall are filled with materials of buildings removed from that piece.

The island is about one mile square, or 640 acres; there are at present six houses, and the foundation of another is prepared. It is intended that the new hotel, which is to be 120 by 50 feet, will be fitted up on a scale superior to any in the country. Different points have been surveyed for the purpose of obtaining fresh water, and in the course of a short time pipes are to be laid which will furnish an abundant supply of pure spring water for the city and shipping.

The President of the Railroad Company, John L. Stephens, Esq., and Capt. E. Knight, agent of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, were passengers in the steamship Cherokee for New York, via Havana, on a short visit to the United States.

From Havana.

By the brig Mary Elizabeth, Capt. McDonnell, arrived yesterday, we have received dates from Havana to the 6th inst.

Business was dull, and great preparations were being made for the Royal feast days.

On the evening of the 2d, the little village of Casa Blanca was thrown into a state of great excitement by a fight between the crews of an American and English vessel and some Spanish sailors, whom the former had followed on shore. Considerable bodies of troops were called into requisition to quell the disturbance, and they acted with great forbearance under the circumstances. The English and American sailors being drunk, made a desperate resistance, showering stones into the ranks of the soldiers and severely injuring several of them. They did not fire, but two sailors were wounded with bayonets, one of them mortally. A call was made on the English and American Consuls by the authorities.

Havana is literally full of strangers, and it is difficult to find accommodations.

From Texas.

The Red Land Herald announces the death of Isaac C. Polk, Esq., of San Augustine. He filled the office of Sergeant-at-Arms in the House of Representatives, in the recent Legislature.

The Hon. R. Waters has retired from the Texas Presbyterian, of which he was co-editor and proprietor. His place will be supplied by the Rev. Mr. Guthrie.

PRETEXT.—The San Augustine Herald says that a protest is about being made by the citizens of that place against the high rates of insurance charged by the New Orleans underwriters on freights up and down, the Sabine River.

COURT-HOUSE IN ANDERSON COUNTY.—A public meeting has been held in Palestine, Anderson county, when it was resolved to use the State taxes, relinquished by act of the recent Legislature for two years, together with the county taxes, for the purpose of building a county Court-house.

THAT STEAK.—Some time ago the quidnuncs of New York were much "exercised" in relation to a horse which was advertised for exhibition. The secret of the phenomenon is thus let out: "The horse at New York, with a snake in his eye, it is said, was provided with that lusus naturæ by a celebrated optician of that city. It was a glass eye, filled with distilled water, in which a young eel was placed. An enterprising individual purchased it from the optician, and shortly after the marvelous phenomenon was on exhibition."

In Paris, it is stated to be the law, that the insurer is not liable for any loss upon the policy he has insured, when the fire originated on the premises of the person insured. The potency of this simple clause is supposed to be discernible in the purity of serious fires in that crowded city.

The first California novel is being published at Marysville. It is entitled, "Entowa, or the Mountain Bird," and the scene is laid among the Indians and "diggings." Founded on fact, of course.

Fontenelle, at the age of 97, after saying many amiable and gallant things to a beautiful young lady, passed before her to place himself at table. "See," said the young lady, "how I ought to value your gallantries; you pass without looking at me." "Madam," replied the old man, "if I had looked at you, I should not have passed."

Another Steamboat Explosion.

ST. LOUIS, April 12.

The steamboat Saluda, which left here on the 10th, for Council Bluffs, with one hundred passengers, principally Mormons, exploded two of her boilers while backing out of Lexington. All the officers, with the exception of the mate and one pilot were killed. We have no particulars in regard to the loss of life among the passengers.

Charleston Markets.

CHARLESTON, April 10.

There has been a fair demand in the Cotton market here during the week, and prices have experienced no change. The sales during the week amount to 10,000 bales. The quotations for Middling Uplands are 7½c ₱ lb. The increase in the receipts at all the Atlantic ports compared with those to the same date last year, is 69,000 bales, against 193,000 at the close of last week, and 85,000 at the close of the week before.

The rate of freight on Cotton to Liverpool is ⅝d ₱ lb.

Arrival of the America—One Week Later from Europe—Further Decline in Cotton—Commercial News.

HALIFAX, April 15.

The Cunard steamer America arrived here to-day, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 3d inst. The following is a brief summary of her news:

Liverpool Markets.

LIVERPOOL, April 3.

The Cotton market has been inactive during the week and the sales only reach 31,000 bales, of which speculators took 2000 and exporters 4000 bales. Since the sailing of the Africa, the lower grades have declined nearly ¼d, but the latter qualities have remained firm. The demand has been very moderate. The quotations, as fixed last evening by the Board, are as follows: Fair Orleans 5¾, middling Orleans 4 15-16d, fair uplands 5¼d, and middling uplands 4 11-16d ₱ lb. Western Canal Flour 19s. 6d. and Ohio 21s. ₱ bbl. Yellow Corn 28s. 6d., and white 31s. 6d. ₱ quarter. Lard 49s. Canada 48½.

France.

Louis Napoleon delivered an address on the opening of the Chambers, which excited great attention. He denied ever having intended to proclaim himself Emperor, but stated that he would do so if peace was disturbed by the intrigues of his opponents. He declared his policy to be peace with all the world.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, April 14.

The Senate to-day passed the Bill granting land to the Missouri Pleinkroad Company. Mr. Clark's non-intervention resolution was taken up, and that gentleman addressed the Senate at length in its support. Mr. Cooper next obtained the floor, and pending the debate the Senate adjourned.

In the House, the Committee on Printing reported contracts, with the Republic for doing the Senate printing, and with the Union for doing the printing of the House, the securities of Hamilton to be held responsible for all excess of expense over his contract price.

From Utah.

The St. Louis Republican of the 8th inst. publishes a lengthy and interesting letter from Utah, a portion of which we give below:

Much as the Mormons may have given cause of offence towards the Government officials sent here, yet it must not be forgotten, that the delegation was not suited for this latitude. Secretary Harris was abstinently technical, and Brocchus I have known for the past ten or twelve years to be solely a meddlesome politician of the most itching school. The latter came out here, believing he would certainly return this fall as Delegate; and finding himself thwarted, he most indecorously thrust himself forward at a semi-annual conference of the Mormons, as supreme censor of the mountains. The seditious language then used by the Mormon leaders is without excuse; and there is no denying that with a great portion of the Mormon population there is a deep and intense hatred towards the Government of the United States. This is unfortunately true of the most honest and deserving of this sect, who, under ordinary circumstances, would make valuable citizens in any community. The reasons I believe to be these: both in Missouri and Illinois, that portion of this people who so emunciated themselves as to call down the vengeance of the country to demand the expulsion of the whole body, were small in number compared to the entire sect. The "Nauvoo police," the "Danites," and "Destroying Angels," numbering perhaps, some two hundred, were all who were commissioned to do deeds, the blame of which fell alike upon the guilty and innocent. The masses were blind are kept ignorant of the existence of such bands, and were made to believe that rumors of Mormon depredations solely arose to give color for their expulsion, because of their faith. This idea is fostered, hand together with the remembrance of their wars and sufferings in the first settlement of this valley, make them quite unpatriotic, to say the least.

These bands were formed of the most fanatic and trustworthy among the members, who are at the entire bidding of the "Presidency." If a tell-tale brother, or other person is pointed out, from the right quarter, he is spirited away, and is soon ceased to be held in remembrance. These associations were first formed for the purpose of retaliating upon those in Missouri who had been active in their expulsion, and as their enemies became more general, and the operations widened, now, as the Mormons say God has raised up his kingdom "upon the earth," and restored the "priesthood," the "Presidency" assumes the power of life and death, and these bands are the instruments of judgment. Who they are is kept a secret from the masses, although all are now pretty well convinced of their existence. This potent Presidency is Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards.

Since their settlement in the valley of Salt Lake, they have become bold and systematic in licentiousness beyond any parallel of modern times in Christendom. Up to this time such things have been denied in the cases of the outside world, and their followers are first brought to its notice when they arrive at this point of their journey. Benjamin's expose gives a true account of things as once existing in Nauvoo, but he did not tell the whole truth as regarded himself. He was the originator of almost every thing he condemns in his publication, and for a time he Smith on from one wickedness to another, in using his name for the most damnable purposes, until a blow-up took place between them. There is a strong body of the Church who have remained strangers to these scenes, and who keep aloof from the foul corruptions that exist under the name of pretended sanctity. This party are followers of what they call "old fashion Mormonism," which has been publicly taught; being those whom Smith dared not approach with sentiments that might have driven them away. These are very quiet here, and a apparently sanctimonious things here for fear of consequences. They look upon Brigham's administration as merely a urgency that is to cease when Joseph Smith, Jr., comes to take the place of his father. He is a young man of about twenty-one years, and if he comes on here in the footsteps of his ancestors he will find a host ready to join him.

We are at a loss to understand what measures will be pursued by the government in regard to affairs in the Territory. Public sentiment will surely justify the most stringent action towards breeking down the monstrosities that run riot among this people. I fear the constitutional limits may be a barrier to a perfect cure, but surely the highest prerogative of Congressional legislation ought to be enforced over this territory to redeem it from this sanctified pollution.

One of the Territorial Judges (Snow) has been holding Court in this city for some weeks past. His notorious incompetency makes him the laughing stock of every body. A few Mexicans from Taos, in New Mexico, were arrested, some two or three months ago, for violating the Indian intercourse law. He was some five weeks trying them, and wound it up in a grand legal farce. There is a bill against the government of between one and two thousand dollars for the expenses of the suit, and ought to be paid; for if the Administration will send Iools to preside over our courts, they must expect to pay for it.

We have no less than three Indian Agents residing in this city, who have as pretty sinecures as it is possible to bestow. There is no possible use for them, and they appear to know it, and consequently draw their pay and spend it about town like gentlemen. The Indians in the Great Basin are divided up into small independent bands of from three to a dozen families, and, to have any control over them, there ought to be an agent appointed for each gang, or their mission fails. When will the Government learn a little sense about such matters?

Between this and California, the Indians are said to be very hostile, by the report of parties who arrived here the fall from that direction. On Mary's river, a part of the Pauack tribe, together with companies of Snakes, all from Oregon, have laid in wait for companies passing, and committed many murders last summer and fall. There ought to be a fort established there, until these Indians might be exterminated. We have had no California mail since last September, for the reason, we believe, of Indian hostilities.

There will be a large emigration from here to California next spring, although Brigham is coming down upon those who are likely to go. It has deterred many; but still, we "Gentiles" get whispers of a good crowd who intend to slip off.

There is no money here at all, and we are compelled to close off goods at ruinous sacrifice for stock, hoping to realize the cash by driving to California.

It is expected there will be a large immigration into the valley next fall, and the Mormons intend to put in very large crops next spring. They have a very large supply of grain this year.

The stereoscope, a beautiful optical instrument, by which pictures on a plane assume all the appearance of solidity, with real light and shadow, is the last popularity in England. The instrument is now manufactured in this city.

Shells of galvanized iron (an excellent idea,) are beginning to be adopted exclusively in the English artillery service.

The naval department of the English Board of Trade is determined to enforce the law requiring every English vessel to carry a certain number of life-boats.

One hundred thousand pounds of phosphorus are annually consumed in England in the manufacture of matches.

There are 1,200 omnibusses daily running in London.

Portable barometers, small enough for the pocket, are now manufactured with great success.

The English Attorney General, Sir Frederick Thesiger, married a niece of Major Pierson who fell in the attack on Jersey by the French in 1781. Many of our readers remember the celebrated engraving representing this attack, one of the finest specimens of English art.

The sale of the library of the late King, Louis Philippe, is now going on in Paris; it is expected to last for about a month. It is particularly rich in manuscripts and poems of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries; amongst which the most precious is a famous romance of Perceforest, the only copy existing and which is expected to sell for upwards of ten thousand francs.

If we reprove or chastise before we feel a painful regret on account of the necessity for it, the proper season for doing it has not yet arrived.

A man should never put a fence of words around his ideas, because many who would otherwise give him a fair hearing, lack resolution to climb over such a rugged inclosure.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

YOUNG AGAIN.... Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes.

An old man sits in his high-backed chair
Before an open door,
While the sun of a summer afternoon
Falls hot across the floor,
And the drowsy click of an ancient clock
Has notched the hour of four.

A breeze blows in and a breeze blows out
From the scented summer air,
And it flutters now on his wrinkled brow,
And now it lifts his hair,
And the leaden lid of his eye drops down,
And he sleeps in his high-backed chair.

The old man sleeps, and the old man dreams;
His head drops on his breast,
His hands relax their feeble hold,
And fall to his lap in rest;
The old man sleeps, and in sleep he dreams,
And in dreams again is blest.

The years unroll their fearful scroll;
He is a child again;
A mother's tones are in his ear,
And drift across his brain;
He chases gaudy butterflies
Far down the rolling plain;

He plucks the wild rose in the woods,
And gathers spicy pine,
And holds the golden buttercups
Beneath his sister's chin,
And angles in the meadow-brook
With a bent and baited pin;

He loiters down the grassy lane,
And by the brimming pool,
And a sigh escapes his parted lips
As he hears the bell for school,
And he wishes it never were nine o'clock,
And the morning never were full.

A mother's hand is pressed on his head,
Her kiss is on his brow—
A summer breeze blows in at the door,
With the toss of a leafy bough,
And the boy is a white-haired man again,
But his eyes are tear-filled now!

Foreign News by the Baltic.

We make up the following summary of news by the steamer Baltic:

ENGLAND.

Lord Brougham has laid on the table a bill to reduce the period of 50 days, which by the existing law must elapse between the dissolution and re-assembling of Parliament, to 35 days; and took that opportunity of expressing his hope that something would be done before the dissolution to put down bribery and corruption at elections.

The Earl of Derby had no objection to the bill brought forward by Lord Brougham. With regard to checking bribery at elections, a bill which had been introduced by the late and adopted by the present Government, was now before the House of Commons.

The arrival of Col. Fremont, by the Africa, has excited some interest in the city, and it is expected that he will, without delay, clear away the mystifications that have for so long a period involved the questions connected with his property in California. [London Standard, March 23.

FRANCE AND ENGLAND.

The London Herald gives extracts from notes made by an English gentleman of interviews with the ministers and statesmen in France," which put a new aspect upon the state of affairs in that country. We give a brief extract as a matter of general interest:

"Shortly after my arrival in Paris, I had an interview with M. de Persigny, the Minister of the Interior. M. de Persigny is the confidential friend of the President, whom for years he has followed through all his fortunes with a fidelity surely to be equaled. M. de Persigny spoke with surprise of the preparations for defence against an invasion which were being made in England.

"'Do you suppose, then,' I asked, 'that these preparations are necessary?'

"'Certainly,' he said, 'as far as an invasion on the part of France is concerned, they are perfectly unnecessary. I give you my solemn word of honor, that neither the Prince President nor his ministers have the slightest idea of going to war with England, or indeed with any other country.

"My interview with M. de Persigny lasted a long time, and the following is the substance of what he said;

"The Prince-President and the Government of France are anxious to be on terms of the closest alliance with England. An alliance between France and the despotic powers of Europe is at present more difficult than ever. An abyss exists between France and all absolutist Governments. The Prince-President will not hold much longer the extraordinary powers with which he is at present invested. France will advocate a political and social progression, and an alliance with England is, therefore, the only one suitable for this country, under such circumstances. There is no desire for war, either in the army or amongst the people. It is true that the tone of the English press might have irritated the army and the people to a very serious extent, but the censorship forbids the translation of these articles, and they therefore happily remain unknown in France. In acting thus, the French Government could scarcely have given a better proof of its desire to remain on friendly terms with England. The army and the great mass of the French people are devoted to the Prince-President. The peasantry of France have the same devotion for the name of Napoleon as the Highlanders of Scotland once had for the Stuarts. In every cabin in France you will find a bust or a portrait of the Emperor, and beside it the stripes of a sergeant, the epaulettes of an officer, or the sword of a general; for the officers, generals, and marshals of France sprang from the peasantry. Napoleon is the hero of the people; the name is for them a talisman."

FRANCE.

PLOTS IN FRANCE.—Paris, March 20.—Our letters from the South, says the Paris, state that the secret societies are endeavoring to reconstitute themselves, and that a directing committee exhibits them to do so, by propagating a report that an insurrectional movement is to take place in the southern departments. Lyons appears to be the central point, to which the orders coming from London, Paris and Geneva, converge. The most stringent orders have been given from the Ministry of Police to prevent been excitable from collecting together their scattered remains.

The same journal says:

A search effected at the residence of a demagogical leader of Caen has placed the Minister of Police on the trace of a depot of gunpowder and ball. Severe measures have been ordered against the person incriminated and his accomplices.

The social condition of France in the provinces is represented as most terrible. The actual number of paupers receiving relief, the Government is careful not to publish. It is, however, we believe, admitted to be 1,200,000. but it is thought to be nearer 3,500,000. In Paris, in 1847, there were 181,000 persons receiving charitable assistance. M. Villeneuve gives a list of several towns, in which paupers vary from one-fourth to one-sixth of the total number of inhabitants. The Westminster Review, January, 1851, gives the following conjectural classification of the population, which we fear is not very wide of the mark:

Millionaires	50,000
Rich men	200,000
In easy circumstances	800,000
In moderate circumstances	4,200,000
Gathering a decent but uncertain living,	6,000,000
Gaining a scanty and uncertain living,	16,000,000
Living in extreme indigence	5,000,000
Paupers, thieves and prostitutes	4,000,000
	36,000,000

Whether these figures be exactly correct or not is of comparatively little importance, but there is no question as to the indigence and consequent restless discontent of at least half of the population.

The Moniteur publishes a decree which settles the relations of the Senate and Legislative corps with the President and the State Council, as also the form of oath. It is as follows:

"I swear obedience to the Constitution and fidelity to the President."

Every proposition modifying the Constitution requires the signatures of ten Senators before it be made.

The Senate separates on the reading of the proclamation for the prorogation or the closing of the Parliamentary session.

SPAIN.

Correspondence of the London Chronicle.

MADRID, March 16.—The dismissal of Gen. J. Concha from the governorship of Cuba is the chief theme of comment here at present.

General Canedo, the new Captain-General of Cuba, left yesterday for Cadiz, with Generals Medinilla and Marquesi, who will replace Generals Leymerich and Manzano, who went out with Gen. Concha, and had high appointments under him. Don Castor Canedo, nephew of the General, has also gone out with him in a judicial situation, and is to be also "comer of the press."

In case of the retirement of the Marquis of Miraflores, which some think not impossible, it is said that Senor Bertran de Lis will pass from the House to the Foreign office, and Senor Olivan come into the Home office.

DENMARK.

The Opposition in the Danish Diet has wisely concluded not to pass the address of the King, expressing a want of confidence in the present Ministry, which has formed the subject of a long and animated debate in both Chambers.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

The Hungarian Committee left Vienna in high dudgeon. The Cabinet steadily refuses to make concessions which could militate against the unity of the Empire, and the Hungarian nobles will never support or serve a government whose professed aim is to reduce Hungary to the level of a common Austrian province. "The machinery of Government cannot work," say the Hungarians, "as long as the virtuosity of the nation clogs its wheels, and this will always be the case until its just demands are granted."

FOREIGN ITEMS.

Large quantities of fine oysters have been discovered near Nykioking, at Moroe, Denmark. Lobsters also abound in the same waters, but the people have no proper means of procuring them.

The death of a Parish priest, in a living called Skierve-Bedsaard, has directed attention to the remarkable fact that during the last 110 years the Parish has only had two clergymen.

The Russian Government has hitherto confined its manufacturing energies to its great cities, where, by means of a system of prohibitive Customs duties, it has succeeded in establishing a number of manufactories on a very large scale. It now intends to extend the same theory to the interior. For this purpose it has just announced considerable privileges for those who will build new workshops, etc., in the Governments—such as exemption from taxation for a certain time, freedom from conscription for the laborers employed, and large Government loans at a very low rate of interest. The effect of this will be the still further extension of the Russian manufacturing system, as landholders will be able to employ their own vassals, whose labor costs only a trifle.

MESSRS. A FAZZ FOSY.—According to commercial letters received at Trieste, Messina has been declared a free port, and is much frequented by English and French vessels.

RESURRECTION.—A Horse Killed by a Tiger.—On Tuesday morning as Hylton's menagerie was passing along the road on its way to Lincklins, a tiger burst the iron bars of its den, and bounding into the road, seized one of the horses attached to the vehicle by the throat, from which hold it could not be released until its victim was rendered lifeless. It eventually, by throwing a mass of snow over the ferocious brute, the keepers effected its capture, and consigned it to its cage. [Scotch paper.

SUBSIDIZING TO FRANCE.—M. Gallardet writes from Paris that Louis Napoleon intends to establish a line of steamers from Havre to New York, and one from Nantes to New Orleans, touching at Havana. They are to be in the hands of private companies, but liberally supported by Government.

From Texas.

By the steamship Matagorda, Capt. Forbes, arrived Thursday, we have received dates from Galveston to Friday last, and a portion of our exchanges from the interior although the late floods have seriously interrupted the mails, as half of the bridges in the interior have been swept away.

THE STATE CREDITORS.—The Galveston News says: "The great difficulty which we apprehended our second class creditors would experience in getting their pay, is now realised. The Treasurer gives notice that he has no specie on hand, and that claimants must be prepared to change the $1000 bonds, allowing the interest and three per cent. premium on the same. As regards small creditors, their mode of paying our debts is somewhat like collecting them by law—the trouble and expense is more than they are worth."

CORPUS CHRISTI FAIR.—Preparations for the great Industrial Exhibition at Corpus Christi are going rapidly forward, and the Exhibition promises to be one of much interest.

THE OVERFLOWS.—Although our last exchanges brought us voluminous accounts of the great freshets, it appears the story was not all told. The Brazos river overflowed the whole valley through which it runs, and did an immense amount of damage. The steamer Washington, which has been high and dry in Col. Cuney's cotton field, near Washington, since last spring, has been floated off by the present flood, and is again on the river. The Houston Telegraph says: "The Brazos is so high at St. Felipe that the bottoms are overflowed several miles from the river, and the ferry is impassable. A great many teams have been detained on this side of the river. It is feared that several thousand cattle have been drowned, having been hemmed in between the river and Ham's Creek. The water of the Brazos is remarkably cold, which indicates that the freshet has been caused by the melting of the snow on the northern prairies."

FROST.—The Huntsville Item says that much damage has been done to the young corn and cotton in that vicinity by frost, and that garden vegetables have also suffered severely.

Capt. Lawless, of the steamship Louisiana, has received much praise for the efficient aid he rendered in saving the lives of the passengers and crew of the Independence.

The San Antonio Ledger states that Major Howard, Indian agent, is making active preparations for an expedition to the North Fork of the Llano, where a large number of Indians are collected, awaiting his arrival.

Later from Mexico.

We have dates as late as the 27th ult. from the City of Mexico, and the 31st ult. from Vera Cruz.

EXCITEMENT AMONG THE MERCHANTS.—The merchants of Vera Cruz have resolved not to pay the duty on goods sent to them, or even to act as storage or commission merchants, until Congress shall interfere and destroy the tariff established by Avalos on the Rio Grande. It appears that Avalos' tariff has caused large importations to be made through Matamoros into the interior, rather than through Acapulco or Vera Cruz, to the immense injury of these points and, to the City of Mexico. The merchants unite in denouncing his tariff; and the foreign ministers have presented a remonstrance against it, which has been referred by Congress to the Committees of Finance and Foreign Relations.

FINANCES.—Ramirez, Minister of Finance, proposes to farm out the tariff revenues to individuals, and to let them put down smuggling—to recognise all the just debts of the Republic—and to make their payment a part of the farming scheme.

HOW MEXICO'S HEROES DIE.—The Trait d'Union announces the deaths of three distinguished soldiers—Col. Vicenè Gonsales; Lieut. Col. Pablo Caballere; Lieut. Miguel Cuesta; and says they died of misery and hunger.

ITEMS.—Almost every diligence is attacked and the passengers robbed. Houses are robbed and their inmates murdered almost every day in Mexico and other large cities. One of the popular amusements in the City of Mexico is to fight bears against bulls. Recently one of the former threw himself upon the audience, and killed a man. An electric telegraph line is in process of rapid construction between Vera Cruz and the capital

LABOR IN CUBA.—The Chinese.—The Havana correspondent of the New York Tribune says: "In regard to the prosperity of the island, much complaint exists on account of the scarcity of laborers, which prevents the extension of the cultivation of the sugar-cane. To overcome this difficulty, as the Supreme Government does its utmost to prevent the smuggling in of African slaves, and as the mass of the inhabitants are averse to the increase of this class of mankind, a contract has been entered into for the purpose of introducing about 5000 Chinese, and a commissioner is about to start for the Celestial Empire to engage them. In 1847, about 600 were brought to the island, and although many of this number were the mere dregs of the population of Amoy, the result, upon the whole, has proved favorable, as those who have kept to their contracts show that the Chinese are industrious, economical, and most excellent agriculturists. At first, much evil arose from the overseers not being acquainted with the habits of their new hands, but now that they understand how to manage them, every thing goes on well.

"The Chinese, upon their arrival, quickly comprehended the difference between black and white, and took up their position as whites; nor has their right to do so been denied or disputed for a single moment; but the overseers, who had been accustomed only to direct slaves, had to learn how to treat free, white laborers, and the Chinese assisted them by a few lessons, in which some task-masters were slain, for their harsh treatment of the Celestial gentlemen.

"From what I have seen of this people, besides being industrious and economical, they are extremely shrewd, and far more capable of pushing their fortunes in strange lands, than any other people with whom I am acquainted. They seem to be ready for any employment, and are never at a loss as to how to pick up an honest dollar. Several of those who have come to this island, who have preferred light occupation rather than the labors of the field, have, as doctors, cooks, and barbers, amassed considerable sums; and even those who have been seduced by the temptation offered by play, have shown themselves to be complete adepts; fortune invariably, in the end, leaving them with much of their antagonist's funds, much to the chagrin of the barbarians."

THE JAPAN EXPEDITION.—We give the following extract from a letter of "X." of the Baltimore Sun, relative to the Japan expedition, about which so much is being said:

The expedition to Japan is eminently befitting our present political and geographical position. For the first time, as far as our knowledge of history extends, is a powerful nation of European origin firmly seated on the shores of the Pacific. Hitherto European nations have only sojourned on the shores of that great ocean, but we are now at home, on its vast shores; and from California, as a new focus of modern Christian civilization, a new reformation must spread over the Asiatic Continent. China and Japan may claim the right of continuing their vegetable life and existence; but inasmuch as themselves recognise no public law, applicable to all States and nations as members of the same human family, they cannot properly seek shelter under that law, till they are made to respect it. If a people chooses to throw its vis inertiæ between nations disposed to cultivate friendly relations, and, by interchanging commodities and thoughts, contribute to the general progress and happiness of the human race, the question may well arise whether such an armed neutrality may not itself be considered as a hostile demonstration against those who are thereby thwarted or injured in their common interests.

All civilized nations of antiquity and of modern times have acknowledged the right of hospitality, which is the most universal recognition of humanity in others; China and Japan treat the whole world as barbarians, towards whom they acknowledge no other obligations than those which fear and a regard for their own self-preservation have taught them to respect. To ask such a nation to treat with us, to extend aid and mercy to our shipwrecked sailors, or to grant us the right of way to Asia, or a depot of coal for our steamers, without being armed and displaying power, would be the most ridiculous enterprise of which our government could possibly be guilty.

The Japanese expedition is not large enough for any aggressive purpose of the United States; but it is, in all probability, sufficiently strong to protect us from insult; and that, I opine, is all that Mr. Webster intended. All Eastern nations mistake cunning for diplomacy, and it would be absurd, therefore, to tell them before hand, what we do not mean to do, and what the commander of the squadron is not permitted to accomplish. When treating with a civilized nation which respects ambassadors, we require no fleet; but when treating with hardy semi-barbarous Oriental, cannon and muskets and swords are as necessary as a court-dress, white cravat and kid gloves; and when employed as accessories to a skilful negotiation, scarcely less harmless. Our merchants would never submit to the indignities the Dutch suffer, for the paltry privilege of sending annually three chips to Nangasaki (which number has, in latter times, decreased two, and is now reduced to one,) and the Dutch themselves would not submit to them, if their relations with Japan were not indirectly giving them a prestige, in those seas, of which they, as skilful merchants, avail themselves in their intercourse with the people of the Indian archipelago.

The Japanese are naturally a good natured people, and they have been hospitable, before their jealousies were excited by European rival nations; and it is also shrewdly suspected that the Hollanders have nursed these jealousies, and filled the minds of the Japanese with all sorts of unworthy suspicions toward other nations. Many Japanese nobles, we know, speak the Dutch language, and are acquainted with Dutch literature. They have improved upon the Chinese language of images, by giving these a phonetic value, and are thus better prepared to partake of an advanced civilization than the Chinese, whom they otherwise so strongly resemble. There is no reason, at all events, why the Japanese, who are such apt scholars, should not acquire a knowledge of the English as well as Dutch. The expedition under Commodore Perry may, in this respect, do all the office of Webster's Dictionary.

SUDDEN DEATHS.—Charles E. Maxwell, of Savannah, a student of medicine in Philadelphia, was found dead lie ted on the 4th inst. Mr. R. F. Darragh, formerly Treasurer of the Arch Street Theatre, died suddenly on the 3d inst, of disease of the heart. John G. Wells, formerly the clown of Welch's Circus, died on the 1st inst.

NEAL DOW, THE LIQUOR LAW CHAMPION.—At the charter election in Portland, Me., on the 6th inst., Neal Dow, the celebrated champion of the Maine liquor law, who was a candidate for Mayor, was defeated by over four hundred votes by Alfdon H. Farris, the democratic candidate. The democrats have a majority in the Board of Aldermen and in the Council.

THE CONDITION OF LORD PALMERSTON.—People in general look for Palmerston as lonely as the London correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, and see the impending ruin of his country without hope. Lord Palmerston has been losing in popularity for the last six months, and it might use the well-bright and jaunty. He has just an opinion of a state, for does pick up a great many votes—the wives of a different cut from the other. The noble Lord's old and wealthy age has so removed from inducing flippery as may be. He has a jaunty way of getting along, walks with a brisk step occasionally gives a flourish with his umbrella and suggests the notion, nothing more, of a slight refined swagger.

Very often he puts his lips into a position which would seem to denote that he is whistling confidently to himself; but when alone, whether reading or writing, I understand that the whistling process is no longer kept under, but that his lordship's warbling may compete with a cage of singing birds. Lord Palmerston's cool promptitude and decision and imperturbable manner are well known; but I may illustrate them by an anecdote. My informant was a gentlemen long connected with the foreign correspondence and agencies of the London daily press, and who was also well known in every embassy and consulate from Palermo to St. Petersburg.

At the era of the revolution in 1830, he was at Brussels, and being personally known to Lord Palmerston, was started off express to London with a verbal message from the French party in Belgium, with whose heads he was in communication, that they intended at once to hoist the French flag upon the national fortress. My friend arrived at three in the morning, and at once proceeded to the Carlton Gardens. Diplomatic business in revolutionary times brooks no delay, and in a minute or two the envoy was standing by Lord Palmerston's bed-side. His valet woke him, and his lordship sitting up in bed and rubbing his eyes, recognised the intruder. Ah! Mr. —— so that's you. Well, what news? Where do you come from?" The message was briefly stated. "Ah!" said Lord Palmerston, "hoist the French flag, will they? Well, then, I must give you the trouble of going back to Brussels and telling them from me, that if they do hoist it, their neat job will be to take it down again—good night."

THE TYRANNY OF NAPLES.—The friends of freedom were some time since led into the belief that Ferdinand, of Naples, the cold-blooded tyrant, had almost involuntarily paid homage to the popular sentiment of Europe and the world, and was about to relax the stern and cruel policy which has characterized his reign. All such hopes have, however, been dissipated by recent acts of this second Nero. The following sad tale is taken from a letter to the London Daily News, and obtained by the writer from an eye-witness:

"On the 8th of February, a royal steamer called at Ischia and other island prisons to take up some sixty political victims of the Constitution, among whom were Poerio, Pironti, Braico, Dono, Ericheli, and Nisco, from Ischia. From Procida: Count Castropedino, De Luca, Cavalier Calvello, and other well-known gentlemen. The whole were brought to the arsenal of the city of Naples, chained and ironed hand and foot; and in that state kept from their arrival at sunset until 2 o'clock after midnight, when they were placed in sixteen coaches, surrounded by a strong military force, under the command of the celebrated inspector of police, Campagna. They took the road to Avellino. Here the authorities, on their arrival, sought to get up a public manifestation against the prisoners, but it entirely failed; the inhabitants were moved by profound pity. During this long journey (about 27 miles) they were not allowed any refreshment—neque di sedebitare a più imponti necessitá—nor were their chains for one moment removed. On arriving at Montefusco, some ten miles further on, they were conducted to their cells, unprovided with any sleeping accommodation whatever; nor could they procure any food, but bread and water. The prison of Montefusco is out of the high road, and difficult of access. The relatives of the unhappy prisoners are told they will not be allowed to communicate with the victims."

FROM UTAH.—The St. Louis Republican has news from the Great Salt Lake City to 31st January. The U. S. mail which was due at Salt Lake City on the 31st December, did not arrive until the 29th January. By the arrival the Mormons obtained the first news of the reports which the recusant officers had made on their reaching the States. The return of the mail left them but little time to reply. The reply, however, in an extra, contains an article denying all the allegations of the fugitive officers. In relation to the charge made against Gov. Young, of squandering $20,000 of the public money, it says:

In reply. The Legislature of Utah Territory have caused the purchase of the State-House of Deseret, (often called the Council-House,) in this city, advancing the $20,000 appropriated by Congress for the erection of public buildings in Utah towards payment for the same, and established the capital at Great Salt Lake City until the public buildings at Fillmore City, Millard county, can be completed so as to receive the sittings of the Legislature. The State-House purchased cost $45,000, and consists of two spacious halls and four offices (two of which are occupied by the books of the Utah Library and as a reading room). This is the awful, the unparalleled, the unheard-of, the all-killing, incomprehensible "squandering of Young;" and all by the Legislature of Utah. And for what? That the Territorial Legislature might have a place to do business till a place could be prepared in the centre of the Territory, where the public would be better accommodated. It also explains away the other charges.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.—The St. Francisville Chronicle, of the 10th, says: "The mornings and evenings, for the past week, have been rather too cool to be beneficial to the cotton plant. The plant cane looks remarkably well, but the stubble will produce badly. On many plantations the eyes of the rattoon have been totally destroyed."

The Caddo Gazette, of the same date, says the weather has been very cold lately in that vicinity.

RED RIVER.—Red River is falling rapidly.

NO ELECTION IN BAYOU SARA.—The St. Francisville Chronicle states that no polls were opened in that Parish for the election to decide on the Convention question. The proclamation of the Governor failed to reach the Sheriff in time.

THE COAL FIELDS OF PENNSYLVANIA.—An interesting article respecting the coal fields of Schuylkill county is published in the Philadelphia Ledger. The inexhaustible character of the coal-basins of that Region may be judged of from the fact that one single coal field contains about 80 square miles, and will yield, according to estimates founded on ascertained facts, 1,638,400,000 tons of coal.

THIRTY-FIVE FAMILIES IN ONE HOUSE.—The way some people live in NewYork, would seem to indicate a disposition to gain any place in a storm. Assistant Captain McKenny, of the Third Police District, made a report to the Chief of a house in Hicks street, on the 2d inst., and owned by Jacob Frost, Esq., which is occupied by about thirty-five families, among which are many cases of small pox, spotted fever, ship fever, and other contageous diseases. There were, at the time of the report, two dead bodies lying in the house.

A FEAT IN CHEMISTRY.—During a recent lecture delivered by Professor D. Silliman, Jr., in NewYork, he solidified carbonic gas. This was effected by bringing sulphuric acid in contact with carbonate of soda, in a strong iron vessel, capable of resisting an expansive pressure of thirty-four atmospheres, or five hundred and ten pounds to the square inch! Professor S. stated that this experiment had been given up entirely in France, in consequence of the bursting of several iron vessels, by which several persons had been killed. But he stated that the iron vessels used on this occasion had never been known to burst, and the experiment was considered not at all dangerous. As the liquid (it being in a liquid state in the vessel) was drawn off, a large portion instantly evaporated, and by the evaporation reduced the remainder to the freezing point. In this way several pounds of solid carbonic acid was obtained. It had the appearance of the whitest snow, and was so cold that by holding it only three seconds the hand would be frozen. He placed a portion of it around a long vessel containing mercury, and from this mercury solid! The mercury was then taken out and hammered like lead.

IMMIGRATION FROM CHINA.—The intelligence just received from China, by way of England, represents that the emigration of Chinese to California is greatly on the increase. During the past month six vessels have sailed; ten are preparing to leave, and more are required. Many who had previously emigrated have returned with substantial proofs of their success, and the Chinese are not slow in following the example of their countrymen when money is the inducement.

WRITINGS OF WASHINGTON.—Some time since it was charged in the NewYork Evening Post, that Jared Sparks, in his edition of the Writings of Washington, had materially altered many passages in the letters and journals of that illustrious man, had omitted others, and in several places had even interpolated paragraphs and sentences entirely his own. This charge was adopted by Lord Mahon, in his Recent History of England, and he severely censures Mr. Sparks for having "tampered with the truth of history." These grave accusations have at length elicited a reply from Mr. Sparks, in which he indignantly denies their truth.

FROM THE KINGDOM OF SIAM.—It appears by late advices from Siam that the English and Americans residing in Siam are highly honored. They are allowed to travel about the kingdom at pleasure, erect chapels and cemeteries and enjoy a perfect toleration of religious and of worship.

The new king of Siam is opposed to, too, has recently got married. His Majesty, Phrabat Somdet Phra Chom Klow Chow Yu Hua, having ascended the throne, and being destitute of a Barthaparichorik (favorite wife) he has chosen and appointed as his consort a royal princess of high birth, whom his late Majesty adopted as his daughter, giving her all the privileges and honors of his own child. She has now attained her 18th year, and bearing the name of Phraong Chow Somanat Wathanewasi. She is taken as the wife of the King on the recommendation of the great Council of nobles, lords, rulers, etc., this being the ancient custom.

A RECONCILIATION.—Lord Palmerston and Lord John Russell have made up their little differences and are now the best friends in the world.

ENTERPRISING.—On Monday last the people of Montgomery, Ala., decided, by an average vote of 270 to 155, in favor of lending the credit, and loaning the bonds of the city, to assist in the construction and progress of the various plank road and railroad enterprises immediately connected with that place.

THE EXPLORING EXPEDITION.—Capt. Marcy, U. S. A., has started on his exploring expedition to the head waters of Red River. This is an important movement to the people of Arkansas.

THE STEAM SHIP GREAT BRITAIN.—The Liverpool Mercury gives the following description of the monumental steamship she has become in all her aspects. It says: "And not only have the owners made the vessel last, apart than she was built they have arranged all matters of detail in such a superior manner that she will now be able to carry a much larger cargo than he is responsibly to the extent of 1,200 tons additional. This capacity will be gained partly through the space saved by new boilers, and partly through the construction of a deck house, 300 feet long and 7 feet 6 inches high. The deck house will be used for passengers, and will thus make the lower cabin available for cargo.

New bulwarks have also been erected around the ship at an elevation of four feet six inches above those she previously had, and these will be of further use in protecting the deck house in severe weather, whilst the roof of the house will form a promenade 300 feet long, and perfectly protected from any seas the vessel may ship.

The dimensions of the Great Britain now are as follows:

Length overall	330 feet.
Beam	51 feet 6 inches.
Depth from promenade deck	40 feet 10½ inches.
Capacity for cargo, about	3,000 tons.
Ditto for coals	1,200 tons.

An alteration has been made in the masts of the ship, the number being reduced to four instead of five, as she formerly had, but this in no wise affects her sailing power, as she will be able to spread 6,000 square yards of canvas. Two of her lower masts are iron cylinders, especially constructed with a view to giving them lightness and strength. The two centre masts are rigged as in a ship carrying sails as high as "royals" and the first and last masts are rigged with fore-and-aft sails, as in a schooner.

THE EXPLOSION OF THE REDSTONE.—The Family Mirror gives the following additional particulars of the explosion of the Redstone, near Carrollton, Indiana: "We have just returned from the scene, which is entirely indescribable. Comparatively few, if any, of her passengers were saved. The only officers saved are the captain and first clerk. The former will in all probability die. There were from 60 to 100 passengers, 50 to 75 of whom must be lost. The force of the explosion may be judged from the fact that two Bodies and a part of the boiler were blown more than 1000 yards from the wreck. The boat was just backing out from Scott's Landing. Mr. R. C. Scanland, who got on at this place, was on the forecastle, and, seeing the danger, went to the stern of the hurricane deck, and was by this timely forecast saved. Rev. Perry A. Scott, who was on a visit to his parents, had just gone on board, and his parents and sisters were standing on shore, only to see him blown into eternity."

THE FALL OF ROSAS.—The fall of Rosas, the great Dictator of Buenos Ayres, is being commented on at length, both in England and America. The NewYork Courier and Enquirer deems it the most important event that has transpired in the history of the South American States, since the establishment of their independence. It rejoices that the system of tyranny has been overthrown, and the more, because it has been effected by South Americans themselves, instead of by European intervention. Had Rosas yielded to the diplomacy, or the threats, or the violence which for the last dozen years have been directed against him by England and France, the Courier would have regretted it, as giving to foreign powers an influence over American soil, which would have reduced the famous Monroe doctrine to a practical nullity.

THE CUBAN TRIALS IN NEW YORK.—The case of O'Sullivan and others, charged with getting up a Cuban expedition from NewYork, after occupying the U. S. District Court in that city twenty-four days, was submitted to the jury on the 3d inst. Concerning the assertion of Mr. Van Buren, that the jury were judges of the law and the facts, Judge Judson, who presided, said that they were only judges of the facts, and that it was the sole right of the Court to determine questions of law.

"If the jury should find the accused guilty, it did not follow that they were to be confined in the State prison for three years. The Court did not so understand the law, and in the event of a conviction he would send the prisoners to Kings county jail.

"He trusted that the jury would not be influenced by the consideration that persons charged with similar offences were acquitted at NewOrleans. The jury would remember that they were sitting in NewYork, and not in Mississippi or Louisiana. Judge Judson also referred to Dorr's trial for treason, and said that Durr ought to have been convicted." Up to the time the southern mail closed on the 8d, no verdict had been agreed upon.

Yours, in haste, ATROCIOUS BARGAIN!"

CONGRESS AND THE STEAMSHIPS.—The steam projects, we learn, are to have another chance at this session, and several from which the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Senate were discharged, are now before other committees for consideration. Among these are Moore's modified project for a line of mail steamers between California and China; Tibbatts' project of a line from NewYork to Galway, and Livingston's line between NewYork and Genoa.

THE FLORIDA INDIANS.—The Savannah News of Monday last says: We noticed, some days ago, the capture of several Indians by Gen. Hopkins. These Indians are still at Palatka, under guard, and we learn that one of them states that there is a camp numbering about thirty, in the vicinity of the place at which they were taken. It was the intention of Gen. Hopkins to take a sufficient force and endeavor to capture them.

DIRECT TRADE.—The steamship South Carolina was to sail from Charleston for Liverpool on Wednesday last. Her cargo is valued at $80,000.

EMANCIPATED.—A Mrs Ware, of Frankfort, Ky., recently deceased, has by her will emancipated all her slaves, about thirty in number, and has provided for the purchase of about thirteen hundred acres of land lying on the Miami canal, on which they are to be placed.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S HOUSEHOLD.—The London correspondent of the National Intelligencer says Lord Derby has not ventured to repeat the experiment made by Sir Robert Peel, in requiring the ladies of the Queen's household to be dismissed. The Duchess of Sutherland (Mistress of the Robes) has resigned, and has been succeeded by the Duchess of Athol—the Mistress of the Robes being the only lady attached to the royal household whose office is vacated on a change of Ministry. This is undoubtedly a small business; but yet upon the Queen's refusing to change the ladies of her household in 1839, when Sir Robert Peel was forming a new administration, that gentleman declined the task, and the Melbourne party were reinstated in power.

NEWYORK ART-UNION.—Recorder Tillon, of NewYork on the 5th inst., in his charge to the grand-jury, urged the indictment of the Art-Union, on the ground of being a lottery. On the other hand, Judge Duer has decided in favor of its legality.

THE FUGITIVE ACT.—A dispatch from Harrisburg, dated April 3, says: "The House last evening passed to a third reading, by a vote of 55 to 28, the bill from the Senate repealing the sixth section of the act of 1847, prohibiting the use of the jails of this commonwealth for the detention of fugitive slaves."

BUILDERS CENSURED.—The coroner's jury in the case of the falling buildings in NewYork, whereby three lives were lost, have returned a verdict severely censuring the careless manner in which they were put up, and the improper material used—Brooke and Burton, the builder and owner, have been arrested to await the action of the grand jury.

INTERESTING.—Mrs. Swissheim, the editress of the Saturday Visitor at Pittsburgh, has recently become a mother for the first time after a marriage of fifteen years, and following up her practice of writing about every thing, her family affairs of course included, she makes the baby the subject of an editorial.

SEARCH FOR SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.—At our latest dates from England, the small screw-steamer, fitted out by Captain Beatson, to proceed in search for the missing Arctic expedition by the way of Behring's Straits, was declared ready for sailing. The proposed field of search is East of the meridian of Behring's Straits, towards Keller's discoveries in 1849, Herald Island and New Siberia. Captain Beatson takes out autograph letters from the Emperor of Russia, recommending the expedition to the commanders of the Russian outposts at Siberia, and other Muscovite settlements, and desiring them to promote the object in view to the utmost of their power.

DON CARLOS DE ESCANA.—This individual, who once figured in NewOrleans as Spanish Consul, and whose part in the abduction of Rey, is well known to our citizens, has been appointed by the Queen of Spain as Consul General of her Majesty, to Cairo, in Egypt, where he arrived on the 10th of January. He was also received with official honors. That is the right kind of a country for him.

SINGULAR CAUSE OF SUICIDE.—Mr. Warren Cobb, of Mansfield, Mass., aged sixty years, hearing the other day that his old friend, Leonard Everett, Esq., with whom he was intimately acquainted from boyhood, had committed suicide, became so affected that he immediately left the presence of his wife, and in an hour afterwards was found hanging by the neck a corpse.

The following recently appeared in the N. Y. Independent, as a sequel to the sublime poem of Tonnahawis, by some one who certainly has achieved a fine imitation of the style of Bryant. Many will be deceived by it

A VISION OF IMMORTALITY

I who essayed to sing in earlier days,
The Tonnahawis and The Hymn to Death,
Wake now the hymn to immortality.—
Yet once again, O man, come forth and view
The haunts of Nature; walk the waving fields.
Enter the silent graves, or pierce again
The depths of the untrodden wilderness.
And she shall teach thee. Thou hast learned before
The lesson—and her hymn of Death hath fallen
With melancholy sweetness on thine ear;
Yet she shall tell thee, with a myriad tongue.
That life is there—life in uncounted forms—
Stealing in silence through the hidden roots—
In every branch that swings, in the green leaves,
And waving grain, and the gay summer flowers—
And gladden the beholder. Listen now.
And she shall teach thee that the dead have left
Life to awaken in more glorious forms—
And that the mystery of the seed's decay
Is but the promise of the coming life.
Each towering oak that lifts its living head
To the broad sunlight, in eternal strength,
Goes to tell thee that the acorn died.
The flowers that spring above their last year's grave
As elegant with voice of life and hope—
And the green trees clap their rejoicing hands,
Waving in triumph o'er the earth's decay!
And not alone shall flower and forest raise
The voice of triumph and the hymn of life.
The insect brood are there!—each painted wing
That flutters in the sunshine, broke but now
From the close cerements of a worm's own shroud.
Is telling, as it flies, how life may spring
In its glad beauty from the gloom of death.
Where the crushed mould beneath the sunken foot
Seems but the sepulchre of old decay.
Turn thou a keener glance, and thou shalt find
The gathered myriads of a mimic world.
The breath of evening and the sultry noon
Bear on its wing a cloud of witnesses
That earth, from her innumbered caves of death,
Sends forth a mightier tide of teeming life.
Raise then the hymn to Immortality!
The broad green prairies and the wilderness,
And the old cities where the dead have slept.
Age upon age, a thousand graves in one,
Shall yet be crowded with the living forms
Of myriads, waking from the silent dust.
Kings that lay down in state, and earth's possessors
Resting together in one fond embrace,
The white-haired patriarch and the tender babe,
Grown old together in the flight of years.
They of immortal fame and those whose praise
Was never sounded in the ears of men.—
Archon and priest, and the poor common crowd.—
All the vast concourse in the halls of death,
Shall waken from the dreams of silent years
To hail the dawn of the immortal day.
Ay, learn the lesson. Though the worm shall be Thy brother in the mystery of death!
And all shall pass, humble, and proud, and gay.
Together, to earth's mighty charnel-house.
Yet the immortal is thy heritage!
The grave shall gather thee! yet thou shalt come,
Beggar or prince, naked as thou wentest forth,
In rags or purple, but arrayed as those Whose mortal puts on immortality!
Then mourn not when thou markest the decay
Of Nature, and the solemn hymn of death
Steals with a note of sadness to thy heart.
That other voice, with its rejoicing tones,
Breaks from the mould with every bursting flower.
"Oh grave! thy victory!" And thou, O, man,
Burdened with sorrow at the woes that crowd
The narrow heritage, lift up thy head
In the strong hope of the undying life,
And shout the hymn to immortality.
The dear departed that have passed away
To the still house of death, leaving thine own.
The gray-haired sire that died in blessing thee,
Mother, or sweet-lipped babe, or she who gave Thy home the light and bloom of Paradise,—
They shall be thine again, when thou shalt pass,
At God's appointment, thro' the shadowy vale.
To reach the suddigh of the immortal digns
And thou that gloriest to lie down with kings,
Thine unowned head now lowlier than their's
Seek thou the loftier glory to be known
A king and priest to God—when thou shalt pass
Forth from these silent halls to take thy place
With patriarchs and prophets and the blest
Gone up from every land to people heaven.
So live, that when the mighty caravan,
Which halts one night-time in the Vale of Death,
Shall strike its white tents for the morning march,
Thou shalt mount onward to the Eternal Hills.
Thy foot unwearied, and thy strength renewed
Like the strong eagle's for the upward flight.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Recollections of Bishop Bascom.

BY ONE OF HIS STUDENTS.

[Fourth paper.]

We have already referred to the versatility of his intellectual powers. He filled any sphere of thought or action upon which he entered with great ability. Whether in the pulpit, in the lecture room, in the President's chair, in the halls of Congress as chaplain, or as the advocate at the bar of public opinion of the Southern Church and the Southern people, solidity and success characterized him. Had he entered the army, he would have ranked with the greatest captains of modern times. Had he become a practitioner of law, the bar would have known few superiors. Had he entered the counsels of the nation, his statesmanship would have commanded the respect and admiration of the world. But the pulpit seems to have been the place for which nature, circumstances and education peculiarly fitted him. While in another sphere he would have compared respectably with any, here he has had few superiors, in ancient or modern times.

A German writer, in a criticism on King Lear, says, "Of the heavenly beauty of Cordelia I do not dare to speak." A feeling very similar is ours, with reference to the pulpit powers and performances of Dr. Bascom. It is very difficult to speak truthfully, without, in the estimation of many, speaking extravagantly. Those appreciative spirits who have heard him under favorable circumstances, will object to our delineations on the ground of tameness—a falling far below the truth; others will object on the ground of exaggeration; a representation applicable, they think, to no man of modern times. Nevertheless, we shall give the impressions produced in our mind by his preaching, feeling that the most enthusiastic descriptions capable of being given of Dr. Bascom in the pulpit, would be downright soberness, compared with the subject to which they refer.

The first time I heard him was from the text, "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." The sermon was extemporaneous. I was told it was a failure. To me, however, it was a garden full of glorious beauties and blooms, a firmament crowded with stars. His introduction was interesting and short. It did not require that he should blunder through a long and tedious introduction, to lash himself into fury, as is sometimes the case. When you supposed him but just begun, he startled you with a splendid thought, or sentence. Mind, heart and eye, then, began to kindle, until the whole man glowed like a breathing furnace. At times the flash of his eye was almost insupportable. As he entered more fully into his subject, his excitement became awfully intense. Every nerve, every feature, every finger, and even every hair seemed pregnant with emotion. His whole nature was stirred, as with the sweepings of a mighty tempest. For about an hour and a half he so enchained and delighted me, that I almost doubted whether I was "in the body or out of the body." Much as I had heard of his gigantic pulpit powers, the half had not been told. Some of his sentences rang in my ears for days. The sermon has since been published, in a far more perfect form, than he then delivered it, yet more than half its greatness is lost in the absence of the noble form, the flashing eye, the speaking gesture and excited manner of the speaker. It adds no little to the pleasure of its perusal, to call up his appearance while delivering it. Thus I think, would he have dashed through this eloquent sentence! Here would his blazing eye and emphatic voice have sent a thrill of delight through his awe-struck congregation! How would this sentiment and gesture startle you, as though you had seen an apparition!

The next time I heard him was on "The Death of Christ"—again extemporaneous. This time he failed most signally; owing, I think, to his attempt to preach without his manuscript. It was not until I heard him the third time that I had a fair specimen of the preacher. He read his discourse throughout. It was on "The Triumph of Christianity over Death." I was awed and overwhelmed with a sense of the grandeur of the theme and the ability and power with which it was presented. His majestic form rocked to and fro, like a mountain in the grasp of an earthquake. The most profound and interesting views, the soundest argument, the clearest and most searching logic, the most enrapturing eloquence rolled in one blended torrent, from the beginning to the close. When he concluded, every spiritual tendon ached with the intensity to which it had been strained. The wing of the spirit was worn and weary with following him through his long sweeps. I seemed to have just awakened from a gorgeous dream. I could hardly realize that I was still on the earth, amid the every day affairs of life. It seemed an impertinence to speak of common things. The whole aspect of earth seemed changed. Spiritual things were viewed in new and far different relations. God was nearer, heaven was brighter, hell was darker. Christ was sweeter, salvation clearer, and death less dreadful than they ever seemed before. He poured such floods of splendor on the valley of death, that it seemed more like a highway strewn with roses and arched with rainbows, for the passage of the good to the ineffable Presence, that like the cheerless waste of shadows it is generally represented to be. The passage of the good through it seemed like a triumphal march, bright with the radiance of heaven and melodious with the songs of angels.

As a general thing, I object to the practice of reading sermons. After hearing him, however, several times with and without his manuscript, I was more than willing to make an exception in his favor. With all my prejudices, I greatly preferred to hear him read. He himself disliked the practice, and deplored the necessity under which he was placed to resort to it; for with him it was a necessity. It was either read, or fail. He seemed constitutionally inepacitated from preaching otherwise with success. Perhaps one time in ten he succeeded pretty well; not oftener. This lack of extemporaneous power did not obtain alone in his pulpit performances. We have already noticed it in his prayers. Whenever required to announce some action of the faculty, or other matters of importance, though it occupied but two or three minutes, he usually wrote out the announcement in full and read it. His address to the graduating class he invariably read. Perhaps, on this account, he rarely ever took part in discussions on the Conference floor. When he addressed the Conference at length, he used a manuscript. He seems to have feared to trust himself to speak at length, on any occasion, without previous, thorough preparation.

It might be interesting to notice the reasons for this strange peculiarity in one so eminent, and whose early life as an itinerant minister would seem to have superinduced a development and cultivation of extemporaneous power.

His ability to extemporize is said to have been great, in former years. We are rather inclined to the opinion, supported by rumor, that those magnificent sermons which gained him so much celebrity then, delivered without his manuscript, were nearly, if not entirely, committed and recited. Of course this habit, if he pursued it, was too laborious to be continued, when other and excessively arduous duties crowded upon him. His incapacity for delivering successfully, without his manuscript, may, perhaps, be partly accounted for on the ground of his peculiar organization. Though possessed of a good constitution, and ordinarily in the enjoyment of good health, his was the most delicate and excitable nervous system I have ever known. In the presence of such congregations as he always commanded, under the pressure of such tremendous subjects as he usually chose, his whole nature was wrought to the highest pitch of excitement. He could not think at all without thinking most intensely and powerfully. When, therefore, he endeavored to extemporize, to pursue a train of thought, and at the same time choose fitting words in which to clothe his thoughts, the effect on his nervous system was most fearful. Every energy seemed sprung to the utmost, in the conception and execution of every sentence. After the most intense action of mind in the conception of a thought, followed the most powerful effort of body and voice to give it adequate utterance. The effect of this upon such an organization may well be imagined. The conception and utterance of such thoughts as his always were, prostrated both the physical and mental man. Before he had proceeded a third of the way through his sermon, his weariness began to be apparent. His spirit would begin to flag. You could perceive a falling off in the greatness of his thoughts. His manner became more hurried and less graceful. By and by he began to pause between his sentences. Sentences that required to be uttered immediately in succession, in order to sense and effect, were alternated with long and painful intervals, during which he leaned on the desk, with his head resting on his hand, sometimes for half a minute. A feeling of disappointment came over the congregation, and their admiration was lost in their sympathy for the infirmities of the speaker. These pauses increased in frequency, until before the close they would occur at nearly every third sentence. Sometimes he has been compelled to sit down, before the conclusion, from sheer exhaustion. This difficulty could only be avoided by writing in full and reading. True, this excited him in a most extraordinary manner, but not so as to interfere with a successful delivery. All who were in the habit of hearing him, far preferred to hear him with, rather than without, his manuscript.

In the wholesale denunciation in which many of us indulge with reference to the use of manuscript sermons in the pulpit, we seem to suppose that reading and dullness are synonymous. And here we err. True, most readers are lifeless in their delivery, but not necessarily so, we think. Those who read without animation would extemporize without animation. Do we not sometimes read thoughts from others which sends the blood tingling through the veins? Why, then, should not our own; when read in the presence of a congregation of listeners, awaken feeling in our bosoms and impart it to others? There are truly exceptions to the rule by which we condemn the practice. Dr. Bascom was one in an eminent degree. Though the thoughts of some of his sermons had long been written, yet when he essayed to give them utterance, he felt them gush warmly over his heart with much of the power of their first conception. Such a nature as his could no more come in contact with such thoughts as his, without intense excitation, than could powder with flame without an explosion. As far as the tones of his voice were concerned, his manuscript produced no injurious effect. They were just as full and emphatic as though he were preaching extemporaneously.

His manner was peculiar to himself. He copied no one, followed no rules. He simply resigned himself to the influence of his subject. When preaching, he seemed all mind; that is, the mind possessed absolute control over the body, so that the movements of the latter were exact representatives of the ideas which possessed the former. His gestures were not always graceful, but exceedingly appropriate and expressive. However irregular the curves of his arms, or abrupt the motions of his head and body, nothing was out of place. There was such a fitness between the thought and the gesture, that you could perceive no impropriety in the latter. And is not this the secret of true and successful oratory? Does not the whole effect depend upon the correspondence between the thought and the gesture? Artificial rules have spoiled more speakers than they ever improved. How vast the difference between a noble, natural orator, like Dr. Bascom, and, to use the words of another, "a well dressed youth, in gown and bands, with elaborately arranged hair and elaborately-balanced periods, and start theatric practiced at the glass, setting about the destruction of the universe, deliberately snuffing out its stars like tapers, nipping his match to the pillars of the globe, springing a mine under its cities, wiping away its oceans as easily as with cambric handkerchief, he does the sweat drops from his lady-like brow, and closing with a smile of supreme complacency, by quoting the words of Robert Montgomery:

"Creation slumbers with sublime dismay.
And he a blazing tempest whirls away."

Sometimes I have observed him, when near the close of a magnificent sentence, throw himself up to his full height, look his congregation fully in the face, stretch his arm out at full length, and repeat the remainder with thundering emphasis. The unexpected movement startles and electrifies the whole congregation. At such times he has seemed to me like an archangel all appareled in celestial light.

His voice was unfortunate. In his early days it was full, musical, and of great compass; but the violent straining to which it was subjected seriously impaired it. Still, however, there was something unearthly and thrilling in the husky whispers with which he dashed through the most terrible portions of his subject, and in the sublime outbursts with which he sometimes startled and delighted you.

His general manner defied all imitation. I have often met with mimics of great men, but with none who could successfully mimic him. He who attempted an imitation in the pulpit, only succeeded in making himself ridiculous.

His enunciation was exceedingly rapid, perhaps too much so for the profit of his hearers. Few have ever been able to remember much of his sermons. Before the mind had fully grasped one great thought, its attention was called to another.

The language of a late writer, of rare powers, is as truthful as it is beautiful, when he says "his eloquence is a river of fire, a flood of light, a cataract of diamonds, a whole heaven of rainbows." Passing his ministerial novitiate amid mountainous wilds and interminable forests, he learned the language of nature from her own lips. In solitary glens, amid beetling cliffs, in the deep silence of the trackless wilderness—he heard her voice in murmuring streams, in roaring cataracts, in rushing rivers, in lowering storms. From these scenes he gathered images of freshness, beauty and power. Profoundly versed in classic lore, in history, mythology, philosophy and poetry he had at his command every thing with which genius and art had strewn and adorned the past. These images from nature and from books he brought into requisition, to illustrate and enforce the teachings of Holy Writ.

The writer above quoted calls his eloquence "a river of fire." Rather say an ocean of fire, rolling under the breath of the storm. When he spoke of hell, with several fierce and terrible touches, did he lay bare its lowest deep and roll up the burning vision of the damned. When he spoke of heaven, a few words, and bowers bloomed with celestial roses, multitudes of glittering wings waved before you, and the immortal hills trembled under the burden of sport and song. He spoke of virtue, and it stood before you an angel of surpassing beauty. He spoke of vice, and it painted itself on your mind a shape of hideous loathsomeness, never to be forgotten, and to be forever hated and shunned.

When you followed him into his first elevation, you began to fear lest he should not be able to sustain himself at a height so dizzy. But as he proceeded, you soon lost all apprehension. Each flight was above the former. And when so high that you are almost breathless at his strange daring, you find his wing still unworn and his eye still undimmed. Then the glory of his theme began to be more fully unfolded. He soared at once into "the highest heaven of invention," and never stooped again throughout. It was like the pealings of that trump which "waxed louder and louder." The grandeur of his theme and the terrible momentousness of his mission entirely possessed and interpenetrated his whole nature. He could not stoop to commonplace. With such views as were his, of the God-like sublimity of the truth he presented, he could not do otherwise than tax all his energies to their utmost to unfold it. He seemed "a trumpet filled with the voice of God, a chariot of fire carrying blazing tidings, a meteor kindled at the eye and blown on the breath of the Eternal." The splendid ornaments with which he so profusely adorned his sermons, were not intended simply to delight his audience. It was according to the constitution of his nature to speak loftily and eloquently. He must speak thus, or be silent. His soul was burdened with inner visions of splendor, and the forms in which they found utterance must be proportionately splendid. What cared he for the petty niceties of style—for those arbitrary rules of criticism which told him such utterances were in violation of good taste—so he rolled out the burden of his soul on the heart and mind of his congregation.

In judging of his weightier merits, one error there is danger of falling into. The abundance and brilliance of his metaphors attract attention from his other peculiarities, and you are apt to regard these as his chief characteristic and excellence. You admire his imaginative at the expense of his reasoning powers. His originality of thought and expression—his clear and profound glances into truth—his strong sense and his logic are overlooked in our admiration for the freshness, splendor and power of his imagery. Yet a close attention to the staple of his thought will show as much to admire in his strong, crushing argument, and clear, logical inductions, as in his eloquence and beauty. All his figures will be seen to have a solid basis. Look at his celebrated "Protest," and his works on "Methodism and Slavery." With what clear lawyer-like precision does he lay his premises and draw his conclusions! Those who can not appreciate the logic which burns and blazes under the kindling power of imagination, in his sermons, can find satisfactory proof of his argumentative power in these truly great works: for here you have the argument without the imagery, as the subject admits of none.

His powers of generalization were great. Arguments which with others required pages, were disposed of by him in a few strong sentences, which gave a comprehensive view of the whole. And sometimes premises, argument and conclusion were all blended in one splendid metaphor, so that the close observer knew not which to admire most, the appropriateness and beauty of the dress, or the originality of the thought and argument which it conveyed.

Some of his sermons are above criticism. You might as well undertake to criticise a thunder storm. Especially are those who have little or no sympathy with his peculiarities unprepared to sit in judgment on them. To all such may be said, "Procul, procul, este profani." His style has been condemned. It is said his sentences are heavy and lumbering; he uses too many compound and strange words; he strives too much after the intense in thought and expression. We answer, his sentences are just such as his ideas required; and who would not prefer such sentences, burdened as they are with thought and feeling, than smooth and measured prettinesses, full of common-place and emptiness. His words must be strong and numerous, when called to be pillars to support such massive piles of thought. Take out any of his words, change any of the compound to simple ones, and the stately edifice totters to its fall. We have said he can not think without thinking intensely; and if he thinks intensely he must speak intensely. His sermon was not a polished shaft moving in a straight line, but the zig-zag lightning, with bellowing thunders and ragged foldings of storm. In mercy to some of his hearers, it would perhaps have been better not to have soared so high, and to have somewhat tempered his effulgence. For how can the sparrow look at the sun? The greater the darkness the more acceptable to owls. But as he did not feel under any obligations to furnish such persons with brains as well as thoughts, he did not choose to do so. If there was excess, it was excess of glory. If you were dazzled and blinded with the insufferable blaze, you knew that it was the pure light of genius, kindled at the altars of heaven.

The general effect of his sermons was breathless and wrapt attention—no outward manifestation a few years. He produced thought rather than feeling. One occasion constituted an exception. This time he reached the hearts of his hearers, and shouts of rapture rose and tears of joy flowed all over the house.

Most vigorous and telling were his attacks on infidelity. He literally "ground it in the whirling mill of his logic." Its strongest arguments were torn into shreds and cast to the winds.

One interesting circumstance especially prepared him for this. He related it to us once in the recitation room, in nearly the following words: "When quite young in the ministry, my mind became unsettled with reference to the evidences of Christianity. Having never thoroughly investigated the subject, I was not satisfied of the divinity of the system. Without hinting my state of mind to any one, I determined to enter upon a minute and impartial examination of it. I solemnly and sincerely resolved, if after this I still remained unsatisfied, to give up my profession and retire from the ministry forever. I procured and read the best works on both sides. As I proceeded, the light increased, until Christianity shone forth, a sun high in the heavens. I was satisfied. Not a lingering doubt remained. My faith was founded on a rock."

How well calculated was such a course to fit him for successful combat with infidelity in after years! Many other things we might notice, with reference to his pulpit peculiarities; but we forbear. Suffice it to say, we never knew his equal, and we never shall look upon his like again. Alas, his trumpet is silent. The world shall never hear its spirit-stirring blasts again. Yet its sound still lingers in the ears of thousands, and will until death puts the seal of deafness on them. We trust he has only exchanged his trump for a lyre. And if, when in a body of mortality, the former poured such notes of thrilling sweetness on the ears of men, now that he dwells in the beatified state, what ineffable music may we suppose flows from the latter!

CONCLUDING REMARKS.

We have finished these desultory notes. Much we have left unsaid. We fear we have been presumptuous in attempting such a subject. If, however, we shall have led any one into a more satisfactory apprehension of the character of a truly great man, we shall not regret the task. By the by, where is the expected life of Bishop Bascom? Bishop Andrew and Dr. Henkle have each been requested to become his biographer. Both of these are eminently qualified for such a task. To either it would be a labor of love. No matter who does it, so it be done by one whose intense sympathies with his characteristics as a theologian and a literary man will secure him his proper position in each department.

And his works? Why is their publication delayed? Let us have them as soon as possible. They will be read by thousands who never saw their author. They will give him a higher position than he has ever yet occupied. His fame is destined to increase with coming years. He will yet be ranked with the greatest men of modern times. North Carolina Methodists.

"Many, very many, of our most intelligent and pious members, are not satisfied." [President Deems

Mr. Editor: I was much surprised to find the above statement in an editorial of the February number of the S. M. Pulpit, in which an important change in our Church government is warmly advocated. The editor is in favor of a lay representation in our General and Annual Conferences, and in his zeal has made some strong assertions, and brought grievous charges against Mr. Wesley, and Methodism generally, in its present form. I was surprised especially to learn for the first time that there was extensive disaffection to our present form of Church government, among our most intelligent and pious members. I have traveled pretty extensively, as a minister, in Alabama and Mississippi during the last fifteen years, and have been associated with many intelligent and pious members, both in the laity and local ministry; and I have never heard a complaint uttered against our church government, by the membership, on the above ground. It appears pretty generally understood by the Methodists in this country, that the Methodist Protestant Church has clearly demonstrated the superiority of the old plan, in point of efficiency, in the great design of spreading Scripture holiness through these lands. While the latter is full of life, energy and activity, successful and prosperous, the former appears to be, comparatively, inefficient, and is manifestly in a declining state.

If a lay representation is so important to the prosperity of Methodism, why have we no better demonstration of its utility in that system which was got up, almost exclusively, on that very ground? Facts are stubborn things, and facts go to prove, to a demonstration, that notwithstanding "John Wesley did not make government a special study," he has, under God, originated a system of church organization which has proved unequalled by any other that has been devised for the spread of the Gospel.

The M. E. Church is an organization peculiar to itself; it is not a system which originated in the wisdom of men so much as in the providence of God. It has grown into a system gradually, until it stands before the world one of the most perfect and efficient systems of church government now in existence. It is a government in which laymen and ministers both voluntarily relinquish a portion of their rights, for the more effectually securing the benefits of an itinerant ministry, and the general good of mankind.

No one is compelled to become a member of this Church; it is a voluntary association, for mutual benefit; and if any think it an oppressive form of government, they are at liberty to withdraw, and adopt one more agreeable to their views of liberty and orthodoxy. One would suppose that among themselves in this free and happy country, numerous modifications of doctrine and discipline that may now be found in the various churches of the land, any one might find a system to please him, without endeavoring to remodel and change the features of one that is so acceptable to its vast membership as that of the M. E. Church, South. But the great improvement that a lay delegation would make! We live in an age of progress; our Church is no longer composed of "sooty colliers, servants," (but, by the by, we have a good many servants in the Church yet,) and "uncultivated persons." We have "Presidents and Professors in Colleges, Judges of Supreme Courts, Senators, etc." We are great folks: we are "a Church." It is well he did not say "The Church." John Wesley was "a Tory and an Autocrat," and his church does not suit our enlightened age and polished manners and liberal views. We must remodel it and adapt it to its present greatness, and lay delegation will be the means of concentrating our dignity. We shall get some of these judges, presidents and counsellors into our Conferences, and these will give us dignity in the eyes of the world. And with all their worldly wisdom and professional learning and "polite associations," Methodism will be something at last!

To be serious, the reason why many Methodists are opposed to the agitation of radical changes in our system of government, is not because they suppose the system, as set in motion by Mr. Wesley, is free from imperfection, but in its great features and principles it has proved itself most admirably adapted to its great and professed design. It works well, and we are not assured, by any means, that the innovations proposed would improve it, but on the contrary, facts and observation have proved, so far as it has been tested, that the contrary would be the result.

Our present system has worked well for a hundred years, and is working as successfully and efficiently to-day as it did at its organization; and as successfully, and with as little "friction in working," in the United States, as in the country of its origin. Then why should we be disposed to give up a well tried and gloriously successful system, for a newly conceived bantling, springing, like the fabled Minerva, full grown and fully equipped from the brain of some modern Jupiter, who has discovered that he possesses a talent for government far in advance of Mr. Wesley, who was but a mere novice in such matters, and not to be compared to the wonderful geniuses of the present age?

Our good brother says, "We can very readily see that a government suited to the sooty colliers of England, servants, and the uncultivated, who had grown up amid all the peculiarities of an aristocratic country, might hardly be fit for a church among whose laymen are Presidents and Professors in Colleges, Judges of Supreme Courts, Senators, and men liberalized by professional learning and polite associations." He should recollect that the Methodists were not all sooty colliers, etc., in Mr. Wesley's day; there was the same diversity of talent and rank as at the present day, though perhaps we may have more of the higher ranks now than then; but there were some "of the first families" in Mr. Wesley's societies. And again we are not all Presidents and Professors and Judges and Senators now; we have some sooty colliers and hard-handed laborers, and, thank God, a great many of them, in our Church now.

The very best evidence that Methodism is of God, and that it is founded in wisdom, is the fact that it is adapted to the masses, and that it reaches and embraces sooty colliers and servants, as well as Presidents of Colleges, Judges, Senators, etc.

As well might he argue against the whole Gospel plan, because, in its origin, its disciples and preachers were obscure and illiterate, as against Methodism on the same ground.

Methodism is a system founded upon the Gospel plan, devised in the spirit of sanctification, demonstrating the most intimate acquaintance with human nature, and precisely adapted, if carried out in all its details, to accomplish its noble design, "the spread of Scripture holiness." The advancements in science, intelligence, wealth and worldly distinction do not change human nature; it is the same in the palace as in the cottage, and the Gospel and Methodism are adapted to human nature, without regard to the distinctions of society.

If the design of Methodism was to elevate and glorify a sect, to give it popularity and worldly influence, perhaps some of the popular changes suggested might not be amiss; but this is not its object; it has a higher and nobler aim; and this it is daily accomplishing, and we need no radical changes to make it more successful.

He seems to reason as though he thought the motive influencing the opposers of change was an apprehension of surrendering rights, as though the love of power moved them in this opposition. I am far from admitting that such is the case. We wish to perpetuate a system that is doing well, and fear to introduce radical changes, lest they may eventuate in anarchy, arrest the progress of the Gospel, and seriously injure the cause of Christ.

As for tyranny, I have never seen it or felt it in the M. E. Church, of which I have been a member upwards of twenty years.

All the objections to the M. E. Church which Professor Deems brings up in regard to power of ministers and rights of laymen, have been fully discussed in the old radical movement; and the M. P. Church has been erected to meet the wishes of those who feel that they do not have power enough in the old church. Why should we be again agitated by such a question, which has been settled by the organization of that Church? Let our great men, who do not like Episcopal Methodism, join the Protestants, and let us go quietly on in the work of saving souls.

Whenever the Methodist ministers become tyrants and oppress the people, they will find it out, and can very readily relieve themselves of the yoke. But when the Methodist Church is in a prosperous condition, and the people are satisfied with their rights, and the ministers are laboring faithfully to promote the interests of the Church, it is a little strange that a few should be dissatisfied, and attempt to create a disturbance.

In one respect the Methodist Protestant system is more liberal than Professor Deems would make ours; for he seems to make no provision whatever for the local preachers; they are to be left without any representation. It is to be entirely a lay representation. This will not please the local preachers; he ought to recollect that there are some great men among them as well as among the laity, and ought to bring them in also.

I am sorry to hear that the North Carolina Methodists are so disaffected to Episcopal Methodism, and rejoice much that in this country we have no such disaffection. I presume, however, that if a few more of our talented editors would take up the subject, and use the same style of invective against our Church as President Deems, they might succeed in producing agitation, which might do a good deal of harm to the peace and prosperity of the Church.

Yours, GEORGE SHAEFFER.

The Press vs. Temperance.

It is a melancholy truth, and one which is reluctantly entertained, that the political press stands averse to the noble principle and cause of Temperance. This mighty engine for good, or fearful scourge for evil, moulding the opinions of communities and controlling the destiny of nations, lifting them up to virtuous thought and generous action; or plunging them into the cesspool of vicious practices and degrading vices, stands in a hostile attitude to a cause which is vital to the interests and well being of any people. There are many generous exceptions here and there, noble souls, whose hearts swell high with the kindlier sympathies of human nature, who stand upon the ramparts of society and sound the tocsin of alarm, warning the multitude against the cursed evil of intemperance, and by their very acts giving evidence of having the real good of the community at heart.

But the secular press, as a general thing, give unmistakable evidences of being in the opposition, and wholly astray upon the great principle of Temperance, and either openly or tacitly lend their aid to the support of a vice which numbers its victims in every circle of life, sapping the prosperity and peace of society, and spreading an unhallowed blight over the retirements of the domestic circle. From accumulated evidences that rise on every hand, and of every day occurrence, we make the charge, that the press is unfair, unjust, and shamefully derelict on this subject.

In proof of this position, we could swell this paper to a volume, and then throw down the gauntlet and challenge them to show that they have not acted with great duplicity. There is scarcely a paper in this State that will not, with a great show of sincerity, assume a position somewhat like the following: "We are warm friends to Temperance, and there is no one who would like to see the cause prosper more than ourselves;" and then, after this casual profession of ardent friendship, labor with fair-fetched and strained arguments against any attempt to stay the evil; and at the very same time repel, with insulted dignity, any insinuation that they are dealing unjustly and unfairly with this great principle.

Let the constituted authorities of any town, parish or State, with all honesty of purpose and sincerity of motive, seek in some measure to promote the prosperity and peace of their respective communities, and to protect, as far as lay within their power, the vested rights of many a citizen, who has been literally cursed in his property by licensed violators of law both human and divine, and forthwith the presses of the land heave and groan and travail in birth, to counteract the good which is sought so be accomplished. And as to the editors, their words are as smooth as butter, when with a seeming satisfaction they profess themselves devotedly attached to the temperance principles, but war is in their hearts, when with cringing servility they seek to ridicule and overthrow wholesome ordinances. Professing themselves to be lovers of Temperance, and in favor of good laws, yet studiously avoid using any one argument in favor of either, but devote their columns to tortured arguments against any law, however judicious and wholesome, and presume to hold up to censure good and worthy citizens, who would legislate to protect the life, liberty and happiness of many a suffering citizen and distressed family.

We urge the argument, that the press, as a general rule, is unjust, and shamefully derelict to the temperance principle, and should be held to a strict responsibility. Why, let us go search out the history of the press in Louisiana, that for a series of years have been throwing out their papers, falling like so many thousands of snow-flakes over the land, and we challenge you to produce three columns of editorial going to show the evils of intemperance, the fearful curse it has imposed upon us, and in a bold and fearless manner calling on all true philanthropists to rise up and arrest this terrible scourge. But one thing you can find, column after column, and sneer after sneer, and multitudes of paragraphs, all tending to retard the temperance principles. Not a manly defence is to be found from the pen of any editor; and if perchance an article is to be found at all, it appears as a communication in reply to ungenerous and illiberal attacks.

But let us take an example in proof of the general tenor of our argument.

A rum seller steals a few dollars from a poor family, and the whole community denounce the wretch and his villany. The editors of the secular press write pointed articles against the violator of vested rights, and demand that justice shall be meted out to the culprit; and should the officers fail to comply with their duty in the premises, they are soundly chastised in the columns of said papers. In fact such is the state of feeling in regard to the man, that not a voice is raised in his favor; he is an infamous

BIRD OF THE SOUTH.... By Rev. A. B. Meek.

Bird of the South! though thy beautiful pinions
Have flashed on mine eyes like the wings of a star,
And I ne'er have beheld, save in fancy's dominions,
A phantom of light so exquisitely fair;

Though thine eye is as soft as the blue of the heaven,
Thy motions in grace like the stoop of the breeze,
Though round thee a halo of beauty is woven,
That brightens, like moonshine, thy home in the trees;

Yet, bird of the South! strange, beautiful vision,
'Tis not for these charms that I follow thy flight—
There still is about thee a spell more Elysian,
Than all that have flashed on my wondering sight.

Last eve, as I mused by the door of my dwelling,
While the stars through the trees like spirit-lamps burned,
I heard, in the distance, a music excelling
All, all that my fancy of music had dreamed.

It rose on the air like the hyma of an angel—
It fell on my heart like a silvery rain—
It banished the sorrows that darkened my manhood,
And brought back the brightness of Eden again.

Oh! wild as the dream of the wondering prophet,
Were the raptures that song to my breast did impart;
I saw the bright ladder descending from heaven,
And felt the good angels come down in my heart.

That song was thine own, sweet bird of the distance—
Bird of the South! that wild minstrelsy thine;
Thine, thine is the art that can sweeten existence
With the spell of the angels—with music divine.

Then, bird of my own land, pour forth thy wild numbers,
And gladden the sky with its Sabbath again!
Though bright are thy pinions, the music that slumbers
In the breast of the minstrel more homage will gain.

CATHERINE OF RUSSIA.

(Translated from the French, by Anne T. Wilbur.)

[The following is given for the value of some historical points in it. Catharine's was a strong character and the study of such charaters is profitable But the dark bigotry which dictated her saying that—"Pity to heretics was cruelty and cruelty pity," would forever disgrace a better name. The moral philosophy and the historical facts of writers of this school need to be seperated like wool from flesh. Ed.]

Born in a village near the town of Dorpat, in Livonia, Catherine could receive no inheritance from her parents, but their virtues, and the secret of finding contentment in a peaceful and simple life. Early deprived of her father, she remained alone with her mother, who was suffering from the combined evile of age and poverty. Both dwelt in their natal cottage with earthen walls and roof of straw; and there, far from the eyes of the world, the young Catherine, by the labor of her hands, supported her mother, whom years and infirmities rendered incapable of labor. While Catherine spun, the old woman, seated beside her, read some pious book; then, when the toils of the day were over, these two humble females, reposing by the fireside, with the contentment which indigence borrows from labors ended and daily bread gained, gaily shared a very frugal repast.

Her features, the whiteness and delicacy of her skin, her form, her gait, were models of perfection; and admiration, at sight of so many charms, knew no bounds. But the beautiful young girl seemed to be attentive only to the culture of her mind. Her mother had taught her to read, and an old Lutheran minister had instructed her in the doctrines of religion and taught her to love its duties. Natnre had endowed Catharine with a ready imagination, united to a solid judgement, and an intelligence as correct as powerful. The assemblage of so many of the qualities which make the accomplished woman, brought Catherine nnmerous proposals of marriage from the neighboring peasants; but all were politely refused. Cntherine loved her mother too tenderly to dream of separating from her. Thus, the purest of virtues, filial piety, prevented her who was to share the throne of Peter the Great, from becoming the wife of a Livonian serf.

Catherine was but fifteen years of age when she had the misfortune to lose her mother. She then left her cottage and went to ask an asylum of the Lutheran minister, from whom she had received her early instruction. She remained in his humble dwelling as governess of his children, and, in this new position, won admiration by two qualities rarely united—consummate prudence and surprising vivacity of character.

The worthy minister, who looked npon her and loved her as one of his children, had her taught music and dancing by the masters who gave instruction to his own family in these arts; and the young girl was rapidly adding to her natural graces the acquired talents of a good education, until the death of that excellent man who had been to her a father. This event again plunged Catherine into her primitive poverty. To complete her misfortune, Livonia was, at this period, the theatre in which war was extending its ravages and spreading misery everywhere. As it is especially on the poor that such calamities fall most heavily, the unfortunate Cathorine, although endewed with all the advantages which render a woman accomplished, experienced all the sufferings of hopeless indigence. Food, and all the comforts of life, becnaling daily more rare in the province, and the little finances of the orphan having been soon exhausted, she took at last the bold resolution to repair to Mariembourg, a great city, where abundance reigned.

She therefore started on foot, carrying under her arm her scanty wardrobe, wrapped in an apron. In order to reach the end of her journey, she had to traverse a country naturally poor and barren, and now rendered still more so by the Swedes and Russians, who by turns, conquerors and conquered, pitilessly ravaged the unfortunate land. Bnt hunger, more imperious than the fear of fatigue and still greater dangers, urged Catherine to brave them.

One evening during her solitary journey, she was about to enter a farm-house beside the road, to ask there a shelter for the night, when she was suddenly seized by two soldiers, who insulted her, and would perhaps have proceeded to still more disgraceful treatment but for the arrival of a young officer, who at once took the part of a defender. At sight of their commander the soldiers fled, and the surprise of Catherine was equal to her gratitude, when she recognized in her youthful deliverer the son of the Lutheran minister who had been her teacher, benefactor and friend.

This was for Catherine an encounter not less pleasant than fortunate. Nothing now remained of the little sum she possessed on quitting the house of the minister, and her clothing, piece by piece, had served to pay for a supper and a bed in the places through which she had traveled. Moved by her distress, her generous countryman shared with her his scanty savings, that she might buy other garments; he procured her also a horse, and gave her letters of recommendation to M. Gluck, who had been the intimate friend of his father, and was then superintendent of Mariembourg.

The beautiful stranger had but to appear to be warmly welcomed. She was immediately admitted into the family of the superintendent as governess of his two daughters. Although she was then only seventeen, Catherine showed herself capable of forming and instructing her sex, not only in virtue, but in manners. Such was the effect produced on M. Gluck by the beauty and intelligence of the young girl, that a short time after he had admitted her to his house, he offered her his hand, but to his great surprise, the young villager, portionless and unprotected, thought it her duty to refuse. Guided to this step by a sentiment of gratitude, she had resolved to have no other husband than her deliverer; although he had lost an arm and was disfigured by wounds received in battle. So much virtue was to receive its reward; she had already, for love of her mother, refused the hand of a peasant; for the man whom she loved she now declined a brilliant position. But she is not to be the wife of a superintendent or of a poor invalid officer; it is decreed that she shall be sovereign of one of the greatest empires in the world. Resolved henceforth to avoid all solicitations of the kind, as soon as the young officer came to Marienbourg Catherine offered him her hand, which he joyfully accepted, and their marriage was celebrated according to the rites of their religion and the customs of the times.

The very day of the marriage of the two young Livonians, the Russians besieged Marienbourg; the husband was summoned to defend its walls, and undoubtedly lost his life there, for he was never heard of more. The grief of the young girl was deep and sincere, like the affection which had led her to prefer this union to any other.

Meanwhile the siege was carried on with fury. Inflamed on one side by the obstinacy of a despe[rate] resistance, on the other by an ardent thirst for vengeance, the war between the two most [illegible] nations of the North was at this period [illegible] barbarous; the fearful peasant and [illegible] maiden sharing the same fate with the soldier taken arms in hand Marienbourg was taken by assault, and such was the fury of the assailants that not only the garrison, but almost all the inhabitants, men, women and children, were exterminated.

When these sanguinary conquerors were weary, when the carnage ceased, Catherine was found concealed in an oven

Until then she had known only the sufferings of poverty, which had at least left her liberty—the only wealth of the poor. This she was destined to lose and experience the hard lot of a slave. In the midst of this new misfortune, she displayed a pious resignation to the decrees of Providence; although she had lost her early vivacity, her beautiful face still expressed a gentle gayety. The fame of her noble qualities and her resignation reached Prince Menzikoff, a general of the Russian army, and inspired him with a desire to see her.—Struck with her rare beauty, the Prince purchased her from the soldier to whose share she had fallen, and placed her under the care of his sister. She received all the respect due to the dignity of her conduct, and each day her beauty developed in her new and fortunate position

A short time only had passed away after the entrance of Catherine into this noble family, when Peter the Great paid a visit to the Prince. Catherine, bearing on a plate some dried fruits, which she served to these illustrious personages with charming modesty and grace, passed before the Emperor, who, in his turn, was struck with her beauty. The powerful monarch, disturbed by this gentle apparition, returned the next day to the house of the Prince, asked to see the beautiful slave, addressed several questions to her, and was surprised or rather delighted to find her intelligence even more perfect than the charms of her person. Motives of political interest had compelled Peter, while young, to a marriage in which there was no sympothy; the sight of Catherine inspired him with a resolution to joarry this time according to his teste and inclinations. He immediately wished to know the history of the beautiful Livonian, who was not yet eighteen. Peter followed with lively interest, through all the phases of her obscure and sorrowful existence, the unfortunate and perfect young girl whom he found to have been great and noble every where and under all circumstances. The lowness of extraction of Catherine was not, for such a man as Peter, any obstacle to his project. Their marriage was celebrated without pomp or display; and the Prince declared to his court, who were more or less persuaded of it, that virtue was the surest guide to the steps of a throne.

Behold, then, Catherine is emerged from a cottage with earthen walls and roof of straw, to become Empress of the greatest empire in the world. She who was formerly a wanderer and poor and solitary, is now surrounded by thousands of coartiers who find their hopes in her eyes, and their happiness in her smile. She who was formerly deprived of the most simple food for her morning or evening repast, had now but to express a wish, to shed abundance over whole nations.

She always retained the great qualities which had raised her to the throne, and while the extraordinary Priace, who was her husband, labored to civilize the masculine part of this immense empire, Catherine, on her side, applied herself to soften the manners of her own sex. She had much to do, in the state in which the manners and minds of the Ruselen people were at this period. This may be imagined by the following curious extract from regulations made by Catherine an the establishment of mixed assemblies, that is to say, re-unions of men and women, who before, in Russia, never met in company, after the example of the Orientale. The women were reduced to the condition of sloves; Catherine wished to make them free, like those of the rest of Europe.

She commenced by changing the national costumes, for which she substituted English fashions. Instead of furs, she introduced taffety and damask; the coiffures, called cornettes and commodes, took the place of the caps of sable. But changes more important followed those of costume. The women ceased to be shut up in separate apartments; they were admitted into company reciprocally, paid visits, and their presence became indispeasable to all entertainments.

The laws promulgated by Catherine to obtain these results, being imposed on a people then savage, are now a curious monument which can not be read without a smile; to entirely do they confound our simple notions of social life. But for the Russians, under Peter First, these laws were well adapted to their rude manner of living, and their object was less to ronder them polished, then to bring them together for their own pleasuro.

I. The person at whoee house an assembly is to be held will announce it by a writing on his door, or by circulating some other public advertisement, addressed to persons of both sexes.

II. Tho assembly will not opeu before four or five o'clock in the afternoon, and will not continue later than ten in the evening

III. Tho master of the house where tho assembly is held, will not be obliged either to go to meet his guests, or, to re-conduct them to the door, or to keep their company in the apartments. But, exempt from these duties, he has others to fulfil; for exaaple, to provide them with chairs, candles, liquors, and all other things convenient or agreeable, which the company may call for. He is also obliged to furnish them with cards, dice, and other conveniences for play.

IV. There will be no fixed hour to come to the assembly or to leave it; for those who desire it, it will be sufficient to appear there a moment, and then to withdraw immediately.

V. Every one is at liberty to sit, or walk or play, as he plosees. No one may prevent another from doing whatever he pleases, under penelty of emptying the great cagle, (this was a bowl contalning a pint, filled with brandy.)

VI. Persons of distinction, nobles, superior officers, merchants and tradesmen, master mechanics, especially carpenters, have liborty to come to the assemblies with their wives and children.

VII. A sepsrate place will be assigned to the domestics, excepting those belonging to the house, in order to avoid incumbrance, and to leave the place free for society.

VIII. Na woman, under eny pretence whatever, may get intoxicoted; as for the men, they may get intoxicated, but never before nine o'clock.

IX. The ladies who play at pledges and at questions and answers, will abstain from all quarrels, from all disputes; and no man will attempt to embrace a woman by force, or to strike her in the midst of an assembly, under penalty of being excluded from them in future

Such were the singular regulations made by Catherine for the assemblies of both sexes, for which we are indebted to her. This historical document proves that the Russians were, at this period, indeed savages, and that to civilize them, two such goniuses as Peter the Great and Catherine were needed.

THE CARE OF DOMESTIC ANIMALS.—Edward Everett, lately, on taking the chair, in Boston, at an agricultural meeting of the members of the Massachusetts Legislature, made some very happy remarks on the humanity, so to speak, of the brute creation. Rising from the wonders of life in vegetation, he thus introduced the subject of the evening—the care of the domeedic animals:

"I suppose there was a time, in the infancy of our race, when the horse, the ox, the swine, the sheep, the ass, the goat, the dog, were as wild as the deer and buffalo, the wolf and the tiger, at the present day; as wild, though not as savage. What could have conducted man to the selection of those animals with which he has surrounded himself to share his labors and minister to his wants, but the mere power of Providence guiding him to those whom time and patience would enable him to domesticate, to the exclusion of others destined to preserve their native ferocity.

"It is evident to my mind, that man was led into these associations by a wisdom beyond his own; that those higher principles which led him to organize families, communities and nations, have led him also into those humbler, but scarcely less important associations with the domestic animals. That there is a mysterious community between us and them, is strikingly shown in the wonderful phenomenon of vaccination; a mild and gentle disease which we have borrowed from the cow, and which furnishes us all but an infallible protection against one of the most frightful maladies that lay waste mankind. Perhaps it was with reference to this community of nature between men and the lower animals, that the Roman jurists were led to define the Law of Nature as that law which is common to all animated beings."

After he had thus nobly propitiated the attention of his audience, Mr. Everett went on with an appeal for kind treatment, urging the similarity of the laws of health in man and brute. This was his felicitous conclusion:

"The other remark which I would make springs from the same principle and is of a kindred nature. These domestic animals not only have active powers like our own, but they have a nervous system closely resembling ours. They are sensible to all the degrees and varieties of pain; and as it is to mark a sacred community of suffering between us and them, they express it in the same way that we do. Though Providence has given to man what He has denied to the lower animals, the power of describing his sufferings in words, yet, in the extremity of pain, he abandons language and takes refuge in groans and cries.

"The suffering beast and the suffering man speak the same inarticulate language. And he is entitled to the same exemption from gratuitous pain. The person who subjects his brute beast to unnecessary suffering mey walk on two legs and counterfeit humanity, but he is a brute But the domestic animals have a higher claim to kind treatment. They are capable of attachment; they are grateful for good usage; they are influenced by the indescrible magic of the human voice, when it speaks in the tones of love. I remember reading in the newspapers a letter from an emigrant to Oregon, who had crossed the western desert. He said that when the hard journey was about two-thirds over, and the whole party, man and beast, were almost broken down by the sufferings and privations of the weary march, there was in the large melancholy eye of the patient ox a look of uncomplaining jendurance, which was enough to move a man to tears. We have all read of the dog who watched the dead body of his master, starting at every flutter of his garments, till he died himself of starvation. And will you beat and kick, and goad and starve creatures like these?

"For myself, I want no better test of a considerate, prudent farmer, than his treatment of his animals. Prudent, did I say? it is a matter which rises far above prudence. It belongs to duty and morals. If I was obliged to choose between them, I would rather, so help me Heaven, go before my great and final Judge with the unenlighted faith of the 'Poor Indian,'

> 'Who thinks, admitted to that equal sky,
> His faithful dog shall bear him company.'

than with the religion of the professing Christian who goes to church on Sunday, and on week days beats his oxen over the face with a walnut whip handle; or lashes the legs and flanks of his overloaded horse, till the strained tendons are ready to snap from their attachments" [N. The Discovery of the Missiesippi.

INTERESTING PAPERS.—At the April meeting of the New York Historical Society, held on the 6th, some interesting papers relative to the early discovery of the Mississippi river were read. The Tribune gives the following report of the meeting:

Mr. Moore also presented and read a communication from John G. Shea, accompanying the original map of Father Marquette, detailing the result of his discovery and exploration of the Mississippi river in 1673.

The paper of Mr. Shea says we have now little idea of the obscurity which, for a long time, hung over the interior of this country. Each wanderer's vague account was swelled by his own imagination, or that of others, into a wondrous tale; and romance long enjoyed the field which has now yielded to sober fact. Strange was the history of the Great River of the West, or Rio Grande de Grand Riviere, (the Mississippi.) First of white men, the strange adventurer, Cabeo de Vaca, with the three survivors of the gallant band of Narvaez, traversing the continent from Florida to California, came to the Mississippi; but he remarks it only as a great river; that they crossed it, as—wandering from tribe to tribe in the guise of medicine-men—they journeyed on in hopes of reaching at last some spot where a towering cross would tell them their countrymen were near. This was in 1537; and when the little party at last appeared among the Spanish colonists, each told his tale, while all mysteriously intimated that regions of untold wealth spread over the unknown interior. Two years later, De Soto entered Florida to seek the visionary realm; while, at almost the same time, the adventurous Franciscan, Mark de Nija, set out from Chiheau to return De Vaca's trail; as de Soto sought to follow it; for both expeditions were the offsprings of the accounts of the surviving four. Around both, accordingly, hangs a halo of romance, which has caused much skepticism as to their real success. De Soto reached the Mississippi, his Rio Grande or great river, which hurried down its muddy tide the giant stream it had uprooted hundred of miles above. He crossed it at about the lowest Chickasaw Bluff, as our historians commonly suppose, and then ascended the river on the western shore for some weeks. The chroniclers of his expedition were thus at liberty to examine the country around, and in fact their description, though but incidental, is valuable and generally correct.

De Soto now crossed over the country west of the Great River. In April, 1542, he reached it again, broken hearted, after long and useless wanderings. Why linger over his fate? He died soon after on its banks, not far from the mouth of Red River, and after a temporary interment on its bank, his body was sunk in the waters of this Rio Grande (Mississippi.) His successor, Moscoso, after an ineffectual attempt to reach Mexico by land, returned the next year to the Great River, and building boats, descended the turbid current to the Gulf of Mexico, which they reached in seventeen days.

Spain had then explored for a considerable distance the Great River of the West, and the Adelantado of Cuba remained in its bosom to guard it for his countryuen. But Spain did no more; the accidental discovery had unfolded to the eye of avarice no golden land, and she neglected the great artery of America.

Once only after this do I find the great river mentioned, and its name, Rio Grande, given erroneously to another river which still bears it; an expedition that (if I remember) of Espeyo, which, about 1580, set out to seek out some zealous missionaries, whom ardor and courage had led, where soldiers shrank from following them, reached the broad and turbid stream hurrying onward to the sea. Supposing it to be the Great River of De Soto, he called it so, and it is now the southern boundary of our domain.

As early as 1639, the Jesuit Missionaries of Canada, in their posts on Lake Huron, had heard of the great river which ran through the countless tribes to a distant sea. Two years later, two fathers planted the cross at the outlet of Lake Superior, and turned a longing eye toward the South, which they already visited in desire; but there hopes were to be blasted. One was soon to perish by the hands of the Mohawk, and the whole Huron tribe were to be swept away by the victorious allies; while missionary after missionary died among his neophytes, triumphing over every torture. Upper Canada was a desert, Priest and people had alike been slain, and the missionaries were compelled to pause.

The Great River was still the object of their ardent zeal; but the humble missionary could not then easily obtain the means for a long expedition. Marquette above all dghed to undertake it; unsatisfied by men, he turns to heaven, and at last his prayer is heard; the Colonial government suddenly received to explore that Great River, to see whether it ran to the Gulf of California, and opened the way to China, or passed itself by the realm of Quivira, which teemed with gold. Jolliet was selected for the purpose, and long connected with the Jesuit missionaries, first as a pupil, then as one of their wandering flock. While a trader in the West, he selected father Marquette as his companion. They set out in May, 1673, and the result of their voyage is too well known to dwell upon. Each apparently drew a narrative of the voyage, but as Jolliet was descending the St. Lawrence, his canoe upset, and all his papers were lost. Meanwhile, Father Marquette, broken in health, was reposing for a while at the mission of St. Francis, awaiting the moment when his health should permit, to revisit the mission of the Immaculate Conception in Illinois, which he had founded as he was returning from the Mississippi. It was not till September that he felt strong enough to undertake the journey, and he accordingly set out soon after. Before his departure, he transmitted—as his autograph journal shows—copies of his journal to the Missions of Conception river, and doubtless the map which is the evidence offered for the inspection of the Historical Society, and which belongs to the archives of St. Mary's College, Montreal.

To return to Marquette. That faithful missionary, after much suffering during the winter, reached the Illinois, and finding that his days were numbered, set out, after a short stay, to return to the mission; but it was too late. He sank gradually, as he advanced along Lake Michigan, and expired on the shore, where he made his companions lay him. He was a perfect missionary, without a thought or desire beyond the services of the God to whom he had devoted his life. He did not seek to publish his discovery, and if his superiors did at the time, the Court probably prevented it, for fear of exciting the jealousy of Spain. It was never published by the Jesuits as a continuation of their Relations, and when issued by Thevenot was pruned so as to say nothing of the object in view. The map in Thevanot, when compared with the autograph, shows, however, still greater discrepancy. The likeness is too little to be easily discerned, while the unlikeness is apparent. I have now but to add a word as to the history of the map, which thus comes before the world nearly two hundred years after it was penned. The last published volume of the Jesuit Relations is that for the years 1671-2. This was published by Father Claude Dablon, the Superior of the Canada Mission, at the time; he prepared for the press the volume of the ensuing year, but for some reason now unknown, the publication was stopped. The chasm was apparently a temporary one, for he next drew up a Relation embracing a period of six years to 1679, and also an account of the voyages and death of Father Marquette. None of these were ever published, and the collection was apparently abandoned. These manuscripts, with some others, including the last journal and map of Marquette, various papers copied under the direction of Father Ragueneau and Father Poncet, remained in the archives of the College of Quebec, unheeded and unknown till the French war, as we on this side call that which ended in the conquest of Canada. When the British flag had replaced the lilies of France at Quebec, the English Government excited in her former Colonies a burst of indignation by an act maintaining the Catholic Church in Canada in its actual state. It made one sacrifice, however, to prejudice; the religious orders of men then in Canada were peculiarly obnoxious to the Colonists—these were the Jesuits and Recollects. As to them, it was decreed but no new members were to be admitted, and that when the last surviving priest expired the property of the order should revert to the Crown. The last survivor of the Jesuits died in 1800; but precious to his death he took from the archives the more valuable papers, including those we have named, and committed them to the care of the Hospital Nuns. The other papers were seized by the Sheriff at his death and are now chiefly lost or scattered. Those thus saved by Father Cazot, remained in the Hotel Dieu till 1844, when they were presented by their faithful guardians to the Jesuits, who built two years before had received that land so rich in historical reminiscences, to the Low-religieuse of Jesuits, a Brebeuf and a Marquette. We are indebted for its presence here to the kindness of the President of St. Mary's College, Rev. P. Martin, who has agreed to its publication in, New York, in the historical collections of Mr. Gilmor.

THE LOSS OF COTTON IN SAVANNAH.—The Savannah Georgian estimates the loss in Cotton by the recent fire in that city at $250,000. The loss of C. A. L. Lamar, Esq., the owner of the warehouses, is over $60,000

FIRE WITHOUT COALS.—On Saturday some very curious experiments were made at the London Polytechnic Institution, to test the results of a recent invention of Dr. Bachoffner, for which patents have been obtained. The invention consists in the substitution of thin pieces of metal in the place of coals in fire grates, which being acted upon by a small jet of gas immediately become red hot and emit a prodigious degree of heat. The flame which is produced by the gas, co-operating with the metallic laminæ, give the appearance of a brisk and cheerful coal fire, and can scarcely be distinguished from it. The heat can be regulated by turning the cock of the gas tube. There is no deposit of soot, no smoke, nor any of the annoyances which attend coal fires, and the gas can be extinguished instanter, or the fire kept as low as convenient. It will be seen that this useful invention is of general interest, and not only as affects private houses, but as affects breweries, manufactories, and all places where large fires are required, and by its adoption the use of enormous chimneys might be dispensed with, as no smoke is generated. The expense, with the gas now used for lighting, would render a fire on this new principle about the same expense as if coals were employed, but, where what is termed non-carbonized gas is employed, a great diminution of expense would be obtained.

ODDITIES OF A WEALTHY MAN.—Hens Wilson, of Stenbenville, who died on the 21st ult., in the 82d year of his age, bequeathed in his will to his only daughter $10000; to the widow of his only son, now the wife of the Rev. Dr. Cox, of Piqua, $300; the balance of his fortune, estimated at $200,000, he divided, in small sums, to different churches in his town, and in large sums to foreign and domestic missionary societies.

ARREST OF MEDAL ARTISTS.—In New York, on the night of the 10th inst., at the instance of a number of respectable citizens, the police made a descent upon a band of model artists, that for some months past have been giving nightly exhibitions to crowded audiences, at No. 508, Broadway, under the vague title of the "Temple of the Graces." Just as the Graces were about to appear in the scene called "Midnight Intruders," the police intruded their unwelcome presence and surrounded the more than half nude models, to their utter dismay and the flutteration of the audience, who quickly vied with each other in a struggle to reach the street, apparently dreading the chances of an introduction to his Honor, the Mayor, in such disgraceful company. As soon as the actors had robed themselves in suitable garments, they were taken before the Mayor. The names of the parties were John H. Luke, John A. Richie, Wm. Kelly, Miss Bintley, and three other women. The men were all held to answer, but the females were discharged.

Major Schlessenger, the Hungarian, who is now serving out his term of imprisonment of ten years, at Ceuta, for participating in the Lopez invasion of Cuba, has written a letter to his friends in New York, in which he states that he has been treated with unusual severity at the instigation of the French and Austrian embassadors. He has been cast into a dungeon, the weight of his irons increased twenty pounds, and himself chained along with a low ruffian convicted of several murders. Mr. Barringer, the U. S. Minister at Madrid, had promised to do what he could, in an unofficial manner, for the Major, who, having no Government of his own to appeal to for protection, throws himself on the kindness of our Government, and solicits its friendly mediation.

THE EXPLOSION OF THE SALUDA.—The St. Louis papers of the 12th contain full particulars of the explosion of the Saluda, at Lexington, Mo. Josiah Clancey, second engineer, who was on watch at the time, was blown ashore, and lived long enough to say that he was the cause of the explosion He said that he had no water in the boilers, but that he was acting under the orders of Captain Belt. Between one hundred and one hundred and twenty-five persons were killed, including the captain, and with one or two exceptions, all the crew. The current is very swift above Lexington, and the boat being unable to stem it, Capt. Belt ordered the water shut off from the boilers, in order to raise a greater head of steam. One of the boilers passed through, and entirely demolished a brick house on the landing.

SACKING A CITY.—On the surrender of the City of Buenos Ayres to Gen. Urquiza lately, there was great disorder among the populace and soldiers. Among the rigid orders for the occasion was the following: "Any person found plundering shall be executed within a quarter of an hour, and upon the spot." Directly after the embarkation of Rosas, General Mancilie disbanded his troops, who went to plundering and sacking houses, etc., in consequence of which Urquiza ordered a division of infantry against the mob, 200 of whom were killed. Better order was restored.

A NEW DIVORCE BILL.—The divorce bill now before the Senate of New York, and which has passed the Assembly by a large majority, vests in the Supreme Court the power to grant divorces whenever the cruel treatment of either party towards the other may render it unsafe for them to live together; or in case of willful desertion for a period of three years; or for imprisonment for a time not less than three years. It also gives the court power to remove the disability to marry again, whenever it shall appear that the party was innocent of the offence charged in the complaint, provided the divorce was procured without connivance; or, in other cases, after the expiration of five years, where substantial justice will be done by removing such disability.

FANATICISM.—There are a number of Finnish fanatics in Norwegian Lapland, who have lately adopted the practice of conjuring the devil into a pig, and then boiling the diabolished animal alive. It is presumed that they thereby hoped effectually to settle his Satanic majesty. The blasphemy was very much shocked, and tried persuasion without effect; in fact, he ran considerable danger of being scalded, for, it is said, they threatened to diabolize the bishop, and boil him alive.

THE WHEELING BRIDGE.—What sort of an obstruction to the free navigation of the Ohio river the Wheeling bridge is, the following statement from the Wheeling Gazette of the 8th instant will show:

"The steamer Pittsburg, one of the largest and fastest boats on our river, lowered her chimneys yesterday while lying at the wharf on business, and passed under the bridge at good speed, with some 15 feet to spare, although there were 34 feet water,—the highest rise since 1832. Before she was out of sight she had them again in their places. This fuss about lowering smoke pipes is all fudge!"

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.—In the Pennsylvania Legislature, the bill abolishing the death penalty, and substituting imprisonment of not less than fifteen or more than fifty years in lieu thereof, passed finally in the House, on the 8th inst.—yeas 40, nays 42.

INAUGURATION.—On the 13th inst. L. M. Keanet, Esq., was to be inaugurated for the third time as Mayor of St. Louis.

THE FUGITIVE SLAVE LAW IN WISCONSIN.—Reports have been presented in both branches of the Wisconsin legislature, instructing Congressmen from that State to vote for a repeal of the fugitive slave law.

AN IMPORTANT FACT.—Gen. Samuel Houston, in a late speech, is said to have stated a fact not generally known, and which is of importance to the families of soldiers who were murdered by order of Santa Anna at Goliad, in 1836. It is that the Legislature of Texas, several years ago, passed an act giving to the next of kin of each soldier who fell in that massacre, sixteen hundred acres of land, to be located on any of the unappropriated lands belonging to the State.

EASTER EGGS.—The origin of the connection of eggs with Easter is lost in the mists of remote antiquity. We learn, however, from writers upon old customs, that eggs are as "rife at this day in Russia as in England;" and we may include America, though in the last-named country children especially claim them as their own prerogative for sport. Formerly, the King of England had hundreds prepared to give his household. In a roll of the expenses of Edward I. there occurs, in the accounts of Easter Sunday, in the eighteenth year of his reign, "four hundred and a half of eggs, eighteen pence." The custom is supposed to have been originally Jewish.

EMIGRANTS FOR LIBERIA.—The Rev. W. D. Shumate, Secretary of the Missouri Colonization Society, left St. Louis, on the 1st instant, for Baltimore, with twenty-four emigrants for Liberia. These were the slaves who were emancipated by Capt. Andrew Harper, of St. Louis county, some months since. They are said to be well provided with every necessary article, and will commence the settlement of the Missouri colony in Africa.

The Protestant Waldenses, says a letter from Genoa, have celebrated with great eclat the anniversary of their emancipation proclaimed by the late Charles Albert. They publish now an Italian Protestant paper called Il Valdese, and the principles of the Reformation are increasing very rapidly in this country. The Italian Protestants are erecting a large church in Turin. I have seen the drawing, and I can say that we have not such a temple in our country. Dr. Berg, the Protestant minister in Turin, will visit the United States to lecture on the Waldenses, and to obtain donations for the erection of other Protestant churches in Piedmont. I hope that the good minister will find a warm welcome in our country His mission is noble and Christian, and as Americans we owe something to those Italians who gave us a country and a name.

OUTWARD BOUND.

The day has passed, and evening gray
Fades o'er the murmuring sea;
Our white-winged vessel glides away,
From love, and home, and thee!
Once more we bear our tearful eyes
Still watch the tossing shore,
Like a wild sea bird oo she flies,
To climes unseen before.

When memory trembling thoughts have passed
The drooping heart with dread;
Let watch you moon, whose beauty blessed
That lasting hours long fled;
But, many a moon as bright as this Shall light its path with rosin,
Ere fortune again to kiss
The prayerful lips at home

WAYSIDE DREAM.... By Bayard Taylor

A warm and drowsy sweetness
Is stealing o'er my heart;
I see no more the Danube
Sweep through the royal plain;
I hear no more the peasant girls
Singing amid the grain!

Soft silvery wings, a moment
Across my sight my brow;
Again, I hear the water,
But its voice is deeper now,
And the mocking-bird and oriole
Are singing on the bough!

The elm and linden branches
Droop dark and close o'er head,
And the foaming forest brooklet
Leaps down its rocky bed;
Be still, my heart! the seas are passed—
The paths of home I tread!

The showers of creamy blossoms
Are on the linden spray,
And down the clover meadow
They heap the scented hay,
And glad winds toss the forest leaves
All the bright summer-day.

Old playmates! bid me welcome
Amid your brother-band;
Give me the old affection—
The glowing grasp of hand!
I worship no more the realms of old—
Here, in my Fatherland!

Later from the Rio Grande.

By the arrival of the steamship Yacht, Capt. Thompson, we have the Brownsville Flag of the 10th inst.; also, a mail to the same date. We select such items as are of interest. The following are from the Flag—the Mexican news is not later than that heretofore received, but contains some news as yet unpublished here:

CALIFORNIANS.—Two companies of gentlemen have recently passed through this place on their way, through Mexico, via Mazatlan, to California. Capt. Nichols, the gentleman at the head of one of the companies, has traveled this route before, as well as other overland routes, and does not hesitate to give this the preference over all other routes. The idea is entirely erroneous that any impediment is placed by the Mexican authorities in the free transit of emigrants through that Republic. Every facility was afforded these parties by the authorities of Matamoros, of whom the emigrants speak in terms of the highest praise.

THE WEATHER.—For the past two weeks the weather with us has been quite unsettled, with high winds prevailing from nearly all the points of the compass. Our farmers are suffering greatly for want of rain.

FROM MEXICO.—Our dates from various parts of Mexico reach to the 20th ult. The Congress of that Republic, as we see by the Tampico Comercio, has passed an act granting pardon to those Mexican citizens who took part in the recent disturbances on this frontier. This act passed the Senate unanimously.

Both houses of Congress are occupied in discussing the subject of tariffs, while the press and the people are every where urging them to action. Several Senators have delivered letters to their friends in various parts of the country, in which they give assurance that a very material change may soon be expected.

The Secretary of War has addressed a letter to the House of Representatives, in relation to the very low state of finances. He declares that large sums are now due to every branch of the army, and not a cent in the treasury with which to pay them. He urges a dissolution of the army and a consequent dismemberment of the Union, as a result which must inevitably ensue, unless Congress take immediate action in the matter. This letter paints in glowing colors the actual condition of the country. We shall endeavor to lay it before our readers in the next number of this paper.

FROM SOUTH AMERICA.—Rio Janeiro papers to March 2 have been received at Boston. They contain late accounts from Buenos Ayres. The city had surrendered, and Urquiza had been appointed Governor pro tem. of Buenos Ayres.

Dr. Vincent Lopez had made a requisition on Urquiza for means and force to suppress the disorders of the populace. Among the rigid orders for the occasion was the following: "Any person found plundering shall be executed within a quarter of an hour, and upon the spot."

Directly after the embarkation of Rosas, General Mancilla disbanded his troops, who were very disorderly, plundering and sacking houses, etc. In consequence of which, Urquiza ordered a division against the mob, two hundred of whom were killed. Better order was restored.

Montevideo dates to the 8th February. We learn from them that Rosas would go to England in H. B. M. steamer Conflict. He still, however, remained on board the Centeur.

The dates from Buenos Ayres are to the 15th of February. On the 12th the new government was organized, as follows: Interior, Dr. Vlutue Alsina; Foreign, D. Luis de Lapendz; State, (Hrastiaga; War and Marine, Escalada; Chief of Police, Guerrico.

The 18th of February was appointed for the qualified entry of the allied forces into the city of Buenos Ayres, and great preparations were making for the occasion.

Highly Important to Planters and Property Holders.

BRIDGEWATER ADAMANTINE PAINT.

The superior properties of this unequaled mineral substance is now so well and favorably known that it is unnecessary to enter into an extended notice. The public are referred to our circular, embracing certificates from—

Capt. Sr. C. THOMASSON, of steamer Magnolia.
Wm. BROWN, of towboat Porpedse.
HUGHES, VALLETTE & Co., Managers La. Dry Dock
J. P. WHITNEY & Co., Agents do
Capt. N. H. ROBBINS, of the ship Leodes.
JOSEPH BENSON, Painter 132 Camp street.
And the UNDERWRITERS' CERTIFICATES.

Also, the recommendation of a large number of our most influential COTTON FACTORS and COMMISSION MERCHANTS, all of which are included in the Agent's Circular. Also, to the following, received since the circulars were printed from JOHN F. MILLER, of Attakapas:

"In July last I was induced to apply the Bridgewater Mineral Paint to my Sugarhouse, and, in every respect, it has exceeded my expectations, and the representations made by the agents, Messrs. G. C. Bogert & Co. I cheerfully add my testimony to the numerous ones embraced in the Agent's Circular, and recommend the same to Planters and others, as the best Weather and Fire Protector I have ever known. Where I have applied it, it has been exposed to the sun since last July, and has neither blistered nor cracked, and has formed a solid metallic surface, which has proved entirely impervious."

(Signed) JOHN F. MILLER.

New Iberia, Attakapas, March 10, 1852.

In addition to the above, we have in our possession innumerable certificates from equally respectable sources, which can be seen at our office; among which are those of Capt. Wm. Cutts, of the ship Charles Cooper; Brevet Lieut. Col. G. H. Talcott, New York Arsenal; U. S. South Lieut. and Quartermaster R. S. Military Academy, West Point; G. H. Talcott, Superintendent, now Secretary of the Hudson River Railroad Company; D. G. McCullum, Ass't Engineer New York and Erie Railroad, etc.; proving conclusively, by being thoroughly tested, that it is both

FIRE AND WEATHER PROOF.

The bending, shrinking, or warping of the material upon which it is used does not affect the paint; in twenty-four hours it dries, and in four weeks becomes a perfect slate.

It preserves wood from decay, and neither blisters nor cracks by exposure to the hottest sun. For covering roofs of either tin, iron, zinc, wood, canvas, or paper, it is also invaluable, and particularly recommended, as it is certain PROTECTION AGAINST SPARKS AND CINDERS, and is furnished cheaper than any paint in the Southern country. All orders sent to the General Agents, or their sub-agents, promptly executed. No deviation in price. Terms—cash, or its equivalent. G. C. BOGERT & CO.

THE BIRDS OF SPRING.

Sing on by fane and forest old.
By tombs and cottage eaves,
And tell the waste of coming flowers,
The wood of coming leaves;
The same sweet song that o'er the birth
Of earliest blossoms rung
And caught its music from the hymn
The stars of morning sang.

It hailed the radiant path of Spring,
By stream and valley fair,
And o'er the earth's green hill-tops, when
No step but hers was there;
And like the laurel's gift of green,
The violet's depth of blue,
It has survived a thousand thrones,
And yet the song is new.

New as we heard it in the years
Whose memories still are young,
When life's first rainbow o'er our path
Its arch of glory flung!
That violined light has melted long
From hearts whose hopes have met
The shower and shadow; but your strains
Are loved and trusted yet.

They come when sunset's dying lines,
Or morning's waking smiles,
Light up the mountain's rocky shrines,
The lonely forest aisles,
Our souls, from all their early store,
Have kept one answering tone
Of joy, to greet each gushing song
With gladness like its own.

There have been harps among us strung—
It seemed beside "the tree
Of life," where all the flowers we sought,
Or dreamt of, yet might be;
But early fell the hush of death
On each unwearied string,
That caught, though from afar, the dew
Of everlasting Spring.

O blest is true and fearless love!
O free of earth and air!
For whom the past has no regret,
The all to come no care!
Still, from its Summers far away,
To the worn heart ye bring
Its early store of love and hope—
Sweet prophet-birds of Spring.

Texas Matters.

WHEELOCK, Robertson county, Texas, April 10, 1852.

DEAR BRO. McTYEIRE: I drop you a line, although I confess myself greatly at a loss for a theme of sufficient interest to be entitled to a place in your interesting paper. There! that looks common-place already. Who edits a paper that is not called by some of its scribblers "interesting," although it may not contain a sentiment worth remembering, or an article of news that has not been published in twenty other journals circulated in the neighborhood a month or two before it had graced the columns of his muddy sheet! But your paper is an interesting one, and especially to the great mass for whom it is designed. In saying this, I alludo not to the various theological articles that appear from time to time in its columns. They are not devoid of interest, certainly—abstractly, they are of absorbing interest. But we can find as able articles as these in our other church papers. Your revival notices are cheering, but the columns of the other Advocates rejoice the heart by teeming with them. Your obituary department tells how the faithful die, giving courage to the timid and hope to the desponding, but our other papers illustrate, by similar examples, the same victorious truths. What, then, did I have in my mind when I involuntarily wrote "your interesting paper?" I had reference to the position of its "place of publication," and its miscellaneous and general news department. Many a good brother deems himself unable to take but one paper, and to it he looks for information in regard to all that is transpiring in the great world around him. While religious men are in the world, they must necessarily be connected with its affairs. I have no sympathy with the monkish asceticism which would forbid a Christian from entering into the busy marts of competition, and bearing off the well earned prize as the reward of his superior capacity and untiring industry and application. The Christian religion was intended to regulate every department of life; and the Christian should be a man of general intelligence. He must sell and buy, and therefore should know the state of the markets. He must vote at elections, and therefore the public action of public men should be familiar to him.

Now suppose he is unable to take more than one paper, should that paper contain three milk and water articles on Baptism for instance, all embracing substantially the same ground, and contain not one word about the "interesting Senatorial debate," the "humbug about Kossuth" and the "wild extravagancies of Fourierism and higher-lawism—the coup d'etat of Louis Napoleon and the resignation and reorganization of the British ministry! which, if important in themselves, ought at least to be known. Or should it occupy half a dozen columns in expatiating upon the capacity of Dr. B. and Mrs. C. to conduct a school, to the entire exclusion of the news by the last steamer? Why, every body knew that Dr. B. and Mr. C. were good teachers, in the estimation of the committee or the complaisant or interested correspondent, else they would have been dismissed and others elected to fill their places. The truth is, the man who takes but one paper wants that paper to be emphatically a news sheet, and it ought so to be. Coming, as your paper does, from our great Southwestern seaport, it has, in this respect, many advantages, and taken altogether, I find it one of the most interesting papers which vouches my table.

Well, I had no thought when I sat down determined to perpetrate an article for your "interesting paper," that said article would take the direction it did. I intended to say somewhat of Wheelock, Texas, my present "whereabouts." I will not say that it is worthy of a ride from New Orleans to see it, but I will say that if chance or business or pleasure or duty should call you to travel the old San Antonio road, from the Navasoto to the Brazos, your attention would be arrested by, and your eyes pleased with, the appearance of the small, but thriving and growing village of Wheelock—the new county seat of Robertson county.

It is situated on the north side of a beautiful undulating prairie, the timber protecting it from the north winds in winter, and the extensive prairie south of it admitting the free circulation of the southern breezes in summer. Standing near the site of the Academy and Masonic Hall, one of the most beautiful buildings in town, we have a delightful view of the green forests which skirt Cedar Creek, some mile or two distant east and southeast. Southward our vision is bounded by the hills adjoining Cotton Wood Prairie, some two or three miles distant; and southwest there is no obstruction to the view for eight or ten miles.

Cedar and Copperas Creeks, adjacent to town, afford a continued supply of water at all seasons of the year. Good drinking water is procured by digging from thirty to forty feet, in town.

The prairie in front of the town abounds in herds and flocks, and the adjacent forests in wild game. From my residence I heard a wild turkey gobble in the ravine this morning. Perhaps he may grace our table for dinner. A Mexican (native) hog was caught in the vicinity a few days ago. In appearance he exhibits the union of the wolf and common hog. He is now a captive, and in habits and manners is both hoggish and wolfish.

The late storms and freshets in Texas did extensive damage to the planters, especially on the rivers and large bayous and creeks. A steamer on the Brazos, nearly opposite this place, took off several persons from their residence, who were in imminent danger. A negro belonging to one of our citizens was drowned in attempting to cross one of the sloughs in the Brazos bottom.

A called session of our Legislature is spoken of as probable to pass an apportionment law, the Governor having withheld his signature to the act passed at the late session of our Legislature, just previous to its adjournment.

I conclude this article, lest I make it too long to be readable. In my next I may say something of the Church here, and its general prospects.

Very truly and fraternally,

R. B. WELLS.

Missions in Cochin China.

We had expected that the measures of the Chinese Government, tolerating Christianity, would produce a favorable impression on the rulers of Cochin China. Such has not been the case however; the Roman missionaries in that kingdom still suffer severe persecution. An edict has recently been issued against Christianity, or rather against Romanism, the only form of the Christian religion of which the government of Cochin China possess any knowledge. In this royal decree some singular sentences occur, of which we give the translation. It will be observed what a deplorable effect Romanism has in disguising the simple sublime truths of Christianity:

"The doctrine of Jesus comes from the Europeans; it prohibits the worship of ancestors and the veneration of spirits. In order to deceive men's hearts and fascinate its adherents, it speaks to them of heaven and holy water. Its propagators, aware that the laws of the realm can not tolerate such evil doctrine, present to the eyes of the people the image of the punishment of Jesus, their master, in order to seduce the ignorant and induce them to brave death without repenting. What woful delusion! What strange fascination! The basis of our religion is righteousness, but it would soon become vitiated if the doctrine of these savage-hearted, brutal men were to be reduced to practice. We, Tu-Due, have directed our ministry to make a report on a petition which has been addressed to us by our privy council, concerning the necessity of prohibiting the religion of Jesus. Now here is the opinion of our ministry: 'European priests must be cast into the sea or rivers, for the glory of the true religion. Annamite priests, together with their disciples, whether they trample on the cross or not, shall be cut in two, that the law's severity may be made manifest.'"

Some idea may be formed of the nature of the work carried on by the Roman missionaries in Cochin China, from the account of the labors of Schoeffler, who lately fell a victim to the persecuting spirit of the government, by the Vicar Apostolic of Western Tonquin. Reporting the death of that missionary, he says:

"You will judge of the missionary successes of the Rev. Mr. Schoeffler by his annual catalogue of administered sacraments, viz., two hundred baptisms of the children of Pagans; forty-one baptisms of children of Christians; twenty-three baptisms of adults; four thousand seven hundred and seven confessions; three thousand three hundred and fifty-one communions; fifty-two viaticums; one hundred and twenty-five extreme unctions. Now this is very good work for a young missioner, who, during several months of last year, was ill of a fever." [London Watchman.

The Jews in London are making efforts to keep up with the march of the times. A large meeting of city merchants and others, belonging to the Jewish persuasion, was lately held in Sussex Hall, Leadenhall street, for the purpose of adopting measures for erecting a Jews' College, for educating the sons of respectable parents, and training up ministerial readers and teachers. At the close of the proceedings a subscription was entered into, which produced about £1000. Six adult Israelites were recently baptised at the Episcopal Jewish Chapel, London.

The edition of the New Testament in the Samoan language, consisting of 15,000 copies, lately printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society, is highly prized and eagerly sought after, by a large proportion of the natives. At the date of last accounts, 2300 copies had been disposed of at a price sufficient to cover expenses. The missionaries are proceeding with the printing of the Old Testament, at the mission press.

The Fireside.

Oh, why away with the fireside bright,
With its sparkling blaze and glowing light,
Which drove ennui from the gloomy night,
In the gladsome days of old?

That dear old spot I shall ne'er forget,
Where my merry laugh seems echoing yet,
From the corner bright, where my seat was set,
When pretty tales were told.

In visions blest, again I'm there;
I see my father's old arm-chair;
My fingers I twine in his silvered hair—
I lean my head on his knee.

Ah! many a peerless flower of mind,
By its light has the toiling student twined,
And wove in a wreath, his brow to bind,
In his home of adversity.

O the happiest, dearest spot on earth,
Is by sweet home's loved, hallowed hearth,
Where bliss is felt of real worth—
What joys with it compare?

Upon its light I never gaze,
But round me come sweet childhood's days,
The merry sport, the hymn of praise,
And evening's hour of prayer.

Sunday Schools.

BRO. McTYEIRE: The importance of Sunday Schools can not be duly appreciated without sensibly interesting the true Christian in their behalf. They are, in the hands of God, powerful means in the building up of poor, fallen humanity. How low, indeed, is man fallen, and yet in his low condition fragmentary remains of grandeur appear! As Dr. Blair says, "In the moral as well as in the natural world, we may plainly discern the signs of some violent convulsion, which has shattered the original workmanship of the Almighty. Around this wreck of human nature, traces still remain which indicate its Author. Those high powers of conscience and reason, that capacity of happiness, that ardor of enterprise, that glow of affection which often break through the gloom of human vanity and guilt, are like the scattered columns, the broken arches, the defaced sculptures of some fallen temple, whose ancient splendor appears amid its ruins." This representation of human nature is as accurate as it is sublime. Now, in the rebuilding of these "temples," we mean to say, God makes Sunday Schools eminently useful. Religious culture, or edification, is to "create the heart anew," restore the mind to its "original" image, and set the soul on a sure footing for heaven at a safe and right time. To the old, in ruins, renovation can scarcely be expected to come; but when it commences in youth, it is carried on generally in the right way, leading the heart, head and conscience in the road of improvement together, establishing harmony and friendship between them, while they are young and pliable. In them the Creator, and the day he has hallowed, are remembered together by the youth, in happy and profitable association.

Our national greatness, prosperity and happiness in the future depend much on the tone given to morals and religion in our Sunday Schools. What holy and ardent efforts are now called for in this important department of literary and moral cultivation. Here is more than the lever and fulcrum of Archimedes. Here is a great amount of that instrumentality by which God will yet evangelize the world. The susceptibility of children to religious impressions, deserves the serious consideration of ministers, superintendents and teachers who labor in these schools.

Children are the subjects of especial notice by the great Author of the Bible. They are addressed there by Him who knows them altogether, on the subject of their soul's immortal interests, and they are treated by him as responsible agents. Their duties and privileges are clearly pointed out. That they are the subjects of spiritual awakenings and admonitions, at a very early age, we have no doubt. What though they can not explain, logically, the nature of repentance, regeneration and faith, are we therefore to conclude that these pre-requisites for heaven are not possessed by them? that they can not fear God, pray to him and enjoy his comforting Spirit, because they can not explain them to an interrogator? Do children possess no filial or natural affection, until they are able to give it a metaphysical definition? Surely children can not tell by what principle they are led to make efforts to procure nourishment from the mother's breast; and yet such efforts are properly made. Animal wants are answered by instinctive desires, which desires issue in suitable efforts. And does not God give spiritual desires agreeably to spiritual wants? Does not his Spirit help the infirmity of children, that they may pray to Him aright? Truly he does, and in a greater measure than we are aware of.

The labor bestowed upon children I have often thought is more important than the doings of statesmen on the floor of Congress. Let, then, the superintendents and teachers in our Sunday Schools be greatly encouraged. They are doing a great work. An angel would be happy to be engaged in this delightful work. The wisest and best of men esteem it a privilege and honor to be so employed, and why should they not? since the soul, the immortal soul, of more value than ten thousand worlds, is the object of solicitude, effort and toil.

In conclusion, Mr. Editor, and as some kind of application of the preceding remarks to matters and affairs at home, permit me to say that our School in this charge (Morcau) is in a very prosperous condition. The number of scholars is 130; the number of volumes 1300; the number of teachers 17. Our worthy Superintendent and Brother, Richard Robertson, has his head, heart, body and soul in it, and he has a judicious and happy tact in managing it. Our excellent Librarian, as well as all the Teachers, are quite alive and devoted in their efforts to sustain the various interests of the Schools. The scholars love their teachers, and receive instruction with great eagerness; and, I may add, our dear little folks seem of late more than usually encouraged and stimulated in their efforts to advance in religious knowledge, because in addition to the regular exercises of the School on Sabbath, they have the privilege (and they are eager in availing themselves of it) of being instructed during the week, at suitable times, at the church, in the principles and practice of sacred music, by our worthy friend and brother, John Uber, who is not only every way competent, but ardently devoted to this, as well as every other means that has a tendency to promote the true interests and happiness of the young. Already during the present year the Lord has converted several of the children of our School who, if matured aright, (fed as the lambs should be, and as is required by the great Shepherd of the Church) are as likely to prove faithful as grey-headed converts. Oh, may He "who ordaineth strength out of the mouth of babes and sucklings," carry them as the nurslings of his own bosom, and ever more keep them by his power in the way of truth and salvation.

Gatherings—No. 1.

In the S. C. Advocate of March 19, I find, over the signature of "A. Turner," the following paragraph:

"The desecration of the Sabbath by our ministers, in traveling from meeting instead of staying and laboring, or at least showing respect to the day. Some will travel as much as fifteen to thirty miles, and preach about other people traveling on that day."

This is very ambiguous. Does the brother mean that an itinerant, in trying to give the Gospel to the greatest number, traveling for this purpose fifteen to thirty miles on Sunday, violates its sacredness? His language certainly bears such a construction, though I can not think that he thus meant; for our Saviour went about doing good on this day; and if we, to convey the Word to the most hearers, are violating the Sabbath by making fifteen to thirty miles distance between some of our appointments, then many of our itinerants would have to cut short some of their appointments, or else, by transferring to a week day, run the risk of losing a congregation.

Where people do not love the Gospel, we must endeavor to accommodate ourselves to their time. Between two of my appointments for one Sabbath, I have, for more than a year, traveled twenty miles, preaching at one at half past 9 A. M., and at the other at half past 3 P. M. Am I transgressing the command "to remember the Sabbath, to keep it holy?" Certainly, to every itinerant it would be more pleasant to remain at one spot all the day; it would be delightful, too, to know that his traveling companion, his horse, was at rest. When we are doing our Master's work on that day we do not desecrate it, but if we travel, visit or converse, for our own pleasure, we do violate its holy character.

No. 2. "H." in his caption, "Brevities," in your paper of the 27th ult., has the following relative to Moore and Cooper:

"Neither of whom ever planted a virtue in human nature, or wrote a line of permanent value to the race."

I do not think that any man ever planted any virtue in human nature. After God's spirit has planted them in the broken heart, man may assist his fellow man in cultivating and bringing to maturity the same; but he can never do a work belonging only to the Holy One of Israel. I am no advocate for novel reading, but where is a novel containing higher, purer, nobler sentiments than are found in Cooper's "Leather Stocking?" That book is descriptive of a Christian character.

Again, his "Sea Lion" is the history of the return of a sinner to God, and teaches the true Methodist doctrine, conversion of the soul. Now I am willing to think that Cooper wrote not only for fame, but that he desired to introduce to men who would not read serious works, under the garb of fiction, many of the most important teachings of Holy Writ. Cooper's novels are not immoral.

It has been said of Moore, that his first pieces were written under a fictitious signature, and that he afterwards regretted writing the same. Whether this be true or not, we know that Moore's two hymns, contained in our Hymn Book, and commencing "Come ye disconsolate," and "O Thou who driest the mourner's tear," are not only delightful poetry, but will ever be cherished by all singers of Zion, and throw "the sweetness of their fragrance" to soothe the "disconsolate." If these two pieces, from the pen of Moore, do not contain a line of "permanent value to the race," then our Bishops certainly ought not to have approved of the same. Hearing some remarks upon the article of "H.," I have been induced to the above. Cooper, some time before his death, was a follower of Christ. If, then, his "sins were laid on Jesus," was it right to write, "Cooper knows far better about new than his eulogisers?" Are there any regrets in heaven? Is heaven's bliss to be overshadowed by the clouds of earthly sin? No, our sins forgiven are remembered no more by our Maker, (Heb. viii. 12) and of course there are no sorrowings over what God hath forgiven.

All fictions are not useless, as we may see from the Parables of the Saviour; but as every good thing said in a novel is far better said in the "Book of Books," and as I have seen so much misery attributable mainly to novel reading, in the weakening of the reason, in inducing false notions, in being the chief promoter of unhappy marriages, and making men think the Holy Bible also a fiction, I would say unto all, never read a novel.

Macedonian Call.

"Come over into Macedonia, and help us." This was a Divine message to St. Paul at Troas. The noble Apostle promptly complied. He took Silas, a suitable fellow laborer, for the difficult enterprise, and they went to Macedonia, and other regions of Greece. Read their journal in the Acts of the Apostles. See how they labored, prayed, suffered, were persecuted, beaten with many stripes and cast into prison; and then see how God delivered them and blessed their ministry. They laid the foundation of the churches of Thessalonica and Philippi, and even the celebrated city of Athens, with all her Grecian gods, and the proud Hill of Mars trembled beneath the feet of Paul while he threw back the curtain of idolatry and revealed the mystery of their inscription, "To the Unknown God!"

Now let us apply all this to our own Church and country. Come over or down into Louisiana, and help us. This, too, seems to be a Divine call. The providential circumstances of the case prove the fact. We want about fifteen efficient itinerant Methodist ministers, full of faith and the Holy Ghost, to supply our regular work in this Conference, and twice as many local preachers to assist us all over the country. The old Conferences have surplus men—the very men we want. They can come, they should come, and if they do, we will most cordially receive them as fellow laborers in the Gospel of Christ. More than half the members of this Conference began their ministry in other Conferences, and they came or were transferred to this. The great Head of the Church generally calls his embassadors from among the older churches, where they have had the advantages of example, instruction, experience and discipline, to qualify them to be pioneers in the new and difficult regions of country to plant and raise up churches. In view of all this, and more too, how can men who are called to preach, and have taken upon themselves the solemn vows of ordination, stay at home to enjoy the pleasures, comforts and luxuries of this world, and associate with large assemblies in splendid churches every Sabbath, where there are two, three or four times as many preachers as are necessary; we ask how can they do so while here thousands of people, and whole regions of country, have preaching only once or twice a month, and in many places none at all. How differently men of the world act. Thousands of them went to California to procure gold, thousands came to Louisiana to get money, "and still they come." So the world goes ahead. Again we call for help. Come, like St. Paul and Silas. Never mind your salary, ease, comfort, or any wordly consideration, for the Lord will take care of all that. He says, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature—and lo, I am with you always." This is ample security for his ministers to rely on him both for success and support.

The missionary field, among the colored people in this Conference is very large and important; but it has been reluctantly uncultivated for want of laborers. At the next session of our Conference we wish to employ about ten of our useful, experienced and well qualified members to labor in this department. But we can not do this unless our brethren will come to our aid. Some of us are ready to give them our present appointments among the white people, and go ourselves to the colored people. Many of us are identified with this community, have the confidence of planters, understand how to manage missions among the colored people, and are anxious to undertake this enterprise.

Among the genuine ministers who will, no doubt, come to our Conference and greatly promote the interest of our Church, there may be some such as those of whom our Lord says, "Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing;" and others somewhat like those of whom he said to the Church of Ephesus, "Thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not; and hast found them liars." Let us "Therefore be wise as serpents and harmless as doves," and protect the flock of Christ from deceitful wolves, and injudicious, indolent shepherds, and at the same time sustain the true shepherds who have or will come to our aid. St. Paul and Wesley planted churches and gave them to the pastoral care of others, and then went into new and difficult regions and established other churches and supplied them with ministers, and so on, for the world was their parish. Let us follow their example, and glory in giving some of our appointments to suitable ministers, who will come or be transferred to our Conference, so that we, who are acquainted with the country and people, may go and organize new societies.

We want, as above stated, about fifteen men to supply this Conference, and some ten for our missionary enterprise, in all, twenty-five. God has already called them for the work. They are scattered all over our nation. Here is the field of labor. And we pray God to send a messenger, or his Spirit, to each of them, as he did to St. Paul, and say to them, Come over or down into Louisiana, and help us.

In addition to all this let the hundreds of our surplus preachers go into other missionary fields all over the world, and let our churches and friends contribute amply to their support. Millions of souls are living in moral darkness, ignorance, superstition and sin, but the missionaries are at home, and the people have the money, and a thousand calls from every region of the missionary world, in thunder tones, amidst the lightnings, tempests, volcanos and earthquakes of the moral world in rain, and louder and louder reiterate, "Come over into Macedonia, and help us!"

Random Thoughts.

Minden and Bossier point have been in a great hubbub lately. The cause of this is, steamboats having arrived here. You know that the Red River remained low an unusual length of time. That ancient individual, "the oldest inhabitant," never saw it in this wise before, but once; and that was a few years ago. Lake Bisteneau for a long time was no lake at all—no sign of the once beautiful sheet of water, on the bosom of which once plied the mighty steamer, could be seen, and nothing remained to tell of its greatness but a small bayou meandering through the middle of its bed. And here we were, with an outlet from this rich country to the great emporium of the Southwest. The cotton bales were stowed away in massive piles in the different warehouses, waiting for the rising of the waters; and what was worse, though we had a plenty of the substantials, all the luxuries of life were about out—flour, sugar, coffee, etc. were very scarce. Indeed we are dependent in your city for these, and many other of the good things that give add and comfort to this life. Without access to the city, this country would be poor indeed; and on the other hand, without the country there could be no city: we mutually assist each other.

At last the rain came in torrents—the roads were made almost impassable. At one time my buggy sunk down to the axletrees, the horses floundered, I and my wife jumped out; the upshot was, the tongue was broken and the harness pretty well used up. You would have laughed had you seen us on our way to the next house, which was four or five miles off. Another time, on my way to an appointment, I had to cross a bridge, one end of which was afloat. My horse got fast in it and fell—and it was a good thing for me that in my youth I learned to be an expert swimmer. I think, Mr. Editor, that should we ever get so far along in the South as to have theological seminaries, one department of which ought to be a swimming school, for I tell you that the itinerant will find it more useful in this country than the lore of scholastic theology.

As soon as the waters were up, the booming steamers made their appearance in our midst. To see one was a sight, and the inhabitants presented the appearance of a beehive on a sun-shiny day. Many of our neighbors are now in, or on their way to your city. Cotton bales are disappearing, and our tables once more are loaded with the good things of this world.

Minden is a beautiful village, in Claiborne Parish, at the head of navigation through Lake Bisteneau. It is a town in the woods. There is a large parallelogram in the centre, in which the inhabitants have, with much good taste, let the natural forest growth remain. The place is improving, and it must improve to a considerable extent yet, for there is an immense section of country that do nearly all their trading here. There are two churches, Methodist and Baptist. Our Presbyterian brethren have preaching here, in the Masonic Hall. There is one newspaper published here, with whom I believe you do not exchange. It is full of spice and wit, but not always of the most polished kind.

It is here that Bro. Drake expected to establish a Female College, of high grade; but I am afraid that it will fall through, at least for a while. It has been regularly incorporated. One article of the act states that seven of the Trustees shall be a quorum to do business. Unfortunately, when the act was sent to the Governor, there were but seven names to it, and they are now so scattered that it is impossible to get them all together in order to organize and elect others. This is to be lamented. Had there been a few more names to it, a quorum could be formed at any time, and we could now be going ahead with the buildings. I know of no other way that we can do now but to have another act passed, with names enough on it to form a quorum without any trouble. It is a pity to let such an opportunity pass of having a school of that character established in this interesting portion of our Conference.

I intended to tell you something about Bossier Point, but as my sheet is full I will will defer it to some other time. The planters are hard at work planting another crop, and I hope that this year Providence will favor them with refreshing showers, as well as the rays of the genial sun.

In China, a vast amount of religious knowledge is being diffused by the various missions. A goodly number of Chinese have embraced the gospel, many of whom have conveyed it to remote parts of the empire. The two Jews whom we mentioned in a former article as having visited the missionaries at Shanghai, have returned to their brethren at Khae-fung-foo. During the period of their abode at Shanghai, they read various portions of the New Testament, and acquired a considerable knowledge of the leading truths of Christianity. They took with them, on their departure, a supply of Christian books for distribution among their Jewish brethren. The missionaries state that, so far from showing any prejudice against Christianity, they were quite willing to accept it, as an expansion of their own religion.

A SOCIETY OF JEWS.—The Jews of Paris, headed by MM. de Rothschild and other distinguished persons of the sect, have just established a Society at Paris for the study and propagation of the sacred sciences. Rooms have been taken, in which religious instruction is given gratuitously to young men destined for the priesthood, and in which Jews of all classes assemble to pray and hear religious books read. A Rabbi is attached to the establishment, and every Sunday M. Albert Cohn, a distinguished Oriental scholar, reads and explains passages from the Fathers of the Synagogue.

The Mourner, Blessed.

"Blessed are they that mourn for they shall be comforted."

Life has been fitly called a "vale of tears," and there is perhaps as much truth as poetry in the expression. Man is introduced into life with a tear sullying his eye, and after a few years spent amid its weepings and wailings makes his exit.

Possessed of a sensitive nature and a sympathetic soul, the afflictions of others, as well as his own, strikes with a magic wand the fount of his heart, and draws his sympathy in a gushing rivulet of tears. But withal, how sweet these tears often are, of what a mitigating power possessed! The heart that never felt, and the eyes that never wept, are rebels against nature's laws. Circumstanced as man finds himself in this world, satisfied of the short tenure of his life, and equally conscious of the uncertainty of that tenure, he learns to cling to that which promised the surest support, and congenializes most with his nature. And amid the sceneries and revolutions of life, interspersed, he finds many objects which, by a strange influence, elicits and then fixes his love; this then becomes the beautiful of life, and within the sphere influenced by these objects he subsists and is happy. Outside of this all is gloomy, all uninviting, without a green spot in all the dreary wild, nor oases to look upon or linger by. Like an osier planted and trained by a gentle and watchful hand, it grows up to a stately tree. Its branches shoot forth in every direction, and are clothed with living foliage. It furnishes a shelter for the weary, and dependants subsist upon its fruit.

This is man's day of prosperity. But anon the sky darkens, and the tempest howls ominously by. Now the most beautiful branch is ruthlessly torn from the bleeding stem, and the encased heart is exposed to an inclement sky; anon another storm comes sweeping by, and bears before its fury another riven branch. The parent stem blighted, oozes forth the sap of life from an hundred bleeding pores; adversity's day grows darker, and its dews and damps settle upon the exposed and defenceless trunk, and superinduces decay, and thus storm after storm arises, and as often damages the trunk, until weakened with decay, blighted by its bereftments, it pines and falls.

"There is no flock, however watched and tended,
But one dead lamb is there!
There is no fireside, howsoe'er defended,
But has one vacant chair."

In this distress how sweetly soothing is the voice of the Gospel. "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." How ever deep and secret the recess of the heart where silent grief is preying the Gospel finds it, though beyond the ken of man. It comes the breath of mercy, ladened with a healing virtue—it comes so gently, so kindly. O! who could bolt his heart against such a sympathetic guest. How impartial it gently steals into the silent chamber sacred to grief, where the widowed mother imprints the nightly kiss upon the lips of her babes, and weepingly commends them to the care of the Father of the fatherless, and bids her be comforted. Into the palaces of the great, where grief enters, this sweet voice gently speaks. They that mourn shall be comforted. Inseparable companion of sorrow, even down to the prison it descends, and to the penitent convict whispers peace, and to the trembling, halting Christian, who mourns over his spiritless devotion, thou shalt be comforted; to the tried, the tempted, the weak and the faint, it whispers be of good cheer, I am with thee. To the pilgrim of many days and as many tears, it proclaims they that sow in tears shall reap in joy; to the mourner in Zion thou shalt be comforted; to the bereaved, thou shalt meet again to part no more; to the desolate and broken hearted—

"Come, ye disconsolate! where'er ye languish,
Come, and at God's altar fervently kneel!
Here bring your wounded hearts, here tell your anguish,
Earth has no sorrow that Heaven cannot heal!

Joy of the desolate, light of the straying,
Hope of the penitent, fadeless and pure;
Here speaks the comforter, in God's name saying,
Earth has no sorrow that Heaven cannot heal!

Go, ask the Infidel, what boon he brings us?
What charm for aching hearts he can reveal?
Sweet as the Heavenly promise, Hope cheeringly sings us,
Earth has no sorrow that Heaven cannot heal!

THE RIGHT SIDE FOR THE BRIDE.—The Rev. Dr. Cox, of Brooklyn, has published a long treatise on the question whether the bride should stand on the right or left side of the bridegroom during the marriage ceremony! He decides that she should take the right, and proves it by elaborate arguments and copious extracts from the Bible. For instance, when Solomon married an Egyptian princess, "on his right did stand the Queen, in gold of Ophir." [N. Y. Obs.

Modern Infidelity Smoking.

We should like to see in some one of the modern periodicals devoted to the destruction of the Christian religion, a fair, four-square review of the "New Testament of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

If the Gospel, so called by the Christian, is not the wisdom of God and the power of God unto salvation, it would be quite as easy to prove it in a bold, manly and scholar-like review of the book which its believers rely on, as by petty, half and half, true and false, philosophical essays in the newspapers and the quarterlies. The time was when infidelity had a bold front and a fearless steel. It marched up to the strongholds of Christianity, and struck at the heart of the system. True it made a failure of it, but the world is wiser now than it was then, and "progress" is the watchword of the infidel party in this country and abroad. Why then do we have to track the enemy as you would an insect through the forest, who fears to leave a foot print lest you should run him down? Why must you tie him to a definition, and then force him to explain himself, before by will admit that he is the opposer of revelation?

Why does he contend that he believes Paul was inspired, and then confess that he believes Milton and Tom Moore were inspired also? Why does he insist that he believes in God, and then say that every thing good is God, and he believes in all alike? Why does he profess to receive the New Testament, and then pretend to tell you what is true and what is false in its pages? Why do they admit the Old Testament to be from God, and then call it a "Hebrew reservoir" of all possible inconsistencies? Why do they lay the slightest claim to faith in Christianity, and then discuss the question whether Jesus was mistaken, or his evangelists have misrepresented him in the reports of his lectures? [N. NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, May 1.

Anti-Protestant Treaty.

The C. Presbyterian Advocate, of Tennessee, protests against the late treaty made by the United States Commissioner with the Indians of Oregon. From a letter written by one of the former missionaries, we learn that all Protestant missionaries are hereafter to be excluded from that Territory.

The treaty was held near the spot where the lamented Dr. Wightman and lady were murdered by the savages, some few years since. The missionary writes:

"I am left with four children, the eldest fourteen years of age—the oldest white person born in Oregon—and the youngest five years. From the overthrow of our mission, I have entertained the hope that God would open the way for us to return and renew our labors for the poor Indians. This hope seemed about to be realized when I was appointed by our Government, through the advice of our delegate, the Hon. Mr. Thurston, Indian Agent for the middle district, to be located at Wailatpu, our missionary station, and the theatre of the bloody tragedy. This brightening hope was greatly weakened, however, by the arrival of the Superintendent, and the change of my field to the South, as far as the country would admit, i. e. to the Rogue River and the Umpqua country. This was followed, last June, by an act of the Superintendent most humiliating to every true American. A treaty was formed with the tribes of the Middle District, an article of which provides that no American (i. e. Protestant) missionary shall ever again enter their country. This treaty was made near Fort Walla-Walla, which had been a most active missionary station of the Papists for some two years before the massacre. Some seventy Papal missionaries have been laboring in that vast country since the massacre, and still are; and they are now left, by treaty, the sole occupants of that important field. They are traversing every corner and visiting every lodge. I did not learn this till our last expedition, by sea, to the coast in the Rogue River country, to treat with those tribes for their lands—having been appointed one of the Commissioners, with the Superintendent, to treat with the tribes for their lands west of the Cascades. As soon as he announced this peculiar article in his treaty with the Upper tribes, all hope of our returning to that field, the field of my choice, and the people of my choice, was taken away."

The editors of the Home Missionary remark upon this treaty:

"We can not refrain from expressing the astonishment and grief with which we contemplate the fact above stated. At a time when the principles of religious toleration are making such progress in the earth; while missionaries are admitted into Burmah and China, are protected throughout the dominions, and by the whole power of the Sultan; and are even allowed to pursue their labors unmolested among the savage tribes of Africa, they are forbidden by our own Government to evangelize the heathen on our own soil!"

The editor of the C. Presbyterian adds:

"The power is now claimed by territories of the United States, to lay off counties in the Indian country, to establish precincts for elections, etc. Five such counties are now included in Minnesota, and in them 216 votes were polled at elections held last fall. This power of territories is acknowledged by Congress, and it will doubtless be exercised by the Oregon Territory, in the Indian country beyond the Rocky Mountains. Yes, all classes and grades of white men will be found among the poor savages, except Protestant preachers. They, by a law of the U. States, will be prohibited from entering! and that law originating with Jesuitical priests, who are perhaps not even American citizens!"

The Presbyterian eye watches without sleep, night and day, every subtle movement of Roman Catholicism. We thank God to know that that line of defence is so ably guarded. Time was, whenever an alarm was sounded in that quarter, it was thought to be more from nervous irritability than any real threat of danger. But no one can any longer mistake the political designs of Catholic priests. They not only avow that they seek to control the ballot box, but boast that they can do it. Our own Church is stirring from a long dose, and sees with fear, in the midst of our country, a body of men distinct in their habits, and isolated from all interests and ties common to others, who swear to support and obey a foreign prince—a power which for three hundred years has warred against every form of liberty, mental and moral, in every nation; which has made blind and poor and worthless every country in which it has flourished; which seeks to put out the light of the Bible in every dwelling, and which to all the needy world, in place of food, offers a scorpion. Let all Protestants mark it, the hope of Catholicism is not Rome—poor, prostituted, exhausted Rome—but America, young, fresh, unsuspecting America.

Rev. Dr. Rivers will preach in the Felicity Street Church, to-morrow, at 11 A. M.

Dr. Clapp vs. "Woodsman."

We have been favored with another visit from the Doctor. It is but justice, maybe, to quote so much of his last published sermon as seems to be directly in answer to our correspondent:

"Except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of heaven." [John. 3:3.

"Two facts have occurred within the last few days which have given a direction to my thoughts, suggestive of the sermon that I shall now attempt to deliver. A periodical of great celebrity in some quarters, belonging to the Methodist denomination, has been lately sent to me, containing a description of the peculiar theological views said to be advocated by your pulpit. In this article it is affirmed 'that Mr. Clapp's notion of the new birth scarcely amounts to any fact in metaphysics, or any real distinction in morals.'

"I confess that I read these words not with anger, but with deep sorrow and astonishment—sorrow that a statement so untrue and injurious in its tendency should be circulated over the United States in a widely-spread, most able and popular journal; and astonishment that my real views touching this important subject should be so grossly misapprehended by any body."

"Woodsman" is able to speak for himself; but, we confess to no surprise that he should have "misapprehended" the "distinguished preacher." In the next quotation, in which the Doctor is illustrating what the "new birth" is, regeneration is made identical with recuperation, repair and rejuvenescence. The old ground-work seems to be left, in his view of the process; or does he mean, with the apostle, "Therefore if any man be in Christ he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold all things are become new?"

"Suppose you should hear a person say concerning a barren field or fruit tree, that a particular treatment, or the application of particular means, would cause it to experience a new birth, would not every one understand precisely what was meant by such language? Not long since I heard a gentleman remark, when speaking of a certain building, that it had been born again; the edifice alluded to had underwent thorough repairs. It is a common thing in this city, when speaking of our friends in autumn, after returning from their summer excursions, to say 'how well they look! They are completely rejuvenated; they are born again.'"

But that no one may hereafter mistake him, we give, in the following, the Dr.'s own definition of his own faith, italicised by himself:

"In the dialogue of our Lord with Nicodemus it is used in a moral sense, to signify that change of principles and habits which is essential to a Christian life. To be born, again, then, in the chapter before us, means that revolution of the entire soul and character which is requisite to enable a sinner to become a saint—a true child of Heaven, and a genuine disciple of Jesus Christ."

He adds farther:

"Some may think that, though we admit the fact, yet we do not attach as much importance to the attainment of a new heart as many other churches. What do we habitually say on this subject? Do we not avow and teach in the most unqualified manner that without this gift it is impossible to enter into the kingdom of heaven? No sinner over was or can be admitted to those blissful mansions of light. We use the term regeneration to designate that interesting epoch in the progress of an immortal mind when it exchanges the deformity, disgrace and wretchedness of sin for the peace, dignity and loveliness of true virtue; when the seeds of eternal life begin to spring up in the soul to flourish and bloom in a progression that will never terminate. Yes; by this change the vilest sinner becomes a joint heir with Christ, a vessel of infinite mercy; an illustrious trophy of the cross; a gem that will sparkle with unfading lustre in the diadem which adorns the Redeemer of mankind. To my eye, of such importance and glory is the re-creation of a human soul, that in comparison with it the original formation of all these material worlds that roll in space is an exhibition whose grandeur dwindles into utter insignificance; for in the progress of endless years, one such mind will enjoy more exaltation and bliss than have hitherto been enjoyed by the entire universe of created intelligences. No words can exaggerate the importance of this subject.

"'Tis only the new heart that can realize God; that can commune with him; garner up his intellectual and moral splendors; partake of his inspiration; and soar towards his throne on the pinions of a hope that triumphs over time, nature, sin, sorrow, death and the grave. The new heart embraces faith, virtue, holiness—every blessing which awaits us in the compass of time, or the boundless evolutions of the world eternal."

The fact is, while the Doctor was in our office he seemed almost a Methodist. Not having read his sermon at that time, we were pleased to hear him say that he did not complain of the spirit of "Woodsman's" article, but that he rather thought it flattering. We were hardly prepared to find him citing the article in proof of the existence of the devil:

"That there is a devil, these facts already adverted to in this discourse furnish conclusive evidence—a devil of base, sinful, dark, unhallowed passions—the same passions which of old tempted our first parents, and led Cain to murder his brother Abel. Now, this state of thing exerts a most deleterious influence on the Christian name. If we disguise the real arguments of our religious opponents, or place them in a false light, the artifice will soon be discovered, and the irreligious public will conclude that we either want discernment to perceive, or fairness to appreciate the strength of the reasoning employed against us. So that such a course is as impolitic as it is wicked."

As this article may be read by some who have not read the letter of "Woodsman," we do him the justice to let his own fairness reply to the Doctor:

"Theodore Clapp and no hell are almost convertible terms; at any rate they are so intimately associated, that the one always calls up the other. Which ever comes first, the other is immediately suggested; and so true is this, that in all my rural peregrinations and town observations, I do not remember an instance in which they have been separated. This singular fact is undoubtedly founded upon a popular misunderstanding of the Dr.'s real views. He has defined his position as a believer in a limited retribution, and I suppose that it has happened according to the proverb: while he gave but an inch, his disciples have taken a yard. That he ever sanctioned this doctrine of 'no hell,' is probably untrue; but this is the popular version of the matter—a version which does injustice to its reputed author, and is productive of a fearful amount of moral evil."

But to find fault with the Doctor would be like a man's falling out with his bread and butter. If "Woodsman" has said any good things of the Doctor, the Doctor has paid it all back, with interest:

"With respect to that denomination by whose organ your pastor has been misrepresented, I entertain the most cordial feelings of love, admiration and (as I trust) Christian fellowship. I have read their history from the days of the immortal Wesley, with the deepest interest. As a body of Christians, they deserve the highest praise; and have done as much (and I think more) for pure religion, than any other sect of modern times. Dr. Chalmers, of Scotland, pronounced upon them a high and merited eulegium, when he said, 'Methodism is Christianity in earnest.' I have always fraternized with the laity and ministers of this Church, and have never, to my knowledge, uttered a word, nor performed an action of unfriendliness towards them. In one morning I collected no small sum from my personal friends, to help build the old church on the corner of Poydras and Carondelet streets. During the first part of my residence here, though quite poor, I often threw my mite into their treasury. I did so from principle and affection. There is no essential difference between my theological views and those of Wesley, Fletcher, and Dr. Adam Clark; but if there were, I should not think the less of them on that account. I do not believe that a man must have precisely my creed in order to be a Christian. I remember the time when Methodists were treated with contempt and derision by the Presbyterians, Baptists and other orthodox sects throughout the United States. But for myself I never joined in this hue and cry against them, and when a mere child I often exposed myself to ridicule and suffering, by going to their meetings. I loved to hear them sing and pray.

"I have loved them ever since with the ardor and purity of a first love. The last thirty years, at different times, I have traveled extensively over the new States in the Valley of the Mississippi. Every spot where a half dozen log cabins had been built, I found embraced in the circuit of some itinerant Methodist preacher. There these secluded settlers held meetings on the Sabbath, for religious meditation and prayer, to listen to the reading of the Scriptures, and to contemplate those thrilling wonders that cluster around the religion of Jesus and the summit of Calvary. There they had tracts, books, newspapers, Sunday schools and Bible classes. There

"'Faith's pure hymn beneath a shelter rude,
Breathed out as sweetly to the tangled wood,
As where the rays through blazing windows pour,
On marble shaft and tesselated floor.'

"Some of the happiest hours of my life have been passed in these humble, retired places of worship.

"I honor a denomination that makes such efforts and sacrifices to carry the messages of the Gospel to every son and daughter of our widely extended territories. I honor a denomination which has always stood up with the firmness of a granite mountain against the horrid dogmas of Calvinism, and in favor of the offers of a universal redemption through Jesus to all who will repent. I cherish a respect for them which my words can not express. I wish they could reciprocate the respect. I desire to live in peace with them; to be a humble co-laborer in the same field. May no speculation in theory separate our hearts and create virulence of feeling. I do not ask them to endorse my errors; but simply to be assured that I depend upon the same Saviour, whom they preach, to deliver me from sin, suffering and the grave; and to introduce me at last to the scenes of an immortal world. I would rather be a sincere, humble preacher of the Methodist sect, which se many despise and ridicule, than to possess all the wealth, rank, fashion and splendor of a dying world. May the richest blessings of Heaven descend upon them and on us, and on all of every name, who love our Lord Jesus Christ in truth and sincerity."

CORRECTION.—Dr. McFerrin calls our attention to an article in Methodist Press, in this paper, March 27, credited to the Canada Guardian instead of the Nashville Advocate, where it originally appeared. We did clip from the Canada sheet, (as our veracious scissors will testify,) of the 10th March. We were looking for an expression of opinion on that subject in that quarter, and therefore were attracted by an article in one paper which escaped our notice in another whose opinion had already been expressed. The article in the Guardian began a column, and was without the usual quotation marks. By close inspection we discover since, in another column, the credit. We are pleased to give the pungent paragraph on "Buncomb Sympathy" to its rightful owner.

MCGEHEE CHURCH.—This new and spacious church, situated on Carondelet street, between Hevia and Girod streets, is now advancing towards completion. The basement of the church is already completed, and will be opened on Sunday next for public worship, by the congregation heretofore meeting in Grace Church, over the Carrollton railroad depot. Preaching every Sabbath at 11 A. M. and 7¾ P. M., by the pastor of the church, Rev. J. B. Walker. The McGehee Sabbath School will assemble next Sabbath morning, in the basement of the church, where rooms are specially fitted for their convenience, and will continue to meet every Sabbath morning at 9 o'clock. Parents and guardians are invited to call with their children and visit the school.

ENCOURAGEMENT.—In the Sunday School Visitor for May, the editor gives an extract from a letter from Bishop Andrew. We can imagine how such hearty words, from such a source, must have nerved up Brother S. for a fresh season of toil. We rejoice with those that rejoice; besides, when we are made glad in the same way, surely two of us will be glad again:

"Bp. Andrew has expressed the feelings of his colleagues in the Episcopacy, in the following passage, which we take the liberty of extracting from a private letter. Speaking of his intention to write for the Visitor, the Bishop says: 'In the Conferences I have endeavored to do all I could to extend its circulation, and I think I can say, with all good conscience, that if the Visitor is not extensively circulated, it is not my fault, and I am very sure I can say it is not yours. You have done your duty nobly as its editor. The Sunday School Visitor richly deserves the universal patronage of the Southern Church. The fact is, it must be sustained; we can not do without it. The hope of the Church in the future depends on our children, and their proper training is largely dependent on an efficient system of Sunday School operations, and in carrying out this plan the Visitor is an indispensable auxiliary.'"

SABBATH SCHOOL CELEBRATION.—The New Orleans District Sabbath School Union, embracing all the Methodist schools, English and German, of and adjacent to New Orleans, will be held in the basement of the new McGehee Church, on Carondelet street, on Wednesday next, May 5. The exercises, consisting of addresses, dialogues, recitations and songs, will be by the children of the various schools, and will commence at 7 P. M.

The public are invited to attend.

To the Subscribers of the S. M. Pulpit in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference:

The Report of the Committee on Periodicals and Accounts for the S. M. Pulpit, had not reached Bro. Deems, up to the 3d inst. This will account for your not receiving the Pulpit, and for other directions not being attended to. I have made another report, which I trust will reach the office soon. Your requests will be attended to.

The Late Professor Stuart.

It was our happiness, not very long ago, to visit Andover, (Massachusetts, U. S.) and to spend a few hours under the roof of the late Professor Stuart. At that time the professor seemed a hale, as he was a hearty old man, and surprised us not a little by the vivacity of his conversation. We refer to this interview, however, chiefly for the purpose of remarking on what struck us as a peculiarity and defect in the subject of our sketch. He talked with the utmost fluency and discursiveness on whatever occurred to him, however unimportant, and seemed studiously to eschew every thing fitted to remind me that he was a biblical philologist, rather than a mere citizen of the world. On leaving him, the observation occurred to me which Voltaire made to Congreve, when the latter hinted that he expected to be visited only as a gentleman, "that had he been merely a gentleman, he (Voltaire) should never have been desirous of seeing him."

But if Professor Stuart had his faults, they were such as might have been concealed, had he more cunning and less frankness. "We know the worst of him," said Professor Park, in his funeral sermon; "he had no hidden mine of iniquity. It is no common virtue," he added, "which is honored in every farmer's cottage of the town where he has lived for two and forty years, and which is venerated by missionaries of the Cross on Lebanon and at Damascus. I have heard him praised by Tholuck and Neander, and Henderson and Chalmers, and by an Irish laborer and a servant boy, and by the families before whose windows he had taken his daily walks for almost half a century." APROPOS—BISHOP. DOANE.—A correspondent of the New York Observer writes thus:

BURLINGTON, N. J., April 2, 1852.

Messrs. Editors: The recent revival of the troubles in this bishopric, has recalled to my recollection the heel of a sermon I heard from the Bishop a year or two ago. I copy the notes of it made at the time, and send them to you.

"July 16, 1850.—Last Sabbath I heard a sermon by Bishop Doane in his own pulpit in this city. It was an exposition of the latter part of the third chapter of the book of Exodus, in which it is recorded that the women of Israel were directed to borrow of their Egyptian neighbors silver and gold, which they did not return to the owners. This was a financial operation so common in our day, that I was pleased to hear an authorized exposition of it from one who had had large experience, not only in religious things, but in fiscal matters also. He went on to say:

"'Some persons have objected to this history, that the Lord justified these women in robbery: that they are directed to borrow silver and gold, when there was no probability and no intention of bringing them back. But there are several observations to be made by way of throwing light upon the transaction. 1. We are told that these women were to find favor in the sight of the Egyptians; and they probably took the jewels away with their full consent. 2. They wanted the goods for the Lord's use: they were going on a long journey under his command, and this property could be used in procuring their sustenance while on the way. 3. They had long served the Egyptians without wages, and had a right doubtless to more than they received. 4. But without relying on any of these grounds of justification, it is enough to know that the silver and the gold are the Lord's: he lent it to the Egyptians: he took it away from them and lent it to the Israelites: he had a right to do what he pleased with his own. Let us pray.'

"This was the end of his discourse. It was delivered with great deliberation, and some hesitation, and I thought the Bishop was glad when he got out of the wilderness."

LONDON CORRESPONDENCE.

WESLEYAN AFFAIRS.

The Memorial Committee met again, by adjournment, last Tuesday night, March 16, not at Birmingham or Manchester, as had been originally expected and intended, but in London, at the Centenary Hall, as had been finally arranged. The Committee spent that day in revising the report of their former meeting, which had in the interim been prepared by the Secretaries. In the evening a number of ministers and friends were invited to take coffee together, and attend afterwards the final meeting of the "United Testimonial" Committee and supporters. Drs. Hunting and Newton were both present. The President opened the meeting. Thos. Farmer, Esq., took the Chair. Mr. Edward Corderoy read the report of the Committee, an admirable composition, and followed it with a most eloquent and impressive speech, full of both beauty and power. Messrs. Garland and Falconer succeeded him in able speeches. The Rev. William Arthur spoke as he always does—well; and several other gentlemen followed. The meeting was protracted to a late hour.

From the report, it appeared that notwithstanding the sad loss of members, and the great general embarrassment of the Connection, and the extra call made upon the body at large for the completion and support of the noble Normal College, for training day school teachers, yet in some five months £7300 had been subscribed, of which all within about £200 had been paid, and the rest would at once be forthcoming. What renders this result the more satisfactory, is that no pressure has been brought to bear upon the Connection—the subscriptions have been tendered with quiet spontaneity, and that they have been accompanied, in a great number of instances, with such testimonies of veneration and love for the distinguished men by whose behalf the movement has been made, as unspeakably enhanced the value of the mere pecuniary expression of esteem.

This has been, as I before informed you, a purely lay movement. It was even desired that ministers should not contribute. Not a few of them, however, have refused to be excluded from a share, however trifling, in the subscription; and all have hailed with gladness an undertaking for which there has been no parallel, and probably never will be, because they felt that Drs. Newton and Bunting, co-evals, and equals in fame, though so different in their order—brethren who have been "pleasant in their lives"—and who, after more than fifty-two years of labor side by side, are "not yet divided," were a "par nobile fratrum" whom to honor and to distinguish above all others was a happy recompense of justice and of love. It is remarkable, too, that the men by whom this "United Testimonial Fund" has been devised, initiated and carried through, number among the most active of themselves some of the most independent, as well as the ablest and most influential, minds in Methodism. There was more than an ordinary proportion of such men among the speakers of Tuesday week.

Dr. Bunting ages very fast—but on that evening spoke not only with the beautiful modesty and unfeigned humility which are his real characteristics, and which become more beautifully manifest as his "outward man perishes," but with a chaste propriety, a force, collectedness, and even power of voice, which were surprising. His infirmities, however, weigh him down fast; he seems to break daily. He is now, in every one's sight, a feeble, aged, tottering man. His memory, too, begins to fail; but his understanding still retains its supremacy. He is still the sage, but the orator and ruler he can be no more.

Dr. Newton, too, begins to bow: that noble frame gently bends—his eye glows not as formerly—his step is slower and heavier—his features grow bare and somewhat hard—his voice, still deep and noble, has yet lost much of its fullness, compass and power; but never did he speak with more simple and manly felicity of sentiment and language than on that evening. He was calm, as became the occasion—a touch of melancholy shaded the Christian cheerfulness of his manner. How could it be otherwise, with his shattered comrade beside him, and the end of his happy toil before him? But his heart was full of love to God and his brethren, and of gratitude to his friends. It was a most affecting sight to see those aged men standing side by side, thanking their friends, and embracing each other. Never shall I look upon such a pair again.

Before the meeting closed, Mr. Farmer, the munificent and pious Chairman, guaranteed that the fund should equal £8000. One moiety of this, you will remember, goes to the Missions, the other to the Worn Out Preachers' Fund. Each of these funds, meantime, on receipt of its moiety, guarantees an annuity of £200 a year for the use of the beneficiaries. £200 per annum is therefore the provision, comfortable yet not large, made for the old age of each of these men of God and distinguished servants of the Church which tenders them this acknowledgment. The private property of each of them is very trifling.

On Wednesday morning the lay gentlemen met the Memorial Committee. Seven hundred and twenty, or thereabouts, were invited to attend. Upwards of three hundred were present. Many of these came from great distances, and all (of course) came and remained at their own private expense. Every part of England—Scotland also, and Ireland—were represented. After the President had opened the meeting, and given a narrative of the proceedings of the Committee, and of the part he had acted in the affair, the Secretary of the Conference (Mr. John Farrar) read the report of the Committee, as revised and approved on the preceding day. This done, one of the gentlemen present moved that the report should be printed for the use of the meeting. This was agreed to, and meantime one proposition was detached from the rest and from the body of the report for immediate consideration. The proposition thus detached, was that relating to the composition of the Quarterly Meeting, which was discussed during the remainder of the day, and finally accepted by the meeting in the form submitted by the Committee. The printed reports were distributed the next morning. For eight hours during the three days—Wednesday, Thursday and Friday—the propositions of the Committee were discussed with the most perfect freedom of speech, but at the same time with admirable harmony of temper; and eventually they were all accepted with almost entire unanimity, with only one modification of importance in relation to any of them. On Saturday, the Ministerial Committee met again apart, and amended their report in conformity with the suggestions of the laymen.

The Quarterly Meeting is to consist of Stewards, Leaders, Trustees in Society in the Circuit, and Local Preachers of three years' continuous standing after the completion of their probation, together (of course) with all the ministers of the Circuit, including the supernumeraries whose names appear on the printed minutes. Any member of this meeting is at liberty, at the June quarter day, to propose a memorial to the Conference on any subject of general interest to the Connection, or of special moment to the Circuit, provided that he communicate to the Superintendent of the Circuit the terms of his motion ten days previously. The meeting is at liberty to amend in any way they may deem right, as well as simply to adopt or reject, the proposal submitted to it. In case of dissatisfaction with a verdict found at a leaders' meeting, either the Superintendent on the one hand, or the accused and tried person on the other, is at liberty to appeal to a special circuit meeting, as to a new jury, for a rehearing of the case. This jury to consist of not more than twelve persons, chosen by the Quarterly meeting out of its own members, in such manner as it may deem best.

This was the most difficult point by far before the meeting. It was found to be very desirable, but apparently impracticable, to fix a general rule as to the mode of selecting this jury in different circuits. It was found to be also impossible to determine, for the Connection at large, whether the jury should be chosen pro re nata, or should be a standing circuit jury, periodically re-eligible, or to be filled up by new elections upon each vacancy as it occurred. These difficulties had led the Ministerial Committee to devolve the re-hearing of the case at once upon the whole Quarterly Meeting bodily. But the ablest and most influential of our lay gentlemen considered that this would be, in many large towns, a very perilous experiment. It was argued that in times of party spirit especially, in a difficult or momentous disciplinary case, a jury which should consist of between one hundred and two hundred circuit officers, of various grades, would be far too tumultuary and unwieldy an assembly. The proposal of the Committee was, in fact, considered too democratic; and after a very long and able discussion, it was found necessary to modify it.

The appeal from the sentence of the Superintendent is still, as before, to the collective pastorate of the district, and ultimately to the Conference. We feel this to be an essential point—one which, as pastors, we are not at liberty to yield. The exposition of the law must be with the ministry. For teaching and upholding this in its integrity and purity they are responsible peculiarly to Christ, and they can not consent that when a sin is proved, a vote of a majority of the lay officers of the flock should decide how that sin is to be visited. They can not consent to expound Christ's law of holiness and enforce his requirements of church purity according to the vote of a meeting. On this point the speeches of the Rev. John Scott and the Rev. W. Arthur (as published in the Watchman) are admirable. These reverend gentlemen, be it observed, are among the truest and largest reformers in Methodism. They show that a minister can not divide his peculiar responsibility, and is not at liberty to put his office into commission, abdicate all ruling functions, to submit to become the mere instrument and organ of a majority, the mere actuary and servant of a board of Society officers. Wesleyan ministers can not believe in the co-ordinate authority of the separated ministry and of leaders and local preachers, or that the latter are in any just sense the pastors of the flock. We think, too, that on every ground of reason and analogy, the verdict and the sentence should not, in cases of ordinary government and law, lie in the hands of the same parties. The judicial function should, if possible, be supreme and aloof. The judges whom Christ has appointed in his Church are his consecrated ministers. In these sentiments Wesleyan ministers are supported by the deep and earnest conviction of the societies at large, who desire to acknowledge none but them as their pastors, and to see them sustained in all their true and needful pastoral rights. And in these views they were impressively sustained by the meeting of last week.

Of the other points before the meeting I need not mention all. In conformity with the spirit of the legislation of 1797, it was recommended by the Committee that every new regulation affecting the societies be read in the first (Sept.) quarterly meeting after the Conference, and its sense and reasonableness explained—so that the meeting might have a fair opportunity of exercising its right (1797) of suspending the operation of the law in that circuit, if it thought proper, until after the next Conference. A memorial on the subject could of course be prepared the ensuing June. An exact and complete manual of laws affecting the societies is to be prepared; a law is recommended against "railing;" that referring to the trial of Trustees is to be defined; the subject of pastoral visitation is commended to the special and full consideration of Conference; and the laymen, of themselves and apart, strenuously urged upon the Committee the necessity of preparing a specific law against what is called "stepping the supplies."

Dr. Beecham and Mr. Scott, by previous arrangement, acted alone as the expositors and defenders of the scheme of the Committee; Mr. Jackson and Mr. Arthur, as representatives, respectively, of the "fathers" and "young men" of the Conference, spoke on the subject of pastoral rights, both well, but the latter both more moderately and with greater force of argument and eloquence than the former. Mr. Waddy, Governor of Wesley Chapel, occasionally said a word.

So far our work is, I believe, well done. But we have not done all. District arrangements for business, the development of lay influence in district meetings, the manner of choosing the members of the mixed Conference Committees, the subject of having annually, just prior to the Conference, a sort of general assembly of lay committee men, to consult on the general affairs of the Connection—these and other points yet remain to be discussed; hitherto they have only been "thrown out" as hints. We meet again prior to the Conference by ourselves, and then once more meet the laymen. Then comes the Conference (D. V.) to revise all.

As to politics. Lord John's three-headed opposition—Whigs, Cobden Radicals and Peelites—is looked upon as a dishonorable coalition, and has rather helped Lord Derby, who, hitherto, has borne himself like a statesman, a patriot and a noble. Still I believe protection is dead and buried.

BRO. MCTYEIRE:—A desire to arrest and put revivals down is manifesting itself in portions of our Church. This desire we regard as an omen of evil, as fraught with great and imminent danger to the Church. The Methodist Church can not prosper, can not live without revivals. Other churches may prosper without them, but she can not. She was born in a revival—she was rocked through the days of her infancy in a revival—she has been fed, strengthened, sustained and brought up to her present gigantic stature through the instrumentality of revivals. Can her nature now be changed, her nourishment altered, and she remain as healthy and powerful as she now is?

We have no way of determining what will be the developments of the future, but by the past. Through the instrumentality of revival breezes and revival fire, the majestic Methodist ship has been propelled on from port to port, taking on board thousands bound for the port of Eternal Glory. Shall we now say to these breezes, "Be still"? Shall we extinguish this fire?

Ministerial brethren, let us not leave the old landmarks of Methodism. Let us labor constantly and zealously for old fashioned, sweeping Methodist revivals; then will the work of the Lord prosper in our hands, and we shall finally reap a harvest rich and eternal. The Lord help us!

Plymouth Colored Mission, Ala. Conf.

We give an extract from a letter received from the missionary, Rev. L. J. Schooler, dated April 21, 1852:

"I am still trying to do the best I can in the missionary work among the people of color; and the more I labor with them and for them, the more convinced I am that it is the work of the Lord. There is an increased interest manifest among them: the class of young negroes are improving very fast, the members of the church becoming more devoted, and the patrons and the overseers more and more delighted with the work. Many of them, though not converted men, chose to be present and listen to the Gospel; and often, when I have seen the tears of sorrow trickle down the cheeks of the overseer and his wife, with their little children around, all interested in the great work, my soul has been made happy, and in the language of one of old, exclaimed, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me; praise his holy name." I am filling seventeen appointments every four weeks; have frequently to preach four times on Sabbath, ride some twenty or thirty miles, and catechise from fifty to one hundred children.

"We can not enter upon this delicate work as we do upon a white mission field; we have to wait until the planter says come over and help us; and there are many who would thus invite us if they could get preaching on the Sabbath. I have but little doubt, if I could preach fifty times on a Sabbath, that I could get that many plantations to preach at. I have been introducing preaching on some of the farms at night, and it operates well. Let the overseers understand the regular night that the missionary is to be there, and he can stop work a little sooner. They can all be collected at an early hour in the night, and we can labor with them two or three hours with much more success than we could by calling them from the field at 12 in the day."

Earliest Accounts of Ohio—Colonel James Smith.

This Western pioneer was a prisoner among the Indians in the Territory now the State of Ohio, ninety-seven years ago, when the buffalo and the elk ranged in the forests. The journal of Colonel Smith was published as a pamphlet in Lexington, Ky., in 1799, and his accurate and intelligent account of the country and Indians, and his adventures among them, renders it valuable to every one who feels any interest in the early history of Ohio. We find the following account in the Dayton Journal:

He was taken prisoner by three Indians, in May, 1755, when he was 18 years old, about four miles from Bedford, Pennsylvania. His comrade was killed. He captors took him to Fort Du Quesne, where Pittsburg now is, and there made him run the gauntlet. They kept him there till after Braddock's defeat, which took place on the 9th of July the same year. He stood upon the wall of the fort on the morning of the battle, and saw the Indians receive their ammunition, and march off to the field with the French and Canadians; in an amounting to only about 400. In the afternoon he saw them return victorious, exhibiting the scalps and plunder they had taken; and in the evening saw them commence the torture of their prisoners whom they burnt to death.

A few days after the battle, the Indians took him forty miles up the Alleghany, to one of their towns; and after remaining there three weeks, they went to another town on the west branch of the Muskingum, near the position of Newark, where they adopted him, and "washed the white blood out of him." He then accompanied some of them to Scioto Salt Springs, in Jackson county, on a hunt, and after returning to the Muskingum, went with his adopted brother to Lake Erie, between Sandusky and Huron river, the Indian name of which was Candaskarie. They remained in that vicinity about a year.

In the fall of 1756, he went with another of his adopted brothers and a party, along the Lake shore in canoes to the mouth of the Cuayhoga, which they ascended to the Falls. They remained there until December, making a hunt over to the Muskingum and back. They then went to the head waters of Big Beaver, and spent the winter, during which the snow fell, in a day and night, to the depth of three feet.

In March, 1757, they returned to the Cuayhoga falls and descended to the mouth of the river, from which they coasted along the Lake to the mouth of the Maume. A few days afterwards, they sailed to the Detroit river, and ascended to the Wyandot town on the Canada shore, opposite Detroit. His description of the French settlement on the Canada side below Detroit, will be recognized as perfectly accurate by any person who may see them as it. There has been no change there in the last hundred years.

The Indians crushed on Detroit river until November, when they coasted round the Lake to the mouth of the Maume. The hunters spread themselves across the land on the north side of the river, from the Lake to the point of the cape. They killed about thirty deer, the squaws paddling in canoes tomahawking such as took to the water. They then went to the Sandusky, and ascended it until they came to the Plains, towards the head of the Scioto. There they had what they called a "ring hunt." They kindled a circle of fire in the prairie, and as it burned towards the center, the game crowded before it into a smaller space, when the hunters shot them. They divided about an deer apiece to the hunters engaged.

After this, the company to which Smith belonged was reduced, by various divisions, until his only companions were an old man and a young boy, with whom he went to the latter on the west branch of the Scioto, which calls the Olentangy. It is the eastern branch which bears that name, and this is the only geographical inaccuracy in the narrative.

The old man soon became lame, and the support of the three devolved on Smith. He succeeded in killing sufficient game for their wants, until February, 1758, when a crust formed on the snow, and the game could not be approached. They were reduced almost to starvation, and Smith, after living on short allowance for several days, went out and hunted two days, without anything to eat during the time, and returned home unsuccessful.

The Indian boy made some broth for him, of some old and old cut bones that lay about the camp, which he thought delicious. Next day he started out to hunt again, when he determined to run off and try to find Pennsylvania, leaving the old man and boy to their fate. When he had gone ten or twelve miles, he saw some Indians approached; was fortunate enough to kill a deer. He built a fire and began to roast some of the meat; but his hunger was so great that the ate it almost raw. When he had satisfied his hunger, his feelings for the old man and boy returned, and loading himself with meat, after securing the rest from the wolves, he went back. Next day, on his way to bring in another load of meat, he killed a bear, and from that time procured game sufficient to maintain them.

In the spring of 1758, they went to Detroit again, but soon returned and hunted upon the Sandusky and Scioto until the spring of 1759. In April of that year, they visited Detroit, and went to Montreal in an elm bark canoe.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

in July, 1781, left the Indians privately, and got on board a French cutter which had English prisoners on board, that were to be exchanged. They were, however, removed to a prison in Montreal, and kept there four months, and at last were sent to Crown Point, and exchanged in November.

Early in 1782 he arrived at his home in Pennsylvania. His people had never known what became of him, and his re-appearance had married a few days before his return.

He remained in Pennsylvania until 1783 when he removed to Kentucky. He had spent one summer, that of 1756, exploring the wilderness of Kentucky. The rest of the time from the end of his captivity among the Indians until his removal, a period of eighteen years, was passed in active border life. He acted a prominent part in the Indian wars of those times, in the defence of Western and Middle Pennsylvania, and in the Revolutionary War, and passed through various grades to the rank of colonel.

Obituary Notices.

DIED—In Clarke county, Ala., LORENZO DOW WEBB, in the 41st year of his age. He was born in Edgefield District, South Carolina, March 12, 1812. For many years he had been an acceptable member of the Church, and at the time of his death was filling the responsible office of class leader. I saw him a few days before he died, conversed freely with him on the subject of death, and found that he was prepared to go. It is true his dependent family was a strong tie about his heart, but he gave them up into the hands of a merciful Father. May the Lord sustain our deeply afflicted sister and her fatherless children, and the weeping sisters of the deceased, and may they all meet in Heaven!

MRS. ANGELINA HAWKINS, daughter of Miol and Priscilla Ezell, was born Sept. 3, 1796, and departed this life Feb. 2, 1852, aged 55 years, 4 months and 29 days. She was a native of Virginia; her parents removed to N. Carolina in 1798; she was united in marriage with Mr. Gabriel Hawkins Nov. 9, 1814. Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins removed to Alabama in 1817, and settled in Clarke county, near Suggsville. Sister Hawkins embraced religion in 1829, and in the fall of the same year joined the M. E. Church. In 1832 Brother and Sister Hawkins removed to Wilcox co. In 1844 Brother Hawkins died, after which she remained in her widowed state until the close of her earthly pilgrimage. She was a Methodist strictly, and was conversant with the Bible, and the doctrines of the Church to which she belonged. She heard all, proved all, held fast that which was good, spoke well of Christians of every name, and delighted much in the company of such as were of good report. She was the subject of affliction a number of years, but was patient, believing that the afflictions of the present life were highly beneficial to the faithful. She died of sudden illness, yet had full time to express herself satisfactorily to her friends. The God whom she had served many years did not forsake her at the last. She said her trust was in Him, and that her soul was staid on Him. We can say of her departure, that it was a most glorious one. Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth them out of them all. May we die the death of the righteous, and our last end be like his!

DANIEL YOUNGBLOOD, JR., was born in the Parish of St. Helenn, La., December 22, 1822, and joined the M. E. Church in 1842. From that time up to his death he retained his membership. A short time before his departure, he remarked that we all had to separate soon, asked his father to pray with him once more, and invited all to join. After prayer his sister bade him farewell; he asked her to serve God and get to Heaven. He was asked what word he wished to send his mother and his other sister. Tell them to strive for nothing here, but try to get to Heaven. His father replied to him, "You expect to go there yourself, do you?" He replied, with emphasis, "Yes, I do." He expired February 25, 1852. May the Lord sanctify this bereavement to the good of his family.

A NEW KIND OF GAS.—The Louisville Journal says: Mr. Foster, of Cincinnati, the well-known manufacturer of printing presses, has invented a process of making gas by which he thinks the article can be furnished at a cost of fifty cents per thousand feet. He is now putting up for Mr. Isaac Cromie, in the Louisville paper mill, the necessary machinery for furnishing gas to that building by this new process. Mr. Cromie is confident that the experiment will, at least, be so far successful that his gas hereafter will not cost him more than one dollar per thousand feet, instead of three dollars, as now charged by the Gas Company. The coal used in this process is the Cannel coal, and the gas is purified by passing it through a stream of running water. We saw lately in Cincinnati, a light produced by the burning of gas made upon this new plan, which was quite as bright and clear as any we ever saw before.

Louisiana Interior.

TEMPERANCE.—The Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance of Louisiana, G. W. P. R. N. McMillan, presiding, held a quarterly session in Franklin, on April 10th: 8 Hill. of Teche, was the orator of the day. We note the following as one of the regular toasts:

"The Orator of the Day—May the admonition he has this day given us reach us to beware of any entangling alliance with legal coercion."

THE WEATHER AND NAVIGATION.—The Feliciana Whig, April 21, says:

"For the last few days the weather has been extremely propitious to vegetation. Our Parish was visited on evening of the 16th by a storm of wind, hail and rain, which caused much damage generally, and in some spots was extremely destructive. The hail is represented as being been as large as hen's eggs in some places west of the town. There was a slight frost this morning, with a cold and lowering atmosphere."

NEWLY DISCOVERED NAVIGATION.—The same paper says: Capt. Lemoine, of the steamer Ludlow, informs us that he made a trip down the celebrated Tone's Bayou with his boat to the Red River. He expresses it as his opinion that the navigation is as good as that of Red River. He expresses it as his opinion that a good body of water will go through this Bayou. It might, he says, if we are not mistaken the last legislature passed an act to have it stopped up.

LOUISIANA INSTITUTE FOR THE DEAF, DUMB AND BLIND.—In conformity with the provisions of an act passed at the last session of the legislature, the Governor has appointed the following gentlemen to constitute the Board of Administrators of the above named institution, which is to be established in the town of Baton Rouge:

Rev. J. F. Harney, Dr. Wm. B. Scott, Gen. Joe. Bernard, B. Adam Stuart, Col. Wm. F. Pike, Maj. Jas. N. Brown, and Ang. Duplantier.

Rev. Dr. F. D. Barry, pastor of St. Matthew's Protestant Episcopal) Church, at Jersey City, died on Wednesday, aged 77 years.

We deem it almost useless to record the vote on the Convention, as it is perfectly plain that the measure is carried by a large majority.

THE CASE OF RUFUS GREEN.—The Mobile Advertiser publishes a long letter from Rufus Green, recently convicted of forgery in that city, and sentenced to ten years imprisonment. He protests his entire innocence of the crime he has been convicted of.

THE UTAH JUDGES.—It is rumored at Washington that the President has ordered the Utah Judges to return to that Territory, and resume the powers given them by law.

From Texas.

By the arrival of the steamship Louisiana, Capt. Lawless, we have received Galveston papers to the 23d inst. and our exchanges from the interior.

COMPLIMENT TO CAPT. LAWLESS.—The citizens of Indianola gave a complimentary dinner to Capt. Lawless on the 10th inst., to certify their appreciation of his efforts to save the passengers of the Independence. The gallant conduct of the other gentlemen who aided in rescuing passengers from the wreck, was not forgotten during the festivities.

FOR EL PASO.—The trains of Mr. W. T. Smith and Mr White, consisting of twenty large wagons, five carriages and a number of persons destined for California, left Indianola, April 16th, for El Paso and New Mexico. This is the third trip Mr. Smith's train has made in twelve months, a distance of 800 miles.

At San Antonio about seventy-five California emigrants will join the party. Among the party were Messrs. Smith White, Randolph and Williams.

CELEBRATION.—The Odd Fellows and Sons of Temperance of Galveston, celebrated the anniversary of the battle of San Jacinto, in a spirited manner. A splendid dinner at which a large number of ladies were present, concluded the festivities.

BREAKING JAIL.—On the night of the 10th inst., the prisoners confined in the jail at San Antonio broke through the upper part of the building and made their escape. The jail in Williamson county, was partially burned and the prisoners, two white men and a negro, made their escape.

INDIAN AGENT.—Maj. R. T. Howard, Indian Agent, is now on an official visit to the Indians on the frontier, and the San Antonio Texan expresses the hope that the visit will prove beneficial to peace relations with their red neighbors.

THE FAIR AT CORPUS CHRISTI.—The great Industrial Exhibition at Corpus Christi is attracting great attention. It commences on the 1st of May.

BRIDGE AT VICTORIA.—The bridge at Victoria, which was swept away by the late freshet, has been replaced.

FOSSIL REMAINS.—The Lone Star says that a tusk and a portion of the leg bone of a large animal was recently discovered embedded in the sand at Hidalgo Falls. They were taken up and carried to Washington. The tusk is ten feet long, and measures at its greatest circumference twenty-three inches. In taking it up it was unfortunately broken. The tusk and other bones are in a partial state of petrefaction.

SNAKE BITE.—A negro boy belonging to Maj. H. L. Rankin of San Augustine, was bitten by a rattle snake a few days since. For a while it was supposed the boy would die, but we are pleased to learn that he is recovering.

COLORADO RAFT.—The Matagorda Tribune says that but little has been done towards the removal of the raft in the Colorado. The Kato Nerd, hitherto engaged in the prosecution of the work, has been employed on the bay in lightering, in order to keep mloat and pay expenses. It seems that the only drawback to the prosecution of the task, is the want of means to carry it on.

Randolph, charged with stealing letters from the Post-office at Sabine Town, has been released from custody, the grand jury failing to find a bill against him on the testimony.

Loss of the Steamship Meteor.

We are again called upon to announce the loss of one of the New Orleans and Texas steamships. The Meteor, Capt. Forbes, was totally lost on the night of the 18th inst., on Matagorda bar. The following particulars are from an extra of the Galveston News:

NEWS OFFICE, Monday, 10 o'clock A. M. April 20, 1852.

By the arrival of the steamship Louisiana, last evening, we have the following particulars of the loss of the steamship Meteor, which has been furnished to us by the officers of that unfortunate vessel.

The Meteor left this weston on Sunday morning, the 18th inst., with Mr. Cummings, one of the pilots of Matagorda Bay, on board, and arrived at Matagorda bar at a quarter before six o'clock on Sunday evening. The signels being set on the pilot boat, indicating a sufficiency of water on the bar, the Meteor attempted to cross, and struck, bringing up in seven and a half feet water, drawing at the time eight feet three inches. At this time, the water was smooth on the bar, but as there was a strong breeze from the south-east, and the night was closing in, they commenced heaving the cargo overboard, after ineffectually trying to back her off.

At 12 o'clock commenced leaking badly, and about this time the steampipe broke, disabling the engine. Shortly after, she deepened her water and floated, when an anchor was let go. Finding her leaking badly with all the pumps going, and the water still gaining, the anchor was slipped, and all sail made to force her into shoal water, one of the boats having been lost in running out the anchor. At 2 A. M., Monday, she filled and heeled off shore, when her masts and smoke stacks were cut away to prevent her heeling over. About this time the other quarter boat was swept away. At daylight, signals of distress were set, and after waiting several hours without any assistance, the only remaining boat was sent ashore with the ladies and children, which arrived safe at Pelican Island.

The boat on returning was swamped and drifted ashore, with two mates and four hands.

At 2 P. M., Captain Roehner, accompanied by Capt. Coffin, Captain Hanson, the pilot, George Morgan, and Capt. Sawyer, arrived from Indianola with a boat, and succeeded in conveying the passengers ashore in three trips, no other boat offering any assistance, though there were a number on shore. At 7 P. M., every thing transferrable, including the mail, was conveyed on shore. The captain, officers and crew remained four days, during which time they saved the furniture, and some portions of the machinery, though the vessel is an entire loss.

The loss of the Meteor is wholly attributed to the gross neglect of Captain Nichols, the pilot on shore, who hoisted the signals for 9 feet water, when there was and more than 7½ feet on the bar; and during the whole time the crew of the Meteor remained on shore, no soundings of the bar were taken by the pilots, although the Louisiana was daily expected.

The loss of freight on board the Meteor was equal to about 2000 barrels. Of the passengers' baggage only two trunks were lost.

The above statements have been fully confirmed to us in every particular by every man with whom we have spoken who was present, and witnessed this great disaster. We may be permitted to add, that Captain Forbes receives from all the most unqualified approbation, for having acted throughout with that prudence, skill in seamanship, and unceasing vigilance, for which he holds so high a rank in his profession. Having a pilot on board, he of course felt bound to be governed by his directions.

The officers and crew of the Meteor, except the Captain, returned on the Louisiana.

We learn from Capt. Lawless that no pilot could be obtained, either going in or out of Matagorda Bay, for the Louisiana, although in coming out the sea was quite smooth, and the weather fine.

The Meteor is the fourth vessel lost by Messrs. Harris & Morgan, within a period of sixteen months—to wit: the Palmetto at Pass Cavallo, the Globe at Brazos Santiago and the Galveston on Ship Island Shoals—amounting, in the aggregate, to about $250,000 of outire loss to them, as they do not insure.

DISTURBANCES IN THE ALABAMA PENITENTIARY.—On the 17th inst., says the Wetumpka (Ala.) State Guard, a serious difficulty occurred in the Penitentiary of that State. A convict named Wilson attacked the Sergeant of the Guard, who was about to punish him, and when the overseer of the workshop in which they were interfered, another convict named Hill seized a sledge-hammer and felled him to the floor. He was about to strike the overseer again, when a convict named Davis struck him and knocked him down. On recovering from the effect of the blow, he saw the overseer still lying on the floor, and supposing he had killed him, he seized a razor and inflicted a terrible wound in his own throat, from which he afterwards died. Mr. Cravens, the overseer, has received from the injuries he received.

A convict named David Hussman made his escape on the night of the 16th, by making a hole in his cell and then digging through the main brick wall.

RAILROAD MEETINGS.—Railroad meetings are being numerously held in Arkansas; and we notice a call for a railroad convention to be held next 4th of July, at Little Rock, relative to the early completion of railroads from Memphis, running through Little Rock and thence to Texas.

MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF THE M. E. CHURCH.—At the annual meeting of this society, held in New York on the 19th, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Rev. Bishop Waugh, President; Bishop Morris, 1st Vice President; Bishop Hamline, 2d do.; Bishop Janes, 3d do.; Rev. J. P. Durbin, Corresponding Secretary; Rev George Lane, Treasurer; Rev. Leroy Swormstedt, Assistant do.; Mr. John B. Edwards, Recording Secretary.

The Japanese Expedition.

The Instructions to the Commodore.

WASHINGTON, April 20, 1852.

The President recently transmitted to the Senate a communication containing official documents relative to the Empire of Japan, under a resolution of the 4th of March. These documents consists of extracts from the instructions given by the State Department to various individuals, since 1832 together with a communication from James Given to the President, with reference to his transactions in the Pacific, copy of an extract from The New York Herald, of the 3d January, 1851, etc. etc., togeth. Her with instructions given to Commodore Aulick, and a letter from the President to the Emperor of Japan, dated 10th May, 1851. The letter of the President has been published. The important letter of instructions to Com. Aulick has not, however, been yet given, and will be found below. It displays the object of the visit to Japan, so far as the President has given instructions to the East India Squadron, and is, in reality, the gist of the whole affair:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 10, 1852.

Commodore John H. Aulick—Sir: The moment is near when the last link in the chain of oceanic steam navigation is to be formed. From China and the East Indies to Egypt, thence through the Mediterranean and the Atlantic ocean to England, thence again to our happy shores, and other parts of this great continent, from our own ports to the southernmost part of the Isthmus, that connects the two western continents, and from Lits Pacific coast, north and southwards, as far as civilization has spread, the steamers of other nations and of our own, carry intelligence, the wealth of the world and thousands of travelers.

It is the President's opinion that steps should be taken at once to enable our enterprising merchants to supply the last link in that great chain, which unites all nations of the world, by the early establishment of a line of steamers from California to China. In order to facilitate this enterprise, it is desirable that we should obtain from the Emperor of Japan permission to purchase from his subjects the necessary supply of coal which our steamers in their out and inward voyages may require. The well-known jealousy with which the Japanese Empire has, for the last two centuries, rejected all overtures from other nations to open its ports to their vessels, embarrasses all new attempts to change the exclusive policy of that country.

The interest of commerce, and even those of humanity, demand, however, that we should make another appeal to the sovereign of that country, in asking him to sell to our steamers—not the manufactures of his artisan, or the results of the toil of his husbandmen—but a gift of Providence, deposited by the Creator of all things in the depths of the Japanese Islands, for the benefit of the human family.

By the President's direction, I now transmit to you a letter to the Emperor of Japan, (with an open copy) which you are to carry, to Jeddo, his capital, in your flagship, accompanied by as many of the vessels of the squadron under your command, as may conveniently be employed in this service. A Chinese translation of this letter will be furnished to you by the United States Legation at Canton, and sent to your anchorage at Hong Kong or Macao.

At one of the latter places you will probably meet with a national vessel, detached by the Commodore of the squadron in the Pacific, (as you will perceive by the enclosed copy of a correspondence between this and the Navy Department) to carry to you a number of shipwrecked Japanese mariners, who were some time ago picked up at sea by the bark Auckland. These men you will take with you to Jeddo, and deliver them over to the officers of the Emperor, giving them through your interpreter, the assurance that the American Government will never fail to treat with kindness any of the natives of Japan, whom misfortune may bring to our shores; and that it expects similar treatment of such of its own citizens who may be driven on the coast of Japan.

The letter of the President to the Emperor of Japan, you will deliver to such of his high officers as he may appoint for the purpose of receiving it. To them you will explain the main object of your visit.

Mineral coal is so abundant in Japan that the government of that country can have no reasonable objection to supplying our steamers, at fair prices, with that great necessary of commerce. One of the eastern ports of Nipbon would be the most desirable place for this purpose. Should, however, the government of Japan persist in following out its system of exclusiveness, you might, perhaps, induce them to consent to the transportation of the coal by their own vessels, to a neighboring island, easy of access, where the steamers could supply their wants, avoiding thus the necessity of an intercourse with any large number of the people of the country.

It is considered important that you should await yourself of every occasion to impress on those Japanese officers with whom you will be brought in contact, that the government of the United States does not possess any power over the religion of its own citizens at this time. It is, therefore, no cause to apprehend that it will interfere with the religion of other countries.

The President, although fully aware of the great reluctance hitherto shown by the Japanese government to enter into treaty stipulations with any foreign nation—a feeling which he sincerely wished that you may be able to overcome—has thought it proper, in anticipation of this latter favorable contingency, to invest you with full power to negotiate and sign a treaty of amity and commerce between the United States and the Empire of Japan.

I transmit, herewith, the seal of the President, clothing you with that power, as also copies of the treaty between the United States and China with Siam and the Mutsel, which may be referred to, to such extent hereof as to you as precedents. It is important that you should secure to our vessels the right to enter one or more of the ports of Japan, and there to dispose of their cargoes either by sale or by barter, without being subjected to extravagant port charges; and even more important is it that the government of Japan should bind itself to protect American sailors and property which may be on their shores. The second article of the treaty with Siam, embraces these objects.

Every treaty has to be subjected to the Senate for ratification, as you are aware. In consideration of the great distance between the two countries, and unforeseen difficulties, it would be prudent, should you succeed in effecting the object proposed, to fix the period for the exchange of the ratifications at three years. I am, Sir, respectfully, your obedient servant, DANIEL WEBSTER.

The accompanying note from the Minister of the Netherlands here, will also be found interesting:

TRANSLATION—Note Verbale—It is a matter of public notoriety that foreign vessels are excluded from Japan, by the government of that empire. It was, nevertheless, determined in 1842, that, if such vessels should be cast upon the shores of Japan, by storms, or come there in want of provisions, with a view of asking for such commodities, water, or wood for fuel, those articles should be granted to them on request.

For fear, however, lest this determination, prompted as it has been by feelings of humanity, should give rise to any false interpretation, the government of Japan has sold and that of the Netherlands to inform the other powers that the above mentioned resolution does not infringe upon, or otherwise imply any modification whatever of the system of separation and exclusion, which, was adopted more than two centuries ago, by the Japanese government, and since the establishment of which, the prohibition against allowing any foreign vessel to explore the Japanese coasts, has been constantly in force.

The Dutch government has made no difficulty of complying with the request, especially as the government of Japan has no other means of making a communication of this nature; and in pursuance of instructions from the cabinet of the Hague, the Legation of the Netherlands has the honor to communicate the above mentioned facts to the Hon. Secretary of State of the United States, for the information of his government. [Cor. N. Y. Herald. April 30, 1851.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, April 23, 1852

SENATE.—Mr. Hunter moved that the private calendar be postponed in order to take up the deficiency bill, which motion was disagreed to.

After some debate, a resolution heretofore submitted by Mr. Norris, was adopted, providing that this day and every subsequent fourth Friday be set for the consideration of such private bills to which there was no objection.

And bills of the following titles were ordered to be engrossed, viz:

A joint resolution for the relief of Alexander T. P. Garrett.

Bill for the relief of George G. Bishop, and the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased.

An Act from the House for the relief of Albra Tripp passed; House bill for the payment of arrears of pensions to the guardian of Artemas Comnut passed; bill granting a pension to Jacob Young; bill authorizing the legal representatives of Antoine Marquess and John Colligan to locate certain lands in Missouri; bill for the relief of Martin Fenwick, or his legal representatives.

Bill for the relief of Margaret Farrar; bill for the relief of David P. Weeks; bill for the relief of M. and H. H. Beau, of Arkansas; bill for the relief of the heirs of David Corderey; bill for the relief of Ursula E. Cobb; bill for the relief of James Glynn; bill for the relief of Thompson Hutchinson; bill for the relief of Elizabeth Jones and Hunter children of John Carr; bill for the relief of the heirs of the late Major Thomas Nye, U. S. A.—bill for the relief of Don B. J. Romerez; bill for the relief of Charles G. Hunter.

And the Senate then adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE.—Mr. Brooks, of New York, rose to make a personal explanation, to which Mr. Stanly objected, unless the gentlemen who might be referred to might have an opportunity of replying; which having been conceded, Mr. Brooks addressed the House, which he said he was induced to do by remarks that had been made with reference to himself by a member of the Senate, whose age and position rendered it the only course left him to pursue. He said he had already denied the authorship of the letter that had appeared in the New York Express, and with reference to the editorial remarks which had been republished in the Globe, he denied all knowledge of them till subsequent to their republication.

Whatever difference of opinion might exist as to what constitutes a gentleman, the member who would vomit forth a tirade against another member of Congress, such as that to which he had alluded, must be considered as no gentleman. The course which the Southern whigs pursued in the caucus, he said, showed that the were true upon the compromise measure and he therefore withdrew his statement as to their wavering upon that question.

Mr. Stanley said he regretted the appearance of the article referred to, and deplored the existing state of things. The only part of the speech of the gentleman from New York, on a former day, which was offensive to Southern members having been withdrawn, he had nothing to say upon the subject.

Mr. Houston reported the Post-office Navy Transmission Mail Bills, which were read the first time.

The bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to cancel the bonds given by the Savannah Railroad Company for duties on railroad iron was then read and passed, the previous question having been ordered.

It was then determined that all debate on the Homestead Bill shall terminate on Thursday next, two hours after the House goes into committee.

The House went into committee, and again took up the Homestead bill.

Mr Yales, of Illinois, then took the floor and at once much noise and confusion. He expressed himself in favor of the bill; the object of which, he said, was to give comfortable homes to persons in the Southern and Eastern States who are now living in destitution and want, but who would find the means to go out to the new States, were this lucrative offered.

After some concluding remarks, which could not be distinctly heard, he was followed by

Mr. Smart, of Maine, who, after some preliminary remarks, replied with reference to a statement that had been made in the other wing of the capitol, as to the number of slaves who had escaped during the last year into the Northern States, which he contended, the census returns did not bear out, and which, in relation to numbers and value, were insignificant in amount.

Mr Bean, of New York, said the designs of his State had been misunderstood, and went on to define the position which it occupies, who would support the nominee of the National convention, and who considered the General Government as having no right to interfere with the different States; a principal he said, which would influence his vote upon the railroad question, conceiving that it would lead to a system of international improvement, to which he deemed the democracy as being invariably opposed.

The committee, at the conclusion of his speech, rose, and the House adjourned.

The Storm at the North.

The storm which raged along the entire northern Atlantic coast, on the 18th and 19th, has proved most disastrous, and our exchanges from that quarter are filled with details of shipwrecks and losses of life and property. A Boston paper of the 21st says:

The British bark Joseph, from Bristol, England, for Boston, struck on Truro beach last night and went to pieces. Her stern was found on the shore this morning. Two of her crew came ashore on fragments of the wreck, very much exhausted; the remainder of the crew were undoubtedly lost. Two men from Truro, in endeavoring to reach the wreck and save the lives of the crew, were drowned.

The brig Marcus, of Bangor, with a signal of distress in the rigging, came ashore on Scituate beach this morning at seven o'clock. She was found abandoned, with her sails set and hoots going. The fate of the crew is unknown.

The British schooner Caledonia, from Nova Scotia, for Boston, with wood, came ashore at Duxbury, on Marshfield beach. Her crew and passengers landed with difficulty on a line to the beach.

The brig Rising, from Cayenne, for Salem, went ashore on Chatham beach at ten o'clock on Monday morning. Large and spacious vessel probably a total loss.

A vessel from Patras, for Boston, is ashore four miles from the Romp, and is reported to be breaking up.

The ship seen at anchor yesterday, within a mile of Minot's Ledge rocks, was the Icouiaut, from Newcastle. Last night she dragged her anchor, and was obliged to cut away her masts to prevent going ashore. Finding that the vessel was still dragging, they made all the sail possible, and passed between the Hardings and the ledge, and was taken in tow off the Boston Light by the steamer H. B. Forbes, Captain Morris, and brought up to the city.

Schooner William P. Dolliver, before reported ashore near Edgartown, remained 18th, and there was no prospect of getting her off. Some of her rigging and one mast has been brought on shore.

British schooner Mary Ann, from Argyle for Boston, before reported ashore on point Alderton, has gone to pieces.

A schooner of about 100 tons was seen ashore on Stratford Point, Ct., 20th inst., apparently just gone ashore. A large schooner was seen ashore on Hart's Island 19th.

Nothing was saved from brig Eliza, of Portland, just below New York in a gale.

The Portland (Me.) Argus of the 20th says:

A storm of wind and rain set in on Sunday, which increased in violence till yesterday, when it blew tremendously from the East. Our harbor at the time is full of coasting vessels, that have run in for a shelter. Hundreds of people visited the Portland light-house yesterday to see the ocean in its fury. The sea was very high, dashing its spray nearly over the light-house. It was a magnificent sight. It was a very severe storm—increasing during the day and far in the night.

The steamer Governor left Hampden yesterday morning, at six o'clock, and arrived here at five o'clock last evening.

Schooner Franklin, Trueworthy, from New York for Augusta, with flour and corn, went ashore on Hampden beach yesterday. Crew saved.

The New York Tribune says:

Many of the fishermen on Coney Island have lost their boats, nets and tackle. The shad fishery of the bay and river has been much retarded. In addition to seven buildings demolished in Fifty-third street, three three-story frame houses being erected in Fifty-sixth street, near Second avenue, were blown down. Many chimneys in various parts of the city have also given way to the repeated blasts of the gale. The high tides have overflowed cellars in some places, damaging property to a considerable amount.

THE COLLINS LINE OF STEAMERS.—Letters received by the Arctic from Europe, state that the opponents of the American line of steamships between Liverpool and New York are already circulating the rumor that Congress will do nothing to sustain Mr. Collins, and that the ships of his line will be withdrawn. The consequence is that passengers and freight go to the Cunard line, as the only one to be relied on for regular arrivals and departures.

The withdrawal of the Collins line of steamers would not only give a monopoly to the British line, and raise freights and postage, but would also be severely felt in its influence on our whole commercial steam marine. The Collins line of steamers form a school for the education of young engineers. There were no ocean engineers, save two or three in the Washington and Hermann, before the Collins line commenced running, and the steamers of that line have already supplied several of the California steamers and others plying elsewhere with engineers, captains, and other officers.

Each ship of the Collins line carries a first engineer, six assistant engineers, twenty-four firemen, and twenty-four stokers, all of whom must become expert in their respective employments. In this manner a whole class of valuable men is built up, which is indispensable to us as a maritime nation of the first class.

THE JAMAICA SUGAR CROP.—A late Jamaica paper says: We regret to learn that there will be a very serious falling off in the sugar crop of this year. In St. Thomas, in the east especially, the decrease of export will be without parallel. The best estimates that can be formed induce the belief that the crop of the present year in that parish will not reach one-half of that of 1851. The district of Plantain Garden River, which usually ships 4000 hogsheads of sugar, will not this year reach 2000 hogsheads, whilst the Blue Mountain District will fall off in quite as large proportion. We wish we could say that St. Thomas in the east was the only parish thus circumstanced, but we have similar reports from other parishes. On the whole, we doubt whether the crop of 1852 will exceed 30,000 hogsheads.

FURTHER GOLD DISCOVERIES.—The Hudson's Bay Company have received intelligence that the crew of the Unicorn vessel dispatched by them to Queen Charlotte's Island, in consequence of information that gold existed there, have succeeded in discovering, close to the shore, an exceedingly rich vein of quartz. It extends towards the interior, and becomes deeper below the surface. The party could only extract some specimens by blasting, and their stay was a short one, because their number was insufficient to ensure safety in case of any collision with the natives. The weather also was unfavorable. They brought away, however, about 56 pounds of the rock, which they have dispatched to London, and which is said to contain at least 6 or 8 pounds of pure gold. The vein at the top was about seven inches wide. From the extent and configuration of the island, it is probable that large quantities may be found in other parts of it, and a fresh expedition has accordingly been sent out.

AMERICAN ARTISTS IN ITALY.—Crawford is getting on space with his colossal statues for the Washington Monument at Richmond, Va. Patrick Henry and Jefferson are ready for casting in bronze. The Jefferson is exceedingly good. Amongst all the draped statues here, none, except a statue of Minerva, at the Vellemi, impresses me so much as this for its dignity.

Freeman is preparing to visit the United States, with two large pictures—one, the Mary's at the Sepulchre; the other a rustic piece; both executed with great power in the sacred piece, he has designedly departed from the standard rules of such compositions; but whether or not he has made a conquest in a new direction of art, remains to be seen. No one, however, I think, will deny him the evidences of genius in this attempt.

Terry, who is remarkably free from faults, goes on improving, and bids fair to reach a high point of excellence. His large piece of Columbus before Ferdinand and Isabella, is finished, and will be sent home this Spring. It goes to Boston.

Mozier has a statue in clay of Pocahontas, for which he has already received two orders at $2000 each. The piece is exceedingly praised by the correspondent of the London Times.

Ives has a statue in plaster of Spring, highly esteemed by the artists. He asks but $1500 for it, but has no order for it yet. To appreciate the Spring of Ives, one must know something of general art, but every one can read in the Puritan an impressive story. The accessories of the cross, and the tame deer, with the familiar history of the daughter of Powhatan, will give this work. I doubt not, great popularity in the United States. If Ives would give his fine talent to some thoroughly American instructive subject than his fortune would soon be made.

Bartholomew, a young sculptor, from Hartford, has been remarkably successful in getting orders this winter. Although but a beginner, and making only busts reliefs, he has obtained high prices for his few pieces. The reason is that his subjects are touching. He makes his art tributary to nobly sentiment, and therefore deserves peculiar encouragement. Happily Mr. B. has decided talent in his profession. The artists do not begrudge him his extraordinary good fortune.

Rogers is cutting out a modest and beautiful Ruth with her sheaf—a work which, if finished for the proposed great exhibition in New York, would give him a most desirable kind of fame. There are some other sculptors here at work upon perfectly nude figures, to which they give sacred and classic names, but which I trust will never be any thing more in the eyes of American amateurs than vulgar exposures of the female form. Happily they have not sufficient artistic fame to give them fame and and bad influence. [Roman Cor. N. Y. Com. Ad.

THE PEACH TREES AND INSECTS KILLED.—The Port Tobacco (Md.) Times states that the severe winter just passed, has killed nearly all the peach buds in low grounds in that county, while on the hill sides and elevated localities, they are only slightly damaged. The common kinds of the peach tree, it is also said, have been less injured than the superior budded and grafted varieties. Another fact is likewise noted, that all those little insects which appear early in spring, destroying rose bushes and tender plants, have been killed by the cold weather.

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE CHINA MISSION.—Owing to the continued feeble health of the Rev. J. D. Collins, late Superintendent of the China Mission, Fuh-Chau, Bishop Janes, of the M. E. Church, has appointed the Rev. R. S. Mactay, who has been in China for several years, to succeed him.

MOBILE ENCAMPMENT.—The 1st Regiment of Volunteers of Mobile, are preparing to establish an encampment near the city.

Arrival of the Franklin---Three Days Later from Europe.

NEW YORK, April 27.

The steamer Franklin arrived here to-day from Havre, via Liverpool, bringing dates from the latter port to the 13th inst., three days later than those brought by the Asia.

Liverpool Markets.

LIVERPOOL, April 13.

The sales of Cotton during the three days since the departure of the Asia, embrace 10,000 bales, and the following are the quotations as fixed by the Board last evening. Fair Orleans 5¾, Middling Orleans 4 15-16, Fair Uplands 5¼, Middling Uplands 4½d per lb. On Monday the demand was better than on the previous days, and holders were more firm, but no quotable change in prices took place. The demand for flour is fair, and prices remain unchanged.

Further by the Franklin.

NEW YORK, April 27.

The Franklin left Liverpool on the 14th, on which day there was a very decided improvement in the Cotton market, and the sales reached nearly 10,000 bales, prices having taken a turn against buyers. On the 13th the sales amounted to 6000 bales, on the 12th, 5000, and on the 10th 11,000 bales, of all of which 5000 bales were taken by speculators and exporters. Wheat was firm. The supply of Flour was moderate.

The Money Market was very active, and all sorts of securities were rapidly rising. Consols had nearly reached par. The Manchester trade was firm, and accounts of trade generally in the interior are satisfactory.

The steamer Washington had not arrived out when the Franklin sailed.

NewYork Markets.

NEW YORK, April 21.

There is a good demand for Cotton to-day, and Middling Orleans is quoted at 8½ and Middling Uplands at 7⅝ ₱ lb. Yellow Corn 65½ ₱ bushel. Mess Pork $18 87 @$19 ₱ barrel. Lard in barrels 8½@10, and in kegs 11¾. ₱ lb. Rio Coffee 9½c. ₱ lb.

Cincinnati Markets.

CINCINNATI, April 26.

The Flour market has been rather quiet to-day, and the sales only reach 900 bbls. with no change in prices. Whiskey is quoted at 14½ a 15c. per gallon. Sales of 1200 bbls. of Mess Pork have been made at $17 per bbl. The sales of log Lard amount to 2000 kegs at 10c. Barrel Lard is per lb. Bulk Shoulders 7c. per lb.

NewYork Markets.

NEW YORK, April 26.

The Cotton market is firm, to-day, but prices are unchanged. Yellow Corn 67 and Southern 65½ to 67c per bushel. Mess Pork $18 87 to $19 per bbl. Lard is scarce at former quotations.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The following from the "Lantern" is one of the finest touches of poetic pathos we have seen for many a day. It is almost equal to the very best of Hood:

AN OLD STORY.

The snow falls fast in the silent street,
And the wind is laden with cutting sleet,
And there is a pitiless glare in the sky,
As a fainting woman goes wandering by.

The rags that wrapt her wasted form,
Are frozen still in the perishing storm;
And she is so cold that the snow flakes rest
Unmelted, upon her marble breast.

Ah! who could believe that those rayless eyes
Were once as sunny as April skies?
And the flowers she plucked in the early spring,
Loved to be plucked by so pure a thing!

The past—and the fierce wind, shrieking by,
Browns the faint gasp of her parting sigh—
And lifeless she falls at the outer gate
Of him who has left her desolate.

Silently falls the snow on her face,
Clothing her form in its stainless grace;
As though God in his mercy had willed that she Should die in a garment of purity.

Sketch of the Empire of Japan.

MINERAL GALTH AND SCENERY.—As any thing which relates to Japan at the present time may be interesting, I send you the following concise sketch of that kingdom. It is called by the native Nipkon, and was founded about six hundred and sixty-five years before Christ, by Simmu Tenno, or Simmkin there appears to have been sixty-one Emperors. After this period, in the year 1142 a change took place. From this time a double chronology was observed, including the reigns of the Dairies and Cubo. The Dairies were military officers, and at one period completely usurped the power of the Emperors; but a General by the name of Jeyetimo being crowned, succeeded in depriving the Dairies of all military power. At the present time the kingdom of Japan is governed by an Emperor with full military powers, a Dairio with full civil powers, and a Cubo, or prime minister, who has authority over certain cities, their Parliament, etc.

The Kingdom of Japan consists of three large and thirty or forty smaller islands, situated off the coast of China. The largest of these islands is Niphon, the next Jesso. On the island of Bungo, southwest of Yesso, is the city of Nangasaki, and near this city is the little artificial island Dezima, on which the Dutch Factory is built.

Yeddo, or Yeddo, the capital of the whole Empire, is situated in the midst of a fine plain, in the province of Musee. It is built in the form of a crescent, and intersected in almost every street by canals, their banks being planted with rows of beautiful trees. The city is not surrounded as most Eastern cities are, by a wall, but instead a strong castle, with a deep moat, protects it. The river Tonegwa waters it, and supplies the castle ditch; and, being divided into five streams, has a bridge over each. The public buildings are on a magnificent scale. The imperial palace is formed by three concentric, or circular piles of buildings, and enclosing many streets, courts, apartments, pavilions, guard-houses, gardens, fountains, parks, and temples. In it reside the Emperor, his family, the royal domestics, tributary princes and their retinues, the Minister of State, many other officers of Government, and a strong garrison. The walls of this magnificent palace are built of freestone without cement, and the stones prodigiously large. The whole pile was originally covered with gilt tiles, which gave it a very grand and beautiful appearance. Many of the apartments are richly decorated and covered at pleasure with movable screens. The principal apartments are the Hall of Attendance, the Council Chamber, Hall of a Thousand Mats, etc.

The city is under the rule of two governors, who rule a year each.

The next largest city is Meaco. It is also a royal city and is situated in a fine plain near the middle of the island of Niphon, and surrounded by mountains, which give a remarkable and delightful prospect to the whole; the circumjacent country between the city and the mountains is covered with temples, sepulchres, etc., etc., and is embellished with a variety of orchards, groves, cascades, and purling streams. Three considerable rivers water this fertile plain, and unite together in the centre of the city, where a magnificent stone bridge facilitates the communication between the different parts of the city. A strong castle defends the town; it is six hundred yards in length has a tower in the centre, and it is surrounded by two ditches, the one dry and the other full of water. This splendid city is twenty miles long and nine wide within the suburbs, which are well populated as the city. The number of inhabitants of the city proper is supposed to be 800,000. The universities, colleges, temples, etc., are almost incredible in number and magnificence. It contains twelve capitals or principal streets, in the centre of which are the royal palaces, superbly built of marble and adorned with gardens, orchards, pavilions, terraces, groves, etc.

The third and principal town is Osacco. It is deemed the chief sea port, is very populous, and has an army of 80,000, most always ready at the disposal and command of the Emperor. It is near fifteen miles in circumference.

The city of Nangasaki is the Japanese naval depot; but as they have not yet found any use for a navy, their vessels are only in the rough material, and stored away for ornament.

The business or prince is here. The name means, in the Japanese, hall; it has 100 dungeons and cages. The history of these few cities gives a fair out line of the whole empire. Their private dwellings are small but neat, and ornamented with small gardens; in this they excel, as they are the very best of horticulturists. A few feet of ground are turned to the best advantage, as the Japanese are very fond of beautiful flowers, fine trees, fruits and vegetables. They use neither tables, bedsteads, nor chairs; but sit, eat and sleep, like most Eastern nations, on mats.

Almost the first accomplishment learned by them is the art and grace of suicide; the child in the nursery stabs itself with its finger or stick, and falls back in imitative death; the lower cuts out his intestines before his obdurate sire, and the latter pours out his heart's blood in the face of his faithless lover; the criminal executes himself; and, in fact, the whole nation, from early youth, revels in the luxury of suicide.

Their trade is, at present, on far great restrictions, as they only trade with the Chinese and Dutch. The latter have always fostered, fortified, and increased the prejudices of the Japanese against all other nations, particularly the French, English and Portuguese.

The mechanics and manufacturers in Japan excel in their different branches, and are even far superior to the Chinese. Their silks and cottons are excellent, and their Japan ware and porcelain unequaled. Their exports are many and manufactured silks, iron, steel, artificial metals, long, tons, finer than the Chinese, Japan ware, gold, silver, camphor, gums, medicinal herbs, roots, diamonds, pearls, coral, shells, ambergris, etc. Whatever goods the Japanese want they pay for in gold and silver.

The Japanese worship the principal two gods, Xaca and Amida. At Meaco there is a stately temple built to one of these gods; it is of freestone, as large as St. Paul's, with an arched roof, supported by heavy pillars, in which hang an idol of copper, which reaches as high as the roof; and, according to a description given by Sir Thomas Herbert, his chair is seventy feet high and eighty feet long, the head is big enough to hold fifteen men, and the thumb forty inches in circumference. There is another statue, after the god Dahio, made of copper, twenty-two feet high, with fifty pillars. This shows that the Japanese understand the art of working in bronze, and they are far ahead of Christian nations in this particular. They allow polygamy, and they often strangle their female children, but never the males. The nobility extract the two front teeth, and supply them with two of gold.

The principal rivers are the Ulligawa and Akagawa; the former is not rapid and wide that a bridge cannot be built over it, the latter remarkable for its depth and perpetual destructions. The chief lake is called Oits, is one hundred miles long and twenty-one wide. A large valley exists in the interior, filled with carbonic gas, and called the Valley of the Upas. It is covered with the skeletons of numerous wild and tame beasts and birds. The Emperor, it is said of late, has come orientate to the valley to bring away a precious gum of inestimable value, and the bones of men also with his deadly sides. Acidulated lakes and thermal springs are common throughout several of the islands.

Their great sources of opulence are their mines of gold and silver, but they have no antimony, calamine, sal ammoniac, borax, or cobalt (quicksilver). These articles are in demand, and bring a high price. Birds are very fond of food and poultry are plenty; camphor trees are abundant, and the cedars are the finest in the world. Few countries open so fair a field as the islands of Japan for botanical and geological research. It is not necessary here to enter into a detailed statistical account of the resources of Japan. A direct trade to that empire would increase the commerce of this country about two hundred millions of dollars annually, if not more.

It has always been in contemplation with this country to make an effort to open a direct trade with Japan. Commodore Porter, as far back as 1815, addressed a letter to Mr. Monroe on the subject. (This letter has been published in the Intelligencer.) It was intended to fit out a frigate and two sloops-of-war and place them under his command, but subsequent events prevented the consummation of this design, but it has been revived from time to time, without being carried out; but a few years ago the undersigned drew the attention of the Hon. J. Y. Mason to the subject by the recommendation of a steamer to China, which, with a view of incidental commercial intercourse, and finally direct trade with Japan. It would require but small efforts to accomplish commercial intercourse with so shrewd a people as the Japanese, who are sensitive to commercial feelings. A steam line direct from New York to the Isthmus being already in existence, it is an easy matter to continue it to the Gallipagoes, which islands abound in coal; thence to the Marquesas, and on to Shanghai or Jeddo.

France.

The following is the speech of Louis Bonaparte, President of France, delivered at the opening of the Chambers on the 29th of March:

THE PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.—Messieurs les Senateurs—Messieurs les Deputes: The dictatorship which the people confided to me ceases this day. Things are about to resume their regular course. It is with a feeling of real satisfaction that I come here to proclaim the pulling in practice of the Constitution, for my constant anxiety (precaupation) has been not only to re-establish order, but to render it durable, by endowing France with institutions suited to her wants. But scarcely a few months ago, you remember that the more I confined myself within the narrow circles of my attributions, the more it was attempted to render that circle narrower still, in order to deprive me of movement and action (often discouraged, I confess it, I have thought of abandoning a power so much contested. What restrained me was that I saw but one thing to succeed me—anarchy). Everywhere, in fact, rose up passions, ardent to destroy, incapable of founding anything. There was nowhere either an institution or a man to cling to. Nowhere a right uncontested, any kind of organization, any practical system. Therefore, when, thanks to the assistance of a few courageous men, thanks above all to the energetic attitude of the army, all the dangers were dispelled in a few hours, my first care was to ask institutions of the people. For too long a time society had resembled a pyramid turned upside down, and attempted to be placed upon its point. I have replaced it upon its base. Universal suffrage, the only source of right as such conjectures was immediately re-established. Authority regained its ascendancy. Afterwards, France adopting the principal provisions of the Constitution which I submitted to her, it was permitted to create political bodies whose influence will be so much the greater from their attributions being wisely regulated.

In fact no political institutions are durable but those which fix in an equitable manner the limit at which each power should stop. There are no other means of arriving at a useful and beneficial application of liberty. Examples are not remote from us. Why, in 1814, did we see with satisfaction, in spite of our reverses, the inauguration of the parliamentary regime? Because the Emperor, let us not fear to confess it, had been carried on by reasons of war, to a too absolute exercise of power. Why, on the contrary, in 1831, did France applaud the fall of this same parliamentary regime? Because the Chamber had abused the influence which that regime had given them, and, in desiring to rule over all things, had compromised the general equilibrium.

Again, why was not France troubled by the restrictions applied to the liberty of the press and to individual liberty? Because the one had degenerated into license, and the other, in place of being the regulated exercise of the rights of every individual, had, by dictatorial exercise, threatened the rights of all. The extreme danger, for democracy especially, of seeing badly-defined institutions continually sacrificing power and liberty by turns, was perfectly well understood by our fathers half a century ago, when, on emerging from the revolutionary tempest, and after vain experiments of all sorts of systems, they proclaimed the constitution of the year VIII., which served as the basis of that of 1852. Doubtless, it does not sanction all those liberties, to the abuses even of which we were accustomed, but it consecrates others that are truly liberties. On the morrow of a revolution, the first guarantees for a people are not sonsist in the immoderate use of the tribune and the press.

It consists in the right to choose a Government such as it likes. Now, the French nation has, perhaps, for the first time, given to the world the imposing spectacle of a great people voting, in all liberty, the form of its government. Thus, the chief of the state whom you have before you, is really the expression of popular will. And what is I see before me? Two chambers. One elected by virtue of the most liberal law that exists in the world, the other, nominated by me, it is true, but also independent, because it is irremovable. Around me you see men of undoubted merit and patriotism, always ready to support me by their counsels, and to enlighten me with regard to the wants of the country. This constitution, which from this day forth will be put in practice, is not, then, the work of a vain theory and of despotism. It is the work of experience and reason.

You, gentlemen, will aid me to consolidate, to extend, and to improve it. I shall communicate to the Senate and to the Corps Legislative a report (expose) of the situation of the republic. In that they will see that confidence has everywhere been re-established, that industry has everywhere revived, and for the first time after a great political change the public fortune has increased instead of having diminished. Within the last four months my government has found it possible to encourage many useful enterprises, to reward many services, to relieve much distress, to elevate the position of the greater part of the principal functionaries, and all that without increasing the taxes or deranging the estimates of the budget, which we are happy to present to you balanced. Such facts, and the attitude of Europe, which has received the changes that have taken place with satisfaction, give us a well founded hope for the security of the future. For if peace is assured at home, it is equally so abroad.

Foreign powers respect our independence, and we have every interest to keep up the most friendly relations with them. So long as the honor of France shall not be engaged, the duty of the Government will be carefully to avoid every cause of perturbation in Europe, and to direct all our efforts towards internal amelioration, which alone can procure the well-being of the industrious classes, and assure the prosperity of the country. And now, gentlemen, at the moment when you are patriotically associating yourselves with my labors, I wish frankly to express to you what will be my conduct. People seeing me restore the institutions and souvenirs of the empire have repeatedly said that I desired to restore the empire itself. If such had been my constant anxiety, this transformation would long since have been accomplished. Neither the means nor the occasions have been wanting to me.

Thus, in 1848, when six millions of suffrages elected me, in spite of the Constituent, I was not ignorant that the simple refusal to acquiesce in the Constitution would have given me a throne. But an elevation which must necessarily have produced grave disorders did not seduce me. On the 15th of June, 1849, it would have been equally easy for me to change the form of the government. I would not do it. Finally, on the 2d of December, if personal considerations had prevailed above the great interests of the country I should have at once acted of the people, who would not have refused it to me, pompous title. I was contented with that which I had.

When, therefore, I look for examples and the Empire, it is because there are than anywhere else, I find examples stamped with unanimous. Being now, as heretofore, resolved for France, nothing for myself, I would not accept any modification of the present state of things, unless I were constrained to do so by an evident necessity. From whence can that arise? Only from the conduct of parties. If they resign themselves, nothing shall be changed, but if by their hidden intrigues (oeuvres) they should seek to sap the foundations of my government, if, in their blindness, they should deny the legitimacy of the result of the popular election; if, in short, they, by their attacks, should unceasingly put the future prospects of the country in question, then, but then only, it might be reasonable to ask of the people, in the name of the repose of France, a new title, which might crown my head the power with which France has invested me. Assisted with difficulties which doubtless have no pretext to keep the republic. That the treasure everybody. Under her laurels inaugurate once again an era of forgiveness and conciliation, and I call without distinction all those who will concur with me for the public good. Providence, which has hitherto so visibly blessed me, will not permit its work to remain unfinished. It will animate us all with its inspirations, and give the wisdom and strength necessary to consolidate and firmness of things which will secure the happiness of our country and the repose of Europe.

News from Utah.

We have received our files of the Deseret News to February 21, nearly three months later than our previous advices.

The Legislature of Utah assembled on the first Monday of January, and closed its session on the 18th of February. A special session had been called by the Proclamation of the Governor, much remaining to be done for the complete organization of the Territory.

The message of Gov. Brigham Young to the Legislature presents a variety of information on the present condition of Utah. We give a brief synopsis of its leading topics:

INCREASE OF SETTLEMENTS.—During the past year the settlements have continued to extend until we now have a line extending from near Bear River on the North, until within about twenty-five miles of the Southern Rim of the Great Basin, a distance of about three hundred and fifty miles; and a company is now making a settlement near Santa Clara, and also East and West a few point; and also East and West a few miles; although not so extensive in the aggregate, will be considered desirable that a settlement should be made on Mary's River, in order to preserve peaceful relations with the Indians in that region. They have come of late very troublesome to travelers, stealing cattle, animals, robbing and killing them as they have opportunity. There is a successful settlement now established on the west side of the Tooele, where the Indians had been; it was feared that none could be made with exception of the Indians on Mary's River, among all the tribes, toward the whites, although some few are at war with the whites; but as a general thing, peace and quietness prevail among themselves.

THE MEXICAN SLAVE TRADE.—The practice of purchasing Indian children for slaves is a trade carried on by the Mexican population of New Mexico and California. These traders, of late years, have extended their traffic into the limits of this Territory. This trade I have endeavored to prevent, and shall continue to do so, and to encounter a few of them in my travels as Superintendent of Indian Affairs, strictly prohibited their further traffic. The majority of them appeared satisfied, and after making a few exchanges of property in the settlements returned to their own country. Unfortunately, however, a few of them still determined to carry on their nefarious traffic; they have been arrested, and are now on their trial in this city.

It is unnecessary, perhaps, for me to indicate the true policy for Utah in regard to slavery. Restrictions of law and government make all servants, but human flesh to be dealt in as property is not consistent or compatible with the true principles of government. My own feelings are that no property can or should be recognized as existing in slaves, either Indian or African. No person can purchase them without their becoming as free, so far as natural rights are concerned, as persons of any other color. Under the present low and degraded situation of the Indian race, so long as the practice of gambling away, selling, and otherwise disposing of their children, also sacrificing prisoners, obtains among them, it seems indeed that any transfer would be to them a relief and a benefit. Many a life by this means is saved; many a child rescued from the thraldom of savage barbarity, and placed upon an equal footing with the more favored portions of the human race. It is return for favors and services which may have been incurred on this account, service should be considered due; it would become necessary that some law should provide the suitable regulations under which all such indebtedness should be defrayed. This may be said to present a new feature in the traffic of human beings; it is essentially purchasing them into freedom, instead of slavery; but it is not the low, servile drudgery of Mexican slavery to which I would doom them; not to be raised among beings scarcely superior to themselves, but where they could find that consideration pertaining not only to civilized, but humane and benevolent society.

LOCATION OF THE CAPITAL.—In accordance with the resolution of the Legislature locating the seat of Government at Provan Valley, and authorizing me to appoint Commissioners to select a site for the Capital, and seat of Government, I complied with that requirement by appointing Professors Orson Pratt and Albert Carrington, Jesse W. Fox, Esq., Wm. C. Staines and Joseph L. Robinson, said Commissioners. They immediately proceeded to the performance of their duties, and have made their report, which I take great pleasure in presenting to you.

It appears from their observations, that the location is far more central than this city, and that the valley will sustain a large and dense population.

The locating of the seat of Government in that valley will, it is believed, encourage settlers to go there and very much facilitate the settlement of all suitable places, in that region. Under all these considerations, its location at that point appears judicious upon its own merits, and will unquestionably advance the already prosperous and vastly increasing resources of Albert Carrington, Esq., of Millcreek, and doubtless many more have been located.

A raft without sweeps struck Steubenville street bridge, shattering the piers, and all on board were lost. Thousands of people lined the shore, who witnessed the scene, unable to give any assistance. A fragment of a raft, with one man on it, drifted down the torrent, and managed to escape the two upper bridges, but struck against the St. Clair Street bridge. The intrepid navigator, seeing the danger, dropped the steering oar, took a running jump, cleared the fragment of the broken timber, and alighted on the pier, amid the shouts of spectators, coolly remarking to those on the bridge, who assisted him: "A pretty tight fit that."

In the lower part of Alleghany City they are moving their furniture into boats.

In Pittsburg, the dwellings along the river are also submerged. The merchants of Water street are moving their goods to the upper stories. The river below is overflowing. Great destruction and distress must occur.

The wall of the curves of the Ohio and Pennsylvania Railroad, near Beaver, sunk one foot, and fears are entertained that it will fall in, thus stopping the travel on the railroad for some time.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, April 20, 1852.

The House on Monday, reconsidered their action of Friday upon the report of the Committee on Printing, and then recommended it to that committee, without instructions. A resolution was adopted, on motion of Mr. Marshall, of Kentucky, authorizing the Speaker to appoint a select committee of five, to whom shall be referred the existing laws and orders on the subject of public printing, with instructions to report to the House, by bill or otherwise, what amendments to said laws may be expedient, in order to insure the faithful and prompt execution of the printing for Congress.

SENATE.—Mr. Pearce presented the memorial of the special committee of Texas creditors, praying that their claims may be paid by the United States.

Mr. Hale reported a bill confirming certain private land claims in Missouri, and the same was considered, and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. Shields reported a bill to improve the efficiency of the army. The bill abolishes all pay and allowances for brevet rank, and makes many important changes in the organization of the army. Two thousand extra copies of the bill and report were ordered to be printed.

Mr. Dawson reported a joint resolution, authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish the "Washington Yagers" and "Boone Riflemen" of Washington City, with arms—and the same was ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. Gwin introduced bills granting to California the right of way through the public lands, for the construction of certain railroads in that State.

The Deficiency Bill was taken up. Numerous amendments were concurred in. Amongst others, $350,000 were appropriated for the completion of the floating dock at San Francisco, California. Also $9,000 for completing the improvement of New Jersey avenue in this city, $7,000 for planting, etc., the Smithsonian Institute grounds.

At 3 o'clock the Senate adjourned.

House.—This morning Messrs. Marshall, of Kentucky, Harris, of Alabama, Chandler, of Pennsylvania, Fuller, of Maine, and Hamilton, of Maryland, were appointed to constitute the committee to report upon amendments to the printing laws.

Mr. Johnson, of Arkansas, stated that as fifteen days had already been consumed in debate on the Homestead bill, he moved that all debate terminate on Thursday at one o'clock.

Mr. McMullen moved to substitute Monday next; but before a vote was taken, a motion was made to lay the resolutions on the table; upon which the yeas and nays having been ordered, it was laid on the table—yeas 108, nays 62.

Mr. Flicklin, of Illinois, moved to take up the bill from the Senate, authorizing private executions, (a man who has been convicted of murder in this District having ordered to be executed on Friday;) but there being objections to suspending the rules, the motion was withdrawn.

The navy discipline bill was then taken up, and Mr. Price, of New Jersey, expressed his views at length. He considered discipline as essential to the existence of the navy, that although flogging has been abolished on board ships, yet, with that exception, the code of 1800 retained all the means of punishment that were formerly at his disposal. He was in favor of a revision of the present naval code, and the adoption of one by which the moral standing of the seamen could be elevated; and saw no pressing necessity for the passage of the bill before the House.

Mr. Newton, of Ohio, spoke at considerable length in favor of agriculture, which, he contended, was too much neglected, and to which other pursuits were preferred. He expressed himself in favor of the establishment of an agricultural bureau, and referred to various documents to prove that from Gen. Washington down to Mr. Fillmore, the different Presidents of the United States were favorable to similar establishments. Pennsylvania, he said, had formed county agricultural societies, which urged the formation of an agricultural bureau, and concluded by declaring his conviction that the measure was perfectly constitutional, and that it was the duty of Congress to establish one.

Mr. Riddle, of Delaware, followed, and stated that the sooner the uncultivated territory of the United States was disposed of, whether for public improvements, public education, or any other purposes, the better for the people of the entire country. He then alluded to the course which had been pursued by the friends of the candidates for the Presidency, by which the House of Representatives had been converted into a political arena, and went into a eulogism of the different democratic candidates. He charged the whig party with being the cause of all the difficulty growing out of the compromise measure, and went into an analysis of their votes upon that question to support his position.

He then alluded to the former course pursued by Mr. Webster and Mr. Fillmore upon the questions of abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, the traffic in slaves between the States and the introduction of Texas, and while the latter had pursued a different course since he became President, for this he had been ostracised by the whigs of the North; and concluded by referring to the non-committal policy pursued by General Scott, and with remarks generally applicable to the whig party.

After Mr. R. had concluded, it being past three o'clock, the House adjourned.

WRECK OF THE BIRKENHEAD.—We obtain from the London Times of the 7th the subjoined particulars of the terrible disaster which recently befell the British steamer, Birkenhead, while conveying troops to Southern Africa:

"Another terrible disaster has happened at sea. At 2 o'clock in the morning of the 26th February, her Majesty's steamer the Birkenhead was wrecked between two and three miles from the shore of Southern Africa. The exact spot at which the calamity happened was Point Danger. Off this point she struck upon a reef of sunken rocks. The ship was steaming eight and a half knots at the time. The water was smooth and the sky serene, but the speed at which the vessel was passing through the water proved her destruction. The rock penetrated through her bottom just off the foremast, and in twenty minutes' time there were a few floating spars and a few miserable creatures clinging to them, and this was all that remained of the Birkenhead. Of six hundred and thirty-eight persons who had left Simon's Bay in the gallant ship but a few hours before, only one hundred and eighty-four remain to tell the tale. No less than four hundred and fifty-four Englishmen have come to so lamentable an end.

There is no mystery about the calamity. We are not left, as in the case of the Amazon, to conjecture the origin of the disaster. Just what happened to the Orion off the Scottish coast, or to the Great Liverpool off Finisterre, has happened now. Captain Salmond, the officer in command, anxious to shorten the run to Algoa Bay, so much as possible, and more than was prudent, hugged the shore too closely. Four hundred and fifty-four persons have lost their lives in consequence of his temerity. As soon as the vessel struck upon the rocks the rush of water was so great that the men on the lower troop-deck were drowned in their hammocks. Theirs was the happier fate; at least they were spared the terrible agony of the next twenty minutes. At least the manner of death was less painful than what others, who were left perched beneath the falling spars and funnel, and then swept away to be devoured by the sharks who were prowling round the wreck. From the moment the ship struck, all appears to have been done that human courage or coolness could effect. The soldiers were mustered on the after-deck. The instinct of discipline was stronger even than the instinct of life. The men fell into place as coolly as on the parade ground. They were told off into rollers, and sent, some to the chain-pumps, some to the tackles of the paddle-box boats. Captain Wright, of the 91st regiment, who survives to relate the dreadful scene, tells us:

"Every man did as he was directed, and there was not a cry or a murmur among them until the vessel made her final plunge. I could not name any individual officer who did more than another. All received their orders and had them carried out as if the men were embarking instead of going to the bottom; there was only this difference, that I never saw any embarkation conducted with so little noise or confusion."

Poor fellows! Had they died in battle-field, and in their country's cause, their fate would have excited less poignant regret; but there is something inexpressible sad in the quiet, unflinching resolution of so many brave hearts struggling manfully to the last against an inevitable disaster. It is gratifying also to find that the women and children were all saved. They had been quietly collected under the poop awning, and were as quietly got over the ship's side, and passed into the cutters. The boat stood off about one hundred and fifty yards from the ill-starred Birkenhead, and all were saved. There is not the name of a single woman or child upon the list of the persons who perished. The other boats, as is usual in such cases, were not forthcoming in the hour of need. One gig and two cutters were all that could be rendered available. Of the one hundred and eighty-four persons who were saved, one hundred and sixteen made their escape in the three boats which succeeded in getting clear of the wreck.

Never was destruction more sudden or more complete. Within fifteen minutes after the vessel struck, the bow broke short off. Five minutes more elapsed, and the hull of the vessel went in two, crosswise, just abaft the engine-room. The stern part of the vessel immediately surged, filled, and went down. The only hope of the survivors lay in the maintopmast and maintopsail-yard, which still showed above the water. There were some fragments of the forecastle-deck still floating about; there were a few spars and drift wood. About forty-five people clung to the yard, and, after remaining there until 2 o'clock the following afternoon, were picked off by the Lioness, a schooner which was providentially at hand. Capt. Wright asserts that of the two hundred persons, more or less, who were clinging to the driftwood when he got away, nearly every man might have been saved had one of the ship's boats done her duty. Into this boat the assistant-surgeon had got, with eight men. They immediately pulled away, and landed about fifteen miles from the vessel.

It only remains for us to mention here that Capt. Salmond, who appears to have done his duty after the vessel struck, has not survived the calamity.

THE YACHT AMERICA IN PARLIAMENT.—Colonel Peel, in a recent discussion on the Navy estimates, in the British House of Commons, took occasion to express his surprise that not one word had been said in reference to the circumstance of a foreign yacht having come to England, and in the presence of the Queen herself, beaten some of the crack English sailing vessels! That, Col. Peel said, appeared to him a deeply humiliating event. She was an American yacht, and she was described as the "race horse of the ocean." Colonel Peel confessed that he was wholly ignorant of nautical matters, but he was conversant with the pastime of horse-racing, and he flattered himself that he could appreciate such an expression as "the blue ribbon of the Turf," as used by Mr. D'Israeli. Whatever might be the sailing qualities of the American yacht, Colonel Peel declared that if such a defeat had been sustained by the English sailing vessels at the Isle of Wight, there was not a true sportsman in England who would not go to any expense to recover back the lost laurels. Colonel Peel stated that it was part of his creed that "Britannia rules the waves," but what became of the goddess on the day to which he had alluded he could not say, but if she "ruled the waves," at all on that occasion she most surely have done so with a downcast look. Col. Peel's remarks were received with cries of "hear, hear!"

THE TURKISH STEAM NAVY.—Turkey is adding constantly of late to her steam navy, and possesses at present a steam navy of eighteen vessels of 3700 horse-power, viz: The Medjidie, 450; Mukhburi Surad, 450; Taif, 450; Feizi Bari, 450; Sayki Cledi, 450; Esseri Djedid, 300; Freklie, 180; Satri Babri, 100; Pelki Chewket, 100; Mesrri Hebri 100; Esseri Haix, 120; Yardley Tedgarat, 60; Pesendidi 60; Pelki Tdgard, 50; Esserf Tidjaret, 50; Guirit, 50, and Houma Perrax, 40. In addition to these vessels, there are eight others belonging to the Commercial Company of 1450 horse-power. Besides this force, there are eight steamers for the Dosphorus, two of which are used as tugboats.

RICE.—The first rice seed was brought into South Carolina by the merest chance. Some years before the Revolution a vessel from Madagascar put into Charleston in distress, and as a return for the courtesy he met with at the hands of the Governor of the colony, the Captain among other things, presented the Governor with a small bunch of rice. The seed was planted in his garden, and from this small beginning an important branch of commerce sprang up.

THE DEATH OF PRINCE SCHWARTZENBERG.—We already referred to the sudden decease, by stoppage of the heart, of Prince Schwartzenberg, the celebrated Austrian Premier, which occurred on the 5th of April at Vienna. He was the most eminent man in the empire, and has done more to strengthen it than any other one thing since Metternich's retirement. Schwartzenberg is said to be one of the imperial government. Both coming on and devoted to absolutism, he has been the most efficient instrument in the destruction of liberty on the continent of Europe. He was the leader of the reactionary movement that commenced in 1848, and it is to his counsels, backed, as they were by Russia, that the defeat of Hungary is to be attributed. His death will prove a terrible blow to the House of Hapsburg. The following not very complimentary record is made of his life:

"Prince Felix Schwarzenberg was born on the 2d of October, 1800. In early life he evinced in social life the unscrupulous libertinism that was afterwards evinced in his political career. In London he seduced and eloped with a lady of rank, for which he was prosecuted, and, failing to pay the damages decreed, was declared an outlaw. Afterwards in Naples he continued his career of criminal gallantry, for which, in one instance, he was severely chastised by an injured husband. He served under Radetsky in 1848, and was in November of that year made Prime Minister, an office he filled till his death. In every relation, private and public, he has been a man of intrigue, with the boldness to venture every thing in pursuit of an object, and the skill to accomplish all the undertook. He will live long in the memory of all, for his vices and his cruelties, and the bold, energetic courage which he displayed in their exercise."

A TALENTED CONFANAN.—At the Sophomore exhibition at Yale College, New Haven, the first prize for English composition was recently awarded to Yung Wing, a native Chinese.

The young men whom the New York papers reported to have been expelled from this class were only dismissed for publishing a scurrilous and insulting sheet. They will be enabled to return upon their rendering a proper and satisfactory apology to the aggrieved parties.

A STEAMER SEVEN HUNDRED FEET LONG.—According to the London Times, a movement is now on foot to build iron steamers seven hundred and twenty feet in length, with ninety feet beam, and thirty-six feet in depth, with four engines of 1000 horse power, and a screw, whilst there will be eight masts, with huge lateen sails. The vessels are to be built of iron, and to be shot and fire-proof, while their novel structure and superior strength, and immense length, it is supposed, will render them safer than vessels of smaller construction. It is calculated that each shall carry 2000 passengers, with a theatre for amusements; and in case of war, a battery of three hundred guns could be opened. The projected scheme, it is said, is for the purpose of bringing the English colonies within a month's reach of London.

DEATH OF JUDGE MERRIWETHER, OF GEORGIA.—The Augusta Chronicle of Wednesday last says: "Passengers who arrived in this city Monday evening and yesterday morning bring us the unwelcome intelligence of the death of the Hon. James A. Merriwether, at his residence in Eatonton. Although in the prime of life, he had been a prominent man in the State, and had filled many distinguished stations with credit to himself and honor to the state. He had filled the several offices of State Legislator, Representative in Congress, Judge of the Superior Court, and Speaker of the House of Representatives of Georgia. In all of which he evinced a high order of talent, and a zeal and energy of character, which pre-eminently distinguished him among his associates.

THE CHOCO ROUTE.—Recently some movements have been made on the Isthmus, in the direction of Choco, to establish a route for travelers between the two oceans; indeed, we believe there is an agent from New Granada, now in this city, with a grant of the right to the route, and numerous specimens of gold and silver ore and precious stones, to encourage the adventurous.

More than two hundred years ago, the Spaniards were aware of the proximity of the headwaters of the San Juan and Atrato. The curate of Novilla, finding that at high water, canoes proceeded from one river to another without unloading, caused the Indians of his parish to dig a canal between the two rivers, which was called the Canal of Raspadura, and it was made navigable for loaded barges.

The Spanish government, on learning this, speedily stopped the communication, and the unlucky Padre barely escaped a severe punishment for his cleverness.

Mr. Robinson, a well known traveler and author, conversed on this subject, in 1813, with some intelligent Spaniards and Creoles whom he met at Carthagena. They assured him the canal was yet viable and could easily be cleared out. They also stated, that there were several places where even shorter canals between the two rivers might be cut, and that the distance between their navigable waters was only thirteen leagues. [N. Y. SOUTHERN INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.—The Governor of Florida has appointed a large number of delegates to represent that State in the proposed Convention, which is to have for its object a great Southern Industrial Exhibition in New Orleans. This subject is attracting much attention throughout the Southern States.

Highly Important to Planters and Property Holders.

BRIDGEWATER ADAMANTINE PAINT.

The superior properties of this unequaled mineral substance is now so well and favorably known that it is unnecessary to enter into an extended notice. The public are referred to our circular, embracing certificates from—

Capt. St. C. THOMASSON, of steamer Magnolia.
Wm. BROWN, of towboat Porpoise.
HUGHES, VALLETTE & Co., Managers La. Dry Dock
J. P. WHITNEY & Co., Agents do.
Capt. N. D. RODRINS, of the ship Leodes.
JOSEPH BENSON, Painter 132 Camp street.
And the UNDERWRITERS' CERTIFICATES.

Also, the recommendation of a large number of our most influential COTTON FACTORS and COMMISSION MERCHANTS, all of which are included in the Agent's Circular. Also, to the following, received since the circulars were printed from JOHN F. MILLER, of Attakapas:

"In July last I was induced to apply the Bridgewater Mineral Paint to my Sugarhouse, and, in every respect, it has exceeded my expectations, and the representations made by the agent, Messrs. O. C. Rogers & Co. I cheerfully add my testimony to the numerous ones embraced in the Agent's Circular, and recommend the same to Planters and others, as the best Weather and Fire Protector I have ever known. Where I have applied it, it has been exposed to the sun since last July, and has neither blistered nor cracked, and has formed a solid metallic surface, which has proved entirely impervious."

New Iberia, Attakapas, March 16, 1852. JOHN F. MILLER.

In addition to the above, we have in our possession innumerable certificates from equally respectable sources, which can be seen at our office; among which are those of Paraphrase of Isaiah XLIII., 26.

"Put me in remembrance: let us plead together: declare thou, that thou mayest be justified."

BY H. B. KING.

Lord! if my cause be tried,
How may I plead with thee?
Transgressions have been multiplied,
Nor can my soul be justified
By any human plea.

Not only have I wrought
That which I should not do,
But when I have forgiveness sought,
The very sacrifice I brought
Needed forgiveness too.

A heart divided, torn,
And weak and wavering,
By earthly disappointments worn,
By earthly wishes overborne,
Was all that I could bring.

And if remembrance trace
One holy thought or prayer,
'Twas that the Spirit of thy grace
Had waited in the holy place,
To meet and bless me there.

I may not plead with thee;
Yet, Lord, I may not fear:
Still thine own Spirit pleads for me,
Though with a voiceless fervency,
Which thou alone canst hear.

He pleads the grace of One
Who bears the eternal name;
Thine own anointed holy Son,
Whose sacrifice the pardon won,
Which thy adopted claim.

This, Lord, is all my plea:
May it, by faith applied,
A full forgiveness win for me
In that great day when I must be Condemned or justified.

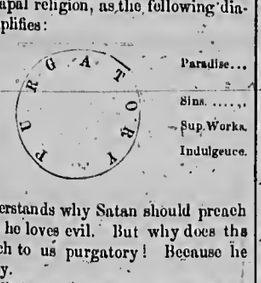
Purgatory.

Three religions divide the universe: the religion of Satan, which leads to hell; the religion of the Pope, which conducts to purgatory; the religion of Jesus, which confers heaven.

Satan says to us, Do evil.



The Pope says, Commute your faults at my treasury.

And Jesus says, I forgive you your sins.

Let us examine these three points separately:

The religion of Satan offers us pleasure for a few hours, suffering for eternity. I do not tell you sin is without sweetness, but you know that it is not without remorse either; and one of these days you will know that it is not without punishment. Enjoy it then for one year, for two, twenty, a hundred years if you can, but remember that it is probably at the cost of eternal sorrow. The religion of Satan is the religion of hell. This point is clear: let us pass to the second.

The Pope has for his religion purgatory. For indeed it is to purgatory that the whole refers: the masses of priests extricate souls from purgatory; the indulgences of the Pope abridge purgatory; the merits of saints free from purgatory; the penances of the faithful liquidate the death of purgatory; our sins lengthen, and our good works shorten our period of purgatory. Thus purgatory is the centre of Papal religion, as the following diagram exemplifies:

One understands why Satan should preach hell to us; he loves evil. But why does the Pope preach to us purgatory? Because he loves money.

In fact all that has reference to this belief is an object of speculation. Sins are redeemed by penances, penances are exchanged for masses, and masses cost thirty sous. These transactions vary, but they all have money at the bottom of them, and the diversity of forms serves only to disguise the final clinking of it, which results from them. Do you wish to sin? fast, and abstain from meat. If you do not like this, take out a dispensation, and if you want a dispensation, give money for it. Do you wish to commit the serious offence of marrying your cousin? give money! Do you wish by a mass to relieve your father from the flames of purgatory? give money! Would you have some pious brotherhood exonerate you from the task of prayer, by praying for you? give money! Sin is the beginning, and money is the end of all; and between these two points are placed penance or mass, fasting or nine days' devotion, almsgiving or a relic. According to individual taste, one of these ingredients may be commuted for another; the relic may be added to the mass, fasting substracted from the penance, the nine days' devotion transformed into alms; but none of these chymical processes of the church can form a substitute for money, whereas money can replace them all. For instance: tell your confessor that your stomach is too weak to bear fasting—he will willingly accept twenty rounds of the chaplet instead. But ask him to take twenty such rounds in payment for a mass of thirty sous, and be sure that he will decline. I remember to have read in a pamphlet, published by the Bishop of Marseilles, upon the occasion of a jubilee, that all the penances he imposed might be transmuted at will, or replaced by one other, but that other could not be replaced by any of them. Now this other was a gift to a seminary; so here again is that inevitable thing, money.

Do you wish to convince yourself that purgatory is indeed for the Pope and the bishops, the hen with the golden eggs? observe that they send almost every body thither, or at least they act as if every body went. In fact, before your mass on behalf of a relative is said, do they ever ask you what the conduct of that relative has been, with a view to ascertain whether he may not already chance to be in heaven or hell! Never! Yet, if he is in hell, what is the use of trying to take him out of a purgatory he has not even entered? And if in heaven, how take him from a purgatory which he has already left? But try another expedient: ask a priest for a mass, not on behalf of your father, but on that of the most remote of your ancestors; tell him that this ancestor was an excellent Christian, and that if, indeed, he went at the time of his death into purgatory at all, the probability is that at the present day—after the lapse of ten centuries—he must have quitted it, and the priest will reply that the safest plan, at all events, is to have a mass said, and if you offer payment for two, twenty, or a hundred, you will not be refused. Tell him, on the contrary, that the deceased was a great sinner, a parricide, and that he is most probably in hell, he will still tell you that it is the wisest plan to have a mass said, and that perhaps your thirty sous may afford him some relief. In short, the priest is always so hopeful as to believe that the dead are not in hell, but not hopeful enough to believe them in paradise: for this simple reason, that the direct entrance into paradise and into hell would alike render purgatory superfluous—that without purgatory there would be no more masses, and without masses, no more money! And thus the priests will say masses either for the holiest or the most guilty. The 21st of January they pray for Louis XVI.; give them thirty sous, they will pray for his judges. And yet if the former is a martyr, the latter are murderers; if the one is in heaven, the others are in hell. But this in no way prevents our cures from acting as if both were in purgatory; and if you like, they will perform a mass on behalf of all of them at once. If you have still a doubt left, ask the priest the exact quantity of sins which must be committed in order to go to hell! He will not tell you. Ask him the exact amount of virtues which entitles to paradise. He will answer that it is impossible to define exactly; that is to say, that he will always leave you just between heaven and hell, in other words, in purgatory; for the very evident reason that he has conferred upon himself the privilege of drawing you from thence.

Purgatory is then, the great mint where the priests' wealth is coined; it is the soul of the system, the summary of the church, the foundation of the Roman religion; it is then with reason that I have called the Pope's religion the religion of purgatory. We have only now to become acquainted with the religion of Jesus, which is that of heaven.

But here a question offers itself. Are not the Pope's religion and that of Jesus one and the same? No; and I will take but one proof of this, which is that Jesus has never—no, never—spoken of purgatory! This is not all, this purgatory of which Jesus has never spoken, the apostles have said nothing, positively nothing about it! In short, the whole Bible does not once speak of it, its name even is not to be found therein. Let any one shew me one word of purgatory in the whole extent of the Scriptures, and I became a Roman Catholic!

But I can give you another proof that neither the name nor the thing is to be found in the Bible. Here it is: Jesus, in his picture of the last judgment, places the righteous on his Father's right hand; the wicked on his left; but no one between. Is not this alone a proof that there exists no middle state between the one and the other? And as if to complete the demonstration, Jesus in the midst of this solemn scene says to the one, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you;" and to the others, "Depart ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." But there again Jesus sends no one to purgatory. Is not this an evident proof that purgatory does not exist! And once more, since the matter must be made clearer than the day, let us quote the words in which the Saviour concludes his picture of the last judgment. "These," says he, "shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal." That is all, and there is not a word said of any person's going to purgatory. Did Jesus forget it, or knew nothing about it!

And now will you have some arguments taken, not from the Bible, but from simple common sense? Listen. When the end of the world comes, and there are no longer any priests to celebrate the mass, what then will become of the souls in purgatory?

They can not be relieved as former souls have been. What! because there are no longer priests on earth, souls no more guilty must yet remain longer in torment? But this is absurd, it is unjust, unchristian!

Another proof: you are rich; I, on the contrary, am poor. You cause two or three hundred masses to be said for your father, and his soul passes from purgatory to Paradise. As for me, since I can not buy a mass, and no one will give me one gratis, I have no mass said, and my father remains in horrible torment! Thus then, differences of fortune are felt in the other world as well! God treats the rich with consideration, but deals severely with the poor. But this is absurd, unjust, unchristian.

Take another proof: a rogue dies, leaving the half of a fortune, the whole of which he made dishonestly, to defray the expense of masses; consequently his purgatorial period will be much diminished, and passing into heaven, he will at the last find himself virtually rewarded for his theft. In the next house an honest man dies of hunger upon his pallet, without leaving a single sou to his cure; thus his period of purgatory remains undiminished, so that God actually makes him suffer all the longer for not having stolen as did the other! I tell you again, that this is absurd, unjust, unchristian. In short, it is so absurd and so unjust, that my mind is crowded with arguments, and I seem to want words to express them. I will only add one other:

Purgatory is the greatest of all encouragements to the committal of sin. If you tell a man that in consequence of wrong doing he will go to hell, this fear may be salutary, and he will perhaps draw back from provoking a punishment destined to last throughout eternity! But tell him that there is a purgatory, and that it is even possible to abridge the period he will spend there, and the man who desires to do evil will feel encouraged to do it; for all suffering that can be remedied seems supportable to him, and moreover the present pleasure compensates, in his opinion, for the future penalty. He says to himself that after the purgatory he shall have plenty of time for the enjoyment of an unending paradise; and that since sin has not more terrible consequences, it is not worth while to deprive himself of it.

But place that man on the contrary, between the perspective of an endless hell and an endless heaven; tell him that he will enjoy or suffer without any truce to his enjoyment or to his sufferings; that he will be lost for ever, or for ever saved; and then that man, seared by an eternity of anguish, or allured by an eternity of joy, will shun evil in order to do good; or at least, if his passions still tyrannize over him, thoughts of eternal felicity, or of eternal torment, will come and urge him to conquer these passions: whereas the expectation of a limited punishment allows him to go to sleep in sin, and prevents him from being converted to holiness. Thus, as purgatory is the religion of the Pope, the religion of heaven is the religion of Jesus Christ. This is what I have now to prove.

Jesus wishes the salvation of all, young and old, rich and poor, virtuous and sinful, or as he himself expresses it, "both good and bad." What, then, will he do to place that salvation within the reach of all? Will he ask for masses? No, for then the poor would be lost. Will he exact difficult tasks? No, for then children could not be saved. Will he require a certain number of good works? No, for then this or that sinner must needs perish. What, then, can that condition be, compliance with which is equally easy to all—to young and all, rich and poor, great criminals and moral sinners! This is the condition; Jesus himself names it. It is only to trust in him, only to consent to be saved, only to be willing to enter into heaven; in one word, says the apostle Paul, to "believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved!"

But does Jesus indeed thus offer heaven to all? Is there not a certain amount of perversity which excludes the hope of pardon? The Gospel will tell us. To the right of Jesus, on the cross, there was a thief who asked for mercy. What answer did Jesus make to him? "To-day thou shalt be with me in paradise!" What good action had that man done? Not any; only he had believed in Jesus Christ, and thief as he was, he entered into paradise! Is not that the fairest monument of Divine mercy? and if Jesus conferred heaven upon such a one when he believed and repented, will he not do so upon all, whatever they be, who also repent and believe! Yes; paradise, heaven, life, blessed and eternal life, to all that believe and repent: there is the religion of Jesus Christ! And do not imagine that Jesus forgives because sin appears to him a small thing! no; on the contrary, it is because sin is so hateful in His sight, that He alone could expiate it. His blood has flowed, Jesus has died, and therefore you are saved. The priest must be paid to free you from hell; Jesus, on the contrary, pays in your place, and you enter into heaven. The priest sells you his purgatory; Jesus gives you His paradise. See which of the two you prefer applying to.

Ah, beware, beware, dear reader! these short pages which you have been reading may, perhaps, hang heavy on your eternal fate! As long as you did not know that purgatory was an unchristian doctrine, and conducive to sin, so long you were only half guilty in having adopted it. But now that you know it to be opposed to the Bible, and opposed to morality, if still you retain it, it may well be supposed that you do so just because it leaves an open door to your sinful inclinations; you retain it in order to sin more comfortably. But remember, that it is too late to do this with impunity! You have seen the light; you can no longer screen yourself behind the plea of an ignorance which has this day been removed. In vain you reclose your eyes—you have seen—you are condemned!

But no; far from remaining in this partial darkness, you will seek for increased light, you will examine the Bible for yourselves; you will listen to Jesus Christ; you will study the writings of His apostles; you will breathe upon the light, not with the timid breath of the priest, to quench it, but rather with the breath of prayer and study to revive it. Is this a hope that I here express? Alas! I fear that as regards a large number, it will prove only a vain wish!

My God, my God, in the case of one at least be the aspiration fulfilled!

Church Bells.

Among the indispensables of a well-ordered community, must be reckoned the "church-going bell." A church can hardly be said to be a church, which does not add to its other attractions, the pleasant tones of the Sabbath morning bell. There is something better than the merely picturesque in those clear tones, sounding out, amidst the caroling of birds, and the silent hymn of nature, the voice of invitation to the house of God. They give a key-note to the praise which every right heart spontaneously utters, when recalling the associations of the day the Lord has made, and when anticipating the assemblage of God's people in the sanctuary—seeming joyfully to say, "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord." There is something so cheerful and inviting, and so finely in harmony with the sentiments and exercises of the Sabbath, that a congregation must be considered as wanting some of the accessories of public worship whose ears are not regularly gladdened by its tones.

A recent inquiry from a country parish respecting a bell, induces us to state, that so far as our knowledge extends, we know of no bells so good, or sold so reasonably, as those manufactured by the sons of the celebrated Andrew Meneely, of West Troy, New York. Mr. Meneely possessed a remarkably inventive genius, and would have excelled in any branch of mechanical business. Perpetually experimenting, he succeeded in securing such proportions of material, shape and other qualities, as to give his bells a clearness, strength and agreeableness of tone, which certainly have never been surpassed in this country. The public have been finding out the merit of his work, too; for nearly ten thousand church bells have been sent from the foundry since its origin, and we suppose the sales are greater than ever before. Now, it is not every good founder that can make a good bell, any more than every good cabinet maker can turn out a clear toned and rich piano forte: and from a long acquaintance, we are inclined to believe that what Erard and Chickering are in the business of piano making, or what Stradivarius was with the violin, Meneeley was with the church bell. So sweet, cordial and inviting, as rung on a cheerful Sabbath morning, we wish every church in the land had one of them. [N. Y. Evangelist.

HASTY WORDS.

Full oft a word that lightly leaves the tongue,
Another's breast unconsciously has wrung;
And were the wound but patent to the eye,
We'd mourn the pain that science might defy—

Was it a taunt—perhaps a thoughtless jest!
An idle ripple of the vacant breast!
But tiny shafts may yield a venomed death,
What need to speed them, but a little breath.

The Bushman thus secures inglorious prey;
And words cap men, as darts the Ostrich, slay:
Strange! that the breath providing Nature lends,
In man alone to work of ruin lends—

We toy with hearts, as if the thousand chords
That vibrate to the touch of hasty words,
Could jar out discords all the live-long day,
Nor any tension cause them to give way—

Oh, strike them gently! every human breast
Is by a secret load of grief oppressed:
Forbear to add a note of thrilling woe,
Where discords ever are so prone to flow.

I Don't Like Professions.

This is the reason which many give for not acknowledging Christ. They say, when urged upon the point, that they "don't like professions." A strange reason this for not obeying the express command of the Divine Saviour! Why if they do not like professions, do they equally dislike obeying commands? If so, they had better say, "I don't like obedience to the commands of God." But they profess to be well disposed to obey: it is only to professing that they object. Well, then, let them obey all the precepts which they find in the Bible, and we will not trouble them about a profession. Why should we? In that case they will obey the precepts which enjoy a profession; they will do the thing appointed in remembrance of Christ.

But "I don't like professions." And who does like mere professions? Who ever contended in favor of a man's professing to have what he has not? Professions are very different from mere professions. Suppose a person has what he professes to have, what then? What is the objection to a profession in that case? I see none. If a man loves the Lord Jesus, I can see no harm in his professing or declaring his attachment to him. It is very natural to declare it. We profess attachment to others—to relatives, friends, benefactors, pastors, civil rulers. Why not to Christ? How does his being the subject of the profession constitute such an objection to it? Is he the only being to whom we may not profess attachment?

"Don't like professions?" Why yes, they do. Professions of friendship, of patriotism and of loyalty they like. Why not of religion? Why should not religion be professed as well as other things? Are attachment to the Gospel, love to Christ, regard for the authority of Jehovah, and adherence to his government, the only things never to be professed?

I do not see any objection to professions, but I see propriety and utility in them, even if it were optional with us to make them or not. If it were left to our choice, it strikes me we ought to choose to profess love and obedience to Christ. But suppose it is required, does not that alter the case? Will these persons say they do not like what God requires? And does he not require a profession? His inspired apostle twice exhorts Christians to hold fast their profession. Does not that imply that it is made, and ought to be made? How is a person to hold on to that which he has never taken hold? Is not the public confession of Christ required when it is made a condition of salvation? Rom. 10, 9: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." Does not divine authority require it, when to the doing of it is made one of the most precious promises in the whole Bible? "Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven." Is not that duty, against the omission of which such a threatening lies as this, "But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven." Matt. 10: 32, 33. It is very plain that God requires professions, though some men do not like them.

"You don't like professions!" Then Joshua, a man that followed the Lord fully, falls under your censure, for he professed the service of God. "As for me and my house," said he, "we will serve the Lord." Are we to think the worse of him for this? Some ask what is the use of a profession. "If they will observe what followed Joshua's profession, they will see the use of it. They will see that it brought out all Israel. "We will also serve the Lord," said they, and they entered that day into a covenant to serve him. Nor did their practice belie their profession, for it is recorded that "Israel served the Lord all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that overlived Joshua." So much for a profession. It is agreed on all hands that that professing generation, in piety and devotion to God, surpassed any other during the national existence of Israel.

We read in 1 Tim. 2:10, of certain things which are said to become "women professing godliness." It would seem from this to be the duty of women to profess godliness. And if of women, of men also, I suppose. What case of real subjection to the Gospel of Christ do we read of, which was not also a case of "professed subjection" to it? Paul, in 2 Cor. 9:13, speaks of some who glorified God for the "professed subjection" of others unto the Gospel of Christ. It appears, then, that God is glorified by these professions. And I should presume, from certain passages in the Bible, that he is not glorified when a profession is withheld. There were in primitive times some who did not like professions. It is no new thing not to like professions. In John 12:42-43, we read that "among the chief rulers many believe on him, but" as they did not like professions, "because of the Pharisees they did not confess him" for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." It is no honorable mention which is intended to be made of another, of whom it was said that he was "a disciple of Jesus, but secretly, for fear of the Jews." John 19:38. Fear made him decline a profession for a time; but at length he came out openly on the side of Christ, and besought Pilate for the body of Jesus.

If they who say they do not like professions, mean that they do not like false or loud or ostentatious or barely verbal professions, let them say so, and we will agree with them; but let them not mean this, and say, without qualification, they "don't like professions."

It is truly strange, because some now, as in apostolic times, "profess that they know God, but in works deny him," that others will never profess to know him. Because men have professed friendship, and have proved no friends, they will not only not profess friendship, but they will abstain from certain acts and expressions of friendship, because they involve a profession of it! It is a pity that men who are going to give an account of themselves to God should reason and act thus.

Well, they must do as they please; but of one thing I am sure. The hour is coming when, however they may now dislike professions, they will like them. They may not now like to confess Christ before men, but they will then like to have Christ confess them before his Father. They may not like to call him now the beloved of their souls, but they would like to have him call them on that day the blessed of his Father.

"Cote Gelee."

This name is not confined to the hill or hills (or perhaps more properly hillocks) that form the northern verge of the prairie lying between the Teche and Vermilion Bayous, but is frequently applied to a large portion of the adjacent prairie. Nature has made it a lovely section, and it only wants the assistance of art to make it the "garden spot" of Attakapas. The gradually undulating surface, clothed in almost perpetual verdure, and though but a few years since sparsely settled, now thickly dotted o'er with fields and habitations is bounded east by the Teche, west by the Vermilion, on the north by Bayou Tortue, and south by the "sea marsh," which makes up a considerable distance from the Bayou of Vermilion and Atchafalaya. This "sea marsh" contains a range of hills of considerable elevation, called Islands, (and which, perhaps, are literally so, except at very dry seasons) of great beauty and fertility, each occupied by a sugar plantation.

The prairie, of which, be it remembered, the northern part only bears the title of Cote Gelee, constitutes a part of four parishes, viz: St. Martin and St. Mary on the east, and Lafayette and Vermilion on the west. Two lovely lakes supply its inhabitants with any quantity of delicious fish, while the whole prairie abounds with wild fowls during six months of the year. The soil is fertile, plentifully rewarding the labor of the husbandmen, but much less tenacious than the woodlands of the bayous, and consequently more easily cultivated.

The prairie is inhabited principally by French Creoles, who speak the language of their ancestors. The mass of them have little or no education—the majority, perhaps, being unable to read or write. Of course there are exceptions. They are almost universally Roman Catholics; their priests being the only ministers of religion in this country who conduct their services in the French language. In morals they are very loose, especially as regards the keeping of the Subbath, a day which they devote to labor, pleasure and pastime.

But their favorite modes of desecrating the Subbath are horse-racing, gambling and drinking. If they attend mass on Sunday morning, as soon as that is over they go out of the church into the gambling house, and there spend the rest of the day over the card or billiard table, and that too, maybe, within one hundred yards of the church. Not long since a man fell dead at a card table in a neighboring village. Throwing his card on the table, he exclaimed "I'm out," and dropped down dead!

It is customary with the young, and even with some who are not young, to attend a ball every Saturday night, where they literally

"Dance all night,
Till broad daylight."

The girls, and many females who lay no claim to youth, are exceedingly fond of dancing. A beautiful girl, about fourteen years of age, not a hundred miles from where I write, said by some to have been the prettiest in the parish, spent the whole of a Saturday night on the floor of the ball-room, dancing every set, and continued the exercise through the greater part of the next day. The result was, that before the next Saturday evening she was a corpse! Alas! how sad a fate for one so young. Who will affirm that disease and death are not frequently the effect of such excessive dissipation?

But the French population are not the only class that indulge in the practices and vices above described. Would they were! Many who call themselves Americans, in contradistinction, are not less guilty.

But let us turn from the dark side of this picture, and inquire if there be no "cure for all these ills," a moral remedy for this moral disease. Let us consider what are the causes of this mauvaise maladie.

First, then, may be mentioned the force of example, as well as precept; children must be expected to adopt the practices of their parents—another cause, their want of education. Being unable to read or write, having no books, they must do something to while away their leisure hours, and drive away ennui. But last, though not least, and perhaps the cause of all this conduct, is their religion; or perhaps, more properly, their want of it. Whether the Roman Catholic Church encourages ignorance or not, I say not here; nor do I say whether she encourages or discourages drinking, gambling, dancing, racing, et id omne genus; but this much is certain, that the devotees at her shrine, as a general thing, in this section, practice habitually one or more of these sins.

And now for the treatment. What shall we prescribe. Some say, educate them, and for this purpose free schools have been established. That, could it succeed, might produce some alleviation, but hardly touch the main cause; the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ alone can reach that—the Gospel in its purity. It is that which will renew the heart, change the affections, desires and propensities, and consequently the habits and customs. Religion also brings education in its train as a natural sequence.

An important question arises here—how is this remedy to be applied? We answer, in several ways. We want a man to preach the pure Gospel to them in their own native tongue. Already the Macedonian cry is heard, "Come over and help us;" and verily, if one could be had who would spend his time wholly or chiefly among them, visit them, preach, exhort and converse with them in their vernacular, I believe much good might be done, and a great change effected in the moral aspect of the community. I have long wished to see the experiment tried, and I know of no better place to try it than in this vicinity, and even at this very time. Many of them are disposed to be religious, and if they had proper religious instruction would doubtless make worthy members of some orthodox church.

Another mode of disseminating the truth, would be by means of Sabbath Schools. Some would attend from mere curiosity, and many irregularly; but by diligence and perseverance on the part of the pastor and teachers, aided by the Divine blessing, an interest would be excited among the pupils, the school would flourish, and great good would doubtless result. Besides, it would afford an opportunity of distributing among the children a number of small religious books, which would be read not only by the children themselves, but frequently by their parents or friends. For this purpose, however, we must have books in the French language. French Bibles and Testaments may be procured, I suppose, in any number from the American Bible Society; but what shall we do for Catechisms, and other small books? Can not some good brother in New Orleans translate our church catechisms, and some of the best of our Sunday School books, for the benefit of the French population? If so, he might be the means of doing much good.

So extensive is this circuit, as it now is, and so great the labor required of the pastor, that he has little or no time to devote to the interest of the French population. I hope that this may be remedied at the next session of the Conference. PHILANTHROPE.

What Pays the Way for Common Schools?

Common schools are allowed by all to be indispensable to the well being of society. To their establishment and support the most untiring efforts of the most enlightened statesmen and the purest patriots are freely given. No subject is more generally popular than Common School education. The absolute necessity of providing the means for such education constitutes the chosen theme for the aspirant to popular favor, in all republican communities, and especially in Texas. In no State is it more easy to obtain a frank admission of the necessity of educating the masses than in Texas. And this is very natural and right, as all our officers, from the lowest to the highest, are elected by the people.

As common schools are thus popular, and the necessity of common school education is so generally admitted, is not the instrumentality which paves the way for the establishment of such schools entitled to a share of popular favor? What is that instrumentality? As the press is said to be an exponent of public opinion, I will quote the following from a correspondent of a Texas paper:

"As yet we have no general system of education, yet most of the settlements can and do cluster together a sufficient number of scholars to form a school, which is put into operation as a thing of first consequence. The people are much assisted in this by the praiseworthy and successful efforts which are being made to perforate every region of the State with Sunday Schools. In those the children are congregated together; they are taught to associate for improvement in mental discipline; in short, they pave the way for a common school."

Are you, fellow citizens, the friends of common school education? Shall not, then, that institution which paves the way for common schools receive your cordial and liberal support? A TEXAN.

To an Aged Croaker.

VENERABLE BROTHER: In the dews of youth you bowed at the altar of "good old Methodism" with a heart thrilling with the pulsations of love for your brethren; and in the frost of age you appear before the public as their bitter accuser. Why this transition in your spirit, my brother? Will the precepts of "good old Methodism" sustain you in this?

Modesty is a precious jewel, my brother; and could you behold the enemies of "good old Methodism" gazing with delight on the moral picture you presented them of your brother ministers, as you are, not a stranger to the luxury of a blush, you would blush, indeed to own that you afforded such a feast for their malignant spirits.

In all the ardor of your feelings for "good old Methodism," why strive to persuade the world that the moral standard of "modern Methodism" is far beneath that of our fathers! Your brother has now open before him a little book of those hallowed days, printed A. D. 1785, which tells him that the first Methodist Conference in the United States, held in Philadelphia, June 1773, was composed of ten preachers, who reported 1160 members, all told; and in twenty years after, with which the book is closed, they numbered 315 preachers and 65,608 members, all told, including the blessed names of Coke and Asbury; in view of which, his heart pulsates with emotions unutterable, and tears of devout gratitude stream down his aged cheeks while he contemplates the hosts that now throng the altars where his fathers bowed, and the unnumbered thousands who have gone from thence to the glory land. The thought melts the heart. The scenes through which our fathers passed—the perils, toils, privations and persecutions they endured to transmit to their sons the pure doctrines of the Cross, should be remembered by us with the best and last emotions of our hearts. But, my brother, while we revere their names and cherish their virtues, let us not impugn the spirit of their sons. The toils of both are before our eyes—the past and present are in view—and facts astound the world. The little immortal band of ten has been multiplied into as many thousands; and the 1160 seals of their ministry into as many hundreds of thousands. "Not unto us, not unto us," but unto God be all the praise.

My brother, in the face of these facts, say not that the standard bearers of "modern Methodism" have fallen beneath the moral valor of their fathers, because a few of them think it no harm to read the word of God through "golden spectacles," or to wear "gold sleeve buttons, or gold watches." In the face of such facts, my brother, tell it not to the world that our fathers, great and good and holy as they were, far excelled their sons in acts of mercy and strains of fervid, holy eloquence, that warm and bless and exalt the heart. Our fathers desired to establish schools and colleges that would bless the world with a host of useful spirits, born of God and destined for the skies; their sons imbibed their spirit, and have nobly done the deed. Our fathers ardently desired to send the Gospel of Jesus to the poor benighted ones in distant lands—their sons, moved by the same god-like spirit, have been the instruments, in the hands of God, of collecting thousands and tens of thousands annually to accomplish the blessed work. Now, my brother, what would the thousands of happy converts in heathen lands say to you, if you should go and tell them that "good old Methodism" was verily more god-like in its spirit and deeds than that "modern Methodism" which has taught them to bow at the Cross and obtain redemption through the blood of Jesus? Or, nearer home, do you think it would be possible for you to persuade the many thousands of God's poor, in the rice fields of Carolina and Georgia, that the fathers of "good old Methodism" contemplated greater deeds of mercy for them than their sons have achieved?

Oh, my brother, be entreated to tell the scoffers of the age what modern Methodism, the legitimate and heaven-born offspring of "good old Methodism," has done, and is doing, for the moral reformation of the world. Tell, then, how propitiously heaven smiles on the sons of our sainted fathers. As a father in Israel, let such themes call forth the gratitude of your heart. O charity! first born of heavenly graces! how sweet is thy voice, how kind thy spirit!

Yours in the bonds of "good old Methodism," JAREZ.

Wesley on Sanctification.

Mr. Editor: In perusing the Christian correspondence of Mr. Wesley and Mrs. Bennis, I find the following letter addressed to Mrs. Bennis, which, if you should think proper, please insert in the Christian Advocate and Journal. C. GILBERT.

Ridgefield, March 2, 1852.

MANCHESTER, March 26, 1766.

My Dear Sister: One of our preachers has lately advanced a new position among us—That there is no direct or immediate witness of sanctification, but only a perception or consciousness that we are changed, filled with love, and cleansed from sin. But if I understand you right, you find a direct testimony that you are a child of God. Now certainly, if God has given you this light, he did not intend that you should hide it under a bushel. It is good to conceal the secrets of a king, but it is good to tell the loving kindness of the Lord.

Every one ought to declare what God has done for his soul, and that with all simplicity; only one is to be taken to declare to several persons that part of our own experience which they are severally able to bear; and some parts of it, to such alone as are upright and simple of heart. One reason why those who are saved from sin should freely declare it to believers, is because nothing is a stronger incitement to them to seek after the same blessing. And we ought, by every possible means, to press every serious believer to forget the things which are behind, and with all earnestness go on to perfection. Indeed, if they are not thirsting after this, it is scarce possible to keep what they have; they can hardly retain any power of faith if they are not panting after holiness. A thousand infirmities are consistent with even the highest degree of holiness, which is no other than pure love—a heart devoted to God; one design and one desire. Then whatever is done, either in word or deed, may be done in the name of the Lord Jesus. Press after all the residue of the promises. I am, my dear sister,

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Your affectionate brother,

JOHN WESLEY.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, May 8.

To the Members of the Alabama and Louisiana Conferences.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate beg leave to present to the patronizing Conferences, and to subscribers generally, the following.

REPORT.

The Committee are much pleased to find the fiscal condition of the paper safe. The number of subscribers is near 3000, and the list constantly increasing. Such, however, is the actual cost of publication, that the Committee are grieved to say, the able and efficient editor has received literally a merely nominal sum for all the labors, care and anxiety connected with his responsible position. Nor has the paper been a source of profit to the publishers, nor can it be until the number of paying subscribers is greatly increased.

The Committee have called attention to these facts to excite the agents, who already deserve great commendation, to still greater efforts to secure subscribers, and to collect the amount now due for the second volume; and secondly, to show that upon no other plan known to the Committee could the paper have existed for one year.

A specimen number of a paper, to be published on a different plan, and for a lower price, was issued in July 1850, in this city; and when the Louisiana Conference met in December following, a very small fraction of the number of subscribers regarded as necessary to commence the paper had been obtained. The Louisiana and Alabama Conferences, with all due deference to the feelings and opinions of brethren differing from them, determined to establish the paper at a higher price, and without involving themselves in any pecuniary risk. In accordance with their plan the paper was issued more than a year ago. It has succeeded fully equal to their expectations. It occupies a high position with the other members of the Advocate family. The editor has displayed tact, talent, piety and enterprise; and while he has kept his columns free from every thing which would contaminate the morals, vitiate the tastes of its readers, or bring into disrepute our holy religion, he has by his own pen, by a list of able foreign and domestic correspondents, and by tasteful selections, done much to give character and dignity to our Church Periodical Literature.

The Committee have therefore reappointed him to a position which he has filled with so much honor to himself and advantage to the Church.

In conclusion, the Committee beg leave to commend the paper as deserving a still more extended circulation, and to express the hope that the New Orleans Christian Advocate may continue to exert a purifying influence upon all communities where it may circulate.

Sabbath School Anniversary.

The celebration of the Anniversary of the Sabbath Schools of the M. E. Church, in this city and the parts immediately adjacent, came off on Wednesday evening, May 5, in the large and pleasant basement of the McGehee Church.

The large room was densely crowded—seats, aisles, doors and windows—but, notwithstanding, the best order prevailed. The exercises were opened with singing and prayer; then followed another hymn.

Columbus Deacon made the introductory address, which was appropriate, and handsomely delivered. Then followed two addresses in German—one from a little Master and the other from a little Miss. As we have to confess to an entire ignorance of the German, we can not express an intelligent opinion as to the merits of the addresses, but (walking by faith) we believe they were good, and if the little lady's was as pretty as herself, it was quite fine enough.

Then followed a poetical dialogue, by two little Misses, on the "Home of the Angels." Certainly a beautiful subject.

Next we had an address on "Sabbath School Instruction," by a young lady—Miss Sarah Brown—a sensible and distinctly delivered address. A dialogue in German, by two boys, "Walking by Faith"—again we take the opinion of a learned friend, who says it was a good thing, and well done. A "Bible Lesson," by a class of boys and girls; good, and well studied.

Next followed a hymn in German, sung with correctness and spirit. We have long heard that the Dutch had taken Holland—we now add the Germans have taken music.

Miss Maria Barnett delivered, with fine elocutionary taste, the beautiful poem of N. P. Willis, on "The Sacrifice of Abraham."

"The Proper use of Wealth," a dialogue by Masters Price and Nicholson; good poe[illegible]

A poetical dialogue, "The Prettiest Sight on Earth"—the prettiest and most pleasant feature of the celebration, as we thought. Then came another hymn—the Secretary's report—a beautiful poetical appeal to the audience, to show their love for the Sabbath School cause, in substantial coined manifestations, which six young Misses were appointed to receive. Master W. H. Ellis delivered the closing address, expressing, in the name of the several schools, their gratitude to teachers and friends for the kindness and care of which the scholars had been the recipients. This was quite a spirited address. Then came the closing hymn to "Auld Lang Syne," sung, as were all the hymns, in fine taste and glowing animation.

The whole affair passed off in the best spirit, and we hope will be greatly productive of good, and give additional impulse to the heaven-hallowed cause of Sabbath Schools.

METHODISM THRICE DEAD!

Mr. Isaac Taylor has written a book recently, entitled "Wesley and Methodism." Mr. T. has one half the power of a first rate writer. He can make you ask, think, wish, wonder, and turn your whole man into an interrogation point. He can give you no fact, no answer, no round full period of satisfaction. He disturbs you, unsettles, whirls you, dreams you, and then—leaves you. His is a wonderfully wonderful sort of reflection, which makes all his readers wonder what Mr. Taylor means, and think that Mr. Taylor thinks that there is something wrong somewhere, for which they would do well to follow him and keep a sharp look out!

We see one or two ideas cut in his book as we have seen on the Mississippi the tops of the chimnies of a steamboat—just above the fog. A good deal of the audible, but not much visible. Once in a while the haze flies; for instance, "The soul and substance of Methodism have long ago departed." Pretty round. The Methodist Church dead! One of the largest in numbers, sending out more money, more missionaries, than any other branch of the Protestant Church—not excepting the Church of England—preaching as widely, warmly, and as savingly as any other, pardon and life by faith in Christ, yet "without soul or substance!". We should like to know what Mr. Taylor's symptoms of life are.

It is not hard to imagine the author standing over his subject, on his "Physical Theory of a Future Life," his Natural History of Enthusiasm, and a large pile of works "now preparing by the same writer," addressing an audience: "I tell you, gentlemen, he's dead;" and then, turning to Methodism, "Sure as you're born, my friend, you're dead."

(Methodism shouts "glory!" and every body looks dubious.) "Well, my friends, I can prove it; Wesleyan Methodism is dead, for it has a dead man's name."

Good grammar, smooth periods, hair-splitting adjectives, and a variety of language have covered more than one pointless essay so well, that the reader was quite certain there must be "something in it," when, in fact, if he were put to the torture he could not have given for two minutes together a consistent account of any one thing that he had understood the author as having intended to say.

Mr. Taylor seems to have had the object of writing upon the same time with Mr. Robert Southey, a treatise which should rival his excellences and oppose his views. Southey is against Calvinism, Mr. Taylor for it—"Wesley rejected," says Mr. T., "in terms the 'Election of Grace,' on account of its alliance—inseparable, as he supposed, with Reprobation; but in so doing he brought a wordy phantom."

Mr. Taylor's rather striking suggestion how to mend Methodism, may be also cited to show both the strength of his Calvinism and the power of his inductions:

"Let leave be granted for the suggestion that a reconsidered Wesleyanism, which should wholly cease to make itself antagonist to an obsolete form of Calvinism, might yet restore to the Wesleyan Institute that expansive evangelic force in which it once so far surpassed every other Christian community."

Take the anti-Calvinistic part of Methodism out of it! and obsolete Calvinism! anti-Arminian Methodism and obsolete decrees would be rather an absurd pretension.

Southey thinks Mr. Wesley was able and learned. Mr. T. thinks not. Southey thinks Mr. Wesley's sermon on Free Grace "one of the most able and eloquent of all his discourses; a triumphant specimen of impassioned argument." "It is ill-ed," he adds "in a tremendous strain of eloquence, and shows with what indignation the preacher, in his zeal for God, and in his love for his fellow creatures, regarded a doctrine so injurious to both. In an evil hour did the restless mind of man devise for itself the perilous question of fatalism; and in a more unhappy one was it introduced into Christian theology." Mr. Taylor takes no such view of the sermon:

"Verily he believed," says Mr. T., "that that ill-judged burst of rhetoric, in which he himself borders so near upon blasphemy, and apostrophizes 'the devil,' was as unsound in theology as in fact it was shallow and unseemly. In this and in many other similar instances we easily save his reputation as a thoroughly honest disputant, by alleging his entire want of the deep reflection, or analytic faculty."

Mr. Southey evidently caters for the Established Church—Mr. Taylor for the Independents. Mr. Southey questions much the past of Wesleyanism, Mr. Taylor has settled that, but doubts profoundly its present and future—the large idea is in his head and the patent in his hand—"ORBIT ANNO DOM." Southey reckons Mr. Wesley ambitious, enthusiastic, ascetic, the Ignatius Loyola of Protestantism, and accounts for his success on the old score of "animal excitement;" Mr. T. relieves Mr. Wesley of these and all other extraordinary qualities, moral and mental, and writes him only an exponent of a "development." They both agree that the Methodist Church is no Church. Mr. T. thinks Mr. Wesley was equal to what he did (!) i. e. to establish an INSTITUTE. "This INSTITUTE was not and is not a CHURCH; but," he says very profoundly, "to found a Church is another sort of work; and it would demand powers of mind and qualifications, intellectual and moral, quite of another order." One other great matter separates the two authors toto cælo—Mr. Fletcher's logic. Mr. Southey says his "reasoning is acute and clear." We had always thought as much; not so, however, with Mr. T.:

"We should be assigning to Fletcher far too high a place, as a writer; if we were to affirm that his reasoning is sophistical; for in fact he does not reason, nor could he do so."

In short, these two writers do not, will not agree about Wesley, excepting, maybe, that a great many people went to hear him preach, and a good many professed to be Christians under his ministry. What a pity!

Mr. Southey possessed, to an uncommon degree, the power of statement. No writer in the language arranges more naturally and attractively all his materials. But he was no philosopher—ask Coleridge—he could always interest, but seldom instruct. There is another author who is thought to have annotated all the solid parts of Mr. Wesley pretty much away—Mr. Coleridge. Mr. C., great as he was, deep as he was, never got beyond an a priori view of any thing. He always had more to do with the Coleridge within than with the world without. To a mind like his, consisting of algebra, infidelity and nitrous oxyd, Mr. Wesley's matter of fact, godly life, must have been very indigestible.

Nature has provided in these three authors a sufficient antidote to each other. One neutralizes the other, and leaves the reader quite ready and inquiring to know what Mr. Wesley's own people have estimated him at.

The fact is, these gentlemen writers who have lived for themselves are not capable of weighing the parts of a man whose conversation was in heaven, and who lived only to do good. Of mankind generally, how to do them good, probably Mr. S. or Mr. C. or Mr. T. scarcely ever thought; or if so, the world has never had occasion practically to know it. Indeed, twenty such men might have lived contemporaneously, and the people have been none the better or wiser; but TWO JOHN WESLEYS, at one time standing on the earth,

"Where the golden gates of day Open on the palmy East,"

the other amongst the tribes

"West from Orontes to the ocean," would have set

"The kingdoms in a blaze."

When we see the thousands, nay millions, ready to arise and call John Wesley blessed, and then mark such men sagely calculating in what he and all the world were wrong, we are reminded that—

"Three wise men of Gotham Went to sea in a bowl."

(All three talking.) Mr. Southey—"They who consider the wide-spreading schism to which it has led, and who know that the welfare of the country is vitally connected with its Church Establishment, may think that the evil overbalances the good."

Mr. Coleridge—"Nothing less than such an hypothesis would be adequate to the satisfactory explanation of the facts—though that of a metastasis of specific functions of the nervous energy taken in conjunction with extreme nervous excitement, + some delusion, + some illusion, + some imposition, + (plus) some chances and accidental coincidences might determine the direction in which the skepticism vibrated. Nine years has the subject of zoo-magnetism been before me."

Mr. Taylor—"One must believe that many of that class of persons whom a writer like Southey represents, and to whose tastes and views he evidently labored to adapt himself, must be conscious that the explications he advances in attempting to unravel Methodism, are as futile in philosophy as they are false in theology; and, in fact, that most of his solutions of the 'phenomena' are nothing better than frigid absurdities. That they were so was strongly felt by Coleridge, whose far deeper acquaintance with spiritual principles, and whose vastly more acute intelligence prompted him to protest, in many instances, against his friends' vapid arrogance."

All three—"Bless me! this is a wide sea!"

"If the bowl had been stronger,
My song had been longer."

SELECT HIGH SCHOOL.—Brother Thweatt has opened his school in the basement of the McGehee Church. We can very heartily commend it to parents who have sons they may wish to place under the care and instruction of an experienced and able teacher. For minute information we refer to his advertisement in this paper.

PULPIT OSTENTATION.—How little, says the eloquent Dr. Chalmers, must the word of God be felt in that place where the high functions of the pulpit are degraded into a stipulated exchange of entertainment on the one hand, and of admiration on the other. And surely it were a sight to make angels weep, when a weak and vaporing mortal, surrounded by his fellow sinners, and hastening to the grave and to the judgment along with them, finds it a dearer object to his bosom to regale his hearers by the exhibition of himself, than do in plain earnest the work of his Master, and urge the business of repentance and faith by the impressive simplicities of the Gospel.

BUSPENDED.—Rev. Mr. Thomas, a Presbyterian clergyman at Lewes, Sussex county, Maryland, was suspended by the Wilmington Presbytery, which met at St. George's a few days ago, for conduct unbecoming a preacher of the gospel.

China.

Every missionary sent out by the M. E. Church, South, to China, lifts off a part of that load of duty which the Saviour laid on his ministry and his church, when he said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." How heartily we can say to Brother Cunningham, "Go, my brother, go, and the blessing of the Most High God be upon you!" Yes, he goes and his wife with him, but—to do our work. If the Lord will but spare us the danger of the sea, the long night of a missionary's toil, the wide separation from the social endearments of the land of our birth, and let us die at home, let him ask what he may—the labor of our hands, "the half of our goods," the prayer of our souls, all that we have, and the missionary shall have it. Who is not willing to make such a bargain, that he may do his duty and save his soul? As nature opens to the explorer, or tempts him who has scaled steeps to a yet bolder ascent—as the success of the merchant affords him but means to visit richer climes—or as the yield of the earth fills the hand of the farmer with the seed of a yet larger harvest, so a large, dark world opens to the enterprise of a Christian love. We copy from the S. C. Advocate a notice of the Rev. W. E. G. Cunningham and lady:

"We have had the pleasure of forming a personal acquaintance with this estimable minister, who has spent a few days in Charlestou, on his way to New York, where he will take ship direct to Shanghai. He is a member of the Holston Conference, and has been appointed missionary to China by Bishop Andrew. He is accompanied by a wife who is an ornament to her sex, and imbued deeply with the missionary spirit. She leaves ease and elegance at home without a regret, to devote herself, in company with her noble-hearted husband, to the glorious work of evangelizing China. We wish them a speedy and pleasant voyage, and many years of success in the distant field to which they are bound. They expect to sail from New York in the course of a week or two."

Here is another item in this connection:

From the S. C. Advocate.

"Support of Liew, the First Chinese Convert.—Dr. Wightman: The case of Mr. Liew has so interested a worthy brother of my charge, that he authorizes me to say through your paper, that he will be one of two, paying $50 each, to support this first Chinese convert, if he devotes himself to the work of the ministry. Who will take the other fifty?

"Very respectfully, J. HAMILTON.

"Mobile, Ala., April 20."

There, dear reader, what say you to that? Who could not work cheerfully if he knew that his gains alone were supplying the dying thousands of one city in China with a preacher of the Gospel for six months in the year?

Professor Hardy's Review

OF STANLY'S LIFE AND CORRESPONDENCE OF DR. ARNOLD.—This is a most interesting paper, abounding with the highest tone of moral sentiment, expressed in the most easy and felicitous style. Professor Hardy, however, seems to have designed his paper more as an eulogy upon Dr. Arnold himself, than as a review of Mr. Stanly's work. He does not express an opinion in regard to the merits or demerits of the production. The paper, however, is not the less readable and instructive, in that it presents us with the man instead of a book about him.

The eulogium pronounced upon Dr. Arnold is just, suggestive and beautiful; and in the professor's lofty appreciation of the noble, the good and useful in Dr. Arnold's character, he manifests his own moral elevation and adaptedness for the work of a collegiate teacher. Dr. Arnold is obviously Professor Hardy's beau ideal of a teacher and a man, and he dwells upon the great outlines of his character with the most evident satisfaction. His Review is one of those papers that give character to our Southern Quarterly, and one that can not be read without pleasure and profit—profit from its ennobling sentiments and the exalted character it contemplates: pleasure in the glory we feel is shed upon our nature by such a life as Dr. Arnold's. One feels it a privilege to be a man and to be allied to such a blessed and beautiful character. We close this brief notice with the last sentence in the article: "Olin and Arnold—names we have involuntarily put together—both great, wise, true, earnest men; their memories are blessed."

THE METHODIST CHURCH CASE.—The reference ordered by the United States Circuit Court to take testimony and report the value of the book concern, in controversy between the Northern and Southern divisions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was brought to a hearing before U. S. Commissioner Nelson, at New York, on the 29th ult. No one was present except the attorneys for the parties, Daniel Lord and E. L. Fancher, Esqs., and the Rev. Drs. Lane and Scott. The principal difference of opinion seems to be in reference to the value of the stereotype plates.

FORTY YEARS OF PASTORAL LABOR.—Interesting services were had in the Charles street Baptist Church at Boston, on the morning of the 29th ult., in commemoration of the fortieth anniversary of the installation of the present pastor, Rev. Daniel Sharp, D. D. Addresses were delivered by the Rev. Dr. Peck, and the Rev. Baron Stowe, and Dr Sharp preached an affecting sermon. In the course of which he said that not one of those who took part in his installation was now alive. During his pastorate two hundred of his communicants had died, and his church had sent out twenty-five preachers of the gospel. At the conclusion of the services a massive silver flower vase and salver were presented to Dr. Sharp, on behalf of the Baptist ministers of Boston, "to show their veneration for his unblemished character as a good minister of Jesus Christ."

RETURN OF MISSIONARIES FROM CHINA.—Advices from Shanghai state that Mrs. Taylor, wife of the Rev. Charles Taylor, a Methodist Missionary, and two children; Mrs. Boone, wife of Bishop BOONE, and two children and a Chinese female attendant; Rev. Dr. Bridgman, Mrs Bridgman, a son of the Rev. E. W. Lyle, and a Chinese girl, have sailed from that port for New York. Mrs. Taylor, Mrs. Boone and Dr. Bridgman are in ill health.

SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.—The last foreign news contained an account of the sailing of the new Arctic expedition in search of Sir John Franklin. There were four vessels—two screw steamers and two sail vessels. Ample materials were provided of every thing to obtain the end of the voyage. The most effective of these were balloons for the purpose of distributing information in every part of the Arctic regions. They are made of such a form as to float on the surface should they fall into the sea. Five hundred thousand messages, printed on satin, were prepared for the occasion. These will be sent up in the balloons, and after a certain time will fall, and thus convey information to every quarter where Sir John Franklin is likely to be. Capt. Sir Edward Belcher is chief commander of the expedition.

Donaldsonvills and Preston's Plantation.

DEAR BRO. MCTYEIRE: Though nearly out of season, I send you my first quarterly report. The cause of this delay might be found in many things of subordinate consideration; but I will sum all up in the gunner's excuse for not firing the minute guns, "I never shoot till I am ready—then you shall hear from me."

Donaldsonville is situated on the Mississippi river, at the head of Bayou Lafourche, and fronts both on the river and the bayou. The village has some twelve hundred inhabitants, or more, I suppose, who are mostly French and Spaniards.

A little back from the river is a neat little house of worship, dedicated to God and deeded to the M. E. Church, "with all the rights, titles and privileges;" also incorporated by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, giving other Protestant denominations privilege to occupy it when unoccupied by the Methodists, reserving to them the preference only. It is a distinctive and cherished peculiarity of Methodism to cultivate brotherly feelings towards all who love and serve God through faith and good works.

On my arrival here I found an Episcopalian minister occupying the Methodist Ch., but was told, to my surprise, that it would be disagreeable, and tend to create dissatisfaction, for the Methodist minister to occupy the Methodist Church half the time. Indeed, it was to be held by a kind of ecclesiastical pre-emption law, no where found in the Bible I read, nor in the State laws under which I live. And a "man of the world," who had lent all his influence to the occasion, (at some sacrifice, too) told me that the unwillingness for the Methodist to preach in their own church half the time, was "altogether with those who were Methodists." On looking and listening, I perceived that the little opposition among the friends of Methodism was entirely sympathetic, and that the disease had its origin and locality elsewhere. Our friends said, "We are Methodists, but from long experience we know that the Episcopalians here will not patronize or countenance the Methodist ministers, and we being so few, our ministers soon become discouraged and leave." In this state of affairs I was compelled to do one of two things, to wit, to leave the place, or occupy the Methodist Church. The latter course, though painful in the extreme, was adopted. This was done, too, with a degree of frankness taken only by those who have not yet learned to walk in craftiness, nor yet to use their privileges deceitfully, and which is often mistaken for "insulting impudence." Truth, however, is the trip-hammer of Heaven, and when it comes down undisguised, but few can feel pleasant beneath its ponderous weight. It comes down upon error with the weight of eternity.

This sketch of facts has been given to overtake, if not arrest, some false impressions made in regard to the fact of our title to the Methodist Church in Donaldsonville, and to correct the idea that the Methodist Church in D. is but some public something, which may be seized by any one who chances to get there a day before his competitor. But I will dismiss this point, and collect all the desires that such a case can enlist, to pray for those who despitefully use the truth as it is in Jesus.

On Col. Preston's plantation I preach every two weeks. The society there is doing very well; but in this, as in all others, there is room for improvement. Col. P. and lady attend preaching when there. The servants are much encouraged by it. Indeed, it is encouraging to see owners and managers of slaves take an interest in that in which they wish their slaves to be interested. Such an influence has great weight in all grades of society. To enlist confidence and excite others to imitate in good works, we must bring them to believe that they are in good earnest. To do this, we must both be in earnest and have a constant readiness to do that which we would enjoin upon others. By such exemplary instruction, the slave would much sooner learn to serve from principle, "with good will doing service as unto the Lord." T. J. LACY.

TEXAS CORRESPONDENCE.

The season continues favorable for the agriculturist. Health prevails throughout the State. Our financial affairs are in a prosperous condition.

Revivals of religion are occurring in various parts of the State; thirty have recently been added to the Baptist, and twenty-eight to the Methodist Churches, in Houston. A Baptist newspaper is to be issued in Houston, next autumn. The Galveston News has recently been enlarged, and is now one of the largest papers of the Southwest.

The Sons of Temperance are in a prosperous condition. A Division has recently been organized at Corpus Christi.

The Presbytery of Western Texas has located a College at Goliad, and as a result property in that vicinity has risen some fifty per cent.!

Taylor White, of Trinity, Texas, one of the largest stock raisers in the State, recently died, and in his safe was found $40,000. It is by no means uncommon for a stock raiser in Texas to brand one thousand calves in one spring season.

There are supposed to be at least twenty thousand white persons in Texas, over twenty years of age, who can neither read nor write. Population 350,000.

There are now forty-two newspapers in Texas. As a class, they are excellent helpdomeduls. The four which stand pre-eminent for giving information in relation to Texas, are the Galveston News, Texas Monument, (La Grange,) Indianola Bulletin, and San Antonio Ledger. Persons from abroad wishing information relative to Texas, should subscribe for one of these papers. The price is about $3 per annum for each paper.

The canal connecting Brazos river and Galveston Bay is progressing with encouraging prospects, as is also the Harrisburg and Colorado railroad.

PARIS CORRESPONDENCE.

PARIS, April 8, 1852.

Louis Napoleon has formally resigned his dictatorship, after having governed alone for the space of four months. These four months have certainly been well filled, for I do not know that there could be found any instance on record of so much work done by one man in so short a time. He issued more than four hundred decrees, on all kinds of subjects, including trade, commerce, literature, religion, the navy and the army, and even religious and civil ceremonies. Some of his decrees are very important, for instance those that relate to the institution of societies of "credit foncier," to the conversion of the five per cent rentes, to the diminution of the salt tax, the door and window tax, and the tax on potable liquors, to the embellishment of Paris, to the concession of a number of railways to private enterprise, to the establishing of electric telegraphs throughout the country, and to the building of a Crystal Palace in the Champs Elysees, for exhibitions and the like. Many of these decrees were crowded into the last hours of the President's dictatorship, and two of them I must notice.

The first declares that the 291st, 292d and 294th articles of the penal code, and the law of 1834 on associations, and applicable to all meetings of more than twenty persons. This subjects religious meetings to the same conditions that regulate clubs, and makes the possibility of holding any meeting for public worship dependent on the mere will of the local authorities, the Mayor of the Commune, the Prefect of a department, and at Paris the Prefect of Police and the Minister of the Interior, any of whom may be themselves the humble servants of the parish priest, the bishop or archbishop.

We have as yet no reason to believe that this decree has been dictated by an express enmity to the liberty of public worship, neither do we expect it will affect Methodism in any of the places where it is known and well established. But it may be the source of some difficulties, whenever we wish to open new places of worship, as we shall be obliged to obtain leave from the local authorities, whereas we had only, until now, to make a declaration of our intention. This is the only measure taken by the President which may affect religious liberty.

The other decree I wish to mention refers to the Protestant Established Churches, of which I have said, in a former letter, that there are two in France, the Lutheran and the Reformed. They both are Presbyterian in their organization. Each parish is governed by a Presbyteral Council, composed of the ministers of the parish and a number of laymen, varying from four to seven. The Presbyteral Councils of a certain circumscription are dependent on a Consistory, composed of all the ministers in the circumscription, and a lay delegate from each Presbyteral Council. In the Lutheran Church there are thirty-one of such consistories, which are under the supreme direction of a general superior Consistory, and a directory, or executive committee, of the General Consistory. In the Reformed Church there are ninety-two consistories; but until the new decree there existed no superior Council to which they would be amenable, and which, acting as a centre, could establish a bond of union between them. The principal feature of the new decree is the appointment of a Central Council, which will represent before the government the consistories of the Reformed Church. For the first time, this Council is to be composed of Protestants of note, chosen by government, and of the two most ancient Paris ministers. It will hold its sittings in the capital.

I do not yet know how the appointment of this Council will be received by our Established friends. As it is actually organized by the President, the majority of the members belong to the Rationalists. Should they obtain great influence over the decisions of the consistories, they may drive the ministers of the Evangelical party to secede and join themselves to the Free Church.

The Senate and the Legislative Assembly are now sitting, but with closed doors. However, the opening of the Chamber was public, and Napoleon pronounced, on that occasion, a most remarkable speech, every word of which seemed to have been carefully weighed. Amongst other topics, he alluded most explicitly to the reports that have been extensively spread about his having imperial aspirations. "It has been frequently repeated," said he, "that I desire to re-establish the Empire. If such had been my constant preoccupation, that transformation would have been accomplished long since; there were wanting to me neither means nor opportunities." Amongst these opportunities he mentioned the 10th December, 1848, the 18th June, 1849, and the 2d December, 1851, asserting that in 1849 it would have been as easy for him to have changed the form of government, as it would have been easy, in 1848, to have at once secured a throne, by refusing, on the strength of 6,000,000 of suffrages, to acquiesce in the Constitution, or in 1851 to have demanded a "pompous title," from the people who accorded him 7,500,000 votes, under the shadow of the ballot. He therefore asseverated that he would accept no modification of the present state of things, unless he were obliged to do so by evident necessity. "Whence," he asked, "can this proceed? Solely from the conduct of parties; if they submit, nothing will be altered; but if, by their secret proceedings, they would strive to undermine the basis of my government, then, but only then, it might be reasonable to demand from the people, in the name of the people of France, a new title, that would irrevocably fix on my head the power which it has invested in me." In conclusion, he exclaimed, "Let us maintain the Republic: it menaces nobody, it reassures every one!"

This sentence has been variously commented upon in the daily papers. Emile de Girardin has used it to make his reappearance as leading editor of the "Presse." You know that after the coup d'etat he was banished from the country by L. Napoleon. A special permission was granted him, a few days ago, to visit Paris, on account of some pressing family matters, and he seized this opportunity for writing a series of articles, entitled "Let us Maintain the Republic." In one of them is the following conclusion, which I quote, as describing the true state of things here:

"I conclude by saying to the Republicans, every thing examined and well weighed, you ought not to look at the matter too closely, for that would be to play the game of the Royalists: you ought not to be more difficult to be pleased than seven millions of electors and you ought to be contented with what still exists under the name of the Republic. To be content with it is the means of preventing a restoration of monarchical absolutism, not only in France, but in all Europe—in Belgium, Switzerland, Piedmont, Spain and Portugal. Let the Republicans every where accept, for want of something better, and through fear of something worse, those words of the speech at the Tuileries on March 29, 'Let us preserve the Republic.'"

Yes, however numerous may be the fetters thrown around the Republic, however bad the present state of things may seem to be, especially to those who are accustomed to breathe the pure air of liberty, it is far preferable to what was to be feared, had not the coup d'etat destroyed the hopes which the Legitimist party entertained, and baffled the extensive preparations made by the Socialists. For, had the Legitimists conquered and brought back Henry V., we would have had the absolutism of Louis XIV., and perhaps a counterpart, of some kind or other, of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. Had the victory been on the side of Socialism, Christianity, in all its forms and modifications, would have been considered as an enemy of man, and every effort would have been made to put it down.

I will terminate this letter by noticing a few items of various matters.

The "Univers" states, in one of its recent numbers, that the Roman Catholics have established in France two hundred and fifty-four free colleges since the 15th March, 1850. Most of them are in the hands of the Jesuits.

A decree, published a fortnight ago in the Moniteur, states that the new law on the press, which I have said to be very severe, is only applicable to political papers. The stamp duty does not bear on magazines of two sheets and upwards, nor on religious, scientific, artistic or literary papers.

It is now certain that none of the persons arbitrarily imprisoned on the 2d of December will be sent to Cayenne, but only of such convicts as will prefer this banishment to hard labor in the French prisons. As to the persons made prisoners during the insurrection of December, hundreds have been released, and many of those condemned have received their pardon from the President. Three or four agents were sent last week, by the President, in the departments, to examine carefully the briefs of all who have been sentenced, and they have received full power to pardon such as have been guilty of insurrection through mere ignorance of the actual state of things.

The Senate has decided that the dotation of the President would be twelve millions of francs yearly, more than two millions of dollars! Quite enough to live upon, I should think.

Rev. J. M. Pease, Col'n Agent.

STEAMER GEORGE COLLIER, Miss. River, April 28, 1852.

REV. AND DEAR BROTHER: I have been very sick, with a twenty hours' chill and four days' fever. I was taken a week ago last Sabbath evening, at a little place amid a large swamp, on the Louisiana side of the river.

Tuesday evening I arrived on the Franklin at Vicksburg, where Rev. C. H. Marshall and Dr. Magruder kindly met me, and conveyed me to the house of Dr. Cotter. There I had every care and attention which the good Dr. and his excellent lady could render me.

This is the third day I have been out but I am now fully afloat, on my way to Grand Gulf, Port Gibson, Oakland, Natchez, and to your city, where I hope to arrive in about ten or twelve days.

I have had small chills and fever since the last of February, but really considered them of no account to a smart man: hence I have on about my work, paying no attention to them; but this chill was too strong for me, and the fever utterly prostrating. I will frankly own up that I am not sprightly enough to work bravely on under such an attack. It seemed to me much like a demon rising up out of the great swamp, stealing on me, seizing me with a giant grasp, shaking me terribly, and freezing me almost to death, then covering me all over with pitch and brimstone, and placing a red hot iron band about my head, to burn up with violent fever. Thank God I am alive; and though this old trembling, once more ails to get out and prosecute my work.

As you are always interested in the noble work of African Colonization, you will be pleased to know that every where over your State, as far as my labors have extended, the cause is kindly received by the people—there are no exceptions that I have met; and although the times are said to be hard, my collections this season will be about $700 by the time I reach your city; and what is better, the people have contributed with the greatest cheerfulness, and pledged the continuance of their donations for years to come. Thus far this season Louisiana has exceeded more than either Mississippi or Alabama.

I am, dear brother, with great respect,

Your obedient servant,

JOHN MORRIS PEASE.

CHURCH ROBBERIES.—The Boston Traveler of the 24th ult. says:

The Orthodox meeting-house in North Chelsea was entered on Sabbath night, April 25, and robbed of furniture, consisting of carpets, communion table, chairs, Sabbath school library, lamps, mats, etc.

The Unitarian meeting house near it was entered the same night, and its furniture stolen, consisting of a valuable pulpit Bible, carpets, etc.

The First Universalist Church, of Hingham, was broken into on Tuesday night, and robbed of carpets, curtains, a new Bible.

The Second Unitarian Church was also entered on the same evening, and the pulpit curtains and carpets stolen.

A correspondent of the Boston Post, writing from Weymouth, under date of April 28, says:

Some time during last night, some rascals broke into the Pilgrim Church and ripped up the carpet in each of the three aisles, and carried it off, doing the same to the pulpit with some hymn books, in the cover of the pulpit.

The Paterson (N. J.) papers state that the Methodist Church was robbed on the night of the 1st inst., of silver, silver chalice, and the account book of the church. The church was thoroughly ransacked, but most of the valuable articles were deposited in another building.

SELLING LIQUOR ON SUNDAY.—A bill has passed the Pennsylvania Legislature, and been signed by the Governor, which makes it an indictable offence to sell any quantity, whatever of spiritous, vinous or malt liquors in Lancaster county on the Sabbath, under a penalty of $10 for each offence—$10 to go to the informer, who is a competent witness in the case. The law will take effect on the first of July next.

THE YELLOW FEVER AT RIO.—The New York Advertiser is assured that the report in relation to yellow fever at Rio, brought by the bark Isabella, is correct. Every one on board, except the chief officer, was attacked by yellow fever after leaving Rio, and [illegible] of the crew died during the passage.

Obituary Notice.

DIED—At her father's residence, in Texas parish, La., on Friday, the 23d ult., LAURA ANN, eldest daughter of Rev. James and Caroline Bowman, aged 13 years and 1 day. The deceased was born in East Feliciana parish, April 22, 1839.

A new parents have been blessed with so affectionate and lovely a child as was our lamented little friend. Her character was marked with a degree of moral and religious purity rarely met with in one so young. There was a sweetness and mildness of disposition, a self-denial, which sought to make all happy, a wide and full benevolence, which was felt by all who knew her. These bright jewels, adorning her lovely character, were heightened by the steady and humble reliance upon our holy religion.

The last scene in her dying moments was sublime beyond description; her faltering voice gave utterance to shouts of dying praise; she called upon all around her to meet her in the happy spirit world, and left her blessing to many of her family who were far away. Our prayer is that all who read this tribute to her memory may utter, when dying, her last words, "I shall soon be in heaven."

Then art gone, thou lovely one,
To the bright, the spirit-land,
To join in sweetest unison
Heaven's pure angelic band,
To chant the strains of thrilling song,
Where the good of earth have rested long.

Thou art gone, thou lovely one,
Ere life had spanned its early noon,
We've heard the knell, the requiem,
That tolled thy flight, alas! so soon:
No more on earth thy spirit free,
No more on earth thy cheerful glee.

F. A. F. HARPER.

Bucksport Harbor	1,950	12,483

It will be observed that there is a decrease in the ports of New York and Boston, and a slight increase in those of Philadelphia, Baltimore and New Orleans. The greatest proportionate increase is in San Francisco. The inland ports generally exhibit a very large increase.

QUICK PASSAGE.—The steamer United States arrived at New York on the 30th ult in five days and twenty hours from New Orleans, the quickest passage on record.

General Intelligence.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—Report for the Week ending May 1.—Admitted, 250; discharged, 240; died, 28.

Deaths.—Jean Hirigoyen, a bar-keeper, while laboring under delirium tremens, cut his throat, and died on the 3d inst.; John Upton, a carpenter, fell from the roof of a house, received a very severe injury of the chest; John Berry, a seaman, born in Sweden, was also admitted on the 4th, having fallen down the hatchway of ship Andover, causing a very severe injury of the spine.

Names of those who Died during this Week.—Hugh Cassidy, Ireland; Patrick Ortes, do.; Catherine Windicker, Germany; Thomas Quinn, Ireland; Ann Dixon, do.; Catherine Blancey, do.; Jeremiah Donovan, do; Elbs Tucker, do.; Bertrand Foutau, France; Thomas Keegan, do.; Richard McCormick, Ireland; Henry Fitzgerald, do.; James Mejady, do.; George W. Ezell, Indiana; Robert Dullan, Isle of Man; Patrick Joyce, Ireland; Cressogonde Aymond, Louisiana; Manuel De LaCruz, Western Islands; Christopher Maguire, Ireland; Bernard Laroix, France.

Among the passengers last night by the steamer Georgia, was Mr. Sydney Smith, Secretary to the British Consul at Havana, during the exciting times of the late Lopez invasion. The prisoners taken in this luckless expedition, were indebted to Mr. Smith for acts of intercession in their behalf, whereby the miseries of their condition were much ameliorated. The reputation of the hospitable stranger is co-extensive with the Republic, and, as a friend to the distressed, he will be welcomed to our shores.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.—A telegraphic dispatch, received at Mobile, from Montgomery, Ala., states that Rufus Stevens, who was recently convicted for forgery, and sentenced to the Penitentiary, attempted to cut his throat while on his way up the river to prison. In charge of the deputy sheriff of Mobile. He was prevented from so doing but the extent of his injuries has not been stated.

CHINESE AND CHILIANS IPA CALIFORNIA.—A letter from San Francisco states that, during the last two weeks of March, nearly 1500 Chilians and Chinese arrived there, and that the ship Challenge was in her way with 1000 more. It is expected that during the next five years, 50,000 Chinese will emigrate to California. A letter from Hong Kong says that thousands are now saving up their earnings, to collect $35, which amount is required for their passage. To this is to be added the expense of a little dried fish and rice, and a sip of tea, and in about 40 or 50 days they are safely landed at San Francisco.

GREECE.—The Supreme Court of Appeal of Greece has confirmed the sentence of an inferior officer, condemning Mr. King, the American missionary, to fifteen days imprisonment, a heavy fine, and expulsion from the kingdom, for having preached the Protestant religion in violation of the constitution. On this, Mr. King addressed to the Minister of Foreign Affairs a protest against the judgment, both in his own name and in that of the American Government, from which he held, he declared, an official mission. He added that he would not voluntarily obey the judgment.

Great scarcity exists in Greece, and dreadful misery prevailed in consequence. The Government was making extensive purchases of corn in Turkey, for distribution to the people.

PACIFIC MACHINE.—The model of a machine for drilling rock for blasting or cutting up copper ore for the smelting furnace, has been for several days past on exhibition by the inventor, at the Philadelphia Exchange. A hammer, which is set in motion by a peculiarly constructed gas, gives the drill one hundred and fifty strokes per minute, when driven by steam; and it has by actual trial drilled in a day through ten feet of hard rock, and is capable of accomplishing as much in an hour as could be effected by three men in a day. A machine of the working size, with a boiler and engine to drive it, can be placed on a frame six feet square and made portable by means of wheels.

RESIGNATION OF MR. RIBETT.—The Charleston Mercury of the 1st inst. learns by a private dispatch from Columbia that Mr. Ribett has resigned his seat in the U. S. Senate.

LATER FROM SANTA FE.—A company of ten men reached Independence, Mo., from Santa Fé on the 27th ult. They left on the 6th and met with no interruption on the route. The Indians in New-Mexico seem as much as ever inclined to be troublesome, and they recently attacked and killed several soldiers near Fort Defiance.

CRIME IN NEW-YORK.—Our city (says the New-York Tribune) is fearfully deluged with crime; and worst feature of all, it is mainly juvenile crime. Four-fifths of the complaints brought before this grand jury for the higher grades of felony were against minors. Two-thirds of all the complaints were against persons between the ages of 14 and 21. What a dreadful harvest of crime is our city now rapidly preparing!

MORTALITY IN NEW-YORK.—The Annual Report of the City Inspector of New-York, submitted to the Board of Aldermen recently, establishes the alarming fact that the average mortality in New-York is annually increasing. In 1851 the deaths amounted to twenty-two thousand and twenty-four, or five thousand and forty-six more than in 1850. This is an advance of thirty per cent., which is out of all proportion to the advance in population, however considerable that may have been. The increased mortality has been principally among children. The augmentation, too, has been chiefly from typhus fever, convulsions, scarlet fever, dysentery, and diarrhœa.

SHOCKWAVE.—The Newport (Ky.) News of the 13th ult states that on the previous Thursday the daughter of Judge Yowell, in Boone county, Ky., was engaged to be married to a Mr. Garrison; she had been unwell for some time previous, but got better; and the parties had met to witness the marriage ceremony, which was to be at 9 o'clock on that day; but she got worse. The minister being present, she told him that if she got better she would get married; but alas! a few minutes before the appointed time she expired.

EDITORIAL LIFE AND LABOR.—There is much truth in the following, from the New York Mirror:

"Some of the brotherhood are discussing the question whether the editor's labor is a pleasure or a pain. The majority take the latter view. One trial the faithful editor certainly has—the world of information which opens upon him overwhelmingly. He is eager to know, and the means of knowledge are at hand; but he has only the acquiring power of one man. His twenty-four hours per day do not suffice for what he would accomplish. Some temperaments suffer more than others in this way, but the trial is a real one to every active mind employed in editorial labors."

SOURCE OF THE NILE.—At the last meeting of the Bombay Geographical Society, a paper was read by Mr. John Smith, on the discoveries made by the East African missionaries in what appear to be the sources of the Nile. This mysterious river is said to rise from two lakes, one of which is of great dimensions, nearly under the line, and they seem fed by the melting snows of the gigantic range, which rises to the altitude of 22,000 feet at least, close by. The description of this long looked for locality coincides exactly with that given by Ptolemy 2000 years ago. [Scientific American.

"Venerable relics" are constantly "turning up" Mesawher fashion. Here is one whose sudden and unexpected re-appearance upon the world's stage is chronicled by our exchanges: At a recent conference of churches, in Groton, Massachusetts, the identical Bible used by John Rogers, the martyr, and carried by him to the stake, some of the leaves of which bear the mark of the flames, was brought to the conference by a descendant of the martyr.

THE EARTHQUAKE AT WASHINGTON.—Several shocks of earthquake were felt at Washington on the 29th ult. The Republic says:

They were fifteen or twenty seconds in duration, at least sufficiently long to occasion much consternation among many of our citizens who were within the range of the convulsion. Not a few persons, being thus surprised, escaped to the street, fearing that the buildings in which they were employed were about to fall. The furniture in the public departments was severely shaken, and similar results were produced elsewhere. So far as we can learn, the earthquake was slightly felt as far north as 11 street, and on some portions of Pennsylvania avenue and the intermediate streets. The shocks were, it seems, the most severe on the line of F street, or west to east.

The occurrence, of course, constitutes a topic of lively interest.

An old citizen informs us that there was an earthquake of equal violence in Washington about thirty years ago.

At the national observatory a strong smell of sulphur was experienced soon after the shocks.

The vibrations were distinctly felt near Baltimore and in portions of the State of North Carolina.

A GIANT EXHUMED.—The Louisville Times says, a day or two since Frank Mollhurs, Esq., found the remains of what is supposed to have been a gigantic Indian, near his mill at Shippingsport. The high water had caused the bank of the river to cave in, and while he was digging away a spot between the two mills the bones were discovered. He had them carefully removed, and judging from the length of the thigh and leg bones, and the other portions of the skeleton which were placed together, it must have been a man upwards of seven feet in height. The skull was of immense size, with unusual high cheek bones—a sure indication of the Indian race. An antique fashioned jug, made of earthenware, decorated with shells, was found along side the bones.

A year or two since, a quantity of human bones was found in the same vicinity, and it is supposed that a century or two since the spot was probably an Indian burial place.

A SOUTH AMERICAN SILVER MINE.—A correspondent of the Newark Advertiser gives quite a graphic description of one of the most remarkable silver mines of South America. It is located in San Antonio, about 150 miles from Caldera, and he says:

"You can imagine the wealth of this mine, which is located in a narrow, steep ravine, about one mile from the river valley, when I tell you there is a village of some size at the mouth of the ravine, occupied by peons, and the natives of the country, which has been built up and entirely supported for years, by the stealings of persons employed in this mine. I suppose that one-tenth of the rich ore is stolen; there is not a native miner in Chili who will not steal when he has a chance, and boast of it afterwards. When the mines are rich, the owners employ a foreman for each miner, to overlook him while mining; but I am told that the foreman are as bad as the men; there is no dependence to be placed on any of them. The owners seldom go near the mines, and when they do, they rarely go into them.

Arrival of the Georgia.

The U. S. mail Steamer Georgia, Lieut. D. H. Porter commander, arrived Wednesday from N. York via Havana. At the latter place she received three hundred passengers from California. She brings a larger amount of gold dust than has ever before been brought to New Orleans. The Crescent City sailed from Navy Bay with over two millions of dust on freight, and about the same in the hands of the passengers. The miners in California had begun to realise the profits from the large piles of dirt, which have accumulated for the last eighteen months, and large quantities of gold dust will be brought down by every steamer. The Golden Gate had arrived at Panama, with eight hundred passengers, and would take up the same number from the Illinois. They expect to make the trip through from New York to San Francisco in twenty days. The steamship Tennessee was at Panama, and waits for passengers, there being none on the Isthmus at present. The British Vice Consul Mr. Smith, the gentleman who showed so much kindness to the American prisoners in Havana, came passenger in the Georgia.

The Georgia brings on freight $40,000 in gold dust to various consignees in this city.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

We present a brief summary of the news brought by the Georgia. From the Alta California we take the following summary of the news up to the 5th April.

The only scene of excitement that has attracted general attention since our last review for the present, has been the halls of our State Legislature, where a warm discussion, grown out of the question of a repeal of the Water Lot Bill, passed by a former Legislature. The introduction of a bill into the Assembly, providing for a contract system of long terms of service with laborers in China (Coolies) has stirred up a spirit of opposition on the part of the people.

JUDGES OF THE SUPREME COURT.—The Governor has appointed the Hon. Alexander Anderson, Senator from Tuolumne, Judge of the Supreme Court of the State, vice Henry A. Lyons, resigned. He also appointed Alexander Wells, Esq., a Judge of the Supreme Court, to fill a vacancy caused by the temporary absence of Solomon Hydenfeldt.

EMIGRATION.

Emigration to our shores from South America, and particularly from Chilna, is now quite brisk. Hundreds have left China within a month or two; many on account of the late revolution in that country—all to try their fortunes in the land of gold. Every ship from Hong Kong brings us a load of Celestials.

CRIMINAL MATTERS.

There have been one or two outbreaks, and public excitement is leading to extremes of passion or punishment. A Peruvian was hung by the Vigilance Committee at Mokelumne Hill a day or two since, having been proved guilty of a number of acts of grand larceny. His name was Cortes Eschuva. The people of Marysville were also incensed by the daring crimes of a thief named Tanner. He was taken by the people in endeavoring to escape, but after a few hours' detention he was given over to the authorities.

The worst apprehensions of the relations existing between the whites and Indians in Klamath county are realized. An outbreak has occurred, and it is feared a general Indian war will follow in that region. Our last accounts show the white men to have dealt severely, perhaps savagely, with the Indians. No difficulties with the Indians have occurred elsewhere in the State.

There is no news from Oregon. The winter has been severe. Our dates are to the 23d ult.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Our last intelligence from the Sandwich Islands will interest the reader. The famous Mauna Loa, the first of all the active volcanoes of the present century in the world, is in a state of eruption. It commenced discharging streams of lava on the last of February, and our latest accounts (March 13) state that it was burning with terrible force and vigor—a sublime and wonderful spectacle.

There is no news from Honolulu of moment. The market continued dull. The King, in privy council, has removed the restrictions of his custom-house on the native products of California and Oregon. A reciprocal movement is expected from our Government.

CHINA.

The Hong Kong News of January 31 (the latest) is utterly void of interest. The revolution was still making headway.

CALIFORNIA WEATHER, ETC.

The winter which is drawing to a close in California, has been quite a severe one. Great quantities of rain have fallen, and the rivers have been higher than ever known before. The mountain-heights are barbed in snow, and the summer will be one of full rivers, and hence of prosperous operations to the miners. The skies are now clear, and the waters are slowly falling back into the rivers' channels. The freshet was severely felt in the neighborhood of Monterey, and the crops along the Salinas river are considerably injured.

MARKETS

There has been more activity displayed in the markets than at last accounts. Coals are quoted at $42 to $45 for Cannel, and prices firm. Beef at $30 per barrel. Clear Pork, at $22 to $24 per barrel. Butter at $60, and was advancing. Bread Stuff held an advance on former quotations.

Cigars were selling well, when the brand was good. The supply of ordinary was excessive.

Seamen's wages at $30 to $75 per month.

Laborers' wages at $5 per day. Mechanics', at $6 to $12

SOUTH AMERICA ON THE PACIFIC.

In the Panama Star of the 30th ult. we find the following:

There was no news of interest in Chili.

Ninety-four vessels had entered, and one hundred and five sailed from the port of Valparaiso during the month ending 22d March last.

Large quantities of barley were shipping to California at $14 per ton freight.

Freights to England, £2 14s. Business slightly improving.

The news from Guayaquil is highly interesting. Flores had entered the river some time previous to the sailing of the steamer, and was anchored off the Island of Puna, which place is in his possession.

Puna is situated a few miles below the city, and is one of the ports of defence. It was supposed that Flores would there find the city under his control, had he proceeded up the river, but it appears he was awaiting the arrival of a further augmentation to his fleet; and the supposition was that he would proceed to take final possession of the city, as soon as the remainder of his forces arrived. The soldiers and the lower classes generally of Ecuador were in favor of the invader. No encounter had taken place, but we may expect final intelligence in next dates. The Guayaquil army, we learn from private advices received by Mr. Corrine, our Consul here, from our Charge d'Affaires at Ecuador, number about 4000 men in all, 1800 of whom are regular troops.

The English squadron, under command of Admiral Moreshy, of the flag ship Portland, was at Callao, and about proceeding to Guayaquil.

Flores fired at the steamship Santiago whilst entering the river, and had a line of boats ready to board her, if she stopped at Puna to land her pilot. As she did not do so, however, and came down full speed, they were unable to reach her.

The general impression is that had Flores proceeded direct to Guayaquil at first, he might have taken the city without any loss; but it is now supposed, that though he can land without difficulty, there will be a very bloody battle before he can gain a victory.

THE STATE OFFICES.—The Assembly has passed a resolution directing the officers of the State to take up their quarters at Vallejo immediately after the adjournment of the Legislature. The location of the seat of government for the next session of the Legislature is a question of considerable interest.

AGRICULTURAL.—The agricultural prospects of the State are represented to be flattering. On the Calaveras in particular the crops are very promising.

MARYSVILLE.—The Marysville Express states that although individual losses are severe, still none are broken in purse or in spirit, and the flood has pointed out the manner in which improvements should be made, to avoid loss hereafter. Arrangements are already being made to rebuild two-story brick houses, with foundations laid in cement. At last accounts, the road from Marysville to the mines was in good condition.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.—Snow's Commercial Circular of the 1st inst., published at Honolulu, says:

"Several whalers have arrived here during the past month and many of them have been quite successful in obtaining sperm oil, and, as far as heard from, most of the ships that have been cruising to westward, were more or less fortunate. Sales have been made of sperm and polar oil, during the month, the former commanding one dollar and thirty cents per gallon, and the latter sixty-five cents per gallon—purchasers buying for shipment to San Francisco."

The papers are filled with discussions concerning the conduct of the American missionaries in the Islands. The Weekly Argus attacks them virulently, while the Polynesian as warmly defends them.

The ship George Thatcher, of Boston, bound to Calcutta, was wrecked totally upon a reef in the harbor of Hanalei Kaud, Jan 31st. Two schooners trading among the Islands were lost at nearly the same time and place.

Business continues dreadfully dull at Honolulu.

Several of the Society Islands have set up for themselves, "de modo republicano."

Queen Pomare had appointed one of her sons regent of Otaheite, but before his arrival, the people of that Island, with some of their neighbors, held a council, and chose an intelligent half-white their ruler for two years. The republican movement is likely to extend farther.

Last advices state that quite a fleet of small vessels were waiting at Tahiti, for cargoes of oranges for California.

Panama Items.

POPULATION OF NEW GRANADA.—The Correo del Istmo puts down the population of the Republic of New Granada at 2,205,859.

THE CHOCO MINES.—The Panama Star publishes the most flattering accounts from these mines, and says they are supposed to be as inexhaustible as those of California.

Some time ago a company, consisting of seven Americans, visited these mines, but were unable to perform any thing, having not more than fifty dollars among them to procure the necessary articles for mining purposes.

The Echo mentions some specimens which are said to be as fine as any from California.

CHANGE OF AGENTS.—Oliver Ellsworth is now acting as agent of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at Panama. Mr. Flint was formerly the agent of the Company at that point.

DROWNED.—A boat containing twenty-one persons, about to embark on the steamship Constitution, was capsized in the bay, and nine of the poor fellows were drowned. The names of those discovered to have been drowned are as follows:

P. Curonico, M. Fil. J. Giannini, J. M. Buletti, A. Felipi, A. Lombordi, Sr., P. Pedrino, A. Lombardi, Jr., J. Ord.

TRAVELS OF THE STEAMSHIP PRESIDENT.—Advices from Bermuda to the 23d ult. state that a figure head, supposed to have belonged to the ill fated steamship President, was recently washed ashore at Oranada, Barbadoes.

MARKING NEWSPAPERS.—A circular from the First Assistant Post-master General decides that marking an advertisement in a newspaper, sent by mail, does not subject the package to letter postage.

Foreign News by the Niagara.

We take from the Baltimore Sun the following telegraphic abstract of the political news brought by the steamer Niagara, which arrived at Halifax on the 28th ult.:

ENGLAND.

Latest from Europe.

[Telegraphed from London to Liverpool.]

BOSTON, April 30.—The following is the very latest intelligence from Europe, up to the moment of the Niagara's departure. Her mails for the South and West left in the early train this morning.

The Niagara saw yesterday, at 6 A. M., off Cape Sable, the Royal Mail steamship America, hence for Liverpool and Halifax.

LONDON, Saturday, April 17.—The Times attributes the decrease of £351,000 in bullion in the bank returns to the intelligence from Australia, that gold dust has fallen to 57 per oz. at Melbourne, and 60 at Sydney, and the consequent large shipments of coin to that country.

The payment of the dividends has also had an effect, and a still further decrease is looked for.

The Morning Advertiser says the D'Israeli budget will differ very little from that of Sir C. Wood, excepting in the duty on all houses paying a rental of £5 and upward.

During's circular speaks as follows of American stocks: American stocks remain steady at previous prices, without much for sale, or any great demand. ALSACE.—At present, misery continues to prevail in various parts of the country owing to the scarcity of food. In the neighborhood of Frankfort-on-the-Maine, rye bread was one and a quarter per pound.

SEIZURE OF AN AMERICAN VESSEL BY THE DUTCH.—The New York Herald has advices from Batavia, Island of Java, to the 27th of February, and it gives the following account of the seizure of an American vessel by the Dutch, who rule the Island.:

The month has been marked with the usual occurrence of shocks of earthquakes, more or less felt throughout the Island, but the frequency, of which has ceased to make people uneasy, they having become an almost every day matter. Steamer agency is now becoming general through out the Dutch Archipelago. To Macassar on the east, and Padang on the west, large and powerful steamers have commenced to run monthly, and a third is daily expected to open the line hence to Ambayna, or within four hundred miles of the English colony of Australia. Some political changes will probably result from this regular communication with the vast possessions of the Dutch in these seas.

A few days ago an American schooner, called the Flirt, was brought into Batavia, in tow of a war steamer, from Palembang. The owner, and all on board, were made prisoners, on a charge of high treason, for endeavoring to induce the Sultan of Jambie, or Djambie, to revolt against the Dutch. The recent disaffection at Palembang and its neighborhood, has greatly alarmed the Netherlands Government, which is well aware that the natives have no affection for the rule.

According to the Dutch version of this treasonable affair, it would appear that the Flirt arrived at Palembang, and that the owner, Mr Olbson, stated that he was on a pleasure cruise as a man of fortune. After a short time, during which the utmost cordiality and hospitality existed between Mr. Olbson and the officials at the station, the suspicions of the authorities were excited, and a strict watch was kept over the vessel's movements. The mates or supercargo, who said to be of a romantic disposition, was dispatched by Mr. Olbson with a letter to the Sultan of Jambie, written in the Malayan language, and stating that if the Sultan wished it, Mr. Olbson would enable him to throw off the Dutch yoke; that there was a large fleet of American vessels-of-war, which would assist the Flirt against the Dutch. The mate traveled in a native dress to avoid suspicion, and when captured the letter alluded to was found concealed in one of his stockings. The matter has caused much excitement here, as the accused parties are to be tried for treasonable designs against the Dutch Government.

On his arrival here, Mr. Olbson was kept a close prisoner, but released by the court, on the ground that the affair appeared to be no more than a foolish escapade. On the same day the Procureur General had Mr. Olbson and crew imprisoned. They are now incarcerated, awaiting trial before the Supreme Court. The whole, certainly is a very singular business. Mr. Olbson has addressed a letter to the American Commodore, begging his interference and protection.

THE MISSING ARCTIC SHIPS.—The New Rumors.—Experienced navigators in NewYork, who know something of the Arctic regions, only laugh at the story in the English papers about two of Sir John Franklin's ships having been seen from the decks of a brig, bound from England to Quebec. The story comes out in a long correspondence between the Admiralty and all the leading coast officers, in reference to the probable loss of two large ships upon the northern coast of America. It was occasioned by the following statement from Captain Coward, of the ship Renovation, which is again at sea, but upon whose return strict inquiry will be instituted:

"April, 1851, when near the east edge of the bank, off Newfoundland (on his way to Quebec), in lat. 45 deg. 30 min. N., wind N. E., fresh breezes and clear weather, as much as I could carry foretopmast studding-sail, fell in with icebergs, one of which was very large, with field ice attached to it, in which there were two three-masted ships, having their masts struck and yards down, and all made easy; to all appearance they had passed the winter together in the ice. About five o'clock in the morning, hats, called by the Italians cappelloni. The younger members of the order have decided to wear three-cornered hats, as better adapted to the progress of the age. The elder fathers, condemning this innovation as against the rules of the order, have protested, and go in favor of the large hats.

Father Rhoothan, the General, has published an article in the Civita Cattolica of Naples, ordering all the members of the Company of Jesus, young, middle-aged and old, to adopt three-cornered hats, threatening the rebellion with ecclesiastical terrors, and expulsion from the mystical and political order of Loyola. The Italian papers predict a probable schism among the Italian Jesuits. One party will be called "Protestants," and the others "Reformed and Three-

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

From the Home Journal.

MY WIFE.

Long years ago I met a child.
As through the world I passed,
She was the first star of my life—
The dearest and the last.
An angel child, by some strange fate,
To earth a wanderer driven,
Who brought her virtues to my heart,
And left her wings in heaven.

I dreamt not that this child of love
Would miss forever be.
That she had come to tread this world,
This weary world, with me.
But as in kindness, side by side,
We wandered, day by day,
The more I loved her, and the more
She seemed inclined to stay.

'Twas strange that from that very hour
I never knew a care,
But seemed, through some unearthly power,
A pleasant thing to bear;
And if perchance her gentle eye
E'er marked a tear in mine,
'Twas cured to smiles by her kind heart,
And treasured on its shrine.

Around my growing destiny
Her hopes all entered were,
For much I tried to make this world
A pleasant home to her;
And still within she seemed content
To bear its rougher part,
Together with the joys she found
Whilst nestling at my heart.

And thus together, hand in hand,
We trod this vale of tears;
Our youth departing, but our love
Increasing with our years,
Forgetting all that outward world,
Made up of grief and sin,
But loving more the world above,
And a bright world within.

The cheek that closely presses mine,
Is furrowed now by years,
For we have known the cares of life,
And we have wept its tears;
But God was ever kind to us,
Although the world was cold,
And we are growing happier,
As we are growing old.

There seems a brighter world in view,
A home from sorrow free,
A dwelling of eternal years,
For my dear wife and me.
And O! the angel of my youth,
So good, and very fair,
I know will take her wings again,
And be my angel there.

EXCITING NEWS FROM

RIO GRANDE CITY and ROMA!

Two Men Hung by the Citizens—Six Mexicans Shot in Camp—Probable Murder of Thos. H. Harris, of Roma—Threat of the Mexicans to Sack Brownsville—Mail Rider Murdered by Indians.

The Brownsville (Texas) Rio Bravo, of the 26th ult., which we have just received, contains the following exciting intelligence:

A party of gentlemen arrived last evening from Rio Grande City, from whom we learn the extraordinary events which form the caption of this article. For want of room we are obliged to give only the facts without any of the attendant circumstances and particulars.

It seems that a Mr. Patton, a gentleman from Brazos, Texas, formerly of Missouri, started from Rio Grande City for the purpose of overtaking some stock, which was being driven into the interior, and stopped to sleep at a noted camping ground, called "The Wells." Here were encamped two Mexicans and a boy. When Mr. P. was asleep, he was set upon and his brains beaten out by these fellows, for the sake of his money and effects.

Information to this effect having been given by the boy, a party of citizens started ont in pursuit, and one of the fellows was taken. After a regular trial he was hung by the citizens of Rio Grande City, in presence of the whole people—all concurring. Just before his execution, he made other confessions, from which a party started from Roma, crossed the river, and returned with the other fellow who had assisted at the murder of Mr. Patten.

After the same formalities had been extended to him, he was also hung at that place. But the work was not yet finished—justice was to be administered to others—a party started out, and near the scene of the murder, charged upon and killed six more of the villains, who have been in the habit, for a long time, of committing similar depredations in the vicinity. We have neither space nor inclination to comment upon these events. Those abroad can know nothing of our situation and the necessity for such acts. It is sufficient to say that the whole people concurred in the executions.

We have yet to record another probable murder, and probably by the same gang of robbers or one of its various ramifications. Mr. Thomas H. Harris, of Roma, left Rio Grande City, for this place, about sixteen days ago, and has not since been heard from. There is scarcely a doubt as to his fate.

If things go on at this rate, not a Mexican, in a short time, will be suffered to live upon this side of the river.

Since writing the above we have seen a letter from Rio Grande City, in which it is stated, that the murderers confessed that a party, to which they belonged, was organized on the other side of the river for the express purpose of murdering Americans, on this side of the river; and that a large number of the gang are still on this side.

Mexican Irruption—American Settlers driven from their Homes.

The house of Mr. A. V. Edmondson was attacked on Friday last while the inmates, intending himself and two or three other persons, were totally unconscious of any danger. Upon going to the door, Mr. Edmondson saw that the house was completely surrounded by Mexican robbers, who, upon his appearance, commenced to fire upon the house. Seizing his arms, which were unfortunately not in condition for use, he called upon the others to follow him, and made a rush through the line and succeeded in making his escape unhurt.

Many shots were fired after them but none took effect; one man, however, had three ball holes through his shirt. Proceeding to a ranch at some distance, they obtained assistance, but returned too late to effect their purpose. The place had been completely robbed of every thing it contained—all the household furniture, provisions, clothing, down to the smallest articles, were carried across tha river, and all the stock, consisting of twenty-two horses and mules, driven off, as they believe, in the direction of Matamoros, on the Mexican side of the river.

A skirmish across the river took place between the parties, and the robbers, in derision, said they had only now commenced, and intended to rob every American on the river, and kill them if they could. They said that they were acting under the orders of Gen. Canales, and they intended shortly to attack and sack Brownsville. Threats of this kind have been frequently made from persons over the way, and, it is said, have in many instances come from Mexican officers.

All the settlers on the river are arming themselves, and intend to be prepared for future emergencies if they should arise. We understand that Mr. E. intends making a demand upon the authorities over the way, in relation to this outrage. We do not believe this course will have any effect. It is the general opinion that all these nests of robbers will have to be broken up before peace and harmony will be restored. Mr. Edmondson's ranch is on the river, about forty miles above Brownsville.

Mail Rider Killed by Indians.

The mail rider, on his last trip up from this place, was killed by Indians about twenty miles from Laredo, as we learn by a letter received by a citizen, from E. J. Davis, Esq., a lawyer residing in that place. All the accounts received from that quarter speak in the most gloomy and desponding tone of the probability of ever being relieved from the scourge with which they are so frequently visited. Most of the settlers have recrossed the river for protection, and their fields remain uncultivated. There is but one feeling on this anbject upon the Rio Grande, and that is, that an entire change in relation to Indian policy must be adopted by the Government, or the territory, for which so much treasure and blood was shed, will shortly revert back to its original owners—the red skins.

The tariff established by Avalos at Matamoros has been abolished and the old tariff has been reestablished. The Mexican Consul at Brownsville makes the following announcement:

MEXICAN CONSULATE,
Brownsville, April 14, 1852.

By order of the Supreme Government of the Republic of Mexico, transmitted to this Consulate by the Collector of Customs of Matamoros, the tariff that, from extraordinary circumstances, was established by the local authorities of the said port of Matamoros, ceases to exist, and the general tariff of October, 1845, is, from this date, enforced.

This is made known to the merchants of this city for their intelligence.

JOAQUIN J. DE CASTILLO,
Mexican Consul.

A paper published at Matamoros called the Genio, denounces in strong terms those who were engaged in firing into the steamer, Camanche. It says that some shots have been fired from the American side, but argues that one crime does not authorize another.

The Genio also states that a large number of the citizens of Matamoros, including many ladies, have united in a petition for the pardon of four of Carvajal's men; two Americans and two Mexicans, who were taken prisoners at the siege of Matamoros, and have now been in prison there nearly six months.

A young man named Wm. Bartlett, a native of St. Louis, was murdered near the battle field of Resaca, on the 15th ult. The young man was one of Doniphan's regiment, and had served through his memorable campaign. He was shot while riding in a stage wagon, by some one concealed in the chaparral.

From Texas.

By the steamship Mexico, Capt. Place, we have received dates from Galveston to Thursday last, and our exchanges from the interior, but we do not find any news of importance.

ANOTHER MURDER.—The La Grange Monument states that Mr. Samuel Trammel, of Fayette county, was shot on the evening of the 19th ult. by a Mr. W. P. Hughes, and almost instantly killed. The Monument says, "As we have been unable to gather the particulars correctly, we refrain from giving rumors." Hughes fled immediately after the occurrence, and as yet has not been apprehended.

CALIFORNIA.—The San Antonio Western Texan says that large numbers of wagons are passing through that place on their way to California.

FIRE.—Another fire occurred in San Antonio on the night of the 19th ult., but the amount of damage done was not large.

APPOINTMENT.—Benjamin F. Johnson, Esq., has been appointed Post-master at Austin, in place of Dr. Samuel G. Haynie, resigned.

FIRE AT EAGLE PASS.—The store of Mr. Hirkfeld, at Eagle Pass, was burned a short time since, together with all the stock and a considerable amount of money.

THE WEATHER.—The Washington Ranger, published at Austin, says:

"The weather has been quite chilly for the last two days, with north wind and a clear sky. There was a slight frost in some places on Monday night, but we believe it was not severe enough to do any real damage in this vicinity."

THE INDIANS.—The San Antonio Ledger has the following items relative to the Indians:

Col. Munford, Capt. Newton and Lieut. Denman, who left this city a few days since en route for Ringgold Barracks, were fired upon by a party of Indians. No injury was sustained. The full particulars we have not been able to learn.

It is said that a party of about twenty Indian warriors called at one of our upper Posts, and requested the commander to furnish them with fresh beef. The commanding officer tendered to his guests such luxuries as he enjoyed himself, viz: corn-beef, salt pork, hard bread, etc., which our dainty brethren of the forest refused to accept, and departed, alleging it to be their intention to visit their old haunts in Mexico.

INDIAN COUNCIL.—We are advised from good authority that Jesse Stem, Special Indian Agent, has been occupied for the past two months in holding a council with the Camanches and various other Indian tribes in the upper country, near Fort Graham, Texas. It is said that the council was very generally attended. All the head Camanche chiefs were present, and among them the great war chief by the name of Due-nois-chu-cop, (Eagle,) who has never before been known to attend a council of peace with the officers of our Government, and has rarely ever visited the white settlements, except for the purpose of rapine and plunder. It is to be hoped that the efforts of Col. Stem will be attended with the most satisfactory results.

RAIN WANTED.—The Indianola Bulletin says that that section of the country is suffering greatly for want of rain.

GEN. SOLOMON VAN RENSSELAER.—The Albany (N. Y.) State Register gives the following sketch of the life of this distinguished citizen, who died recently in that city:

Gen. Solomon Van Rensselaer was born in the town of Greenbush, and in the old Genet Mansion, at the foot of the hill, half a mile back from the river, and about three miles from this city. His father was Gen. Henry K. Van Rensselaer, who fought with great ardor and distinction in the Revolutionary war, and was desperately wounded at the battle of Fort Ann, Washington county, in this State. This action had never occupied the place in the history of that war which its importance entitles it to.

It occurred several days before the great battle which resulted in the defeat and surrender of Burgoyne, on Bemis Heights, and was swallowed up and forgotten in the superior brilliancy and importance of that decisive conflict. It was maintained for six hours—day by a force of about 1500 men, against an advancing column of Burgoyne's army, and was a series of desperate and bloody skirmishes. It was fought by order of Gen. Schuyler, who felt the importance of checking the enemy's advance at that point. General, then Col. Henry K. Van Rensselaer, commanded a regiment of 500 men, which was entirely mustered on this Van Rensselaer Manor.

The stand taken by them held Burgoyne in check an entire day, and enabled Schuyler to remove artillery and stores from Fort George, strengthen his position on Bemis Heights, and gain invaluable time. But it nearly cost the brave Van Rensselaer his life. As he was rising from a kneeling position after firing a rifle, he received a musket ball in the thigh, which passed down to his knee. The ball was afterwards removed by a surgeon by a most frightful operation, and he never entirely recovered from the terrible wound. So close and desperate was the encounter, that he lay many hours after he fell, within hearing of the groans of Col. Armstrong, of the British army who was also badly wounded.

Gen. H. K. Van Rensselaer afterwards lived for many years in this city, and died here some 28 years since, at the age of about 76 years.

Gen. Solomon Van Rensselaer inherited the military disposition and dauntless bravery of his father. At the early age of 48 he was appointed a colonel in a company of dragoons, mustered in Greenbush, and joined the army under the command of Gen. Anthony Wayne. Before he was 20 he was promoted to the command of a troop. In the battle of Miami, August 20th, 1794, memorable for bravery, he received a terrible wound through the lungs, which was supposed to be mortal, but which his youth and vigorous constitution enabled him to surmount. How he acquitted himself, the dispatches of Gen. Wayne bear ample and conclusive testimony. He suffered great pain from the effects of this wound until 1797, when he was commissioned by Gen. Wilkinson, as Philadelphia, to perform a delicate and dangerous military duty, which he promptly and satisfactorily discharged. He was also particularly noticed by Gen. Washington, and raised by him to the command of a squadron of cavalry, after a personal interview with that great man.

After the disbanding of portions of the army took place, Gen. Van Rensselaer was appointed Adjutant General of this state, under Gov. John Jay. This appointment he held during the respective administrations of his successors, Govs. Geo. Clinton and Morris Lewis, for nine years during Gov. Tompkins's administration, and for nearly the whole period of Gov. DeWitt Clinton's, which latter period was subsequent to the war, and rendered such important and brilliant service in his country's behalf. In the capacity of aid to Gen. Stephen Van Rensselaer, (the late Patroon,) who was appointed by Gov. Tompkins to take command of the forces raised to defence of the Northern and Western frontiers of the state, in 1812.

The history of that campaign is well known to every reader familiar with the events of the last war," as it is still called. The brilliant but unfortunate battle of Queenstown was fought on the 13th of October. The plan of it was simple and soldierlike, and it had been carried out in full, would have resulted in a brilliant and decisive victory. As it was, the forces under Van Rensselaer, contending with greatly superior numbers, stormed and carried the fort. The gallant colonel fell, riddled with bullets, and bleeding profusely, but cheered with the shouts of victory. But the reinforcements neglecting to cross the river at the proper time, the enemy came up in superior force, and the fort was retaken, and Van Rensselaer's troops were obliged to retreat.

Ensign Morris was killed, and Captains Malcolm, Armstrong and Wool, were wounded in the action. Colonel Solomon Van Rensselaer received a ball in his hip, which passed out at his spine, two in his thigh, one of which lodged—and which he carried to the day of his death—two in his leg, and a sixth contused his heel. With all these he kept his feet until the enemy fled toward the town, and Capt. Wool, by his order, descended the mountain and carried the battery. During this time he had concealed his wounds under a great coat, and borrowed from Major Lush; and when the party was unable any longer to stand, he fell off his horse to the ground, and remained there during the day, unable to move, and was only prevented from fainting by a crust of bread and a cup of water, furnished by one of the followers. While in this situation the shouts of victory reached him from the hill, and we have only to add that his conduct was remunerated by the approbation of his superior.

This closed his active military life. He returned home just to glance at his subsequent career. He was elected to Congress from this district, and served his term faithfully and ably. At its close he received—we believe under Munroe's administration—the commission of postmaster of this city, which he held under the successive administrations of Adams and Jackson. He was removed by Van Buren. In 1839 he was a district delegate to the Whig National Convention at Harrisburg, Pa., and was one of the Delegates from the State, who cast his vote for this old companion in arms, General Harrison. He had the satisfaction to see that gallant soldier and pure statesman nominated and elected to the Presidency, and from him received the appointment of postmaster of this city, which he held until removed by Tyler. Since that time he has not been in public life, and has resided with his family in Albany.

Such is a hastily thrown together record of the life and services of Gen. Solomon Van Rensselaer, whose loss is a public calamity, and whose departure all must solemnly lament. He was one of the brightest ornaments and most cherished and highly prized citizens of Albany, which will not fail to honor and perpetuate his memory.

STATISTICS OF MUSCULAR EXERTION.—Man has the power of imitating almost every motion but that of flight. To effect these, he has, in maturity and age, 245 sixty bones in his head, sixty in his thighs and legs, sixty-two in his arms and hands, and sixty-seven in his trunk. He has also 434 muscles. His heart makes sixty-four pulsations in a minute, and therefore 3840 in an hour, and 92,160 in a day. There are also three complete circulations of his blood in the short space of an hour. In respect to the comparative speed of animated beings and of impelled bodies, it may be remarked that size and construction seem to have little influence, nor has comparative strength, though one body giving any quantity of motion to another is said to lose so much of its own. The sloth is by no means a small animal, and yet it can travel only fifty paces in a day; a worm crawls only five inches in fifty seconds; but a lady-bird can fly twenty million times its own length in less than an hour. An elk can run a mile and a half in seven minutes; an antelope a mile in a minute; the wild mule of Tartary has a speed even greater than that; an eagle can fly eighteen leagues in an hour; and a canary falcon can reach even 250 leagues in the short space of sixteen hours. A violent wind travels sixty miles in an hour; sound, 1,142 English feet in a second. [Bucks.

A letter from the northern part of Vermont says that the 9th day of April completed five full months of sleighing in that region, without a single day's intermission.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, April 27, 1852.

SENATE.—The chair laid before the Senate communications from the Secretary of the Navy in response to resolutions of the Senate, relative to certain allowances to officers of the navy, and concerning the several kinds of coal used in the navy.

Mr. Hamlin made some remarks explaining and defending the District Judge of Maine against certain charges preferred against him in the Boston Mail.

Messrs. Bayard and Cooper presented memorials from journeymen printers, praying the establishment of a government printing office.

A joint resolution from the House, providing for the establishment at Salem of the seat of government of Oregon Territory, was taken up and passed.

Mr. Sumner introduced a bill to enforce liens in admiralty, and to regulate the proceedings therein.

The deficiency bill was then resumed.

Mr. Seward addressed the Senate for two hours, in support of the amendment giving additional aid to the Collins line.

Mr Underwood followed. He was in favor of allowing $25,000 a trip.

After an executive session, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—Mr. Florence, of Pennsylvania, yesterday, just previous to the rising of the House, presented a petition, numerously signed, and which, he said, was several hundred yards in length, in favor of the Homestead bill.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole and took up the homestead bill.

Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, took the floor, and after alluding to the policy which had been recently pursued, by which a hundred millions of acres of land had been given away, expressed himself as being opposed to the passage of the bill before the committee, until some general system of disposing of the public domain shall have been adopted. In every free and representative country, he said, there must exist parties.

He did not rise to defend any party or faction, but to lay down grave fundamental principles, without which no government can be sustained. Parties, he contended, must be organized with reference to the predominant questions of the day; and the great political question at present in this country he considered to be the law for the reclamation of fugitive slaves. The majority of the people, he believed to be in favor of the performance of all constitutional obligations; and no platform could stand unless it were based upon the Constitution, nor would any administration be sustained unless it were actuated by such principles.

He went on to state that if, which he did not admit, the North would not stand up to the Constitution, he should not care how soon the confederacy were rent asunder; he expressed himself opposed to national conventions, and to surrendering to an irresponsible body the power to prescribe principles, on which the country is to act. The people, he continued, would not vote for any man who should not be in favor of the fugitive slave law. He then read extracts from the "Union" and "Tribune," from which he dissented, and four other papers, to show that the whigs were more in favor of the compromise, as a body, than the democrats. He deemed the opposition to the institutions of the South, as a war against the Lord of Creation; the colored man being inferior to the white, intellectually and physically, and who, he said, is an entirely different being. He was proceeding to show the decrease in the number of free blacks, when compared with slaves, when his time elapsed, and the floor was taken by

Mr. Smith, of Alabama, who spoke in favor of the bill. He controverted the arguments that had been adduced against its passage, and contended that if it were known that a man had a hundred and sixty acres of land, he could find capitalists enough who would make advances, that would enable him to reach it. He eulogized agriculture as a pursuit of the utmost importance to any country, and quoted a variety of statistics to show that in England, five hundred years ago, a week's labor would procure a farmer more of the comforts of life than that of a month will at present. He considered the owning of land as being calculated to promote early marriages, and thus increase population; while under the provisions of the bill each man would be certain of a home. He referred to the squalid poverty that prevails in the great cities of the Union, which the bill would have a tendency to relieve; went into a history of David, who, from being a youthful shepherd, rose to be King of Israel, as elucidatory of his views, and expressed his conviction that the bill must pass.

Mr. Hendricks, of Ind., followed, and defended the constitutionality of the bill before the committee, and replied to arguments that had been urged against that proposition. He reviewed the course that had been pursued, by which the public lands were successively ceded to the General Government for the common benefit of all the States, and for the discharge of the public debt, which having been discharged, he said they ought no longer to be held for the purpose of speculation. He went on to show the amount that had been derived by the General Government from the sale of lands—being upwards of one hundred and twenty-nine millions of dollars, upon which a net profit of sixty millions had been made, exclusive of the new States and Territories. These lands, he said, had not cost the Government only twenty-one cents, and she had sold them to the Western settlers for one dollar and a quarter per acre—a profit which, in private life, would be considered as usurious and unjust.

He then went on to show the quantity of land which had been surrendered to Indiana, amounting to between two and three millions of acres, while the settlers in that State had purchased upwards of fifteen millions; and concluded by alluding to the necessity which exists for providing, in the manner proposed in the bill, for the foreign population that is annually flocking to our shores; and, if it were in order, said he would propose to recommit the bill, with instructions to the Committee on Public Lands to report another, for the disposal of the public lands at what they cost the Government.

The Chairman ruled the motion to be out of order, and the committee rose.

Mr. Venable, of N. C., proposed to suspend the rules to enable him to make a motion that the House take a recess till half-past seven o'clock, to enable gentlemen who were so disposed to make speeches on the bill, which was objected to, and the House adjourned.

PREMATURE BURIAL.—The Albany Register, in the course of an article on this subject, relates the following instance, of which the editor was perfectly cognisant:

Some years ago, we were perfectly cognisant of an occurrence of this kind, which was of the most heart-rending character. The wife of a gentleman was taken suddenly ill in church, and was carried to her house in a state of syncope. In a few hours she partially recovered, but immediately relapsed, and never again showed any signs of consciousness. She lay in this condition nearly two days, baffling the skill of the physicians, and then, as it was thought, and as there was almost every reason to believe, died. No signs of breathing could be detected, the limbs became rigid and cold, and the eyes remained open with the fixed and glassy stare of death; but there was no change in the color of the skin. This was the only reason in the world for supposing that dissolution had not taken place. The poor bereaved husband, almost frantic at the loss of the young and beautiful wife whom he almost idolized, clung with desperation to the hope limned in her face, and long resisted the unanimous decision of the physicians, that she was certainly dead. They told him what is doubtless true, that sometimes, though very rarely, happens, that there is no discoloration for days and even weeks after dissolution has taken place. But still he resisted, and it was not until three days had passed, without the faintest signal of change or sign of life, that he finally gave up and suffered the burial to take place. She was entombed in a vault. Months passed. A cemetery having been laid out, the husband purchased and beautified a lot, erected an elegant monument on it, and when all was ready, superintended the removal of the body of his wife from the vault to its final resting place. When the vault was opened he remembered the circumstances of her death, above detailed, and a desire suddenly seized him to once more behold the corpse. By his direction the coffin lid was removed. The spectacle which presented itself was inconceivably horrible, for it showed that she had been buried alive. She had turned quite over upon her side, she had clutched her nails into the coffin until her fingers had bled, portions of her grave clothes were torn, and in her horrible struggles she had contrived to carry her hand to her head, and had plucked from it a mass of hair, with portions of the cap that covered it.

The poor man never recovered from the shock of that awful spectacle. He was borne away senseless, and for the rest of his weary life he was an utterly broken and miserable being.

THE LAND SLIDE AT PITTSBURGH.—The Pittsburgh Post gives the following particulars of the land slide which recently occurred near that city:

The recent heavy rains in this vicinity have caused a great number of land slides, to the injury of property and the stoppage of the public highways. Coal Hill, opposite this city, was the scene of an enormous avalanche on Thursday evening, some hundred yards below the landing of Jones's Ferry. A piece of ground on the side of the hill was noticed to be moving on Wednesday, and preparation made for it; on Thursday evening, about six o'clock, the large mass moved down the hill, carrying with it a stable, located a short distance down the road, and came down with great force on the vial manufactory of Loreuz & Wightman, nearly destroying it, and the mass of earth then effected a lodgment, until it shall be started again by a further rain. On Friday morning, the chimney of the vial works fell, and some combustible material in the cellar caught fire, and what the land slide left was destroyed by the flames. The loss of the gentlemen who owned the establishment will be between four and five thousand dollars.

The large window glass manufactory belonging to the same firm, lies in a very dangerous situation, and in case of a further slide their works will be overwhelmed. The stable carried down by the slide lies on the side of the hill, and it would take but a little impetus to send it into the road. Both property and life are endangered by the present situation of the mass of moving land now lying above the glass works.

The slides on the hill have torn up large trees by the roots, and brought large pieces of rocks with terrific force down the hill. One place we noticed a slide by which a large log had carried away one end of a house, leaving the other part unhinged. The coal railways, in several places have been totally swept away by the slides on the hill, and other damage is expected, in case we should have more rain, before the earth becomes properly settled.

A portion of Seminary Hill, in the First Ward in Allegheny City, slipped down and injured some houses. Fears are entertained that further injury will result, as the hill is cracked in several places.

The St. Thomas Islands are thus described by N. P. Willis, Esq., of New York, in his last letter to the Home Journal, "from the tropics." His point of observation was from the stern of a jolly-boat, as it was tacking into the harbor with a baffling head wind:

"I studied the look of the St. Thomas islands very constantly on our approach. Unclad in any visible atmosphere, their edges, from a distance, look as sharp as cut pasteboard; and, as you near them their bald round tops, without vegetation, remind you of the shaved asylum. It is strange to a Northern eye, at first like a new sight, to see so far and so clear. We could count the leaves of the cactuses on both sides of the harbor as we ran in, and perspective seemed suddenly abolished, so equally near seemed every house along miles of receding shore.

"An ant, taking a walk on a shelf of sugar-loaves, and stopping in an open space where one had been taken out, would have nearly the same relative geography around him as a boat in the centre of the Harbor of St. Thomas. It really looks as if you might stand on the summit of any one of the half dozen hills around and toss a number of the Home Journal (sealed up for the mail) on board any ship in the harbor. The fifty or sixty sail at anchor lie very close, their many-colored flags of all nations giving them a very gay appearance, and the numberless boats, plying constantly between them, enlivening the scene exceedingly. Coming from that most unshaded and uncovered spot on earth, the open sea, we seemed suddenly to have slid into a mountain market place, with a basin of water in its deep-down bottom, and vessels that must have come thither as islands. It is a harbor with a strangely mountainous physiognomy."

The newspaper publishers of Louisville have agreed to suspend Sunday work.

The late Flood in the Ohio.

From the Pittsburgh Journal of the 19th inst., we gather the following particulars of the recent disastrous flood in the Alleghany Monongahela and Ohio rivers:

We have scarcely been able to sum up the damage and disasters of the late flood, when we find ourselves surmounted by another and still more destructive inundation. At the time we commence this article—Sunday evening at half o'clock—the water is up to 25 feet and both rivers rising at the rate of 6 to 7 inches an hour, with a heavy rain falling, which commenced Friday evening about 9 o'clock, and has continued almost without intermission until this hour.

In the recent flood, the great rise was in the Monongahela, whilst the Alleghany was scarcely swollen beyond the bounds of an ordinary spring freshet. Now, both rivers are gushing over their banks, and information from the head waters of both leads us to look for still further encroachments of the flood.

At Brownsville, Sunday morning, the Monongahela was rising at the appalling rate of two feet an hour; and from the head waters of the Alleghany we learn that the valleys were charged with heavy bodies of snow to aggravate the unprecedented fall of rain.

What may be the effect of the heavy rain of Saturday and Sunday on the streams already so enormously swollen, and still rising, it is impossible to predict with certainty. With the information we have of the state of the streams below us, the Beaver, the Muskingum, the Kanawha, and Scioto, all running over their banks, and the Ohio at this point already up to within eleven feet of the great flood of 1832, and still rising at an incredible rate, we must conclude it is scarcely possible for the waters to begin to subside before the influence of the rain now falling will be felt, to add disaster upon disaster.

The Alleghany river is covered with floating fragments of rafts, valuable timber, and lumber of all descriptions, which have been swept from their moorings, and now mingle in wild confusion with trees, drift-wood, and fence rails. Numbers of human beings have been seen on rafts, and portions of rafts, as they swept past the city, clinging to their property at the peril of their lives. And we regret to say, that lives have actually been sacrificed in view of our inhabitants by this adventurous spirit. One raft of lumber, on which a deficiency of sweeps gave evidence that it had been carried off unexpectedly from its landing, and having three men on it, was precipitated upon one of the perpendicular piers of the upper or Mechanic's street bridge, the raft shattered to fragments, and the men lost. We were not eye witness to this disaster, yet our information is from several sources, and so positive, that incredible as the statement appears, we must admit it. It is difficult to realize that three men, in broad daylight, in view of the numbers which, despite the pelting rain, lined the banks, surrounded too by the multiplied means of saving themselves which the several boards presented, could thus have been drowned. But their imperiled city of the stream, which at this moment beggars description, with the chilling temperature of the water, fresh from frozen fountains, may be sufficient to explain a sudden paralysis of the vital powers—the only hypothesis on which we can admit that drowning has occurred in these circumstances.

The Post of the 21st says:

The water, high as it was, waned nearly three feet of being as high as it was during the great flood of 1832.

We visited, yesterday afternoon, that part of the city which lies on the bank of the Alleghany, and found the suffering among the inhabitants very great. In some of the dwellings near the river the water had risen to the second story, and in many others it had covered them entirely, except a small portion of the roof. It extends up the streets and alleys leading from the Allegheny river to Penn street.

The basement of the Liberty street Methodist Church, on the corner of Day street, is filled with water, as are also those houses in the block from Redoubt alley to the terminating corner of Third street. These are filled principally from underground currents, as are also those on the South side of Federal street.

In the upper part of the city, the Allegheny had extended its boundaries back from what it was on Monday evening. The foundries and mills, partially covered on Monday, were entirely under water. But that which will affect our citizens mostly, is the complete stoppage of the water works. The water has invaded those deep pits in which the steam engines were located, and filled them up to the first floor, where the water approaches very near the furnace doors. The damage which will be done to the machinery of other mills will be tremendous. The water was also pouring over each end of the Mechanic street bridge, and fears were entertained that it would be carried off.

It is feared that the bridges on the Monongahela, above this city, have been carried away.

On the Allegheny side of the river, yesterday morning, the flood being then at its height, covered the splendidly laid out gardens of General Robinson, and invaded the first floor of his dwelling, as it did many of those fine dwellings on Penn street.

The grounds, engine-house and out-buildings, adjacent to the Penn Factory, are under water. The loss to the machinery will be heavy. All this part of the city is traversed by flats, rafts, boats, and every article that can be found to bear a voyager.

LOUIS NAPOLEON AND HIS INCOME.—The New York Times thus sums up the Prince President, his Government and his income.

Whether Prince Louis Napoleon call his Government a republic or an empire, matters very little; philosophically speaking. There needs no Lasuoleot Oobbo to prove that a "difference in name is a nominal difference." Most essentially imperious is the domination. The emperor is hid beneath, as a perfect, though not full sized, tree exists in the acorn. The name alone is absent. The similitude is strikingly carried out, in the matter of cost. The expenses are upon a gigantic scale. Twelve millions of francs a year are all that Prince Louis asks for having everything his own way. Twelve millions a year for personal services! At least twelve thousand men can be found in America, to be astounded at the number. Of Yankees ready to die for it. An enterprising arithmetician has been whetting his rules on the amount, by reducing it to its lowest terms. The quotients come out somewhat thus:

Fr. 12,000,000 00	$2,310,000 00	per year.
1,000,000 00	192,500 00	per month.
230,769 23	44,423 00	per week.
32,876 71	6,340 00	per day.
1,369 68	263 00	per hour.
22 83	4 30	per minute.
38	07½	per second.

Thus, for giving personal attention to the business of his employers, and endeavoring to be generally useful, the servitor obtains pretty nearly twice as much each week as our modest Mr. Fillmore earns in a year. Of course, allowance must be made for the great difficulty of governing, where the people are represented as devoted to the Government, and the fact that a certain portion of the pay is to be regarded as so much life insurance against the peril of pistol and stiletto, in the hands of a loving people. But even with these abatements, the pay of the President is, to say the least, adequate to the most princely expenditure. An imperial splendor, as prodigal as the Great Mogul's, might thrive upon it comfortably. A wondrous change! A dozen years ago, a broken-winded gamester of the Spas and St. James's; now a monarch, whose income counts in the millions. Eh bien! He new games with fate, and if the stakes are great, the hazard is infinitely greater."

MARSHAL MARMONT.—The Paris correspondent of the Boston Atlas, referring to the death of Marshal Marmont, Duke of Raguse, says: "For more than twenty years he lived alternately in Venice and Vienna. He was a man of great deal of talents and erudition. He was exceedingly popular in society, and very successful with the ladies. After he was more than sixty years old, he made the conquest of a beautiful lady of Trieste, which gave rise to a great deal of scandal! To the hour of his death he kept his martial beauty—he was tall, his hair white, his complexion fresh, and his eye bright and commanding; heavy eyebrows, black as ebony, formed a singular contrast to his white head. He spent every evening in Venice at the soiree of Count de Thurn, the governor, where he ruled all the society; here he poured forth of Trieste, which gave rise to and varied memory. He was profoundly versed in natural science; when Ruolz made his discovery, the Marshal conceived all of the system from a meager notice in a newspaper, and from the simple report of M. Arago upon Baguerre's discovery, he at once took daguerreotypes with ease. About 1840 the Marshal began to grow deaf, but he still continued to frequent society, and it was during a soiree where some one rudely alluded to his conduct in 1815, that he said he would leave memoirs which would clear his military glory and his memory.

A LIBERAL OFFER.—The editor of the Phare de New York has received the following from a subscriber, a rich planter in Tennessee, who urges him to make it as public as possible:

"If among the French who arrive each day, there are found any who, weary of politics, have come to the United States in view of permanent settlement, I am ready to put land at their disposal. To those you may make it known that I will give, gratuitously and in full ownership, one hundred acres to each individual, two hundred to each family, who wishes to come and cultivate them.

"These lands are situated in the most salubrious climate, and in a country proverbial for its beauty. Every body knows the Cumberland Mountains, and the advantages they offer. Independent of farming, wheelwrights, carpenters, blacksmiths, and others, will be able to arrive, by their labor, to rapid wealth.

"The only condition that I put to these donations is, that those who wish to install themselves shall engage to live there peaceably, and to respect scrupulously all political or religious opinions."

THE AMERICAN CHARGE AT VIENNA.—The New York Commercial Advertiser says: Currency has been given to rumors that the Hon. Charles J. McCurdy, the American Charge d'Affaires at Vienna, had received certain slights from the Austrian government. We understand that these rumors are unfounded. It could hardly be expected that the Austrian cabinet would volunteer any extra courtesies to him while M. Kossuth, whom they consider a rebel, was being received in this country as a martyr to patriotism, and a victim to Austrian vengeance; but we learn that he has received every civility and courtesy to which his position and character of right entitled him.

The Austrian government have reason to know that had it been otherwise, he would not have remained a day in Vienna. Mr. McCurdy is one of the last men in the world likely to brook insult from any quarter. The firmness and discretion with which he has so far exercised his functions, as an American representative abroad, have been alike creditable to himself and honorable to our Government.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY IN BUENOS AYRES.—A correspondent of the Boston Traveler, writing from Buenos Ayres, under date of February 23, says: "As yesterday was the anniversary of Washington's birth day, Mr. Pendleton called on Urquisa the day before to ask him to call at his house and drink a glass of wine to his memory. Urquiza said he should be most happy to do so. Every American in the place was there to meet him. He remained two hours, much pleased with his reception, and left with three times three hearty cheers. The course pursued by our Minister has made him very popular.

The orator of the day was very eloquent. After giving a history of Rosas, his tyranny and crimes, he wound up with that of Washington, hoping Urquiza would imitate his illustrious example, and make himself the Washington of the South. At this time six men-of-war were firing a salute in honor of the day. Mr. P. had prepared a lunch. After introducing the General to the company, Urquiza requested them to fill for a toast. This he preface with a few remarks upon the character of, and then gave—"The Memory of Washington."

QUICK TRIP ACROSS THE ISTHMUS.—A gentleman from San Francisco, who arrived at New York on the 14th, crossed the Isthmus of Panama in twelve hours and forty-five minutes. He says he got his dinner on the Pacific side in good time. The great difficulty in the California passage is in the overland transit from ocean to ocean. We can it already reduced from five and six days down to two and three-quarters hours. When the Panama Railroad is completed, that time will be diminished to two hours.

LIFE IN PARIS.—A correspondent of the Boston Atlas, writes of the ladies of Paris as follows: "Ladies in Paris, have the greatest horror of being fat; death has fewer horrors than corpulency. There is no doubt the corpulency of the Duchess de Praslin was the remote cause of her murder; and I really believe that if the Salique law did not prevent a lady from ascending the throne, the first Empress would ordain the destruction of all children who appeared inclined to corpulency. During the past week there has been buried at Perre le Chelse, the Marquise de , who died in consequence of having ruined her digestion by the excessive use of vinegar; the Princess de , from the same cause, having exhausted herself by refusing to take sufficient nourishment; and Mme. , the wife of an agent de change, killed by vinegar. The mother of vinegar is the first cousin of death. The first and last persons drank daily three large tumblers of vinegar, and they died—horrible punishment—fat. Between vinegar and cards, the fashionable world here is in a sorry way."

The Emperor of Russia is about visiting the capital of Prussia, and the royal family of Prussia invited to be present at the solemnities at Moscow this year in honor of the thousandth anniversary of the foundation of the Russian empire. Nicholas is allied by marriage to the House of Brandenburg.

The London Times says that the lighting and ventilation of the new House of Commons is yet an unsolved problem. Members cannot stay in it more than three hours, strangers accuse all the time they intended to devote to amusement, while all the reporters, notwithstanding every precaution, have caught severe colds, and been nearly killed.

SHIPWRECK AND LOSS OF LIFE.—On the evening of the 21st ult., during the late north-east storm, the schooner Trunkett, of Nova Scotia, from Canso, for New York, with a cargo of fish and fish oil, went ashore about 11 miles South of Squaw Village, N. Jersey. Capt. Buseran, Chas. Drummond, and Mr. Poor, supercargo, and two seamen, were drowned. The mate of the schooner and the captain's brother were saved.

ARKANSAS RIVER.—On the 23d ult. the Arkansas river was rising at Little Bessie,

AND THE WAY IN WHICH SHE FELL ASLEEP.

Just before the lamp was lighted,
Just before the children came,
While the room was very quiet,
I heard some one call my name;
All at once the window opened—
In a field were lambs and sheep,
Some from out a brook were drinking,
Some were lying fast asleep!

But I could not see the Savior,
Though I strain'd my eyes to see;
And I wonder'd if he saw me,
If he'd speak to such as me:
In a moment I was looking
On a world so bright and fair,
Which was full of little children,
And they seem'd so happy there.

They were singing, Oh, how sweetly!
Sweeter songs I never heard;
They were singing sweeter, mother,
Than can sing our yellow bird;
And while I my breath was holding,
One, so bright, upon me smiled,
And I knew it must be Jesus,
When he said, "Come here, my child!"

Hug me closer—closer—mother,
Put your arms around me tight;
I am cold and tired, mother,
And I feel so strange to-night!
Something hurts me here, dear mother,
Like a stone upon my breast;
Oh, I wonder, wonder, mother,
Why it is I can not rest!

All the day, while you were working,
As I lay upon my bed,
I was trying to be patient,
And to think of what you said—
How the kind and blessed Jesus
Loves his lambs to watch and keep,
And I wished he'd come and take me
In his arms, that I might sleep.

Come up here, my little Bessie,
Come up here, and live with me.
Where the children never suffer,
But are happier than you see;
Then I thought of all you'd told me,
Of that bright and happy land;
I was going when you called me,
When you came and kissed my hand.

And at first I felt so sorry
You had called me; I would go,
Oh, to sleep, and never suffer—
Mother, don't be crying so!
Hug me closer—closer—mother;
Put your arms around me tight;
Oh, how much I love you, mother!
But I feel so strange to-night.

And her mother pressed her closer
To her overburdened breast;
On the heart so near to breaking
Lay the heart so near its rest!
In the solemn hour of midnight,
In the darkness calm and deep,
Lying on her mother's bosom,
Little Bessie fell asleep!

LONDON CORRESPONDENCE.

EASTER TUESDAY.

As Parliament and every body else are taking holiday, I may as well sit down this glorious morning to write to my American brother McTyeire a review of past events.

The Ministry have got through their early struggles far better than any one expected, and it is possible, after all, that they may succeed in establishing themselves and making their way. The three-headed opposition—Old Whig, Peelite, and Radical—were not disposed at first to give them fair play. They were determined to drive them to an declaration of Protectionist principles, that they might have an opportunity of defeating and disgracing them. This was hardly fair, since the Ministry certainly did not come into office on any question or any emergency connected with Protection. They came in immediately ostensibly because Lord John was, through the late colleague, Lord Palmerston, defeated on the Militia Bill; they came in really because the Parliament had lost its confidence in Lord John and his Ministry, which for twelve months past has held office on sufferance, and because no other set of men but the present Ministry could be found competent, even for a time, and as a make-shift, to take office. But now that they are in, Lord Palmerston, who really brought them in by the success of his own retaliation on Lord John for excluding himself from office, now becomes reconciled to his former chief, in order that, by their joint opposition, they may be able to oust the present Ministry. The coalition simultaneously effected, and inaugurated at the famous Cheshnm Place meeting, between the Old Whig party and the radical movement party under Cobden, Bright & Co., with whom the Whigs had for years been in continual conflict, on the one hand, and the Peelite party, their old antagonists, on the other, has given great offence to the nation's sense of consistency and fair play. Indeed, to see Gladstone and Graham united with the Greys, Palmerston, Russell, and the Manchester men, is any thing but a pleasing and edifying sight. Lord Derby, instead of being injured, has really found himself helped by this mongrel combination in opposition to him. And the opposition itself has turned out to be clumsy and unwieldy in constitution and movement. The Tory Ministry have played their cards well. This is not to be denied. They have disclaimed all intention of attempting to re-introduce the system of Protection contrary to the sense of the country, and they have pledged themselves, so soon as ever the business indispensable for the public service shall have been transacted, to dissolve Parliament and appeal to the country; so that, by a general election, the empire will have an opportunity of deciding whether or not Protection is to be given up entirely forever. By the sense of the country the Ministry declare themselves resolved to abide, whether favorable to their own Protectionist principles or not. If the country plainly demands that there be no return to Protection, they will acquiesce in that decision, and endeavor to accommodate all their legislation and administration to this postulatum in such a way as shall be best for the public interests.

Free-trade is certainly not the only principle to be observed in administration; there are other principles, not less necessary or conducive to the well-being of a great free state, which conservative and protectionist Ministers may promote as wisely and as ably as Free-traders, Whigs, or Radicals. One of the great wants of the country is Law-Reform. Lord Derbey's Miaistry is called a Tory Ministry; yet, in the old and true sense of the word, Tory it is not, but of a liberal conservative school. Hitherto, in the House of Peers, the Earl of Derby has conducted himself with great temper and dignity, and the affairs of his administration with transcendent ability and discretion. He is, undoubtedly, the most eloquent and powerful speaker now remaining in Parliament, and never has he spoken better than of late. In the Commons, D'Israeli is exceedingly ready and clever; so much so as very much to disappoint and disconcert his oppenents. Still, he is a man in whose character and principles no one can have any confidence. Walpole makes an able Home Secretary, and speaks well; Pakington could scarcely manage so badly for the Colonies as his predecessor, Earl Grey, however inferior he might be in ability, and hitherto has done tolerably well. Nothing but routine and necessary business has been, of course, transacted in Parliament; but this has been done quietly and quickly, all attempts at obstruction having failed.

The Reform Bill of the late government has been somewhat ignominiously cast off by Lord Derby (one of the principal originators of the famous Reform Bill of 1831-33). Lord John's Militia Bill, so fatal to him and his party, has been substituted by a measure which seems to give universal satisfaction. This goes on the principle of endeavoring to secure volunteers before resort is had to conscription, bounties being offered to this end; conscription being reserved as an aftermeans of making up the needful number of militia men, if the number of volunteers should be insufficient.

The death of Prince Schwarzenberg, Austrian Minister since 1848, and an eminent hater of England, is a godsend to the present Ministry. He and Lord Palmerston were bitterly opposed to each other. No wonder that Schwarzenberg should have hated England. He was, by nature and education, an unscrupulous despot, well placed as Austrian Minister in Naples, which post he held at the time he was summoned, three years ago, to take the helm of affairs at Vienna. It was under his impulse that multitudes were hanged at Arad, Hungarian women flogged at Pesth; that the war in Hungary was cruelly pressed beyond all need, or even expediency, and that the illustrious Count Louis Batthyany was executed. His unfaltering and remorseless will trampled out the last spurks of freedom in North Italy, and stilled its last breath in Germany. He had a haughty temper, an inflexible will, tremendous and unwearable energy; no scruples of principle, or mercy, or fear, ever troubled his mind, or unnerved his hand, in executing whatever deed of terror or tyranny the needs of the time might suggest. He was served and counseled by daring, able, and subtle spirits; hence his amazing success in retrieving, by whatever means, the affairs of Austria, and restoring that empire, in three years, from the verge and imminence of universal dissolution and ruin to a more powerful, influential, and apparently prosperous condition (politically considered) than it has ever held. It was this Prince Schwarzenberg who cruelly expelled, in the depth of winter, and with only a week's notice, the peaceful and devoted Scotch Presbyterian missionaries (Wingate and Smith) from Pesth, as a miserable reprisal upon Britain for its Protestantism, and the refuge it has ever afforded to the fugitives of every land, and who threatened, on the same ground, to carry into effect a system of annoyance and obstruction in reference to British travelers in the Austrian empire. The antecedents of this man were what might have been expected from such a development of character. Austrian diplomacy, Austrian warfare, and fashionable vice, were likely to mature a character distinguished by cruelty, craft, and utter recklessness of moral principle. In St. Petersburg, Naples, and London, the "Prince" made himself notorious by his vices. In Naples the lazzaroni, and in London a court of law, avenged the injured husbands. At the time of his death Prince Schwarzenberg was an outlaw from this country on account of unpaid damages and costs.

I suppose I need not interfere with my excellent friend and your valuable correspondent "J. P. C." as to the doings of the "man who has saved France from anarchy." I am sorry, however, to see that Louis Napoleon has (in effect) put all religious meetings, out of the pale of state churches—Popish and Protestant—under an interdict, so that if even Wesleyan class-meetings are held for the future, it will only be on sufferance, and by the connivance of the authorities. This is a much more serious thing, in our eyes, than his obtaining a dotation from his senatorial pensionary dependents of half a million sterling a year—"He who has done all for France, and nothing for himself?" But it can't last very long—that is our comfort.

Let me give you an instance of the extent to which the terror of espionage exists in France that came a few weeks ago under my own notice. I was voyaging homeward across the British Channel in a splendid British steam packet, which careers through the swell and waves of that rough passage at the rate of fifteen miles an hour. We had arrived inside the Needles (on the Hampshire coast) and were steaming up Southampton Water (as it is called) to the great Mail Packet Station. Our distance from Southampton might be perhaps twenty miles. We had had a rough time of it, and being now in smooth water, we were glad to crawl to the dining-table, to try to swallow a mouthful of solid food, and take a cup of tea or coffee. Nearly all had been ill; but seated next to me were two fine looking men, evidently foreigners (though one of them had a very English look and spoke English remarkably well) who had not suffered at all. They were very merry and chatty. I found that they were Bas-Bretons, that is, natives of Lower Brittany. I therefore entered into conversation with them on the subject of France. I found, however, that their communications received a sudden check. I gathered indeed that they were Legitimists, as all natives of that province are, and thought Louis Philippe's reign a usurpation from first to last; but when they were spoken, to on the subject of Louis Napoleon, their replies became mysteries, evasive, muffled, and reluctant, and sometimes contradictory. I could not understand this till the one nearest to me, a very tall man, stooping down, gave me to understand, sotto voce, that they did not know who might be among the company at the table or in the saloon, and that it was not safe for them to speak openly their sentiments. Afterwards, on the deck, in private talk, they made no scruple of avowing their conviction that the regime of Napoleon could not, and ought not, to endure long, as being one of usurpation and tyranny, and which does not possess, and cannot acquire, the conditions of permanence. Now, this was not in France, or on the French coast, but within the British coast, in a British steamer, in a company of Britons, and within twenty miles of the port of Southampton. Neither did these men come from Paris, or any great centre, but from a retired country part of the littoral province of Brittany. What, then, must be the terror of the spy system in France itself, and especially in Paris? One of these men happened to mention another incident, which may not be uninteresting. He was a very tall man, probably six feet two inches high. "There are not many men of your height in Brittany," said I. "No," rejoined the Breton, "we are generally small men in our parts; but our family was all. There were four brothers of us; I was the youngest. My three elder brothers were all taller than myself, and were all called out to war by the conscription in Napoleon's time, and all perished in battle." Brittany, you are aware, was peopled in great part by emigration from the opposite coast of Cornwall, during the time that the Saxon was driving the ancient Briton outwards and downwards to the West and South. These Breton gentlemen confirmed to me the fact, that I had seen and heard asserted, that the Welsh and the Breton still speak really the same language, and, after becoming a little used to each other's pronunciation, are easily able to hold conversation together.

As to Wesleyan affairs, I commend your attention to the admirable document relative to the late mixed Committee Meeting, drawn up by Mr. Garland, one of the lay-gentlemen present, at the request of the others, and published in last week's Watchman.

P. S. Messrs. Wingate and Smith, late of Pesth, to whom I have referred, speak in the highest terms of gratitude of the generous and sympathizing behavior to them of the American Minister at Vienna. X. Y.

Predestination.

"For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate," etc. Rom. viii. 29, 30: Eph. i. 5, 11.

Did the Apostle intend to teach the Romans, by using this term, that their destinies were unalterably fixed before the foundation of the world, and that God had already foreordained whatsoever comes to pass? That the divisions and dissensions that then agitated the church had been unalterably decreed, and must therefore be endured? Was this in very deed the doctrine that the Apostle was teaching to the Romans? That some of them were elected to the provisions of salvation and the means of grace, and would, by that election, be certainly and infallibly saved? That their salvation was the result of a Divine election, and not of repentance, faith, or obedience, as foreseen in them? That their call would be effectual, and grace upon their hearts irresistible, and to lose God's favor impossible? That the rest of them, comprising the non-elect, God never intended to save; that they should be sent to Hell for sins committed by God's decrees, and being foreordained by Him, were unavoidable; that they never should have the grace of faith, or repentance, but yet should be damned for not exercising what God never gave them; that they deserved to be damned for not breaking God's decrees, and going to Heaven, when it was impossible to do either; that the means of their damnation, which was wickedness, was decreed as well as the end, and it was utterly impossible to avoid, either the means or the end; and that the reason why this plan of decrees, means, and end were so arranged, was to be traced to God's sovereign pleasure? That to decree wickedness is right, but he that executes these decrees ought and deserves to be damned for so doing. That "whatever is, is right"! And the reason why all will not at last be saved, was because they were not so elected; for, if they had been elected, they would have been saved? Now, all this is fine work for an Apostle to be about, in a grave religious letter to a church of new converts.

But, why did the Apostle use the term at all? For very just and good reasons. The Jews thought they only were the people of God, and were entitled by descent to all the privileges of the church; but St. Paul teaches that belief or faith was the condition of the Christian church-membership, and not descent. Hence, whom he foreknew (as believers) of all nations, these he predestined to be conformed to the image of His Son. This implied their calling and justification, and if faithful, their ultimate glorification. This is God's plan or method of salvation.

But is this indeed the sense? Read the argument concluded by St. Paul, in the 11th chapter of Romans, commencing at verse 13. The Jews, because of unbelief, verse 20, were broken off the "olive tree," the church, and the Gentiles grafted in by faith. Is not the "olive tree" the church? Were not the natural branches broken off the Jews? Were they not broken off for their unbelief? Were not the Gentiles grafted into the same "tree" by faith? And is it not this the conclusion of the argument commenced in the 8th chapter? And is not the "mystery" which the Jews could not understand, as stated in Ephesians, 3, 4, 5, 6?

The Wearing of Gold—How far Sinful.

NO. I.

DEAR BROTHER McTYEIRE: In your issue of April 17 I read, with more regret than surprise, an article under the above caption, written by some one who signs himself "Jethro." Such is the too general departure of our membership from our Disciplinary Rule on the subject of "putting on of gold and costly apparel," that I am not surprised to find some of our members, and even some of our ministers, both traveling and local, coming out as the apologists, if not bold defenders, of this Anti-Methodistic practice. This they must do in order to sustain the waning Christian character of their own families, as well as that of many others, who are in church fellowship with them. But before we admit this to be a "time to give encouragement to superfluity of apparel," it may be well for all concerned to consider the subject according to the best light we have, and to keep on the safe side of the question. I have several objections to the ground assumed by Brother Jethro in his communication, which I will proceed to state, as briefly as possible to do justice to the subject.

First, I do not think he gives a full and fair interpretation to the Scriptures which he brings to the support of his cause. The first he quotes is Exodus xxxv, 22: "And they came, both men and women, as many as were willing-hearted, and brought bracelets, and ear-rings, and rings, and tablets, all jewels of gold; and every man that offered, offered an offering of gold unto the Lord." And the inference which he makes is, that "the people of God wore those things then, in the wilderness, and they were accepted as offerings for the Tabernacle. The habit then was not condemned." But suppose we examine a little more carefully into the history of these "jewels of gold," before we decide that wearing them as ornaments was fully sanctioned by the God of their fathers. It is well known that, on the eve of their departure from the land of their long and bitter servitude, both the men and women were instructed of God to "borrow," or (as nearly every version of the Scriptures, both ancient and modern, except our own, has it) to ask, require, or demand, of their Egyptian neighbors, "jewels of silver and jewels of gold, and raiment." And this they had a right to do on the score of even-handed justice, for they had long and faithfully served the Egyptians, and hitherto had received no remuneration for their services. Now they were about to leave them for ever, they had a right to ask, or demand, of their former masters such compensation for their hard labor as was most convenient for them, in the present emergency, to give. "And the Lord gave the people favor in the sight of the Egyptians," so that they hastily took off the greater part of their personal ornaments and raiment, and gave them to the Israelites, so that it is said, "they spoiled the Egyptians." In this way the Israelites came into the possession of the "jewels of silver and gold" spoken of in the passage of Scripture quoted by Jethro. They received them as part of their pay for their long and oppressive service in Egypt. And this very jewelry afterwards became a snare to them, and well-nigh brought the wrath of God upon them to the uttermost. They put it upon "their wives, and sons and daughters," and about the next thing we hear of it is what we find recorded in the former part of the thirty-second chapter of Exodus, where, on account of the long absence of Moses in the Mount, "the people gathered themselves together unto Aaron, and said unto him: 'Up, make us gods which shall go before us; for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.' And Aaron said unto them: 'Break off your golden ear-rings which are in the ears of your wives, your sons and your daughters, and bring them unto me.' And all the people brake off the golden ear-rings which were in their ears, and brought them unto Aaron. And he received them at their hand, and fashioned it with a graving tool, after he had made it a molten calf; and they said, 'These be thy gods, O, Israel! which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.'"

And what was the result of all this? "The wrath of God waxed hot against them," and he would have consumed them had not the earnest intercession of Moses stayed his avenging hand. As it was, they were thrown into the deepest affliction by the death of "about three thousand" of their brethren that day, and by the announcement that "God would not go up in their midst." "And when the people heard these evil tidings they mourned; and no man did put on him his ornaments. For the Lord had said unto Moses, 'Say unto the children of Israel—Therefore, now put off thy ornaments from thee, that I may know what to do unto thee.' And the children of Israel stripped themselves of their ornaments by the Mount of Horeb." See Exodus xxxiii, 3d to 6th verse.

Strange procedure this, Brother Jethro, if it was no harm for these ancient people of God to wear ornaments. And why was it that God refused to decide what to do unto them until they "put off their ornaments"? And why did they so readily obey, by "stripping themselves of their ornaments," if "the habit then was not condemned," as you tell us? The Israelites doubtless brought many other articles out of Egypt, which were used in the construction of the Tabernacle, such as "blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen," besides those ornaments which were made of the precious metals; but it seems the devil made more successful use of those beautiful "golden ear-rings which were in their ears," to plunge them into the grossest idolatry, and hurry them to the very verge of destruction, than anything else. In this emancipated generation of Israelites, we find but few things worthy the imitation of enlightened Christians, for they were "a stiff-necked and rebellious people;" but soon after their sore affliction and deep humiliation in the case referred to above, we see one example which Christians may safely copy. Moses announced that the Tabernacle must now be erected, and called on the people for their contributions. And this Egyptian jewelry having already proved such a snare to them in the case of the golden calf, they determined to put away this source of temptation by applying it to a more noble purpose. "And they came, both men and women, as many of them as were willing-hearted, and brought bracelets, and ear-rings, and rings, and tablets, all jewels of gold—an offering of gold unto the Lord."

Oh! if all our be-jeweled church members would only imitate their example in this one instance, and cast their "bracelets, ear-rings, rings," etc., into the treasury of the Lord, to be appropriated to the publication of Bibles, tracts and Sunday School books, for gratuitous distribution among the destitute, or to advance the cause of our domestic and foreign Missions, what incalculable good might be done! how many more poor lost sinners might be eternally saved!

The next Scripture quoted by Jethro is 1 Timothy, ii, ix, 9: "In like manner also that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shame-facedness and sobriety, not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but (which becometh women professing godliness with good works;" and the conclusion to which he hastily comes is that, "if you give this Scripture a literal interpretation, you would exclude every kind of clothing." Not so, Brother Jethro. By giving it a "literal interpretation," we would only exclude what the inspired Apostle excludes, viz: "broidered hair, and gold, and pearls, and costly array. And that the Apostle, in this Scripture, did positively enjoin on Christian women "modest apparel, shame-facedness, sobriety and good works," and as positively forbid the wearing of "broidered hair, gold, pearls, and costly array," is, I honestly believe, the plain, common sense, safe, and "literal interpretation" of the text.

The last passage quoted by Jethro is found in 1 Pet., iii, 3, 4: "Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." This Scripture as plainly and positively prohibits Christian wives from wearing some things, and as plainly and positively enjoins others, as does the language of Paul, in the text quoted above from 1 Tim.; and the only difficulty in the matter is to ascertain what is implied in that expression, "or putting on of apparel." I cannot conceive how any one, who is willing "to receive the love of the truth," should find any special difficulty here. The Bible itself is the best commentary on the Bible, and the Apostle Paul, in prohibiting Christian women from adorning themselves in "costly array," doubtless means just what the Apostle Peter does here, in prohibiting them from "putting on of apparel," and so it is understood by our best Biblical critics; and I believe that every sincere inquirer after truth, who wishes to "keep a conscience void of offence," in all things, will look on this interpretation as the most rational and safe. But in regard to the two passages of Scripture we have just had under consideration, Brother Jethro has adopted a very novel, not to say dangerous, mode of interpretation; the substance of which is, "that it is not wrong for Christian women to be adorned with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array, provided they have, at the same time, the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit and the adornment of good works"—thus attempting to unite in the same person a love for the superfluous fashions of the world with the "meek and quiet spirit" of the true Christian. But before we adopt this new rule of interpreting the Holy Scriptures, suppose we test its correctness and safety on one or two other texts. The Apostle Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, chapter xii, 2, says: "And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." Now, according to Brother Jethro's new rule of interpretation, it does not matter how much Christians are "conformed to this world," provided they are, at the same time, "transformed by the renewing of their minds."

Again, the same Apostle says, Eph., v, 18: "And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit." But according to Jethro's newly-invented rule, the Apostle does not intend to prohibit drunkenness or excessive wine-drinking, provided much-besotted brethren are at the same time "filled with the Spirit."

These examples, which might be added to indefinitely, are sufficient to show the absurdity and dangerous tendency of Brother Jethro's novel mode of explaining the Holy Writings. But, lest I weary your readers, I will close this number, reserving other objections to the ground assumed by Jethro for the next.

Yours affectionately, HOBAH.

There is but a breath of air and a heat of the heart betwixt this world and the next.

Untimely Visitings.

"Let thy foot be seldom in thy neighbor's house, lest he be weary of thee, and so hate thee."—Proverbs xxv. 17 "Be short."—Cotton Mather.

MESSRS. EDITORS: I want to say word on a subject which concerns all ministers who are disposed to be industrious. Messrs. Editors, are you ever afflicted with "bores"? I think it likely that you are invaded in your sanctum, as we certainly are in our studies. You can sympathize with us, therefore, "Our sufferings is intolerable, and cries aloud for relief," is a true voice ab imo pectore, if not a very grammatical utterance. But grief may be excused for forgetting Lindley Murray.

The difficulty about the matter is not to describe the infliction, nor the kind of people who impose it upon you. Alas! they are the very persons who are the last to recognize their own portraits. The very complacency with which they sit "dharna," like a Javan creditor before the tent of his debtor, renders them incapable of understanding the fact that they are bores. But their name is Legion, and their forms are Protean.

They are not exclusively laics or clergy. But the latter are the more inexcusable, for they ought to know better the value of time. Your unhappy correspondent has got to dread the sound of his door-bell, and feels an instinctive shivering apprehension of the infliction which it announces, as did that unfortunate victim of duns and writs who, when his shoulder was accidentally touched in the street, turned about, inquiring, "At whose suit now, sir?"

Sometimes it is an agent for a society, whose importance, in his eyes, is greater than all other means of doing good. Sometimes it is a solicitor for aid to build a church. Sometimes it is a wandering Levite, who just wants you to give him an introductory letter to a vacant church. Sometimes it is a good-natured brother, who has nothing to do; or, being pretty easy as to his own manner of preparing for the pulpit, has no idea that other people need give attendance to reading and meditation, in order that they may be profitable to their hearers. Sometimes it is a parishioner, who thinks that two sermons on Sunday and a weekly lecture, and funeral addresses, and other occasional discourses, here and there, just drop from the mouth of the minister like water from the clouds; but has no notion that the clouds even must draw up their treasures before they can send them down to water the earth, nor that the minister has any thing to do beyond receiving visitors; or that possibly his calls and avocations may sometimes perplex him with the problem how to bestow himself in two places, and do two or three things at once. But always if is to hear a long story, full argument about the "peculiar" importance of the object, to obtain "material aid" for which—and in order to do it, just to get the minister's recommendation and "a list of names," is the purpose of the call; or it is a desultory talk, or a gossiping and tedious story; or it may be a stark, stolid affair of monosyllables with excruciating intervals of dead silence, and all the while the visitor, if he had half an eye, might see the unfinished manuscript staring at him from the desk, and the anxious, uneasy glances of his victim at the interrupted work; but he does not see it!

Now, what are we to do? How can we be protected from this cruel, remorseless waste of time. If you beg to be excused, and try to cut the intruder short, however willing you may be to attend to his business (if he has any), with dispatch; or, if you plead engagement, or "spoil the ink," as we used to do at college, then you are sure to be proclaimed as unsocial and inhospitable, and I know not what besides. Many a time have I heard ministers, whom all the world knows to be hard working men, thus denounced and complained about, because they would not allow themselves to be bored in this manner. But it is not all men who have this grace given them. Neither is it pleasant to be thus reproached by the unthinking. Perhaps a slight complaint from an anonymous sufferer may set some heedless people to reflect upon this matter. At any rate, "a wink is as good as a nod to a blind horse." [Presbyterian.

The Wonder of Books.

No volume ever commanded such a profusion of readers, or was translated into so many languages. Such is the universality of its spirit, that no book loses less by translation; none has been so frequently copied in manuscript, and none so often printed. King and noble, peasant and pauper, are delighted students of its pages. Philosophers have humbly gleaned from it, and legislation has been thankfully indebted to it. Its stories charm the child, its hopes inspirit the aged, and its promises soothe the bed of death. The maiden is wedded under its sanction, and the grave is closed under its comforting assurances. Its lessons are the essence of religion, the seminal truths of theology, the first principles of morals, and the guiding axioms of political economy. Martyrs have often bled and been burnt for attachment to it. It is the theme of universal appeal. In the entire range of literature, no book is so frequently quoted or referred to. The majority of all the books ever published have been in connection with it. The Fathers commented upon it, and the subtle divines of the middle ages refined upon its doctrines. It sustained Origen's scholarship and Chrysostom's rhetoric; it whetted the penetration of Abelard and exercised the keen ingenuity of Aquinas. It gave life to the revival of letters, and Dante and Petrarch reveled in its imagery. It augmented the erudition of Erasmus, and roused and blessed the intrepidity of Luther. Its temples are the finest specimens of architecture, and the brightest triumphs of music are associated with its poetry. The text of no ancient author has summoned into operation such an amount of labor and learning, and it has furnished occasion for the most masterly examples of criticism and comment, grammatical investigation and logical analysis. It [illegible]

the English muse with her loftiest strains. Its beams gladdened Milton in his darkness, and cheered the song of Cowper in his sadness. It was the star which guided Columbus to the discovery of a new world. It lighted the pamphlet of Puritan valor, which shivered tyranny in days gone by. It is the magna charta of the world's regeneration and liberties. Such benefactors as Francke, Neff, Schwartz and Howard, the departed Channers and the living Shaftesbury, are cast in the mould of the Bible. The records of false religion, from the Koran to the Book of Mormon, have owned its superiority, and surreptitiously purloined its jewels. Among the Christian classics, it loaded the treasures of Owen, charged the fullness of Hooker, barbed the point of Baxter, gave color to the palette and sweep to the pencil of Bunyan, enriched the fragrant fancy of Taylor, sustained the loftiness of Howe, and strung the plummet of Edwards. In short, this collection of artless lives and letters has changed the face of the world and ennobled myriads of its population. Finally, and to show the contrast, while millions did it welcome, the mere idea of its circulation causes the Pope to tremble on his throne, and brings fearful curses from his quivering lips.

A Millennial Sign.

The spread of the Gospel shows that this world is being leavened through its every core by the Church of God, for which it was created. During the last fifty years the Punjaub of India has been added to the field, free to the sickle; Turkey has just been thrown open by the firman of the Sultan, protecting converted Moslems; Russia has permitted the circulation of the Tract Society in its vast bounds; the 300,000,000 of the Chinese have been gathered about the pulpit of the Church; a chapel has been opened in Rome; the Gospel travels freely across the Isthmus of Panama; Texas, California, and New Mexico have been added to the domain of Protestantism. Here, where I write, in this the capital of the Empire State of the South, there was a twelve years ago, an organized church. Nine years ago the inhabitants fled panic-struck before the Mexicans, and now the Church of God, fully established, exerts a pure influence on the prosperous community.

In the last twenty years more than one-fourth of the world, before closed and double locked to the Gospel, has been thrown wide open, and now spreads its great population of 800,000,000 entirely ready for the preaching of Christ. When God threw open Canaan, it was just as the Jews pressed Jordan to occupy it. Having thrown open this vast territory now, it must be because God intends that it shall now be occupied by his Church. There is such a thing as "the earth's bringing forth at once, as "a nation's being born in a day." [Presbyterian.

TRUE PHILOSOPHY.—I saw a pale mourner stand bending over the tomb, and his tears fell fast and often. As he raised his humid eyes to heaven, he cried, "My brother! oh, my brother!"

A sage passed that way, and said, "For whom dost thou mourn?"

"One," replied he, "whom I did not sufficiently love while living; but whose inestimable worth I now feel!"

"What wouldst thou do if he were restored to thee?"

The mourner replied that he would never offend him by any unkind word; but he would take every occasion to show his [illegible] if he could come back to his fond [illegible]

"Then waste no time in useless grief," said the sage, "but if thou hast friends, go and cherish the living, remembering that they will die one day also."

LAZY MEN.—Genius uncorted is no more genius than a bushel of acorns is a forest of oaks. There may be ideas in men's brains, as just as there oaks in acorns, but the tree and the book must come out before we can measure them. We very naturally recall here that large class of grumblers and wishers who spend the time in longing to be higher than they are, while they should have been employed in advancing themselves. These bitterly moralize on the injustice of society. Do they want a change? Let them change. Who prevents them? If you are as high as your faculties permit you to rise in the scale of society, why should you complain of men? It is God that arranged the law of precedence. Implead him, or be silent! If you have capacity for a higher station, take it. What hindors you? How many men would have slept beggars and woke up Rothschilds or Astors! A flint and a genius that would strike fire are no better than wet junk. We have Scripture for it that "a [illegible] is better than a dead lion." If you would be up, go. If you would be seen, shine. NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, May 15.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., April 30, 1852.

DEAR BRO. K.: I had the good fortune of a quick trip to Louisville—the quickest of the season. We were only 5 days 1 hour and 31 minutes from New Orleans to this place. The trip, about 1400 miles, was accomplished by the same boat, "Belle Key," in a former season in less time—say four days and twenty-two or three hours. We had a comfortable as well as quick passage. Travelers can hardly ask for more. It is a threadbare reflection, but I cannot forbear its indulgence, this increasing rapidity and safety of travel by steam. As a wonderful moral agent its achievements must ever be regarded with interest. How it works community of thought, feeling, interest among men! How it tends rapidly to drawing the world into neighborhood communication—a neighborhood small and compact enough to be embraced by the narrowest sympathies. Let our "glorious Union" grow never so much, if steam still keeps ahead of annexation, it can never fall to pieces. So far from this, as the landed area grows larger the compass of government will grow smaller; the circumference will be drawn nearer to the centre. The thirty-one States are closer to each other now than were the "Old Thirteen."

St. Paul's assertion is true even of the useful sciences: "We know nothing yet as we ought to know." An illustration in this connection, I tell a tale as 'twas told to me. Not many years ago the diligent steamboat travel between New Orleans and Louisville occupied twenty days, or more. Our very famous Capt. Shreve got out a crack boat, made special preparations for a quick trip, and took little freight. By whipping the gallant racer every step of the way, Capt. S. astounded the natives here by coming through in fourteen days. The citizens served him with an ovation; toasts were drank, and a set speech made. The unlucky lawyer who made the speech complimentary, after the customary remarks about progress and improvement generally, and in this line of things especially, ventured to say that he doubted not the time would come when this trip would be accomplished in twelve days. Whereat the Captain took offence—the mere probability that his time could be beat! Now a six and seven days' trip is no uncommon affair.

On board the boat we had one interesting character; a Rev. Mr. C——y. He has been published as an imposter once or twice in Southern Methodist papers; but every body don't read the papers, and some read and forget. I soon found he had changed his name, and represented himself now as an Episcopal minister; no longer a Methodist preacher. To both of these changes I made no objections. He was at his old trade—soliciting money for some cause or other connected with religion. At present, it seems, he is building a church in Florida, has fine prospects, doing great things and wears that same white cravat. I felt bound to expose him, and thus ruined all his gains. He is a fit subject for the lunatic asylum or the penitentiary; I hardly know which. I am too far from home to institute any sort of proceedings against him; for it might get me into more trouble than I could easily get out of. You know it is no pleasant or profitable thing to take a dog by the ears. But, should he visit your city again I trust he will not pass unmolested. Could not such characters be arrested for getting money under false pretences? Oh, what an injury is thus inflicted upon Christianity! How many springs of benevolence are staunched, dried up by such influences! One unworthy recipient of charity does the cause more damage than the wealthy churl who gives nothing at all to it. The latter never enters the great field of benevolence, and the former disgusts and keeps back thousands that would enter.

The river was but a scene of weary grandeur till we had passed the mouth of Ohio a hundred miles or so. The banks in many places were overflowed, and there was distress. Perhaps it will only be temporary, as the floods may recede in time for planting and growing a crop. Ever and anon, as we went along, running close to the bank, a household were seen huddled on a little spot of land, all surrounded by water. Some of them were singularly cheerful under this gloomy state of things. I must mention one case: A log house was within a few feet of the river, and the back-water was behind and around it. The good man and his spouse stood in the door of this "lovs" of a cottage, looking under middle age, and as happy as Prince Albert and Victoria. A group of merry boys and girls were disporting before the door, so numerous the passengers on the hurricane deck began counting, and ran them up to nine. Just then a "wee thing" of a baby crowded to the threshold and peeped out cunningly; ten! exclaimed two or three voices. "Oh!" hallooed the fellow at the top of his voice, as we swept by, "They ain't all mine." Ungallant patriarch that he was!

It is a common remark that the contrast between slave and anti-slave territory is strikingly displayed to a voyager along the Ohio river, with Kentucky on one side and Illinois, Indiana and Ohio on the other. Up to this point the comparison is altogether in favor of the slave side; higher up the scene soon changes. The thrifty farms, beautifully green with young wheat, on the Kentucky side, speak well for Southern industry. I am told that the same quality of land is higher on that side. On the Illinois and Indiana bank I have seen few green things, except Hoosiers.

This morning early I found myself among the brethren of this city. A more delightful coterie of men and ministers it were hard to find any where than one meets at the "Book Concern," whon the Book Agent, and the Presiding Elder of the District, and the Missionary Secretary, and the stationed preachers of the city get together. The Book Concern seems to be doing safely and thriftily. It is certainly doing a great work, under the close and energetic superintendence of Dr. Stevenson, for the Church, South. I only wish we had a few more of the same sort.

Dr. Schon, in the forenoon, with his characteristic prompt courtesy, showed me the town. Our carriage was a good while in making the salient points of the city. Among the large and elegant churches that abound here, that, whioh bears his own patronymic and was built under his pastorate two years ago, is worthy of a mention and a visit. It is pewed. In architectural proportions I should say it is rather low for its width. But my notions of low and high buildings will not do on these gruvolly hills, for they were got in the Louisiana swamps, where we try hard to build above mud and water. The interior of this building is admirably arranged and executed. They propose to out-do it in the building now going up in place of Brook Street Church, that was burned down.

I am now writing in the room of the Missionary Secretary. I sit here alone; not all alone. Sundry demure Chinese gods, with long whiskers, small eyes, and legs drawn under them, a la tailor, keep me company. They sit on the table at my right as images, and in picture-shapes hang the walls around. They look knowing, but are silent, and I have endured worse company. The sight is provoking to missionary zeal. The Prophet must have had such specimens as these before him when he indulged that severe satire upon idolatry: "Eyes have they, but they see not," etc. Here the measures are devised and executed, while the whole Church supply the means, for supplanting these dumb idols with the light and truth of the living God. Great is his work, and may the bow of the Missionary Secretary abide in strength.

Yours truly, H. N. M.

LAKE ERIE, May 5, 1852.

DEAR BRO.: My last left me at Louisville, and I left there on Monday, in company with Drs. Parsons and Stevenson. At the loss of such good company I tarried behind one day and night in the "Queen City." Cincinnati is worthy this appellation, both for the tidiness and elegance of its buildings and its wonderful commercial prosperity. Notwithstanding the odor of bacon and lard, and soap and candles, there is much of the couleur de rose about the city.

Of course I inquired, early in my morning walk, for the Church, South. It is comparatively "a little one," and humble among the many and magnificent churches of the place, but it was not hard to find, being a peculiarity. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Linn, was in his study, looking over the last Advocate. I suppose he has many such calls as mine—somewhat like the calls a consul is subjected to in a foreign land. I was glad to find all things well with him. His membership, I learn, is composed of some of the very best material—not large, but influential as citizens and devoted as Christians. With such a pastor and such members, it would seem that the conditions of prosperity are met. But I reckon they have a hard time of it. It must be an up-hill business maintaining a Southern Church in Ohio.

In being shown through the "Book Concern," from cellar to garret, I had a sort of half-at-home feeling. The plot and buildings and business make no mean show compared to any. It will be hard to find agents for the next term of years more energetic and systematic than those whose time is now up. They were both gone to Boston, as also Drs. Simpson and Tefft and Nast the editors connected with the establishment. In the office of the Western Christian Advocate, I found the pro tem. and the latest changes. After seeing his system, I do not wonder at the good sheet the editor puts forth. Our little place, at 56 Gravier, where editorials are indited, exchanges filed, visit received, the printer attended to and proof read, looks like no place in comparison to Till we can do better, let us console ourselves by talking of republican simplicity, etc. But, frankly, I like those well-papered walls, and convenient appointments, and reading room, and library, as well as republican simplicity. We are far from the more than 20,000 subscribers which our contemporary here numbers, and the ample capital to go upon; but when it can be afforded we will fix up better, and in this connection allow me to hope that you are in large weekly receipts of subscribers and subscriptions.

Last night I heard the celebrated Mr. B. lecture. It was an abolition meeting at Mechanics' Hall. Considering the advertising and placarding that went before, the audience was meagre. In it were some Quakers, and a considerable sprinkling of "gemmen" and ladies of color. The former folk took on right heartily, in their quiet way, at certain passages of the speech. The speaker was in character. His long hair parted on the corner of his head, and his beard had not been marred at any corner, by a razor—thus giving his head-piece a mingled aspect of meekness and fierceness. He went boldly into the matter, counselling defiance of the law touching fugitive slaves, abused Webster, Cass, and their kind, for their conservatism, and demolished the Union. It is a pleasing evidence of the security and soundness of our government that such ravings have its contempt, and pass with impunity. The speaker depended much for effect on pictures. On his stand was a pile of them. As a climax to a touching appeal, he held forth one. No sensation. To me it was highly amusing for its horrid and fanciful ingenuity. The others had been put under such excitement so often, something stronger was needed. The meeting was very satisfactory to my Southern feelings. Such stuff as it was made of can not make public opinion. It is doubtless the greatest injustice to quote the sayings and doings of such as representative of the influential and respectable of their fellow citizens.

The rail-ride from Cincinnati to Cleveland leads through a fine country: much of it not under cultivation. The fine farms and snug farm-houses that I am looking for in the free States have not yet transpired along this route. The company of travelers was large, and among them some notabilities—the Bishop of Cincinnati, the Bishop of Chicago, and the Bishop of New Mexico, on their way to the Triennial Council, to begin next Sabbath in Baltimore. Not a few Papal ecclesiastics accompanying them; among the rest an out-and-out Spanish priest from Santa Fe, the residence of the Bishop. There is much of the bon homme about them all. He of Chicago goes off well at a joke. Nor is the Cincinnati prelate without sprightliness. That is seen in his thoroughly Irish countenance. This morning a nice little man sat near me in the cars. Every body was shaking his affable hand, and glad to see him, and they called him Bishop, and he smiled on them, and had a "blarney" word for them, and so, I found out that he was Bishop Purcell. Just before reaching the Lake we were speaking of his cathedral (which is a model building, the steeple-part especially) he spoke of certain contemplated improvements about the altar—two columns were to be erected in front, and two angels in an adoring attitude. The angels, he added, were already prepared and of the size of life. Of the size of life, thought I to myself. Yours, truly,

H. N. M.

General Conference.

The daily Zion's Herald is to hand, and advises of the preliminary proceedings of the General Conference of the Church North, which convened in Boston on the 1st inst.

Bishops Waugh, Morris, Janes, were in attendance. Bishop Hamlin was too much indisposed to attend.

Joseph Trimble, of the Ohio Conference, was chosen Secretary. One hundred and thirty-two delegates were in attendance.

The editor of the Herald remarks that "the general appearance of the assembly is highly respectable. It is sprinkled over with a good proportian of hoary heads. The number of aged men in it is larger than has been the case for three or four sessions. Apparently, a considerable majority of the Conference consists of men beyond the meridian of life, substantial, sober-minded, practical men, who look as if they would disputch business both promptly and wisely. The Conference, as a whole, presents a striking aspect of health, of good, round, robust health."

Brothers McTyeire and Keener both being absent, some of the correspondents will have to exercise patience in regard to their articles. Some of them seem to be of a personal and controversial cast, and I must decline the responsibility of their publication. I had as well frankly say that I am, from principle, opposed to all such articles. If they must be published, let them be put in circulars, and sent to the community that is interested in their contents, and let not the whole land be annoyed with mutters that are strictly of a personal or local character. W.

The Daily Zion's Herald contains an able and spicy article on the inexpediency and injustice of appealing from Judge Nelson's decision. The writer presents the question in a very plain and practical point of view. We do not think they will appeal.

Rev. J. B. Walker will preach at the McGehee Church, Carondelet street, on Sunday morning, by request, on the Bible and for the Bible.

GAINSVILLE CIRCUIT.—Brother T. Moody writes that an encouraging state of things exist on the Gainsville Circuit. They have had an increase of some thirty-four members this Conference year, and anticipate that this is but a drop before the plenteous shower.

MARION, ALA.—Brother Armstrong writes that they have recently been blest with an interesting revival in that pleasant town. Some thirty-five have professed faith in Christ; most of them young ladies.

REV. W. H. MILBURN.—A few days since we met Bro. Milburn in Mobile. He complains of a misapprehension of his speech before the Alabama Conference. At our suggestion he publishes a letter which was written at the time in reply to the editorial. It will be found in another column of this paper.

RELIGIOUS WORSHIP AT HAVANA.—The Bishop of Jamaica, accompanied by Lord Wharncliffe and Lord Charles Harvey, who are on a visit to Havana, made personal application to the Captain-General, on the 25th ult., for permission to worship in the parlor of the hotel of Mrs. Brewer, where they were staying, and to perform the accustomed rites of their church, which was responded to—"that it was contrary to the law of the land." Mrs. Brewer had declined permitting public worship in her house, unless in conformity with the rites of the Established Church, without authority of the Captain-General, for the reason that it would be in contravention of the well known law—known to the stranger as well as the permanent resident—and for violation of which the authorities would have closed her house immediately.

Southern Edition of Wesley's Sermons.

Mr. Isaac Taylor, in his "Wesley and Methodism," has ventured, in the exercise of the prophetic functions with which he considers himself endowed, "to place the works of the Rev. John Wesley on a high shelf, where they will share the fate of Calvin's Institutes at Geneva; the funeral formula is already uttered—dust to dust." Alas, for us! at the very time Mr. Taylor was writing the doom of Wesley's "heterogeneous theology," we were stereotyping his Sermons and making arrangements, in our ignorance of the fate impending over them, to broadcast them all over the Southern States of this Union, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, cherishing the hope that others would spread them in like manner every where else. Just as we have brought out our first edition, we are told that the plates must go to the cellar, committed to the ground, dust to dust, and the volumes already printed and bound are to be placed "on a high shelf," there to remain till the end of time! This would be mortifying beyond endurance, were Mr. Taylor what he professes to be, a foreteller of future events. The wish might be father to the thought in this case; but so it is, we can not consider him a prophet. And as we have plunged into the business, we shall do what we can to carry out our cherished design, though in doing so we may falsify Mr. Taylor's prediction.

The present edition is a reprint of the last English duodecimo edition. It contains the fifty-three Sermons published by Mr. Wesley in 1771, in four duodecimo volumes, to which reference is made in the Trust Deeds of the Wesleyan Chapels in England, as constituting, with Wesley's Notes, the doctrines of British Methodism. Besides these, there are seventy-three other discourses—fifty-four of which were published by Mr. Wesley, in the Arminian Magazine, and in 1778 in four 12 mo. volumes, and carefully revised in 1825, by a copy of his Sermons corrected by his own hand and deposited in his library at City Road, London; sixteen of them were written by Mr. Wesley for the Arminian Maguzine, but some of them were left by him in manuscript, and none of them were revised by him after they were published in that periodical; in 1800 they were printed in a small 12 mo. volume; the remaining three, viz: Nos. 124, 125, 126, were published by Mr. Wesley in a separate form, and not in any collection of his Sermons during his life. In the octavo edition of Mr. Wesley's Works there are several discourses, which Mr. Jackson, the English editor, says were copied from Mr. Wesley's papers after his death, but which were never designed by him for publication. Some of them were partly transcribed from other authors, particularly Dr. Calamy, and all but one "appear," says Mr. Jackson, "to have been written before Mr. Wesley obtained those correct views of divine truth which afterwards rendered his ministry so eminently successful; and perhaps ought, therefore, never to have been committed to the press." In this judgment we heartily concur. If it was necessary to print them in his Complete Works, the foregoing explanation should have been given. But they ought to have no place in an edition designed for popular use; we have, of course, imitated the example of the English 12 mo. in omitting them. They are the followings: "True Christianity Defended," which was written in Latin and translated by Dr. Clarke; except as a curiosity, it is of no service, and never was, outside the University, and it does not appear that it was ever preached even there. The essays on "Mourning for the Dead," 1726—"Corrupting the Word of God," 1728—"Resurrection of the Dead," 1732—"Grieving the Holy Spirit," 1733—have very little gospel in them. The discourse on "Love," preached at Savannah, Feb. 20, 1736, is superseded by a capital sermon on the same text. No. 91 of this edition; that on "Public Diversions" was of merely local interest; that on the "Holy Spirit" is a miserably defective affair. After these Sermons, in the octavo edition, there is a discourse on the "Ministerial Office," concerning which, Mr. Moore said he told Mr. Wesley, when he published it, that it was not agreeable to the Scriptures. "He looked earnestly at me for some time," says Mr. Moore, "but not with displeasure. He made no reply, and soon introduced another subject. I said no more. The man of one book could not dispute against it. I believe he saw his love for the Church [of England], from which he never deviated unnecessarily, had, in this instance, led him a little too far." Not a little too far, we think. Of course this sermon is omitted, and with it, on similar grounds, that "On Attending the Church Service."

Mr. Wesley lived long enough to renounce the priestly and prelatical figments which he cherished in the former part of his life; and we live after him. The sermon on "The Trouble and Rest of Good Men" was preached at Oxford, 1735, and was so full of errors that the editor of the octavo edition felt constrained to print it a la Apocrypha, in small type, with caveats in the margin! There was but one course better than that, viz: not to print it at all; that course we have adopted. The historical sketch of Methodism, preached 1777, on laying the foundation of City Road Chapel, is no sermon, and is unfit for circulation as a tract; it was published in pamphlet form by Mr. Wesley, perhaps to guard the Methodists against separating from the Church of England; but he did not print it in the eight volumes of Sermons. Nor did he that "Account of the Work of God in America" published in 1778, for he lived long enough to reverse his opinion about the American Revolution, by which, as he said in 1784, God so strangely set the colonies free from the mother country. That sermon cuts a strange figure in a volume designed for popular use in the United States, or indeed any where else. And so does that entitled "National Sins and Miseries," "preached November 12, 1775, for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the soldiers who lately fell near Boston, in New England"—an awful explosion of British patriotism in regard to the American rebellion. We have seen some of Charles Wesley's hymns against the rebels; they were not put, however, into the old Hymn Book, though composed, perhaps, to be sung after the sermon. We wonder that the octavo edition has had so great a circulation, obnoxious as it is to so serious objections, especially in this country. We are not opposed to the publication of the forthcoming productions of Mr. Wesley's pen in his Complete Works, as matters of literary curiosity and biographical interest; but to publish them in volumes designed as text-books for candidates for the ministry, for Sunday Schools, for family reading, and for universal distribution, is utterly indefensible.

No pains have been spared to make the present work as correct as possible. The editor of the English edition says he revised the sermons by an authentic copy, containing Mr. Wesley's latest corrections. We have followed that edition, verifying its various readings in numerous instances by a copy of the 12 mo edition of 1771—a copy, by the way, presented to the former owner by Mr. Wesley himself. We have also carefully collated it with the octavo edition, correcting the multitudinous errors of the latter, some of which are of vital importance. Mr. Wesley seems to have quoted the ancient authors by memory; hence there are numerous inaccuracies in the Latin quotations in the octavo; the ipsissima verba are given in the present edition, and correct translations in the margin. We have, with great pains, constructed an Analytical Index, which will not only serve for a general reference to the sermons, but also assist in the study and examination of candidates for the ministry. All the Greek words and phrases have been arranged in an index, as also all the passages of Scripture expounded in the sermons. The greatest care has been taken to prevent typographical errors, not only by the usual mode of marking proofs, but also by transcribing the errata and forwarding duplicates to Philadelphia, where the work was stereotyped. The book agent, and, indeed, all concerned in the mechanical execution, deserve the praise which, we feel certain, will be awarded to them. The editor has been encouraged in the undertaking, not only by its intrinsic importance, but also by the approval of those with whom he has taken counsel, including some of the Bishops.

To facilitate the circulation of the work, it is issued in four duodecimo volumes, of between 400 and 500 pages each, admirably adapted to saddle-bags, Sunday Schools and family libraries. They are bound in cloth, and will be sold at $2 75, with one third discount to preachers and Sunday Schools. They are put thus low that they may find a place in all our Sunday Schools and families.

We have also issued them in tract form, done up in four neat packages, each tract having a title-page, and the whole furnished—for gratuitous distribution alone—at $1 25, being, we believe, the cheapest catalogue of tracts ever published. They are put forth in this form for tract societies, pastors and others, and particularly Sunday Schools, which are excellent organizations for the circulation of those little messengers of truth. We wish every school in the connection to be forthwith furnished with a competent supply of these tracts, to be distributed once a month, alternating with the Visitor. The book agents will keep a large supply of them at the depositories; and we hope to see them in the saloons of steamers, parlors of hotels, pews of churches, and in all other places accessible to Christian enterprise and zeal. What tracts so worthy of distribution as Wesley's Sermons!

Were we writing a review of Wesley's Sermons, instead of a notice of a new edition of them, we should somewhat at large express our opinion of their character. But this is not necessary. As literary productions, they are models of terseness and simplicity, and independent of their theological value, they are such sermons as posterity will not willingly let die. But, as discourses on doctrinal, experimental and practical Christianity, the world has never yet seen their equals. Avoiding all extremes, whether Pelagian or Augustinian, Popish or Socinian, they keep the aurea mediocritas, the golden mean of gospel truth, so that none who consult them with a sincere mind can fail to understand the teachings of the lively oracles, in all things necessary to salvation, or to find the way to the kingdom of heaven. We may meet here and there an argument which we may not feel, or an opinion from which we may dissent, or an exegesis which modern criticism may not endorse, or a philosophical speculation which may have become obsolete; but these do not materially affect the value of the work, whose staple elements are Scripture truth, solid reasoning, and powerful incentives to repentance, faith, and holy living. May its republication in the present form promote the edification of the church, the salvation of the world and the glory of God.

"Still They Come."

MR. EDITOR: I see in the Advocate of the 24th of April an item of news under the above caption, in which it is stated that a Mr. Kellogg, at Independence, had joined the Baptist Church and was licensed to preach. It seems, "some difficulties presenting themselves, suggestions were made to delay," but Mr. Burleson urged immediate action, lest the Baptist Church should miss getting a "bright star."

Now, permit me to say that this "bright star," the Rev. D. R. Kellogg, made its appearance in the western horizon of the Florida Conference in January, 1851, and, from [illegible] was received into the itinerancy of that Conference, though not without some doubts as to his genuine character. He was appointed to work about the middle of the year, his wife took a returnless flight from him, leaving no reasons behind for so doing. Afterwards, his conduct among his people was such as to induce the authorities of the Church to dismiss him from the work until the meeting of the annual Conference, at which time and place he did not show his head, and was accordingly discontinued by the Conference without his request.

This is a brief history of the said "bright star," in its connection with the Florida Conference, and if this same "bright star" would appear in these parts again and pay its just debts, and especially fork over twenty-two dollars to a poor Methodist preacher in Thomasville, Ga., for hooks bought of him, we think it would be better qualified to shine among the Baptists in Independence.

I have thought proper to make these statements, and hope they will find a place in the Advocate, for the purpose of warning the public generally, and the church in particular, against all such irresponsible, run-about, would-be ministers of the gospel.

Letter from W. H. Milburn.

MR. EDITOR: Dear Sir—In your recent editorial explaining my speech before the last Alabama Conference, and the action of the Conference in my case, you remark that my use of the word theology was both inaccurate and offensive. As doubtless it so seemed to you, and probably to others, let me explain what I meant by the term. This word may have been offensive, but not to scholars, or men accustomed to an exact and philosophical use of language. It was not inaccurate, but precise and fitting in its use, conveying justly the idea I meant, for the verification of which I refer you to even elementary books in Divinity, not to say the works of the most eminent Theologians in our own, the Latin and German languages. From the time of Hooker, Theology has been regarded as a science with the laws, limitations and terminology of such by the writers of our tongue. Abelard, and Peter of Lombardy—schoolmen of the twelfth century, not to go back to Isidorus of Seville and John of Damascus, in the sixth and eighth, and from their time writers in all the learned tongues of earth have so understood it. That the science of Theology is an essential branch of a preacher's study to a much wider extent than is usual in our Church, I then maintained, and have always; but that a scientific pursuit, fit only for the professor's lecture room, or the student's cloister, should be lugged into the pulpit, I then denied, and still do.

The Christian religion, treated in a catechetical, homiletic and popular style, is the legitimate subject matter, assuming its befitting form, for the public ministrations of the preacher.

The science of Theology has varied in every age of the Church, and these variations have been so wide as to necessitate the use of the phrase Theologies to designate them. This is in part for the reason that Theology is dependent upon the system of metaphysics a theologian adopts. The philosophy of Plato being prevalent in Alexandria in the second, third and fourth centuries, gave shape to the Theology of which Origen and Clemens were the most famous expounders. The philosophy of Aristotle having been legitimated by the Romish Church, became the basis of the schoolmen's Theology. And so in succeeding times the systems of Descartes, Leibnitz, Locke and Kant, as well as more recently those of Fichte, Sebelling and Hegel have produced respectively their schools of Theology. It is ever varying, and must, for the reason that it is absolutely dependent on psychology.

Theology, then, is the abstract scientific form which the truths of a religion assume, in obedience to the requirements of a before adopted system of metaphysics, for the purposes of intellectual investigation. Such is my definition of Theology. And again I say, that the preaching of it is the bane of the church and the curse of the pulpit.

The preaching needed in this, as in all times, is the clear and simple statements of the truths of our Divine religion, appealing for their validity to consciousness, showing, without the intervention of man's formularies, nice technicalities, polemic disputations and scientific restrictions, the need, the scope and power of a Divine life in the soul, and the causeless amplified and minute injunction of the practical duties of Christianity. Were this the style adopted universally, we should have, instead of the babbling of theologasters, homely, yet forcible presentations of the truth as it is in Jesus, in lieu of discourses composed for the most part of phrases "which by frequent use have almost lost their meaning," fresh and genuine outbursts from a warm and pious heart, and for labored disquisitions subtle and skillful enough it may be—upon the Origin of Evil, and such like fruitless themes, or bitterly controversial sermons, teeming with rancor and spleen, and interesting on the same principle that a slander suit is in court, for angry invective and virulent personality; we should have the sincere milk of the word, a strong meat whereby men might find subsistence.

I do not mean to say that these are inseparable characteristics of modern preaching, but that they are so to a deplorable degree none can doubt. And this is one of the reasons why that preaching is so ineffectual. See in contrast the natural, spontaneous and heart-stirring sermons in the Acts. They realize, as far as they go, the idea of real discourses, as Paul's Epistles do the model of an apostolic letter.

One of the rare excellences, and the highest element of the power of early Wesleyan preaching, was its spontaneity, its freedom from artificial system, its coming warm and fresh from the inmost life, which was the life of God in the soul. Therefore it is not Wesleyan preaching to which I object. It yet remains to be proven that Mr. Wesley's sermons, as we have them, were ever preached. For my own part I do not believe they ever were—at most, not many. The internal evidences are all against the hypothesis. These sermons are the mere anatomy, which he covered with the glowing beauties of the flesh, and informed with the animating soul. And in their present form they are given to the Connection as an elementary text book in Divinity, for the use of all our preachers, but especially and primarily for those who were destitute of other means by which to gain an insight into speculative and practical Theology. This last, however, is a point I did not intend to touch, and I therefore leave it, to be resumed, if need be, at some future time.

PERUVIAN BARK.—Peruvian bark is one of the most useful drugs in our medical pharmacy. The following story is told of its discovery: An Indian, while on a journey, was left by his companions near a small pool in the forest, a raging fever preying upon his system. This water was immediately over the roots of one of these trees, and was therefore strongly impregnated with its medicinal properties. As he continued to drink the water, to ease his raging thirst, he felt that the fever was leaving him. He recovered, and returned, to the wonder and dismay of his faithless friends. He told his story, and the "holy water," as it was called, was thenceforth greatly resorted to. It was soon discovered to what source it owed its healing properties. It became known to the Europeans about 1640. [Crusader.

To the Members of the Alabama and Louisiana Conferences.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate beg leave to present to the patronizing Conference, and to subscribers generally, the following REPORT.

The Committee are much pleased to find the fiscal condition of the paper safe. The number of subscribers is near 3000, and the list constantly increasing. Such, however, is the actual cost of publication, that the Committee are grieved to say, the able and efficient editor has received literally a mere nominal sum for all the labors, care and anxiety connected with his responsible position. Nor has the paper been a source of profit to the publishers, nor can it be until the number of paying subscribers is greatly increased.

The Committee have called attention to these facts to excite the agents, who already deserve great commendation, to still greater efforts to secure subscribers, and to collect the amount now due for the second volume; and secondly, to show that upon no other plan known to the Committee could the paper have existed for one year.

A specimen number of a paper, to be published on a different plan, and for a lower price, was issued in July 1850, in this city; and when the Louisiana Conference met in December following, a very small fraction of the number of subscribers regarded as necessary to commence the paper had been obtained. The Louisiana and Alabama Conferences, with all due deference to the feelings and opinions of brethren differing from them, determined to establish the paper at a higher price, and without involving themselves in any pecuniary risk. In accordance with their plan the paper was issued more than a year ago. It has succeeded fully equal to their expectations. It occupies a high position with the other members of the Advocate family. The editor has displayed tact, talent, piety and enterprise; and while he has kept his columns free from every thing which would contaminate the morals, vitiate the tastes of its readers, or bring into disrepute our holy religion, he has by his own pen, by a list of able foreign and domestic correspondents, and by tasteful selections, done much to give character and dignity to our Church Periodical Literature.

The Committee have therefore reappointed him to a position which he has filled with much honor to himself and advantage to the Church.

In conclusion, the Committee beg leave to commend the paper as deserving a still more extended circulation, and to express the hope that the New Orleans Christian Advocate may continue to exert a purifying influence upon all communities where it may circulate.

METHODIST GENERAL CONFERENCE.—Boston, May 6—The Conference met at the usual time. Various committees were appointed by the chair. A petition was presented asking that the rule requiring men and women to sit apart in church meetings, should be repealed or repealed. A multitude of other petitions were presented. The appeal of the Rev. J. M. Stagg, of North Indiana Conference, who was located without his consent, was assigned for consideration on Monday next.

The Rev. John A. Collins, of the Baltimore Conference, presented a resolution, signed by himself and colleagues, relative to the New York Book Concern, repudiating the reasoning of Judge Nelson's decision in the United States District Court as wholly at variance with the genius and policy of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but acquiescing for the division of the property, and directing the Book Agents at New York not to take an appeal to the Supreme Court.

Mr. Scott, of the Book Concern, stated the final decision of Judge Nelson would not be rendered till after the conclusion of the session of the Conference. After a good deal of discussion the resolution was withdrawn for the present.

The Rev. John Bear, E. E. Griswold and E. Thompson were appointed a committee on the church in Washington. The Conference then adjourned.

METHODIST GENERAL CONFERENCE.—Boston, May 4—The Methodist Conference met at the usual hour. A committee was ordered to take measures for the erection of monuments to the memory of Bishop Asbury and colleagues.

The appeal case of the Rev. William Pease was postponed to Friday, and that of the Rev. J. M. Maccabe to Wednesday next.

The reports of the book agents at New York for the four years were read. The sales have increased 9 per cent, and the profits 32 per cent.; profits on capital invested 7 per cent. annually. The report opposed the establishment of numerous large depositories. The superior system was also opposed as being too much after the plan usually to be as efficient as the present system, which sends out books on commission to the whole land. The circulation of the Methodist Quarterly Review is down at 3000. The Sabbath School Advocate stands at 40,000. The Missionary Advocate 30,000. The history of the proceedings in the Book Concern case was given at length. The South a final decision in which, it was said, would not probably be given in court, in New York, before the summer. The report was appropriately referred. Resolution of the laity, affirming their right to take part in the proceedings of the Annual and General Conferences, was then taken up and discussed.

Among the numerous petitions presented, then a petition from some in favor of the extension of the time during which preachers shall be stationed; and also to allow preachers to be returned to the same station after an intervening four years; also, for a separate conference for California, which is at present connected with that of Oregon. The establishment of a book concern for the Pacific coast, to be located at San Francisco, is also asked for.

A resolution has been adopted for the removal of the remains of Bishops Asbury and Emory, from the burial ground in Eutaw street, Baltimore, to Mount Olivet Cemetery.

METHODIST GENERAL CONFERENCE.—Boston, May 5—In the session to-day the following committees were appointed: On the Pastoral Address—George Gary, John Seager, John McClintoe and Abel Stevens.

A special committee of one from each Conference was appointed on the subject of lay delegates.

The appeal of the Rev. Ezra Sprague, of the Troy Conference, was then taken up, and led to a long discussion. Mr. Sprague is charged with practising mesmerism, and sending a female medium to the other world on a spiritual mission, and inveighing against the veracity of individuals. Mr. Sprague acts as his own counsel, and is ably seconded by Messrs. Witherspoon and Phillips appearing on behalf of the Troy Conference.

Among the petitions presented, yesterday, was one from Dr. Peck, asking that the male superintendent of the Sabbath Schools be constituted members of the Annual Conference; and one from the Erie Conference, praying for no alteration of the discipline in regard to slavery.

Dr. Elliott offered a resolution from the Ohio Conference, seeking the General Conference to take measures to commence a mission to Rome. It was referred to the committee on Missions.

LAY CONVENTION OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—A Convention of the lay members of the M. E. Church, who are opposed to electing representatives from the laity in the several conferences, assembled in Philadelphia on the 5th inst., and organized by electing Dr. Thomas E. Bond, of Baltimore, president, assisted by twelve vice-presidents and six secretaries. About two hundred delegates, from twelve States, were in attendance; and, on taking the Chair, Dr. Bond made an interesting speech in favor of the objects of the convention. The Committee on Correspondence reported the receipt of letters from two hundred persons in various sections of the Union, including the Rev. Dr. Bond, of Baltimore. Dr. Thos. E. Bond, Jr., of Baltimore; Dr. H. Williams, of Alexandria, and others, were appointed a committee to prepare business for action. At the afternoon session, a letter was read from Judge McLean, of Ohio, in which he said he did not deem laymen proper legislators for the church, or clergymen proper lawmakers for the affairs. A letter from Judge Wood, of Ohio, in favor of lay delegates, was also read.

Dr. Thomas E. Bond, Jr., chairman of the Committee on Business, reported two resolutions, one directing a memorial to be prepared, in the name of this Convention, and addressed to the General Conference now assembled in Boston, against the proposed admission of lay delegates to the conferences, and the other directing that the resolutions resolved by this Convention should be transmitted to the conference. Dr. Bond addressed the resolutions in a speech of some length, after which they were unanimously adopted. The Convention was in session all day on the 6th.

CHARITABLE BEQUESTS.—The late Charles Macalester, of Philadelphia, has left the following bequests: Lodge No. 3 of Masons, $3000; Union Benevolent Society, $3000; Pennsylvania Bible society, $5000; St. John's Episcopal Church, $2000, and its Missionary Society, $500; the Lutheran Church, $2000; and each South Society in the city, $1000.

The Hon. D. D. Barnard, our Minister at the Court of Berlin, was on a visit to Rome, at last accounts, for the benefit of his health.

Obituary Notices.

Died—In this parish, on April 14, 1852, Mrs. Bethia Frances, wife of the Hon. F. D. Richardson, in the thirty-third year of her age. The deceased was born in Wilkinson county, Mississippi, August 5, 1819. For several years past a resident of this parish. She had been, previous to her removal from Mississippi, a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church; but, for want of opportunity to attend the church of her choice, she attached herself for the time to the M. E. church in her neighborhood, not willing to deprive herself of the means of grace because she could not have her first choice. This simple fact is indicative of the truly Catholic spirit of her Christian character. It is not our purpose to publish to the world, for the sake of display, those Christian graces for which she was distinguished. We mention a few things in her case to encourage her many friends and relatives "to follow her as she followed Christ." She needs not our praise; the record of the good is on High: and it is in such a life and such a death that faith in Christ is victorious. Her life, though she was a lady of superior mind, with ample cultivation, yet she endeavored to follow in meekness "the path of the just." Her last hours were employed in earnest prayer for triumphant faith, that she might pass the "narrow stream" with joy. She wished to praise God to the last.

While still lingering on the shore, she used her time in exhorting her aged father, her husband, and other friends, to live for God and Heaven! and here are her last words: Raising her hands devotedly, she said; "Now, Lord, give me a more clear manifestation of that love which is to be with me, and bear me through the valley and shadow of death. Oh, that dark and solemn hour! How my mind has always trembled at its contemplation; but be Thou my rod and my staff, and they shall comfort me in this last closing of all earthly things." When asked by her father-in-law, if she did not feel sure of Heaven, "Yes, dear father, I do; but I want more peace. I want that faith which makes us triumph in the dying hour, and leave this world rejoicing." When told that her desire was to the lot of all Christians: "Oh God, thy will be done! I am wholly thine." And here she closed her earthly mission, and went directly to her God.

Mrs. Rebecca Frances Rhodes, wife of Mr. T. C. Rhodes, and daughter of Rev. T. J. and Mary R. Dorman, died in this city April 28, aged 23 or 24. Her illness was protracted and painful in the last degree, yet she bore it with great fortitude and patience. Her father, upon being informed of her danger, hastened to see her, and arrived in time to have brief conversations with her during lucid intervals, and her lips froze in death with its name upon them. The grief-stricken mother did not enjoy this privilege, not during until the daughter was hidden in the grave. This blow has fallen with peculiar severity upon the bereaved friends—it has come so unexpectedly, and could hardly be borne but for the hope of a reunion in the land where death cometh not. They need the prayers of the Church.

How changing is life! One year since the deceased was a bride—now numbered with the dead! A few weeks since a joyful, hoping mother—now, alas, all the hopes and fears of life are swallowed up in the great sea of eternity. What a heaven that must be that can redeem us from all our sorrows, and make amends for all life's ills.

Mrs. Rhodes made a profession of religion some years since, and though she infrequently became cold, yet she never abandoned her duty or gave up prayer; and during her sickness she was frequently observed to be earnestly engaged in this exercise. But the struggle of life is over, and the living and dead are separated until the day of reunions. So that how many look forward, and upon it how many hopes are fixed. May they all be realized.

Mobile, May 2, 1852.

Died—At his residence, in Jefferson county, Miss., April 28, 1852, near the close of the 62d year, Jacob Guice, one of the most eminent and pious members of the M. E. Church, South, on Colo's Creek Circuit, Mississippi Conference. Brother Guice embraced religion and joined the church in 1834. His original conversion was thorough and scriptural, and from that time his attendance on the religious duties of the closet, the family altar, and the house of God, was regular and consistent. Brother Guice excelled in his love of the Bible, which he read and studied more than any layman in my knowledge. His house has long been one of the most pleasant places for the itinerant ministers on this Circuit, and he always received and treated them as the embassadors of God." When his physician, who was also a beloved brother in church-fellowship, first visited him, he said him, 'Doctor, the good Lord has said 'It is enough; come up higher!'". A few nights before his death he said to his son-in-law, Rev. George C. Armstrong, "Our light afflictions, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory;" and, "If it please God to call me, there is not an intervening cloud between us." Two days before his death, observing that his beloved wife, who had journeyed with him from the beginning of his Christian pilgrimage, was weeping, in prospect of their approaching separation, he said to her "Weep not for me; my way is clear." Soon after the shades of death closed around the good man, and he lay, apparently insensible, until he calmly "died in the Lord."

General Intelligence.

Charity Hospital Report for the Week ending May 14, 1852—Admissions, 274; Discharges, 228; Deaths, 41—Number remaining, 186.

Death of a Clergyman.—A letter from Washington of the 4th inst. says: "With deep regret I now announce the sudden decease this morning of the Rev. David Steele, who for upwards of thirty years was a highly esteemed preacher of the Baltimore Annual Conference. But a few minutes before his departure he was walking about his room.

Trial of Bishop Doane.—It is stated that the Bishops of Virginia, Ohio and Maine have gone to the commission to present for trial Bishop Doane, of New Jersey. While the Council of Bishops were in session at St. John's Chapel, New York, on the 20th ult., appointing delegates to the contemplated jubilee celebration in London, (to be held on the 15th of June,) there came missives to them from the Senior Bishop calling a meeting of the board, on June 24, at Camden, in the diocese of the accused. The result is, that Bishops Delancey and McCrosky will probably not go to England, in fulfilment of their appointment. It is rumored that Bishop Hopkins, of Vermont, for private reasons, has determined not to sit on Bishop Doane's trial, and it is suggested that he will thus be available as a delegate to the forthcoming convocation in London.

From Texas.

By the arrival yesterday of the steamship Mexico, Capt. Place, we have received Galveston papers to the 10th inst.

Whig State Convention.—The whig State Convention met at Houston on the 6th inst.

The Committee on Nominations reported the following:

Hon. J. B. Ashe, of Galveston county, Elector for the State at large. Col. Jas. Reily, of Harris county, Elector for the Western District.

Delegates to the National Convention: Hon. J. H. Ashe, Col. J. Reily, Albert Hall, J. Dickenson, S. S. Nichols, Hon. Lewis A. Bryan.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we regard the Compromise measures of the XXXI Congress as a final settlement of the questions that have recently threatened the tranquility of the Union, and that we, the whigs of Western Texas, will continue to give them our firm and unwavering support.

Resolved, That we claim in behalf of the State of Texas an exercise of the constitutional power of the Congress of the United States, for the improvement of our rivers and harbors; and for the construction of such internal improvements as may both facilitate commerce between this and other States, and conduce to the protection of our frontier.

Resolved, That we cordially approve of the patriotic and eminently national administration of Millard Fillmore, and that we declare him our first choice for the Presidency of the United States, subject to the decision of the Whig national Convention.

San Antonio Railroad.—The San Antonio Ledger informs us that Col. Johnson, the engineer, is still prosecuting the survey of the railroad by different routes. He is expected to report in a few days, where the terminus on the Gulf will be decided on. The Ledger says, this road will be built beyond a doubt. The trade via San Antonio to El Paso is said to be constantly increasing, and the practicability of a railroad by this route to the Pacific is becoming a subject of common remark.

An Opinion.—The Nacogdoches Chronicle says that the wife of Dr. Kirby, who was sentenced to the Penitentiary for mistreating her, has gone with the Mormons to the Great Salt Lake, and the editor thinks she can be no better than her husband.

Movement of Steamers.—The Magnolia and Jack Hays remained aground, and the river is reported so low that the Buffalo and Jack Hays cannot get up. The Washington and Reliance were both at Washington on Brazos river awaiting a rise in the river for taking off cotton from Burleson and Robertson counties. Steamer Colorado is reported at Latrange with little prospect of doing any more business this season. Steamer Ben Hamer continues her regular trips from Brazos river and is now advertised to go to Corpus Christi.

The Nick Hill was snagged and sunk on her way up the Trinity, about six miles above Liberty.

The Trinity and Brazos rivers are reported too low for navigation.

For El Paso.—The Indianola Bulletin mentions that the train of Mr. James Buchanan left Indianola for El Paso on the 15th ult., loaded with merchandize, for the Santa Fe and Chihuahua trade.

Mr. Buchanan has formerly traveled the Missouri route, but having examined our route, and become satisfied with its important advantages in distance, climate, grass and water, he has changed his entire business to Indianola, to which place his goods, as well as those of Messrs. Smith, Wilson and Randolph, have been shipped direct from New York.

The trains of Mr. W. T. Smith and Mr. White, consisting of twenty large wagons, five carriages and a number of persons destined for California, left Indianola, April 16 for El Paso and New Mexico. This is the third trip Mr. Smith's train has made in twelve months, a distance of 800 miles.

At San Antonio about seventy-five California emigrants will join the party.

From Paso del Norte.—The regular mail from Paso del Norte brings information that the Indians there are committing depredations, and that no person can travel in safety. Large numbers of mules and horses have been taken by them. Captain Skillman, the mail contractor, also lost his horses. Las Cruces, a village of New Mexico, has been plundered by the Indians. Their robberies have also extended to the copper mines. Two soldiers were killed by them on the Joamadn. The government has lost large amounts of property under the eyes of the troops. The Ledger extends its list of Indian massacres and robberies in New Mexico and Chihuahua to nine a column.

Saw Mill Burnt.—The steam saw mill of D. W. C. Harris, at Harrisburg, was burned on the night of the 24 inst. The fire was the work of an incendiary.

Fruit Crop.—The San Augustine Herald says: "We have never had a finer prospect for a good fruit crop than we have this season. The late frosts seem to have had no effect upon the vegetation."

From Mexico.

The brig Tehuantepec, Captain Brown arrived yesterday from Vera Cruz, which port she left on the 7th inst. We learn from her passengers that one Mexican man-of-war brig and three cutters left Vera Cruz on the morning of the 6th inst., with troops for the Coatzacoalcos river, and the Mexican steamer State of Mexico was taking in powder and guns for the same destination. The great bone of contention, the Tehuantepec road, was still being discussed in Congress. They demanding $2,000,000 for the right of way.

We also learn by one of the passengers by the Tehuantepec, who conversed with the American Consul at Vera Cruz the morning of the 7th, and was informed by him that the principal part of the lower order of the Mexican population were against its confirmation. Business very dull at the city of Mexico and Vera Cruz.

From Dubuque.—We extract the following from a private letter from Dubuque, Iowa, dated 14th ultimo:

"As I said in my former letter, the emigration, via the Plains, is tremendous—for two weeks or more, there has been an almost continuous line of teams passing through here for Council Bluffs, and the same thing is going on for 200 miles below us—every ferry has as much as it can do. A vast number is to come yet. Certainly not less than 40,000 people will attempt the Plains this season. There are many reports as to distress in the crowd at the Bluffs. Travelers say there is neither feed for cattle nor for people—at least, not in sufficient quantity. Every thing there is very dear. Sickness, too, is doing its work. There will be more distress on the Plains than was reported of the Isthmus, some time ago."

"We had a grand illumination here a few weeks ago, on the occasion of the letting of contracts for the Great Central Railroad. This work has its terminus at Dubuque, and is likely to be speedily finished. You can see some filling of its course by starting at Cairo and running up through Illinois to this city—then again over to Chicago. Where the junction is to be I do not know. This is no fancy work—the advertisements for most of the work to be done are published, and the road is to be built by Eastern capitalists. Property has gone up here, and must continue to do so. A single lot, in this small city, at the landing, sold the other day for about $1650."

Sailing of the Asia.—The steamer Asia sailed from New York for Liverpool on the 5th, with 110 passengers and $130,000 in silver.

Death of Amelia.

It is with no ordinary sorrow that we record the death of Mrs. Amelia B. Welby, the celebrated poetess, on the 23d inst., at Louisville, Ky.

It was our good fortune to know this gifted lady long and intimately. Our acquaintance with her commenced prior to the publication of any of those poems which have since tended to make a familiar household word to the land. She was then an "April-hearted thing" of some sixteen summers—a gay and joyous creature—and little did those in familiar intercourse with her, imagine that she would ever accomplish more than the ordinary destiny of her sex. We well remember with what doubts and fears she sent her first song to the senior Editor of the Louisville Journal—himself one of the most gifted poets our country boasts of—and with what pleasure she welcomed her first line clothed in the 'dignity of print.' Encouraged by the discriminating praise of one so distinguished in the world of letters, she was induced to contribute these publications. In the language of her early friend, "poem followed poem in rapid succession, each one teeming with fresh, wild thoughts, expressed in verse of the most delicious harmony."

At that period she was almost entirely unacquainted with even the literature of her own country, but her name became at once one of its proudest ornaments; and, notwithstanding she had read but very few of the spoiler works of the great masters of song, she was at once admitted into the "inner temple" as one of its worthiest votaries. Melody after melody gushed from the heart of the minstrel-girl, and wild, simple and uncultivated though they were, they found a response in every heart attuned to the melodies of nature. She was not long and weary years in winning her way to favor and fame. They came to her almost unbidden if not unsought for. The light of her glorious poetry was at once recognized as that of true inspiration—it at once overflowed the land—scattering its sunshine into "shady places"—giving its beauty to the grass, its glory to the flower." She touched her harp, and its strains, now sweet as the "music of the spheres," now joyous as the song of birds in "forests wide," and at times mournful as the sighings of the wind through a forest of pines, were every where received with delight by thousands of admirers.

Her home became the resort of many of the most distinguished politicians and statesmen of the country. Pilgrimage was made from afar to that Mecca of Song. The "City of the Falls" was not visited by strangers who did not wish to see the inspired girl the melody of whose harp had reached their ears in distant lands. Tributes of admiration in verse and prose poured in from almost every quarter—all were eager to do honor to one who had done so much honor to the literature of her country. We remember being present one evening when surrounded by some of the first poets and wits of the day, the Bull was presented to her. He improvised his admiration of her in one of his most beautiful compositions—the inspiration of the moment—and a most appropriate and beautiful tribute it was from the great interpreter of melody to one of the most gifted children of Song. For several years she has ceased publishing her poems, but we learn has continued writing, and leaves behind her a large number of songs which we hope will be published shortly. She is now, we believe, universally acknowledged as one of the first women of the land—her productions are known and admired wherever the land's language is known.

Alas! that Death, upon whose nightly thousand-shafts unchanced, is hushed forever—its last arrow note has flown upon the air! That star whose bright light, wandering down from its far home to the dim mists of earth, beckoned so many on their lone pilgrimage, has faded into the sky, and like the "lost Pleiad," will be seen no more!

She is gone home, as the Mormons write it in their beautiful epitaphs. And surely if ever there was a spirit of earth prepared for that home, it was hers. Kind, amiable and gentle, she was a devoted wife, a warm hearted friend, performing well all the misfortunes of life allotted to her, and in passing from the earth leaves behind her friends who will cherish her memory, and keep fresh in their recollection her many virtues and excellencies.

Railroad Subscriptions.—The city councils of Pittsburgh have passed an ordinance authorizing a subscription of $2,000,000 to the Pittsburgh and Steubenville Railroad, payable in city 6 per cent. bonds, of not less than $500 each, having 30 years and upwards to run. The bonds will be issued in October, provided the railroad is brought into the city by a bridge over the Monongahela river. The work will be vigorously prosecuted.

Cattle Trade.—The New York Tribune of the 6th says: "On Friday last, a train of fifty-nine cars, loaded with cattle, came down on the Central line of railroads to Albany, leaving enough cattle at Buffalo waiting transportation to fill one hundred cars more. This trade has become the principal business on the line of the road, and will be greatly increased when the Hudson River Railroad will be built beyond a doubt. The trade via San Antonio to El Paso is said to be constantly increasing, and the practicability of a railroad by this route to the Pacific is becoming a subject of common remark.

American Pomological Congress.—The Society of Fruit growers, calling themselves the "American Pomological Congress," will hold their next session in the Chinese Museum in Philadelphia, on the 15th of September next. They invite the pomological, horticultural and agricultural societies throughout the United States and Canada to send such number of delegates as they may deem expedient, and the delegates are requested to bring with them specimens of the fruits of their respective districts.

Ignorance and Credulity.—The Berlin correspondent of the London Times gives some curious illustrations of the gross ignorance of the peasantry in Polish Russia. Lately the popular belief of a great "Rothschild Lottery" has been extensively projected. The story they have received is, that the great Rothschild is under sentence of capitation; but on account of his past services to the monarch of Europe, they have consented to save his life, provided he can find one. To accomplish this he has got upon a grand lottery, to consist of many thousand tickets, the whole of which will be prizes with one fatal exception. Whenever drawn that number must be beheaded in his place. Notwithstanding this contingency, the applications for the tickets have been so numerous as to cause the Government officials considerable trouble.

The Gold Mines of Australia.—The New York Express says there are symptoms of an emigration from here to the gold mines of Australia—but we expect it will never to ours of sufficient importance, numerically, to interfere with the California movement. The clipper ship Helena, recently arrived here from Hobart with a cargo of teas, we see has been put up by her owners for Fort Phillip, to sail on the 25th inst. It is thought she will take out a goodly number of adventurers.

A Carlisle Pilot at Sea.—The brig Dettmar, which arrived at Philadelphia reports that on the voyage, date and locality not stated, but somewhere beyond the Gulf stream, a bird flew aboard the vessel, and lighted on the shoulder of one of the men. It had around its neck a bit of tape, bearing the name, etc., of the brig Maria, sailing from Martinique for Havre, and a request that notice might be given in one of the newspapers that all were well on board. The bird flew off as soon as the message was taken from its neck. Lloyd's list reports the same vessel as having arrived at Havre from Martinique on the 31st of March, just two days after the above message was dispatched.

Singular Parisian Festival.—The annual Gingerbread Fair commenced at the Barrier du Trone, Paris, on Easter Sunday. It has been visited by over 150,000 persons; there are some 400 booths laden with gingerbread, the price of which would reach round the city, if laid in single file.

Cruelty on Board the U. S. Ship Cyane.—A letter in the Norfolk Argus, dated Pensacola, April 25, after stating that the U. S. ship Cyane, during her late cruise, met three times hard and fast ashore, and was with difficulty extricated from peril, adds:

"This morning, through a very heavy rain, for three or four hours, the squadron and the citizens of Pensacola have been treated by the Cyane with the sight of a marine hung up on the inside of the main rigging by the wrists and ankles—a sight little less painful than that of hanging by the neck, and a torture greater to the individual soldier."

The Japan Expedition.—Commodore Perry, the commander of this expedition, visited New Bedford last week for the purpose of obtaining information from our whaling captains in relation to the coast of Japan, and securing their co-operation in the enterprise. Another object which he had in view was to recommend that those of our ships which could make it convenient, should touch at Jeddo during the next season for supplies, thereby facilitating the opening of commercial relations with the country.

A New Steamship.—A new steamship called the James Adger, arrived at Charleston on the 7th inst., in forty-two hours from New York, considered a very creditable performance for a first trip. She is to form one of the regular line of packets between the above ports.

Storm in the West.—Loss of Life.—The Pittsburgh Gazette of the 4th says: "The Western papers received here to-day contain accounts of a dreadful storm which occurred on Friday night last, and which caused great destruction of property. Among other disasters, the town of Leavenworth, Indiana, was nearly destroyed. About forty houses, some of them substantial brick buildings, with thirteen inch walls, were demolished by the violence of the wind. A number of persons were badly injured, and two or three were killed. At various other places the storm was severely felt, and many houses, fences and valuable orchards were destroyed.

Singular Geological Fact.—At Modena, in Italy, within a circle of four miles round the city, whenever the earth is dug, and the workmen arrive at the distance of sixty-three feet, they then come to a bed of chalk, which they bore with an auger five feet deep. They then withdraw from the pit before the auger is removed, and upon its retraction the water bursts up with great violence, and quickly fills the well thus made, the supply of water being affected neither by rains nor drouths. At the depth of fourteen feet are found the ruins of an ancient city, houses, paved streets and mosaic work. Below this again is a layer of earth, and at twenty-six feet walnut trees are found entire, and with leaves and walnuts still upon them. At twenty-eight feet soft chalk is found, and below this vegetables and trees are found.

Congressional.

Washington, May 7, 1852.

Senate.—On motion of Mr. Hunter, the private calendar was postponed for the day.

After petitions and reports, on motion of Mr. Bradbury, the bill to provide that in cases of the sickness or other disability of the Judge of the District Court of the District of Columbia, the duties of that court shall be performed by the senior Assistant Judge of the Circuit Court—was taken up and passed.

On motion of Mr. Clemens, the bill granting land to Alabama to aid in the construction of the Mobile and Girard Railroad, was taken up, amended and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill introduced by Mr. Mallory, the bill granting land to Florida to aid in the construction of a railroad in that State, was taken up, and it was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The 30th rule of the Senate, after a long debate, was amended so as to allow any amendment to be offered to the general appropriation bill, if reported by any of the standing committees.

The Deficiency bill was resumed, and the amendment giving additional aid to the Collins line was advocated by Mr. Cass. He was opposed to putting this appropriation in this bill, because it was no deficiency, but as the Senate had decided otherwise, he would submit. He thought this line now occupied peculiar grounds, recommending it to the favor of the country. It was now a losing concern. While he would vote for this aid to this line, he would desire to stand committed in favor of granting the aid to other lines. He thought it likely that in time the postages by these lines would fully repay the allowance to the line.

It was said that this allowance was protection. It was protection, but a protection to the line, honor and commerce of the country. It might as well be said that sending a convoy under charge of a government vessel was affording protection. This was a great experiment. It is a proposition to build up a self-supporting navy. If it succeeds, a great problem will be solved. Instead of a heavy expensive navy, we will have one paying its own expenses. A steam navy was an enterprise of vast magnitude. The next maritime war would be one of a new character. Our war would be one of defence. The great rival would be only destroyed by destroying her commerce. This would be our policy in such a war.

This kind of vessel, he said, is the one suited for this warfare. They could run away from and overtake any other vessels on the ocean. They can electrify the commerce of our enemies, and are ten times the value of the ordinary ships of the line. He desired no conflict with Great Britain, but ugly girls and sciences. In this contest, so critical in its character, he had the greatest reparance to striking our flag and giving up the commerce of the world to our rival.

Mr. Jones's amendment to reduce the compensation to $25,000 a trip, was then rejected—yeas 21, nays 28, as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Borland, Bradbury, Brodhead, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fetch, Geyer, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Mason, Sebastian, Underwood, Wade, Walker, Waller and Whitcomb—21.

Nays—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Bell, Berrien, Brullary, Bright, Cass, Clarke, Dawson, Dingeiss, Fish, Hale, Hamlin, Houston, James, Mangum, Miller, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Smith, Stockton, Sumner and Upham—28.

Mr. Brooks moved to amend so as to give the present compensation and the amount of postage received from it; it was rejected—yeas 9; nays 36.

Other amendments were offered, and are now being debated.

After my letter was closed the Senate adopted an amendment authorizing Congress to disburse the extra allowance at any time after December, 1854, upon six months' notice; and then adjourned till Monday.

House of Representatives.—Mr. Stanton, of Ky., from the joint committee on printing, submitted a report, consequent upon the passage of the resolution at the House on yesterday, which, after referring to the tenders of Towers and Ritchie, Rives, went on to enumerate the particulars in which the present contractor, Boyd Hamilton, had failed in the performance of his contract, and stated that he had notified the committee of his inability to do so. In this emergency, the committee had proceeded, in conformity with the law of 1846, to have the printing performed by other persons, the terms of which was annexed to the report; which concluded with a declaration that, as the duties of the committee were defined by the law referred to, they can not, if not counteracted by the instructions of the House conflicting therewith.

Mr. Clingman, of N. C., was about commenting on the report, when Mr. Stanly suggested that its further consideration be deferred till Monday next.

Mr. Polk, of Tenn., moved that the further consideration of the report be deferred till Wednesday, and called for the previous question.

The House refused to second the motion for the previous question—yeas 89; nays 98.

Mr. Brown, of Mississippi, gave notice of an amendment that he should move, to the effect that the House of Representatives has a right to direct its Committee on Printing as to the manner in which it shall discharge its duty; and that they should perform such duty in the manner appointed by the House.

It was then agreed to that the subject should be deferred till Wednesday.

A motion was then made and negatived, that the House resolve itself into a committee of the whole, on the special order.

The House resolved itself into a committee of the whole on the private calendar, and disposed of such bills as were not objected to, and which, of course, elicited no debate.

The House having resumed, no motion was made that when it adjourn, it adjourn over till Monday, but there was no quorum voting.

The bill extending the time for the payment of the duties on railroad iron by the Raleigh Railroad Company, was then taken up.

Mr. Jones, of Tenn., objected to proceeding with business in the absence of a quorum.

A motion for a call of the House was made and negatived.

It was then moved that the bill be on the table, upon which the yeas and nays were ordered, and it was rejected—yeas 70, nays 74.

It was again moved that the House adjourn over till Monday; and the yeas and nays having been ordered, it was agreed to—yeas 77, nays 72.

Mr. Stanton, of Tennessee, asked the unanimous consent of the House to take up and pass such bills as had been just reported, and to which there was no objection.

This motion not being agreed to, Mr. Johnson of Ark. renewed the motion for a recess, which being objected to, the House adjourned till Monday.

Origin of Sending Money by Post.—In 1792, when the true British sailor was steadily preparing to defy the French in various parts of the globe at thirty shillings a month, and when British military valor was kindling Tippoo Saib, in India, at a shilling a day, it was felt as a great hardship, that the affluent warriors of both services could not transmit, safely and speedily, to their sweethearts and wives even from one part of the United Kingdom to another their surplus capital. The Government seeing the danger of idleness, having no wife servants to burn holes in their pockets, some good enough to convert a spare little "tin," by means of which such pocket-conflagrations might be extinguished. The monopoly of transmitting money from one place to another was conceded to three gentlemen, in connection with the post-office. Their terms were—eight pence for every pound; but if the sum exceeded two pounds, a stamp duty of one shilling was levied by Government, in addition. Five guineas was the highest amount any one person was thus remitted, and the charge for that sum was four shillings and sixpence, or nearly five per cent., besides the price of the postage of the letter which contained the advice—perhaps a shilling more. Now, happily, the days of monopoly have passed, and Mr. Rowland Hill does the same thing for the odd sixpence, with an odd penny, at a profit to the Government of about £7000 a year, exclusive of the gain derived from the enormous number of letters of advice which post-office orders have created. Right to the Body of a Deceased Wife.—The Paris correspondent of the New York Express says:

"A curious case has been lately submitted to the Civil Tribunal of the Seine. M. Appert, a tradesman, demanded that he should be declared entitled to possess the mortal remains of his wife, who died in 1827, and was buried in the cemetery of Pierre la Chaise. It was stated during the hearing that though he had married a second time, he had made a pedestal annually visiting the tomb of his deceased wife, and that on going there on the 15th All Souls' day, he was surprised to find the tomb demolished, and to learn that the coffin had been removed to the family vault of M. Legras, the deceased's father. A good deal of learned argument was entered into as to whether the remains of a deceased female were the rightful property of her husband or her father; the tribunal finally decided in favor of the husband. It accordingly ordered that, as it was desirable not to disturb the repose of the dead, M. Appert should be declared proprietor of the new tomb to which the remains of his wife had been removed, and that her father should be forbidden to have any thing to do with it. It also condemned the father, M. Legras, to the costs."

Naval.—U. S. Ship Germantown in Danger.—We understand from a letter written by an officer on board the U. S. sloop-of-war John Adams, that the Germantown, flagship of the African squadron, while lying in Kuschni roads, Island of Madeira, on the 23d March, broke adrift from her anchor in consequence of the shackle pins of her chain cables having worked out from the cable by which she was riding, and also from the cable of the second anchor which she let go, and drifted about twice or three times her length till the rocks on the eastern side of the town, where she remained riding by one of her cables and the stream cable and anchor of the John Adams, till 3 p. m., when a gentle breeze from the westward came up, and gave an opportunity of performing a beautiful evolution in the most seamanlike and masterly style, which called forth the highest commendation from every seaman who had the opportunity of witnessing it.

The ship was in a perilous situation for nearly twelve hours, during which time had a gale come on from the south-west her loss seemed almost inevitable. The whole extent of beach was lined with spectators, and every turret of the houses in the town was filled by persons watching with interest the result of the operation which succeeded so admirably. Rocks close astern and on the port hand, with no possibility of getting clear on the port tack, it was of vital importance that no mistake should occur, and that the ship should cast the right way, and sail be made without the loss of a moment's time. We all had our marks, by which we could determine when the ship gathered way and I doubt if there was a single person who did not see her movement through the water at the exact moment it commenced. Every preparation was made beforehand and everything was done just at the right time and in the right manner and style—really, it would have done your heart good to have seen how magnificently she moved out from her dangerous position. I had the pleasure myself of hearing such very flattering things said of American seamanship and skill upon this occasion that I felt them quite refreshing.

A Compliment to the Chair.—The following is from a letter written by John C. Rives, of the firm of Blair & Rives, at Washington: "I have seen the manuscript writings of most of the great men in this country during the last twenty years, and I think I may say that no twenty of them could stand the test of the scrutiny of one-half of the journeymen printers employed in my office." True! And it is only now and then that the most learned and polished of our literary celebrities are not indebted to the genius of the humble type-slicker for the polish which introduces his effusions to the approbation of their readers.

Naval.—The United States brig Perry is at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, under orders for the coast of Africa, and will sail in a few days. The following is a list of her officers: R. L. Page, Lieutenant Commanding; Mr. T. Woolsey, First Lieutenant; John Downs, Jr. Second Lieutenant; Chas. W. Aby, Acting Master; R. J. Farquharson, Passed Assistant Surgeon; S. R. Quackenbush, J. Lee Davis, G. Harrison, Passed Midshipmen.

ENGLAND.

On Thursday, in the House of Commons, the subject of abolishing the stamp on newspapers and the duty on advertisements came up. Milner Gibson made a long speech in favor of abolishing all taxes on knowledge, and introduced a resolution to that effect. The Chancellor of the Exchequer looked upon the question as one of revenue, and stated they could not afford to lose £1,500,000 per annum. At this suggestion the discussion was postponed till Friday week.

Sir J. Pinckington gave notice of a motion to bring in a bill granting a Constitution to New Zealand, and also stated that it was the intention of Government to make an alteration in respect to the Clergy reserves in Canada.

The Peruvian Irgation at London cautions all vessels against proceeding to the Islands of Lobos de Tierra and Lobos Fuera without permission of the Peruvian government, under penalty of confiscation.

J. Wentworth Butler has written a letter to the London Times denying that the Guano Islands of Lobos belong to Peru, as they were not enumerated among her possessions when she declared her independence.

The overland mail from India brings intelligence that the ship Fatilasaigue left Madras on the 3d of December, with 284 male convict emigrants for Mauritius. During a gale on the 23d, the hatches were battered down, and every one perished by suffocation.

A remarkable statement appears in the London Times respecting the course to be pursued by Austria, Prussia and Russia, in the event of Louis Napoleon assuming the title of Emperor. The substance of it is that Prince Schwartzenberg had addressed a circular to the European Courts, expressing his conviction that Napoleon was about to erect an imperial throne, adding that Austria felt no alarm, and advocating the claims of Napoleon to the friendship and alliance of their respective Governments. Prussia answered this circular on the 18th, and Russia on the 20th of February, and the tenor of both replies is that the two powers looked upon the design neither with favor nor hostility; that they believed he is disposed to follow the foreign policy of his uncle, and was now aiming to separate the powers in order to profit hereafter by their separation; but that the three powers, by acting in concert, could keep him in check. Russia and Prussia, however, would recognize him as Emperor, if elected to that office, but merely as an elected monarch, and not as the founder of a Napoleonic dynasty.

[illegible] stamping his [illegible], then address- [illegible] not the urchin: [illegible] of Heaven do but [illegible] or, should he to [illegible] of English [illegible] and UK as well and his own [illegible]

[illegible] his dinner as I described; and for [illegible] the childish quarrel between Prince [illegible] Noll Cromwell was forgotten. The prince, [illegible] received a happier life, and have met a more generous match, had he remembered that quarrel and [illegible] several years after drew from it. But when old King James was dead and Charles sat upon his throne, he seemed to forget that he was but a man, and that his meanest subjects were men as well as he. He wished to have the property and lives of the people of England entirely at his own disposal. But the Puritans, and all who loved liberty rose against him and beat him in many battles, and pulled him down from his throne.

Throughout [illegible] war between the king and nobles on one side, and the people of England on the other, there was a famous leader who did more towards the ruin of royal authority than all the rest. The contest seemed like a wrestling match between King Charles and this strong man, And the king was overthrown.

When the discrowned monarch was brought to trial, that warlike leader sat in the judgment hall. Many judges were present, besides himself; but he alone had the power to save King Charles, or to doom him to the scaffold. After sentence was pronounced, this victorious general was entreated by his own children, on their knees, to rescue his majesty from death.

"No!" he said sternly, "Better that one should perish than that the whole country should be ruined for his sake. It is resolved that he shall die!"

When Charles, no longer a king, was led to the scaffold, his great enemy stood at a window of the royal palace of Whitehall. He beheld the hour of pride and anguish, self-reliance, and misused power, as he laid his head upon the block. He looked with a steadfast gaze while a black-veiled executioner lifted the fatal axe, and smote off that anointed head at a single blow.

"It is a righteous deed," perhaps he said to himself. "Now Englishmen may enjoy their rights."

At night, when the body of Charles was laid in the coffin in a gloomy chamber, the General entered, lighting himself with a torch. He gleamed showed that he was now growing old; his visage was scarred with the many battles in which he had led the van; his brow was wrinkled with care and with the continual exercise of stern authority. Probably there was not a single trait either of aspect or manner that belonged to the little Noll who had battled so stoutly with Prince Charles. Yet this was he!

He lifted the coffin lid, and caused the light of his torch to fall upon the dead monarch's face. Then, probably, his mind went back over all the marvelous events that had brought the hereditary king of England to this dishonored end, and he had raised himself, an humble individual, to the possession of kingly power. He was a king, though without the empty title or the glittering crown.

"Why was it," said Cromwell to himself—or might have said—as he gazed at the pale features in the coffin—"why was it, that this great king fell, and that poor Noll Cromwell has gained all the power of the realm?"

And, indeed, why was it?

King Charles had fallen, because, in his manhood, the same as when a child, he disdained to feel that every human creature was his brother. He deemed himself a superior being, and fancied that his subjects were created only for a king to rule over. And Cromwell rose, because, in spite of his many faults, he mainly fought for the rights and freedom of his fellow men; and therefore the poor and the oppressed all lent their strength to him.

A DAUGHTER'S MARRIAGE.

The departure of a son from beneath the paternal roof does not present any spectacle of desolation. Masculine life has, from infancy, an individuality, an independence, a freedom, so to say, which is essentially wanting to female existence. When a son abandons his parents, to create for himself a separate interest, this separation causes not little interruption in their mutual relations. A man marries, and still maintains his friendships, his habits, and his filial affections. Nothing is changed in his life; it is only an additional tie. His departure is consequently no more simple departation; while the departure of a young girl, become the wife of a few hours, is a real desertion—a desertion with all its duties and feelings still fresh about it. In one word, the son is a sapling which has always grown apart from the trunk; while the daughter has, on the contrary, formed an essential portion of it, and to detach her from her place is to mutilate the tree itself. You have surrounded her youth with unspeakable tenderness—the exhaustless tenderness of your paternal and maternal hearts; and she, in turn, has appeared to pour forth upon you both an equally inexhaustible gratitude; you loved beyond all the world, and she seemed to cling to you with a proportionate affection. But one day, one illomened day, a man arrives, invited and welcomed by yourselves; and this man of your own choice carries off to his domicile every your gentle dove, far from the soft nest which your love had made for her, and to which hers had clung.

On the morrow you look around you, you listen, you await, you seek for something which you cannot find. The cage is empty; the tuneful linnet has flown; silence has succeeded to its melodious warblings; it does not come as it did only on the previous morning, fluttering its perfumed wings about your pillow, and awakening you by its soft caresses. Nothing remains but a painful calm, a painful silence, a painful void. The chamber of the absent darling offers only that disorder which it is so melancholy to see created by the joyous and impatient disorder of occupation, but that of abandonment. Maidenly garments scattered here and there; girlish fancies no longer prised; chairs heaped with half-worn dresses; drawers left partially open, and ransacked to their remotest corners; a bed in which no one has slept; a crowd of charming trifles, which the young girl scorned, but which the young wife despises, and which are littered over the carpet like the feathers dropped by the dinnet, when the hawk made the timid bird its prey. Such is the depressing sight which wrings tears from a mother's heart.

Nor is this all: from this day she occupies only the second place in the affections of her daughter. And she, to that merely until the happiness of another has taught her whom she weeps to neglect her. This man, this stranger, unknown, scarcely noticed a few months previously, has assumed a right over affections which were once almost hers alone. A few hours of fleeting, and it may be of treacherous, in a great degree, suffice to efface twenty long years of watchfulness, of care, and of self-abnegation; and they have not only rendered her the first and best beloved, but they have also deprived her of the filial caresses, the gentle attentions, the sweet presence of the heart's idol, whom alone they destined to him for life. Nothing is left to the mother but the sad attachment of respect. All the warmth, all the confidence, all the fervency of love, is crossed by the husband, to whom he is alike obedience and devotedness.

If she loves him, she leaves her home to follow his fortunes to the end of the world. If she will follow him, she will perform the same duties. Nature and law alike impose the obligation; and the people of England on the other, there was a famous leader who did more towards the ruin of royal authority than all the rest. The contest seemed like a wrestling match between King Charles and this strong man, And the king was overthrown.

When the discrowned monarch was brought to trial, that warlike leader sat in the judgment hall. the morning, half in shadow the hill and meadow white fingers parted golden-hearted; ruins hoary
ing glory,
from the bushes
pleasant thrushes;
little baby,
dise, it may be,
heaven above her,
chooses but love her!
of earth for singing, always wishing feeding our repeating, freely, ever loving;
ry eyes
t tresses,
te arms, made the light caresses,
lips that knew no word of doubting;
Often kissing, never pouting;
ady even in completeness,
Overfull in childish sweetness;
the was our little baby,
too pure for earth, it may be,
to us who while about her
we could not do without her.

When the morning, half in shadow,
Sat along the hill and meadow,
And with milk-white fingers parted
...on rose, golden-hearted;
...ing over ruins hoary
...ry purple morning-glory,
And outstanding from the bushes
Singing larks and pleasant thrushes;
That's the time our little baby,
Rising here for heaven, it may be,
Turning from our bitter weeping,
Closed her eyes as when in sleeping,
And her white hands on her bosom
Folded like a summer blossom.

Now the little one doth go on,
Strewed with roses, bear to Zion
Go, at best a pleasant meadow
Through the valley of the shadow;
Take her softly, holy angels
Past the ranks of God's evangels;
Past the saints and martyrs holy
To the Earthborn, meek and lowly,
We would have our precious blossom
Softly laid in Jesus' bosom. [Sartain's Mag.

Judge Nelson's Decision.

...expedient for the Defendants in the ...brought by the Church South to carry ...that case by an Appeal to the Supreme ...of the United States.

This question, it is understood, will come before the General Conference at its present session. Its importance demands a calm investigation, and forms an ample apology, if an apology be needed, for setting forth reasons for an opinion deliberately formed and conscientiously held by one who, in common with his brethren, feels himself a party concerned in this issue, and is jealous for the honor of the church of choice.

The expense of an appeal to the Supreme Court, as I am informed, will not be less than ...ten thousand dollars; a sum, if properly ...ted, sufficient to pay the annual disciplinary allowance of seven superannuated ministers forever. Out of whose pockets will these ...thousand dollars come? Of course, the ...ense will not fall upon the nominal parties in the suit, nor upon the traveling ministry whose agents they are. The money must come from the funds of the Book Concern—...sacredly pledged to specific purposes. They have been equally well feed, and must earn their money. They sail, however, upon a different tack. Methodism, at any rate Northern Methodism, does not appear quite so glorious. In fact, the only point in which the opposing counsel resemble each other is their length, that being deemed on either side essential, in view of the greatness of the case, and received by the multitude as an equivalent for depth.

At last, for all things earthly must have an end, the pleadings are finished; and in due time some score or two of poor old men and women, who were claimants on the funds in dispute, having died in the interim, the judgment of the court is pronounced. What is it? It needs no prophet to answer that question. It must be either: first, a simple affirmation of the decision in the court below; or, secondly, an affirmation based upon other arguments; or, thirdly, a reversal of Judge Nelson's decision, and a decree declaring that the South has no claim. Suppose the latter. What then? Oh, then we are conquerors! Io triumphe! Shall we make a handsome present to our brethren—a present, a gratuity? The entire South spurns the idea. What is not her's legally, she will not take as a charity; and the Methodist Episcopal Church is placed in the attitude, from which she can not escape in all coming time, of holding what she acknowledges does not belong to her. It will stick to her like the poisoned shirt of Nessus, and eat out her good name, and her self respect. It will be the gnawing of a worm that will not die.

But there is little hope, fear I should have said, of such a reversal. Suppose, then, the decision is confirmed by a long argument from the classic pen of Chief Justice Taney. Of what use is it? It takes a very different view of Methodist economy, but one perhaps as erroneous as Judge Nelson's. At any rate, both decisions having been published, every man will have an undoubted right to choose between them; to prefer Taney to Nelson, or Nelson to Taney, while the fundamental principles of Methodism rest upon a foundation a little more solid, I thank God, than the logic or the rhetoric of the one or the other.

But let us look at the moral aspect of the proposed appeal. We have hitherto been the defendants in a suit at law; not because we denied the claims of the plaintiffs to be just; but because, as we told the world, we thought there was a legal barrier in the way. If any man takes the position that the widows and orphans of deceased Southern preachers forfeited their claims because of the Louisville Convention, or in any other way, short of expulsion for cause, or voluntary withdrawal, that man has my pity, but I cannot stop to argue with him. No; we admitted fully and frankly that the South had a claim in equity, and that claim would have been liquidated had a few more preachers voted in favor of altering the restrictive rule. We have professed to be—I quote the language of the General Conference of 1848—"exceedingly desirous of effecting an amicable settlement of said claim." Quoting again the language of the supreme judicatory of the Church, we said: "The whole Christian world will expect ministers of the Lord Jesus Christ to adopt the most peaceful and conciliatory measures for the settlement of any claim that may be urged against them." Very good. We are exceedingly desirous of an amicable settlement. The whole Christian world, and the infidel world, too, for that matter, have a right to expect from us the most peaceful and conciliatory measures for the settlement of this claim. How is it proposed to gratify the world's reasonable expectation? Why, forsooth, by an appeal to Cæsar; by becoming de facto, plaintiffs in a suit at law! Plaintiffs in a suit at law? Yes, verily, and plaintiffs, not as in the case of the Church South, who sued for what they believed to be their rights, but plaintiffs for the purpose of withholding what we have, over and over again admitted to belong to those whom, by prosecuting the appeal, we shall place in the honorable position of defendants.

This is what the world will think and say, should we carry up this appeal. Of course, we shall not admit that we are actuated by any such improper motives. It is not to keep money that does not belong to us that we propose to appeal. Why, then? Let us look into the matter a little more closely. In a Northern city, before Northern judges, after eloquent pleadings on both sides, and we certainly had as much legal acumen, and as much eloquence on our side as they had, the decision was given against us. The legal barrier was removed. Judge Nelson cut the knot if he did not untie it, and now there is nothing to hinder us from making our professions good. But, say our brethren, we do not like the Judge's process of argumentation. He seems to assume that the General Conference of 1844 did not exceed their legitimate powers by the adoption of the report of the celebrated committee of nine. Is this the fair statement of the case? We propose to appeal, then, not from the Judge's conclusion, but from the process of reaching by which he reaches it! In other words, if the Judge had given his decision without his argument, we should have had no ground for an appeal.

For myself, now, I am not able to see why we should regard the Judge's verbiage, his reasoning, his logic, with any more sensitiveness than we do his rhetoric or his grammar; and I am unable to conceive of a more ridiculous position than that in which the Church will be placed by assuming, in the eyes of the world, the attitude of an appellant, not from a judicial decision, but from the mode of reasoning adopted by a man whose ignorance of Methodism is perfectly transparent.

But, did not the General Conference of '44 exceed their powers in decreeing "that should the delegates from the Conferences in the slaveholding States find it necessary to unite in a distinct ecclesiastical connection," they might do so on certain specific conditions? That question is now answered in the negative. But how was it answered when it came officially before the Annual Conferences, immediately succeeding the General Conference referred to? The question was on the alteration of the sixth restrictive rule, for the avowed purpose of carrying out the plan proposed for the division of the Church. The measure passed on from Conference to Conference, until the entire circle was complete. The vote stood, as the record shows: In the affirmative, 2135; in the negative, 1070; a majority of nearly two to one; not quite enough to alter the restrictive rule, but very sufficient to endorse the doings of the General Conference, and sanction the division of the Church. True, at the session of that body in 1848, the doings of '44 were repudiated, and henceforth it is to be understood that there exists no power in the General Conference to pass any act which authorizes or sanctions a division of the Church. Henceforth, say, for evidently such a declaration can have no force with reference to a division already effected, and sanctioned by an immense majority of the members of the Annual Conferences. Certainly it does seem to me that those who voted to adopt the report of the committe of nine in the General Conference, or for its ratification in the Annual Conferences, ought to have a better reason for appealing from Judge Nelson's decision than that he seems to think now as they did then.

But I must bring this article to a close. I will do so by a little epilogue. Messrs. Norton and Southard are both members of my church. They were partners in business as were their fathers before them. Some time ago they had a misunderstanding, not so much indeed between themselves as among their children, and each has a large family. The quarrel waxed very warm. Its merits have nothing to do with the question. There were faults on both sides, but I must say that my prejudices were rather in favor of Norton, although Southard is a warm-hearted brother, and perhaps pays his class-money rather more freely than his partner. At length they separated. Southard and his family set up for themselves and requested their share of the stock, the accumulation of their mutual labors. Norton professed his willingness to make the division, but there was a legal difficulty in the way, arising from restrictions in a will executed jointly by the fathers of the firm before their death. A suit was brought before a justice of the peace, who listened to the statements on both sides, and carefully examined the will aforesaid. After taking due time for consideration, his honor gave his decision in favor of an equitable division of the effects proportionately to the size of the two families. I was heartily glad of this, for the dispute had been very disastrous to the cause of religion among us; was a common topic of discourse at the corners of the streets, and in the neighboring barber-shops and bar-rooms; and my entire membership was fast ranging itself under two banners—the Nortonians and the Southardites.

A day or two after the decision I met Norton and congratulated him that the barrier was now out of the way, and he could be honest without wounding his conscience. To my surprise he told me he had serious thoughts of appealing the case to a higher court. "But," said I, "my brother, on what grounds will you do that? Did you not profess to be anxious to settle this question on amicable terms? Do you object to his honor's decision?" "Why, no," said he, "not that exactly. The fact is, I want to give poor Southard his share; but—but—that justice is such an 'old fogy'—he boggles so in his decision—his views of the compact between my father and Southard are ridiculous, and it seems to me he must have read the will through green spectacles."

I was indignant, and spoke sharply: "Norton, listen to me; I have always been your friend to such an extent that some have accused me of undue prejudice against Southard, and, in fact, I have had a very mean opinion of the practices of some of his children. But listen; so sure as you become the aggressor in a suit at law, I will have you tried for a violation of the general rules. You have got just such a decision as you professed to desire. The justice's spectacles have nothing to do with the merits of the case, neither has his boggling, and I admit he did boggle, if I understood what you mean by the word. But, mark; the circumstances do not justify you in bringing a suit before another tribunal; and if you do it, I give you fair warning, you shall be expelled."

I adverted above to the ridiculous position in which the Church will be placed by assuming the attitude of an appellant, not from a legal decision, but from the logic by which that decision was reached. I think, however, I could endure this. With the help of grace I might bear the ridicule of the world as a constituent part of the body against which scorn would point his slow, unmoving finger. But to be branded with dishonor! to be charged, and that justly, with belonging to a Church that seeks to withhold, on so frivolous a pretext, what we acknowledge to be just and right; a Church that will consent to do in its collective capacity what we would expel an individual member for doing, is to make the cup a little too bitter. I can not drink it.

"Walk in wisdom toward them that are w...."—St. Paul.

Why not the preaching of the Gospel, the chief instrumentality appointed of God for the reclamation of the world, be attended with greater success? Why do not hearers to whom the Gospel is preached, generally, universally, rush into the kingdom of God? These certainly are very grave questions, and demand our most serious attention.

It can not be because it is contrary to God's purposes; for the Scriptures abound with passages assuring us of God's willingness to save all who come to Him through Christ. He has declared that he willeth not the death of any, but rather that all should turn to him and live.

It is not because of a want of efficiency in the Gospel, the remedial agencies employed. The Gospel is a perfect scheme, perfect in all its parts; devised by Infinite wisdom, and executed by Almighty power; in every way adapted to secure the great end of its institution—the salvation of the world. It can not be because it does not come to us fully authenticated; the types and shadows of a former dispensation were all realized in the person and of its great Author. Prophecies attest it, and miracles confirm it. The birth, life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ, independent of any other testimony, constitute a body of evidence such as no other truth can furnish.

Nor can it be because of any natural, invincible obtuseness either of the heart or mind of man; for the Gospel is designed for man as he is; and in every way adapted to his wants and his capacities.

Why, then, do so few comparatively receive the truth in the love of it? There are various causes which operate to keep sinners from embracing the Gospel. The chief of which is to be found in the naturally depraved state of the will and the affections. "The carnal mind is enmity against God, not subject to his will, neither indeed can be." The natural enmity of the heart, doubtless constitutes the remote or primary cause; but we have already said that the Gospel is adapted to man as he is; and now our inquiry respects the proximate cause or causes; and we ask again, why do so few comparatively receive the truth in the love of it? Or, in other words, why is not the preaching of the Gospel attended with greater success? We answer; it is because of the want of faithfulness on the part of the Church, both in her ministry, and in her membership. This is a painful fact, a humiliating confession; but the fact cannot be denied, and the confession ought to be made.

We propose to notice our unfaithfulness as a Church in two respects. And first: we are deficient in the purity of our example. Doubtless, if the Church of God were pure as she is called to be pure, the evangelization of the world would speedily be accomplished. We can not be too deeply impressed with the importance of a proper Christian example, and our obligations to God and our fellow-men in this regard. We have said that the preaching of the Gospel is the chief instrumentality employed to save our world; but there are other means auxiliary to the preaching of the Word; and among the most potent of these is the example of the Church.

Our Saviour, by various beautiful and striking figures, has illustrated this important truth, and sought to impress it on our minds. In addressing his infant church on the mount, he said: "Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted? It is thenceforth good for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under foot of men." He compared the church to a city set upon a hill, whose light could not be hid; to a lighted candle placed upon a candlestick, that it may give light to all who are in the house; at the same time admonishing them: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven." Again, he compared the church to a little leaven hid in three measures of meal, till the whole lump be leavened.

Now, these figures have been employed, and these illustrations given, in order to impress our minds in reference to a proper Christian example. And we find in reading the Epistles that our Saviour is closely followed by all the holy Apostles, who have given us line upon line and precept upon precept, touching this very point. Oh, that the Church in all her branches had treasured up this lesson in her heart of hearts! But we have been unmindful of our high vocation.

The Church, by her supineness and conformity to the world, has, in a measure, quenched the light of pure example, which else might have filled the whole earth with the glory of its resplendent beams. Let us wake up to the importance of this subject. Let us never for a moment forget the fearfully responsible position we occupy before God and man in this regard. Now, all that is necessary on the part of the Church in order to a proper Christian example is consistency; that is to say, an exact correspondence, an agreement, between our profession and our practice.

We are deficient, in the second place, as preachers. We do not now, of course, speak of those deficiencies of style which so many of us deplore, but can not remedy; but we would speak of that want of directness and point which characterizes too much of the preaching of the present day. There can be no doubt but that a want of directness in preaching the Gospel tends greatly to prevent its legitimate results. Even when there is no objection on the score of orthodoxy, this is frequently the case.

A too general way of preaching the Gospel prevails to an alarming extent. We seem to be afraid of being thought personal. The preacher who is not personal, that is, who does not adapt his discourse to the moral condition of his audience, and make a personal application of it, as far as he can do so, consistently with a proper regard for decorum, ought to leave the pulpit. It is the imperative duty of the minister of Christ to be personal—direct—"Thou art the man."

Again; there is not unfrequently on the part of the preacher a seeming desire to divest the Law of its terrors, and to adapt it to the vague and vitiated notions of men of the world, lest, forsooth, he should give offence to ears refined. And this, no doubt, is the reason why it sometimes falls out that when we look to hear a sermon, we are mocked with a moral lecture or philosophical disquisition. That the early Methodist preachers were more successful in winning souls to Christ than the preachers of the present day will not be questioned by any one who is conversant with the history of our Church. Now, this is a problem which it behooves us of the present day to solve. Their success was not the result of superior mental endowments or literary cultivation. Very generally they were uneducated men; some of them awkward, no doubt. They were not more pious than ministers of the present day. Why, then, were they more successful? The question, it seems to us, admits of but one answer. Their preaching was more direct, pointed, and practical than ours. They invariably presented the law in connection with the Gospel; and while their hearers listened to the muttering thunders of Sinai and beheld the lightnings that were emitted from the mount that burned with fire; they were pointed to "Jesus, the Mediator of the new Covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than the blood of Abel." The early Methodist preachers, leaving out all extraneous matter, preached "the Word with signs following."

But it is thought by some that the kind of preaching which was suited to those days is not adapted to the present time. This, we think, is a mistake. On the contrary, we think that the difference in the kind of preaching sufficiently accounts for the difference in the success of the early preachers, compared with the preachers of the present day. In many other respects we have the vantage ground. Only give all the learning and eloquence of the Methodist pulpit of the present day a proper direction, only let us universally adopt the pointed and practical style of those who have preceded us, and a new era will soon dawn on our Church.

While we fear that the evil of which we have been speaking is on the increase, we are happy to know that there are still very many exceptions among us; some of them occupying the most important posts in our Conference; and all of them, as far as their labors and influence extend, seeking to give proper tone and spirit to the preaching of the present day. But my sheet is full.

Let us as a Church look to the purity of our example, and as ministers of the Gospel, let us resolve to know nothing but Jesus Christ, and him crucified.

The Wearing of Gold—How far Sinful.

NO. II.

DEAR BRO. McTYEIRE: My second objection to Brother Jethro's article in favor of the harmlessness of "wearing gold" as an ornament, is that it is directly opposed to that part of the fundamental law of our Church, which prohibits all who desire to continue therein from "putting on gold and costly apparel;" and also because it is in opposition to our express statutory law on the subject of "Dress," as found in section viii. of our Discipline. In this statutory law of our Church we are instructed to insist on the rules concerning dress—to give no encouragement to superfluity of apparel—to receive none into the Church till they have left off superfluous ornaments"—I am fully persuaded that our Discipline occupies safe and scriptural ground on this subject, and these rules have long been approved by the good and great of our Church, and their legitimate operation has had a very salutary effect in checking the tendency to worldly pride and vanity among thousands of our membership. And I think Brother Jethro assumes a fearful amount of responsibility when he sets himself up in opposition to their enforcement. I wonder if it can be possible that he is a Methodist preacher, who has given in his adherence to our Discipline, and solemnly promised, at God's altar, "not to mend our rules, but keep them; not for wrath, but conscience sake?" If so, there is a strange inconsistency in his course.

My third objection to Brother Jethro's article is that its tendency will be to lead the members of our Church to violate their most solemn religious vows. When they enter the church as probationers, they pledge themselves to "continue to evidence their desire of salvation, first by doing no harm, by avoiding evil of every kind;" and among the interdicted evils enumerated is that of "putting on of gold and costly apparel." In their baptismal vow this abandonment of the superfluous fashions of the world is most solemnly renewed, for at the baptismal font they "promise, in the presence of the whole congregation," that they will "renounce the vain pomp and glory of the world, with all covetous desires of the same, and the carnal desires of the flesh, so that they will not follow or be led by them;" and further, that they will "obediently keep God's holy will and commandments, and walk in the same all the days of their lives." But perhaps Bro. Jethro will rule us out here, by asserting that the wearing "of gold and pearls and costly array" is not included in "the vain pomp and glory of the world," and has nothing to do with the "carnal desires of the flesh," and is not contrary to "God's holy will and commandments." But if we are thus summarily deprived of the company of our near relation on this point, it will afford us no little consolation to know that we are left in the company of all the great and good expositors of our excellent Discipline. If the wearing of "gold and pearls and costly array" is not included in "the vain pomp and glory of the world," will Brother Jethro have the kindness to tell us to what category it does belong? Once more under this head. When candidates for membership in our Church have sustained an honorable probation of "at least six months," and are proposed for reception into full fellowship, among other prerequisites they are to be examined before the Church, "and give satisfactory assurance of their willingness to observe and keep the rules of the Church;" and one of the rules referred to is that one which forbids the "putting on of gold and costly apparel." But Brother Jethro would have us believe that this solemn ceremony of receiving members into full fellowship, so far as this last item is concerned, is all a mere form, and after our members have given this pledge before the Church, to observe and keep our rules, they may go on and put on as much gold and costly apparel as they please, without violating their solemn...filling their consciences.

There is but one more point in Je...ticle that I shall notice at ...tance of his rather scattered ...

Harry. De Baptist Church, sir.

Miss. Where is your Society, Harry?

Harry. Georgia, sir.

Miss. Well, Harry, that is a long way from you. How long since you left there?

Harry. Ten years, sir.

Miss. I fear, Harry, you are not benefited by your Society. Would it not be best for you, now, as we are trying to get up a little class, and to do something to save all these people here at home, to join in with us and help us?

Harry. No, sir; I can't do dat.

Miss. Why, Harry? You have no Society, there are none of your people near the Columbus, and that is too far. You could some experience, might be useful to us, could help your fellow servants a great deal. Your wife, too, is a pious woman, and had joined our class, and I think it would be much the best. Have you a letter from the church in Georgia?

Harry. No, sir, I has no letter, but I can join de Methodist; de preacher at Columbus say, if Master give me a letter, he will receive me in de church dar, and I must try and get dat.

Miss. How far is it to Columbus?

Harry. Six miles, sir.

Miss. Six miles, and all this prairie road to go through, is a long road and a bad one, since, Harry.

Harry. Yes, sir; but I must try to do de way.

Miss. Well, Harry, as you will not join us you must not oppose us; you must help our little class in their prayer meetings on de Sabbath, and talk to the children about the good we do, etc. We must try to do a little good.

I arrived here this morning, and in crossing the street from the hotel was passed at right angles by a friend—I thought I knew it, even in Gotham. He was thinking the same thing and turned about. It was my good friend Dr. Lee of Richmond, Va. So you see, I am well off for company, and as the editor of the Western Advocate has written it, the Church South will have some representation in Boston, in the way of "lookers on."

BOSTON, May 12, 1852.

DEAR BRO.: The "City of Notions" is not a city of pleasant latitude this time of year. Overcoats are in common requisition, and while I write the raw, searching atmosphere and cold rain without reminds one of January rather than May.

Yesterday was interesting in the General Conference for the discussion on Bp. Hamline's resignation. The Bishop and his friends consider him hopelessly superannuated: he has not preached since Sept. 1850, and attended but few Conferences. In accordance with his low church doctrines on the Episcopacy, as advanced in Bp. Andrew's case in 1844, he now acts. A few were for declining to accept his resignation, and giving him a furlough for rest and recruiting indefinitely; and let him go down to the grave a Bishop. But a very large majority, probably nine-tenths of the Conference, were for accepting the Report of the Committee on Episcopacy which received his resignation, with suitable expressions of sympathy and commendation.

The speeches advocating the acceptance of his resignation bore mainly on the point of establishing a precedent and practically declaring a principle—"Once a Bishop not always a bishop." Dr. Bangs led off on this, and was followed by a number of strong reiterations. In the midst of discussion a man of age rose to speak, who drew the instant attention of the house. His head was not as white as he seemed in other respects old. It appeared, as I looked down on him from the gallery, to be of that bushy, defying sort, growing out of a strong, obstinate head that won't yield to frosty time. His voice was strong, but cracked, and his address direct, and even roughly pertinent. His name was told me as Peter Cartwright, D. D. He said the brethren on the other side were influenced by sympathy: that as for real sympathy, "if you strip it of all its glossary, and so forth," he had as much as any of them. Somebody interrupting him, he told them just to hold on: they might let off their gas directly. He was for accepting the Bishop's resignation. It was his doctrine and their doctrine that the Episcopacy was an office and not an order. Now a fair case had occurred, and he had been looking, for one, at this Conference to set themselves right before the world: the time had come, yes, the set time to do it. From intimate correspondence with the Bishop, he believed he desired his resignation to be accepted, and thus free him from the burden and responsibility of an office he could not discharge. Another speaker remarked that the advocacy of this doctrine made Dr. Hamline a bishop, and now he might impressively quit it by his voluntary retirement. And still another, that having preached this low church doctrine, he might be allowed to practice it—that doctors should take their own physic. With all the precedent to be set, and denying the doctrine "Once a bishop always a bishop," weighed much. Dr. Durbin, however, well remarked, near the close of the discussion, that the precedent in this case would not be of any value. It only established that a bishop was competent, for cause, to resign, and the General Conference competent to accept his resignation. The power or the right of the Conference to require a resignation was not touched.

The confusion of one of the ablest speakers, a Baltimore delegate, was rather amusing, who repeatedly used the name of Bp. Andrew instead of Bp. Hamline. And so it is, that L. L. Hamline is no more a Bishop of the M. E. Church. High and doubtless just eulogies were passed upon him, in the act of dissolving. He sits on the same bench with his brother presbyters. Should he ever recover health, some of these once stationed may station him in the itinerant field. He has been consistent, and this fact, though qualified as above stated, will have some influence in counteracting the objections of those who look upon Methodist Episcopacy with distrust, complain of its supremacy and refer as evidence to our ordination service.

The Episcopal bench will have to be considerably enforced. Only three now, and two of them old and hard-worked men. The Church, in so numerous, pious and intelligent a body of ministers, can not lack men for the office. May the Lord dispose of the lots that shall be cast.

The elections for editors will be apt to bring in some new hands; two of the incumbents of the past term are talked of for the bishopric, and another, Hunter, of Pittsburg, will, I understand, not suffer his name to be put up for another term. This will be regretted—by the South. May his successor be of the same good spirit.

Dr. Lee's application, in behalf of the Church South, to be allowed to copy the Conference proceedings down to the time of separation, was presented ... by Dr. McClintock. The ... on motion of Mr. Collins, of Baltimore, laid on the table—for the present.

Mr. Inskip's case is now before the Conference, on an appeal from the action of the Ohio Conference censuring him for his advocacy of pewed churches and things connected with it. Unfortunately, he has written a book! After long reading of evidence, Mr. Inskip began his complaint against his Conference, and was making a good speech when the hour of adjournment came. I am anxious to see how the General Conference will dispose of this matter. If they sustain the Ohio Conference's position, then the Discipline on the subject is to be understood as mandatory, not advisory. It may strike you as singular that the very church in which the General Conference meet, and this case is being tried, is a pewed Church! The appellant has, therefore, the advantage of position.

At this early stage no information can be given about the law-suit, whether there is to be an appeal or not. The probabilities are greatly in favor of no appeal. Those who were present at the Pittsburgh General Conference are struck with the difference between the conciliatory and conservative spirit of this body and that. Four ministers of the Church South are here "as lookers on in Boston." We sit in the gallery, or outside the bar, read the papers, hear, see, and board at good hotels: all of which suits us well.

The Commissioners of the Church South are disposed to be as accommodating as possible in terms of final settlement. Further litigation will be without provocation, as it must also be without profit, and will meet a current of opposition in much of the people, the membership and ministry. A stronger article I have seldom read on any subject than one that appeared in Zion's Herald at the opening of the Conference, dissuading from an appeal. I have heard it attributed to a distinguished member of the New York Conference.

Kossuth is here, and continues to receive attentions and substantial aid. He delivers an address, his last one, positively, so say the papers, in Faneuil Hall, on the night of the 14th inst. The Hungarian bonds take well with the free soil men. Within the last two weeks New England has contributed about $12,000 to his cause.

Yesterday I took a walk through Boston Common, and with the nephew of the preacher, paid a visit to the old elm tree under which, sixty years ago, Jesse Lee preached the first Methodist sermon in New England. The tree is well cared for. Besides a fence round it, its trunk is braced with iron bands, and its large limbs supported by hog-chains. It was full of life, and budding out in every branch and twig. Jesse Lee struck his plough into a hard soil. Unlike the South and West, the place was already occupied by sects which, however willing to fraternize with Methodism in its better days, showed it no favor when "Jacob was small." But the handful of corn in the top of the mountain lived and flourished, and its fruit shakes like Lebanon. Something has been said in Conference about holding a celebration under this old elm tree.

Yours, truly, H. N. M.

PAPAL INTOLERANCE.—We notice among the proceedings of the General Conference, North, a resolution to the purport that it is the duty of the Protestant world to secure, by all peaceable and Christian means, the same toleration in Papal States, that Papists enjoy in States where Protestanism is the dominant religion.

The public sentiment of the Protestants ought to be aroused upon this great and grave question. It is a foul blot upon Romanism, that she, in this particular especially, is not willing to do unto others as she desires and claims that others should do unto her. Religious intolerance is behind—a whole century behind—the eighteenth civilization and broad-minded philanthrophy of our times.

When Archbishop Hughes was in Europe last year, he lauded and glorified the liberal policy and political charity of the institutions of the United States, that allowed the most perfect religious liberty to every citizen. Why does not the Bishop, and those who write and talk after the same fashion in the Romish Church, do something to promote religious liberty in Italy, Spain, Portugal, Cuba, and other countries where Romanism is dominant? Why, if they have the true light, are they afraid of the darkness of Protestants? Darkness cannot overpower light. If they can exhibit a truer theology, or better specimens of Christian living than can the Protestants, why should they be afraid to come into fair and open conflict, and contrast with Protestants? W.

WOODVILLE, MISS.—Bro. Forsyth writes that they have been visited with a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and a goodly number have been added to the Church in Woodville. Such notices are cheering to the friends of Zion, and, above all, to the laborious and self-sacrificing minister of Christ.

RELIGIOUS ANNIVERSARIES IN NEW YORK.—These celebrations are now taking place in the city of New York. It appears from the annual report of the American Society for the Amelioration of the Jews, that their receipts during the past year were $12,725. 7 missionaries, 4 colporteurs, 3 students and 3 agents have been employed; over 1000 households visited; 100 Bibles, and a large number of tracts and Testaments, distributed. Ten Israelites have been converted and 30 become constant inquirers. All the previous converts, except one, sustain their profession. The new Board of Directors will commence their duties with the next fiscal year, with 22 laborers.

The Seamen's Friend Society celebrated its anniversary on Monday evening, the 10th. The report states that since last May, 3027 sailors have been admitted to "The Home," which makes an aggregate since the establishment of that institution—10 years since—of 33,527. During the past year, 990 have signed the pledge; 370 incbriates have been reformed; 211 become officers of ships, and a large majority warriors. The amount of funds at present on hand in their savings bank, Wall street, is $5,506,000, of which upwards of $1,000,000 was deposited by common sailors. During the year 218 shipwrecked and destitute sailors have been clothed and furnished with $683 in cash. Rev. E. L. Magoon delivered the annual address.

An Unsanctified Ministry.

"I have," said an influential lay brother, "great respect for the ministry, but I confess nothing shocks me so much as one of those preachers that can preach on Sunday, swop horses on Monday, argue a law case on Tuesday, and look after his saw-mill the same day." "No man," saith the apostle, "that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier." No Church has declared more distinctly than our own in favor of a ministry wholly set apart to the office of "pastors and teachers." The very motion of an itinerant ministry would seem to forbid any other engagement. It also precludes all chance of gain, and throws upon the Church the whole responsibility of their support. So it ought to be. The apostle address the Levitical priesthood who lived by the altar, and who had received no part of the divided inheritance to prove the duty of the Church to the premises: "Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel." 1 Cor. 9:13. No stronger evidence that he was wholly devoted to the one work can be cited, than the fact that the only exception to this course is recorded—that of his working with his own hands at Corinth, with Aquila and Priscilla, at tent-making, for a very short time, and not "for three years," as is often added.

This remarkable fact the apostle alludes to in his First Letter to the Corinthians, as just quoted, and makes it the occasion of enforcing and declaring plainly the duty of the Church to support her ministry, and their right to be supported by her.

And again, he mentions it in his Second Letter to the Corinthians, and apologizes very delicately for their neglect: "For what is it wherein ye were inferior to other churches, except that I myself was not burdensome to you? forgive me this wrong." 2 Cor. 12-13. It is very clear that the Corinthians were disposed to impute to the preacher intersested motives, and he met the imputation by not allowing them to contribute to his necessities—a state of things not now existing. At the same time he took care to declare equally against a secular ministry and a stingy church.

The devotion of a ministry wholly to God's work, the self-denial and the poverty which must always characterize such a life, so practical an exhibition of faith in God, and the humility of a condition of seeming dependence upon the voluntary offerings of the people are sublime facts which impress the world, and which give to the preacher a moral staple that in itself is substance to his doctrine and eloquence to his mouth. This spectacle and weight of a devoted ministry has, beyond every thing else, spread Methodism throughout the country. Just in proportion as this living argument for the reality of religion is kept clearly before the world, will the Church prosper. On the other hand, when even the calling of the minister becomes so mixed up with other things as that the parson is not to be distinguished from the planter, nor the politician from the preacher, the power of the pulpit and the duty of support upon the part of the people become equally questionable.

Mr. Wesley considered lay teachers or preachers to be another class of agents furnished by Him who "gave some apostles and some prophets, and some evangelists and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." Mr. Wesley never ordained such, nor are any local preachers ordained in England. So, however, it is in our own Church, that a large number of good and useful lay preachers are elders and deacons—which fact only makes it so much the more necessary that that ministry of ours which stands before the people as separated to the work of God, be so wholly.

A trading, tinkering, planting, peddling, Mesmeric, dental and Thomsonian itinerant ministry! God forbid! Some ten years ago a preacher of a neighboring Conference, concluding that the people were lax in their tithes, left his circuit, bought a drove of hogs, and came down with them to Alabama. The hogs proving a dull sale, he swopt them off for one or two likely negroes. The next year his funds giving out, as we suppose, and the "woe is me" coming over him again, he applied for readmission into the traveling connection, was actually received, and was soon a loud watchman on the walls. Presently a sense of duty to himself led him into an extensive book-selling business—a sort of spiritual colportage—by which he made a good deal, then managed to leave the Conference, and yet owes a large balance to the Methodist Book Concern. Since which time the elder's trumpet hangs by his side; for a while he was agent for the sale of a new and improved portable grist-mill, but more recently has found his level in the calling and office of an honest roadside publican. One or two such cases is enough to deal up the fountains of a church, and to send horror into the bones of all, but—Satan. K.

THE BIBLE.—The congregation at the McGhee Church, Carondelet street, on Sabbath morning last, contributed between ninety and a hundred dollars towards the Bible cause. This is one of the most enlightened and magnificent charities of this age of Christian benevolence. It deserves well of the community, and piety and patriotism should prompt every citizen to contribute to the advancement of this good cause. W.

The Japanese Expedition.

The expedition to Japan now fitting out under the auspices of our Government, is one of the most important and interesting movements of this age of action and great enterprises.

Japan is one of the largest unexplored and inaccessible kingdoms on the globe. Africa is accessible on all sides, and its interior is rapidly being penetrated by commerce and Missionary enterprise. The walls of China have been broken down, and the people of God are entering in; already the Holy Scriptures have been translated into the Chinese language, and the Sacred Volume is being distributed by tens of thousands of copies.

The whole of India is open to the zeal of the Church and the labor of her Missionaries. Learned, laborious and holy men are translating our Bible into the language of its teeming millions.

The large Islands of the Indian Ocean are already under the cultivation of Christian Missionaries.

The whole of the American Continent is fast becoming the Vineyard of the Lord. In the great Islands of the Southern Pacific Ocean, the Song of Salvation has already been heard and sung by tens of thousands.

Japan is the last great Empire that remains secluded from the commercial and religious enterprise of the Christian world. The present expedition, under the auspices of our Government, contemplates nothing officially but the establishment of friendly and commercial relations; but our language, our arts and our people will soon carry there our Bible and our holy religion. God has decreed that all the ends of the earth shall see his salvation: His Providence will break down the barriers, and Eternal Truth shall yet and soon march triumphant through the cities and over the plains of Japan, and wherever it goes shed upon its millions the blessings of an enlightened civilization.

A great and a wide door is opening in all the ends of the earth, and the cry is coming up in many tongues from all the zones that belt the globe, come over and help us:

> "The nations call! from sea to sea
> Extends the thrilling cry,
> Come over, Christians, if there be
> And help us ere we die."

The Providence of God is fast bringing all the nations of the earth into neighborhood and social relations. And when the light is brought in proximity with the darkness, the darkness will be scattered, and all the nations shall rejoice because their light is come, and the glory of God has risen upon them.

Let us glance for a moment at the actual and proximately prospective facilities for intercourse and interchange of thought which we do now, or soon shall, enjoy with all parts of the earth.

England is now in communication with France and all the European and Asiatic world, as far east as the lines shall be extended, by means of a submarine telegraph across the Straits of Dover. London will soon be in a few minutes of St. Petersburg, and when the necessities shall require, still farther East. A submarine telegraph will soon connect England with Ireland. From Galway, on the West coast of Ireland, to Halifax, Nova Scotia, the ocean steamers will soon make the trip in five or six days. From Halifax a line of telegraph will convey intelligence in a few hours to all parts of the United States. We shall be in a week of the European world.

Then it will not be long until the telegraph shall extend to the Pacific. The ocean steamers will soon cross the Pacific to China in fifteen or twenty days, and we shall be in twenty days of China on the West, (and perhaps soon less than that on the East.

Gold, too, with which to carry forward the enterprises of commerce and of the Church, is just now found in greater quantities than ever before in the history of the world, in America and Australia. It is estimated that the mines have yielded one hundred and eighty millions during the current year, and during the last three years some five hundred millions of gold has been thrown into the circulation of the world. This, with the vast sums soon to be raised for the mines, must give an unparalleled activity and impetus to the commerce of the world, and this will greatly aid and facilitate the aims of the Church in the great work of the world's evangelization.

Shall not the Church, then, avail herself to the utmost extent of her resources of these extraordinary openings, of Providence, and with newly enkindled and enlarged zeal enter upon the glorious enterprise of the moral conquest and occupancy of the world? Let all her sons cry "Amen." W.

PERIODICALS.—The Westminster Review is on our table, with twelve articles of doubtless very readable matter.

Godey's Lady's Book for May, beautiful and attractive as usual.

METHODIST GENERAL CONFERENCE.—Boston, May 10.—The Conference met at the usual hour, Bishop Morris presiding. Bishop Waugh presented a communication from Bishop Hamline. It stated that the Bishop had been in ill health for many years, and that for the last three years he had been unable fully to perform his duties. His physicians had warned him against attending Conferences, and now feeling himself incapacitated from further duties, he felt it his duty to offer his resignation. The communication was referred.

The committee on missions recommended the establishment of an independent African Church, to be centered in Liberia—the first Bishop to be selected by this Conference, and ordained here.

The testimony of respect to the memory of Bishop Heding was ordered to be recorded in the journal.

Resolutions were adopted that the Methodist Episcopal Church ought to increase the number and extent of foreign and India missionaries. Also in favor of a day to be appointed for fasting and praying in the several conferences, and to supplicate divine assistance in raising men and means for the missionary work. A report was made favorable to the erection of a commodious Central Church in Washington, and recommending the same to the Annual Conferences. Report accepted.

A committee was ordered to be appointed to inquire into the best means of procuring for Protestants in Rome the same religious privileges which are accorded to Catholics in the United States. The convention then adjourned.

BREVIPORT CORRESPONDENCE.

WOODSMAN'S VINDICATION.

> "Woe, hapless, cow'rin, timorous beastie,
> O, what a panic's in thy breastie!"

Very like the feelings of mousie, whose domicil was unceremoniously turned up by the poet's coulter, were my own, when but recently I found on my table some letters and papers containing allusions to a communication published in your columns, bearing the "nomme de plume" of your present correspondent. I had hoped that the unobtrusive corner of your journal, so long and so courteously assigned me, would ever, as heretofore, have ever remained the quiet resting place of such thoughts as I might wish therein to repose. This hope, so sincerely cherished, has been dissipated by the invectives and animadversions of Dr. Clapp, which have received wide publicity from the sacred desk, and through the columns of a leading secular newspaper. Thankful for the kindly protection afforded me by the editorial ægis, I now beg to explain and vindicate what some have thought both exceptionable and wicked. Lest the spirit of the former communication, and of this also, should be misunderstood, the writer would inform Dr. Clapp that Woodsman has ever been his friend and admirer. The first sermon that I heard in Louisiana was in his church, and from his lips. At that time a wanderer and pilgrim from my northern home, youthful and inexperienced, yet alive to the sacred and the beautiful, sweet and lasting impressions were made upon my heart, and I have loved the preacher ever since. Years have passed away, and many times, meanwhile, I returned to his church, and though at every time I heard doctrines which I could not believe—doctrines which were vitally erroneous—yet my feelings remained unchanged, and whilst I could not accord to him either consistency or orthodoxy, I have always thought him erudite, eloquent, honest and charitable.

The article which has given him so much sorrow assumes to be only an expression of his views, and the influence of those views, where they have come within my observation. As such it was a legitimate subject of communication, and if it appears that the public and myself were mistaken, it will be seen that in both cases the error was unintentional, but necessary. The assertion that "his notions of the new birth scarcely amount to any fact in metaphysics, or to any real distinction in morals," was made upon the strength of two considerations. One was the denial of original sin, the rejection of the vicarious atonement of Christ; and the other, the views set forth upon this subject in a sermon published in August, 1849. How the first consideration should lead by inference to this assertion will be easily understood when we reflect that unless man is originally and totally depraved, the necessity of a new birth does not exist; and farther, if necessary, no Trinitarian can understand how it would be possible, without the vicarious sacrifice made in the death of Christ. Mr. Wesley, with whom Dr. Clapp professes to agree upon the subject of the "new birth," uses this language: "This, then, is the foundation of the new birth—the entire corruption of our nature. Hence it is that being born in sin we must be 'born again.'" Now Dr. Clapp has denied that men are born in sin, and therefore he has swept away the foundation upon which this doctrine, as held by Wesley and his followers, is based. Mr. Wesley says that original, or birth sin, is the occasion of the new birth doctrine, and so we believe. Dr. Clapp says that there is no birth sin: he thus takes away the occasion, and with the occasion necessarily the fact. The same argument holds good still further. Wesley, Clark and Fletcher regard the new birth as a change wrought in the heart, through faith in the atonement of Jesus Christ; and they, as well as all who believe with them, know of no new birth of which this condition is not the sine qua non. Dr. Clapp agrees with those great and good men, and yet he leaves out the corner stone upon which the whole doctrine is raised! To quote his own well remembered language, the unfairness of which is too characteristic, "he does not believe that one God died to appease the wrath of another God!" In candid terms, he does not believe that Christ, in the orthodox and in an eminent sense, died for sinners. Original sin and the vicarious atonement, are the two legs upon which alone the doctrine of the new birth can stand. He has rejected both, and therefore the doctrine of regeneration, as held by Wesley and his followers, does not belong to his system of theology. In view of these facts there is not a Trinitarian alive who will not see that the much-belabored declaration of your correspondent, "that his notion of the new birth scarcely amounts to any fact in metaphysics or to any real distinction in morals," was a logical necessity; and could Wesley, Clark and Fletcher leave their graves, but for an hour, they would repudiate the discreditable fellowship of one who now claims sympathy with the imporishable monuments of their genius and their piety. Let us now look at the second consideration, the sermon of August, eighteen hundred and forty-nine. I shall not particularly notice the discrepancies which obtain between this sermon and the one that has called forth the present communication, founded upon the same text, but briefly show from it the justness of the conclusion, that its author's "notion of the new birth scarcely amounts to any real distinction in morals". In the sermon of the date mentioned the following language is used: "To be born again, then, in the chapter before us means the revolution of mind and character which is required to enable any one to partake of that peculiar happiness which Christianity proffers to the children of men. But this revolution has nothing in its nature abstruse, mysterious, or supernatural; you are just as able to learn love and obey the principles of duty laid down by the Son of God, as you are to carry on your secular business; to maintain and educate your children; to read, write and study, or to take your seat in this church and listen to the communications of the pulpit."

Again, "We must not infer from the language of our Saviour, that it was necessary for Nicodemus to be born again in order that he might become an upright, sincere and conscientious man." And again, "They must be born again, not for the purpose of making them good and sincere, but that they may become inspired with those nobler and more enlarged views of Divine truth which are indispensably necessary to a full and complete fruition of the kingdom of Christ on earth." He indeed adds, the sinner must be "newly created in Christ Jesus, or be lost." But in another part of the same sermon he says: "to my mind nothing is more than the meaning of those passages in New Testament, which are used to the final holiness and happiness of mankind," so that no meaning can be given to it. Now I submit to your candid and orthodox readers, whether with these views before me, I was not justified in the belief that "Dr. Clapp's notion of the new birth scarcely amounts to any real distinction in morals," and whether, under the circumstances, they would not have felt themselves compelled to make the same deduction.

After the most careful study of the ordinary sermon, I believe the only conviction would be that it contained the doctrine of spiritual regeneration, that, if its author holds any such doctrine, the expression must be looked for elsewhere. It is true that he makes the declaration, "Be it remembered, that this pulpit avows and teaches the doctrine that men are to be recovered from sin by the process which our Saviour himself has denoted by the term 'regeneration,'" but may it not be that his notion of the process" differs materially from ours, and that the difference consists in this very thing, of amounting to no real distinction in morals?

All that is contended is that he holds the doctrine of the new birth in a very low, so low that it scarcely amounts to a distinction, and there is not a sermon, either of his sermons which contains a supposition. Whilst all are agreed as to the necessity of a recovering process, and possible that we are widely at variance as to the nature and extent of this process, the point in question is what does Dr. Clapp mean by the process of which he speaks? To say that it is that experience necessary to a full and complete entrance into the kingdom of Christ on earth, or that it is a process of recovery from sin, when just as much in the dark as before, as to how we agree upon these definitions, or what the views of the new birth may be, as to light and darkness.

It has been already shown that the views can not consist with the tenets advocated by the Doctor. If we shut up to the conclusion, that the doctrine of the new birth is something different from something less; and when we read the sermon, from which I have largely quoted, nothing is found there that militates against the conclusion, but much which seems to confirm it.

In submitting thus much in defence of myself, I have been actuated by feelings of kindness and Christian love to the Rev. Dr. Clapp; and this would have appeared were it not due to the errors, to know how I came by the views which were expressed in a spirit of meekness and love. If the sentence at which the umbrage has been taken is erroneous, the error must be ascribed to an inadvertence, rather than to any wish of mine that it should be true. It does not come within the provinces of this communication to decide how far the recent sermon has set the public right upon this subject. With this we have nothing to do. Those who have read it are aware that it abounds in violent invective and denunciation. All of this has been extenuated. Dr. Clapp has been clogged by malevolent enemies; a snarling cur has ever been at his heels. He has been misrepresented, abused, calumniated, and years of meanness, bigotry, and envy have made him the victim of their malice. Under such circumstances it is not to be wondered at that meekness and patience of the Christian should give way. It were to be expected that it would be forgiven.

Obituary Notices.

DIED—Recently, in this place, Mrs. JULIA M. TARLTON, wife of Wm. A. Tarlton, in the 21st year of her age. Sister Tarlton professed religion and joined the M. E. Church, South, in the fall of 1848, in which church she remained an acceptable member up to her death.

It was a privilege of ours to be present with Sister T. during some of the last hours of her mortal life. None but the Christian can talk like she did—none but the Christian die like she did. "My dear," said she, holding her husband's hand in hers, and lifting one heart in holy affection, "take care of our little babes—train them for God and heaven, and do all the good you can in this sinful world; and if the Lord will permit, I will sometimes look down upon you." Thus passed away one adorned with all the Christian graces and accomplishments of youthful womanhood. On last Sabbath, 9th inst., we preached her funeral sermon, from Rev. xvi, 22, and baptized her two orphan children.

F. G. FERGUSON, P. E.

BEAUTIFUL PICTURE.—The following very beautiful illustration, was given by a divine at Chelsea, December or January. It may be old to our readers, but it is new and pleasing to us:

Two painters were employed to fresco the walls of a magnificent cathedral; both stood on the rude scaffold constructed for the purpose, some forty feet from the ground.

One of them was so intent upon his work that he was wholly absorbed, and in admiration stood off from my picture, gazing at it with intense delight. Forgetting where he was, he moved back slowly, surveying critically his work at his pencil, until he had neared the edge of the plank upon which he stood. At this critical moment his companion turned suddenly, and, almost frozen with horror, beheld his imminent peril. Another instant, and the enthusiast would be precipitated upon the pavement beneath. If he spoke to him, it was certain death if he held his peace, death was equally sure. Suddenly he regained his presence of mind, and seizing a vial of paint he flung it against the wall, spattering the beautiful colors with unsightly blotches of coloring. The painter turned hastily and turned upon his friend with fierce imprecations; but, startled at his ghastly face, he listened to the recital of danger, looked shudderingly over the fearful space below, and with tears of gratitude blessed the hand that saved him.

"I told the preacher," "we sometimes get absorbed in looking upon the pictures of this world, and in coloring them we keep backwards, unconscious of our peril, when the Almighty dashes out the beautiful image and we spring forward, to lament their destruction, with outward stretched arms of mercy, and are lost."

WIFE OF HENRY CLAY.—Forney, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, though he has retired from the editorship of the Pennsylvanian, still furnishes that paper with an interesting series of sketches entitled "Chances of Congress," in which he takes connected views of things in general at Washington. In his last number, he thus alludes to the venerable consort of the great American statesman, who is now dying in the Federal City:

"Do you know that Mrs. Henry Clay has never visited Washington? Her domestic character seemed to have been formed for and though her husband was for a quarter of a century a leading statesman, and though her name was as high when she saw young Harry with a beaver on, in the midst of the greatest events that were made his name illustrious, yet by her the blessings of home and of fire side were to be preferred. Now that the statesman is wasting away, her presence would doubtless alleviate his sufferings, and prepare him for his final reckoning. But now she is too old to come. She could not bear the tedious journey from Lexington, and she remains as if were a watcher for the fatal news. A few days ago, she sent him a bouquet of flowers; but when they reached here they were faded—a melancholy evidence that both the gives and the receiver were fast hastening to that bourne from whence no traveler returns. The old man eloquently held it to his lips for a few seconds, and said, with mournful pathos, 'the perfume is almost gone.' But not so with his fame. That will live forever green in the memory of man. His physical frame will decay, but his great history will never be forgotten. Of him it may be well said:

"Home, sweet home,"

'You may break, you may ruin the vase if you will,
But the scent of the flowers will hang round it still.'"

The Scientific American, in reporting an experiment with the Fire Annihilator, briefly stated that the building burned down, as water was not handy. Dr. Gibbon, the experimenter in the case, has remonstrated against this statement as untrue, and insisted on a correction. Whereupon the American apologises, and admits that water was handy, but, it not being used, the building burned down.

SAILING OF THE NIAGARA.—The steamship Niagara sailed from Boston on the 12th, with sixty passengers for Liverpool and twenty for Halifax. Among the former were Dr. Howard and Miss Pattison, of England.

The proceedings here lately attracted some attention in New York. The Niagara takes out £2450 in English

General Intelligence.

CHARITY HOSPITAL—Report for the Week ending May 21.—Admitted, 259; Discharged, 210; Died, 33; Remaining under treatment, 660.

NAMES AND BIRTH-PLACES OF THOSE WHO DIED.

United States.—Elisha E. Maiory, Nathen Mitchell.

Foreign Countries.—James Little, Marie Milasse, George Chandler, Anton Stehrmann, John Mullen, Felix O'Neil, George Weiss, Dennis Sullivan, Dennis Kelsher, Joseph Cremeio, Jane Dock, Thomas Dogherty, Peyronne Andria, Francis Riley, Mary Cuddy, John Glover, Michael McCormick, John Ritter, Catherine Farley, Annah Scanley, Mi Gately, Mary Clancey, Michael Cromley, Mary Kalahan, Catherine Gibbons, Edward Esker, Clara Aneuri, Jane Williams, Mary Kennedy, Thomas Kelly, George Fischer.

Louisiana Interior.

TELEGRAPH.—The Caddo Gazette says that it is contemplated to build an electric telegraph from Natchez to Shreveport. Success attend it.

THE WEATHER.—The same paper, of the 15th, has the following paragraph about the weather: The delightfully balmy, and spring-time weather we have enjoyed the past week, has exercised a most beneficial influence upon the crops in this region, and, in consequence, upon the feelings of our planters. There has been just enough of sunshine and shower—neither too much of the one nor too little of the other—and, visited by such welcome variations, the young crops are forced gally to bourgeon and proudly to grow.

WINN PARISH.—The new parish was organized by the election of officers on the 10th instant; Mr. Emmuns was elected Sheriff.

POINT LOOKOUT CREVASSE.—The Police Jury of Carroll Parish has placed the sum of one thousand dollars at the disposal of the Board of Levee Commissioners, to enable them to stop the break at Point Lookout.

CHOLERA.—The Madison Journal says: During the past week there have been several deaths in this parish from Asiatic cholera. The disease has been confined to one plantation thus far, and we trust that careful watchfulness on the part of our officers may arrest it.

From Texas.

By the arrival yesterday of the steamship Louisiana, Capt. Enwless, from Galveston, we have received a portion of our Texas exchanges:

THE CROPS.—The Galveston Journal of the 13th says: A friend of ours, just returned from the Brazos, informs us that there never was a better promise of a large cotton crop. The cotton, although retarded by the late cold weather, has recovered, and generally bids fair to be large. The corn, though suffering some from the drouth, is in a forward condition. The prospect for large crops was never better in that section of the country.

THE RIVERS.—The Brazos and Trinity Rivers are now in fine navigable condition, and there is a fine prospect that this desirable state of affairs will last for some time.

IMMIGRANTS.—One hundred and eighty-five immigrants from Bremen arrived at Galveston on the 12th. They were fifty days on the passage.

MAIL ROBBERY.—The Houston Telegraph says: Mr. George W. Clapp, formerly mail agent of Texas, had discovered that thefts have been committed at some one of the post-offices on the route from Tyler to Sabine Town. In one instance a five dollar bill was taken from a letter, and Mr. Clapp has caused a man named John Randolph to be arrested and committed for trial, charged with the theft.

FOSSIL REMAINS.—The Lone Star says that a tusk and a portion of the leg bone of a large animal was recently discovered embedded in the sand at the Hidelgo Falls. They were taken up and carried to Washington. The tusk is ten feet long, and measures at its greatest circumference twenty-three inches. In taking it up, it was, unfortunately, broken. The tusk and the other bones are in a partial state of petrefaction.

CASES OF CHOLERA.—The Galveston Gazette says, we regret to learn that cases of cholera still occur at intervals in some parts of Western Texas. A wagoner named Roberts, from Lockhart, and a Mr. Usery, from Giles county, Tenn., were attacked on the road between Victoria and Lavaca, last week, and both died in a few hours.

NOTIONS NEW UNDER THE SUN.—In a recent letter Mr. Walsh states that M. De Tocqueville, in a discourse last month before the French Academy, asserted the absolute antiquity of all the new fangled theories in regard to the regeneration of society, etc. All the vagaries of Socialism were of remote record. Aristotle carefully investigated—when he wrote his treatise on Politics—two hundred constitutions under which nations had lived before his time; he found an identity of human nature in all ages and countries, which has been shown quite as evident or demonstrable. The omniscient Greek concluded that mob or extreme democratic rule was the worst of all tyrannies.

CHOLERA.—The cholera has just made its appearance at Princeton, Ky. Two persons have died of it—so says the Republicon of that place.

DEPARTURE OF MISSIONARIES.—Mr. Addison Moffatt, Miss Mary Dean, Miss Sarah Blakely and Miss Maria Hicks, under appointment as teachers from the American Missionary Association, sailed from NewYork for Jamaica on the 10th inst.

THE SUSPENSION BRIDGE AT NIAGARA FALLS.—A convention of railroad directors and bridge companies was held at Niagara Falls last week, to settle permanently their plans for the construction of the Great Western and Rochester, Lockport and Niagara Falls' roads, and for building immediately a new and greatly enlarged suspension bridge, which is to connect these two great thoroughfares.

REMOVING A CAPITOL.—The Legislature of Virginia are debating upon the necessity of removing the capitol of that State from Richmond, in consequence of the disturbances which took place there a few nights since, in front of the Governor's house, and the assault of a member of the House in the streets of that city.

SENTENCE OF MAIL ROBBERS.—William H. Haines, the young man convicted at Staunton, Va., of robbing the mail, has been sentenced to the penetentiary for ten years. John Sentemyer, convicted of a similar offence, was sentenced to three months imprisonment. It appears he took a mail bag containing only newspapers, but subsequently stole a horse on which to make his escape, and that for the latter offence he has already served 5 years in the penitentiary.

FREE COLORED POPULATION IN MARYLAND.—A bill is before the Maryland Legislature which provides that all free negroes and mulattoes who shall be born in the State, after the first day of January, 1855, shall, upon their arrival at the age of twenty-one years, be compelled to emigrate to Liberia, in Africa, or upon their remaining within the State for more than twelve months thereafter, (unless in the hands of the Maryland State Colonization Society,) shall be ordered to be sold as slaves for a term of not less than five, nor more than ten years, and the proceeds thereof shall be applied to the colonization fund of the city of Baltimore. The bill will not probably be passed at this session.

The publishers of NewYork appear to be prosperous. The Harpers print a hundred thousand monthly of their Magazine, including the demand for back numbers. The Appletons have moved into a splendid free stone store in Broadway, of which they occupy the basement and first stories. They were offered, it is said, $9000 rent for them, and could now get $7000. Putnam has moved to Park Place, and gives up his retail business to attend exclusively to publishing. Redfield has published some very choice books of late, which have sold well. Scribner has also made a hit with many of his publications.

A FAMILY POISONED.—A whole family, named Hly, consisting of ten persons, and residing near Pulriol, Indiana, were poisoned a few days since, and five of the number died. The suspicion of the crime rests upon a person connected with the family, whose own wife, and two of his own children, with a sister-in-law and brother-in-law, died from the effects of the dose. An analysis proved arcnic to be the poison administered.

RAILROAD STOCKS.—The New York Herald says: The demand for railway bonds for European account is unabated. We have heard of considerable sales of the bonds of different companies having been made up for that object. Western city and county bonds are also well thought of by the agents of European capitalists. A large amount of orders have been reported received for various descriptions of these securities.

LATER FROM HAYTI.—Late advices from Port-au-Prince state that a day or two before the coronation of Im Emperor Soulouque, he distributed crosses of honor to the Foreign Consuls, which were accepted by those representing France and Great Britain, but refused by the American Consul.

DISEASED MEAT.—A clerk of one of the Boston markets recently seized thirty-six carcasses of veal totally unfit for any person to eat, and which had been sold to a sausage-maker for thirty cents a carcase.

COTTON IS KING.—Charles Dickens, in a late number of his "Household Words," after enumerating the striking facts of the cotton trade, says:

"Let any great social or physical convulsion visit the United States, and England would feel the shock from Land's End to John O'Groat's. The lives of nearly two millions of our countrymen are dependent upon the cotton crops of America; their destiny may be said, without any sort of hyperbole, to hang upon a thread. Should any dire calamity befall the land of cotton a thousand of our merchant ships would rot idly in dock; ten thousand mills must stop their busy looms; two million mouths would starve for lack of food to feed them."

The Cincinnati Nonpareil says that the Printers' Convention, while in session, transacted more business in less time, than any legislative body we have had the humor of reporting, have done in one month. The Convention was in session only three working days.

Arrival of the Empire City.

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

INDIAN TROUBLES.

The steamship Empire City, Capt. Leeds, arrived Thursday from New York via Havana, bringing the California mails with two weeks later intelligence.

Indian Troubles.

One of the greatest difficulties she has to contend with, is the hostility of the numerous detached tribes of Indians that live within and adjoining her borders. They are hydra-headed. As fast as one is subdued, and compelled to make peace, another rebels and slays every white man who comes within reach. Late news from Camp Yuma, on the Colorado, represents the Yumas to be in open arms against our troops. They had surprised and killed a small party of eight soldiers, who were out hunting mules, and then, emboldened by their success, openly attacked Maj. Fitzgerald's camp. They were repulsed, however, with severe loss.

These tribes living in Southern California, who rebelled and were reduced to subjection in the early part of the year, are profoundly quiet, so also are all those on the Fresno and in the Southern mines generally.

In the extreme North, Shasta and Trinity counties, reports have just reached us of another outbreak by the Scott river Indians, and rumor says that upwards of a hundred whites were killed the first day, and a large amount of property carried off.

Proceedings of the Legislature.

The Legislature has passed no bill of importance within the fortnight except the Fugitive Slave bill. It was passed some time since by the Assembly, but lingered in the Senate, where it was warmly opposed as a whole by a few, while others objected to some of its details. It allows those who brought slaves into this State prior to its admission into the Union, to reclaim and carry them out of the State any time within a year from the passage of the act. The final vote in the Senate stood—yeas 14, nays 9.

The Assembly has fixed upon the 10th of April for the adjournment of the Legislature, but the Senate will not be ready to concur in any such resolution before the last of the month.

The bill which passed the House for the enforcement of contracts for labor, commonly called the Coolie bill, has been killed in the Senate by a large majority.

Crime and its Punishment.

From Oregon there is literally no news.

Queen Charlotte's Island.

Intelligence received by way of Oregon from Queen Charlotte's Island confirms the rumors of the existence of valuable gold mines there. Indians had large lumps in their possession, but were so hostile to the expedition that attempted to make a settlement, as to compel them to return to Oregon for arms and assistance. A considerable emigration to this island is taking place from this city, no less than five vessels filled with armed miners having sailed for that destination within the past month.

Sandwich Islands.

Our dates from the Sandwich Islands are to the 13th of March. The volcanic eruption of Mauna Loa continued with unabated force. The appearance by night of a fiery jet of lava, 500 feet high and 100 feet in diameter, projected from a crater of 10,000 feet above the level of the sea is described as unsurpassingly grand. The river of molten lava rushing and foaming down the mountain's side was in parts one mile wide. The whalers that touched at Lahaina have uniformly done well during the winter season.

China.

Our intelligence from China reaches to the 15th of February. Hong Kong was rapidly recovering from the destructive conflagration of December that swept off the entire Chinese quarter of the town. It was expected that the whole space would be built over in one or two months. The small pox has attacked great numbers of the Chinese with whom it has been particularly fatal, and many Europeans also. Seventeen American whalers arrived at Hong Kong during the month of January, having met with very poor success during the past season. During the month of January six vessels, crowded with Chinese, sailed for San Francisco, and ten other cargoes for carrying 5500 people were at last accounts loading for this port. The rebellion is progressing. An Imperial decree was defeated on the 23d of January, and again on the 15th but the accounts are exceedingly vague and meagre.

Society Islands.

News has reached us that the inhabitants of Tahiti and the other Society Islands, had rebelled against the authority of Queen Pomare, who had applied in vain for assistance to the English, French and American residents.

The Herald judges from its information, that the revolution was instigated and set in motion by the French.

From South America—Execution of Carabiano.

By the Empire City, we have received Panama papers to the 4th inst. The Herald has received advices from Valparaiso, detailing the particulars of the trial and execution of Cambiano, the insurrectionist and pirate of the Straits of Magellan, and his accomplices. Cambiano and his accomplices six in number, belonged to the navy, the former being a Lieutenant, and were stationed at the Straits of Magellan, where the Chilian government has a convict colony.

Cambiano was at the head of the insurrection which took place there on the 20th of November last, and which resulted in the capture of two American vessels and the murder of all on board.

The sentence was published on the 23d ult. and carried into effect on the 4th.

Cambiano and the old soldiers showed a courage worthy of a better cause. It it had been displayed on the field of battle, or if it had not been preceded by the most dreadful crimes, they would have been heroes. Horror of great actions, for glory and for their country's defence, they mistook their mission, and they have suffered an ignominious death, haunted by remorse and scared by crime.

On arriving at the place of execution, Cambiano begged leave to address the people. He spoke with self-possession, confessed himself guilty of all the crimes imputed to him, and worthy of the fate he underwent. He said the same of his accomplices who shared his fate.

Isthmus Items.

THE FLORES WAR.—The authorities at Panama are considerably excited, and the Herald gives a humorous account of the arrest of two men, a proposed chase after a brig supposed to belong to Flores, and other warlike demonstrations.

THE CHIRIQUI MINES.—These mines continue to attract great attention, and they promise to afford good profits for working.

THE RAILROAD.—Another section of the Panama Railroad, (five miles in extent,) has been opened, and the other portions of the work are progressing rapidly. Five thousand of the natives are to be employed on different sections immediately.

DEATH OF DAVID M'CORKLE.—David M'Corkle, Esq., acting as U. S. Consul at Panama during the absence of his brother in the United States.

AN INCIDENT.—An elderly and worthy citizen, whose exterior in the matter of attire, it may be confessed, betrayed no undue solicitation of wealth, while passing in the street yesterday afternoon was accosted by a sailor with the somewhat abrupt interrogatory: "I say, are you a poor man?" "Quite as poor as I would choose to be," was the good natured response. "Well, I respect your gray hairs. If you are poor I want to give you some money, and accordingly our generous tar drew from his pocket a purse tolerably well filled with silver change, proposing to make an equal division between them. With some difficulty our elderly friend succeeded in declining the generous proffer, upon the plea that he was the less needy of the two. [New Bedford Mercury.

AN OLD SOLDIER.—A Savannah paper says: There is at present in our city on a visit, one of the few remaining survivors of the struggle which "tried men's souls." Mr. John B. Vaughan, of Nassau county, Florida. Mr. V. is upwards of ninety years old, and was in Arnold's division at the battle of Saratoga, which resulted in the capitulation of the entire British army, commanded by Burgoyne. It is well known that the division referred to performed an important part in the series of brilliant movements that ended in the complete victory of the patriots, and as total discomfiture of the invaders. Mr. V. subsequently joined the main army under Gen. Washington, on the Jersey border, and was engaged in a number of those skirmishes which go to make up the history of our Revolution.

LONGEVITY.—The New Bedford Mercury says that there is a strip of land bordering on the sea in South Dartmouth, known as "Smith's Neck," which is about one mile in width by one and a half miles in length. The inhabitants on this strip of land are mostly Quakers, who number 145, the age of twenty of whom average 86 years, and make an aggregate of 1729 years. Twelve of this number have attained to from 80 to 95 years, making an aggregate of 1131 years, and six others, the somewhat relatively middle aged, are now from 70 to 75 years of age. This is an account of longevity rarely paralleled.

Foreign Details by the Canada.

The foreign mails to the 4th, by the Canada, at Boston, have come to hand.

IRELAND.

A commission waited upon the Earl of Eglington concerning the Irish packet station:

His Excellency said that the report of the Commissioners on the subject of an American packet station being in favor of Holyhead, would, probably, at present, seem to operate against the objects sought for, but, for his own part, he confessed that his views and opinions were that the whole transit between the United States of America and the United Kingdom should pass through Ireland. (Applause.) He wished it to be understood that in so saying he did not pledge himself to any thing; but of this he could assure the deputation—that towards the forwarding of their objects they had his good wishes; though, as he was not Chancellor of the Exchequer, he feared those alone would not construct the pier and breakwater. [Laughter.]

FRANCE.

THE POLITICAL OFFENDERS.—The chief event of the present week in France, is a remarkable report by Col. d'Esphasse, one of the extraordinary commissioners of pardon sent into the provinces to revise the sentences of the political offenders.

He asserts that, in all the departments he has visited, the circulars for the most part have been received with hostility, and have produced the worst impression. The condemned demagogues have retracted their confessions. The departmental commissions have shaped by excessive mercy. Wherever he went, Col. d'Espinasse, to calm the inhabitants, ordered the suspended convoys of convicts on their way to Africa to continue their march towards their penal destination. He represents the number of the affiliated to secret societies as being so enormous that even the deportations of the ringleaders alone would have included several thousands in two or three departments. The commissioner of mercy, out of 4000 condemnations, has only been able to bring his conscience to admit 200 offenders to pardon. Col. d'Espinasse is the officer who took possession of the legislative palace on the morning of the 2d of December.

The general commissioner of police of one of the chief cities in the South, upon the point of being arrested on the charge of having trafficked in pardons, and sold for hard cash commutations of punishments or releases from prisons.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

GOLD STORIES A HUMBUG.—Intelligence has been received from Adelaide, South Australia, to January 10, being several days later. The discovery of gold in the colony had turned out to be a fabrication. The Government Commissioners had a second time proceeded with Mr. H. M. Stephen the party by whom the reward had been claimed, to the spot indicated, and upon testing the soil were unable to procure the smallest portion of metal. Upon precious metal every spadeful had been found to yield gold, and the Commissioners in their report, consequently assert that pieces must have been introduced on that occasion for the purpose of deception. With regard to the general state of the country, it appears that the disorganization caused by the departure of the inhabitants to Sydney and Port Philip had been much exaggerated.

Out of a population of sixty-seven thousand, the total emigration was not more than five thousand, and it is asserted that much of the prevailing commercial panic was to be attributed to the natural collapse of the worthless printing and building speculations which had been carried on for the past year or two. The success of the Burra Burra and the discovery of the Kapunda mine caused 42 assets to be numbered in definitive companies. Already, however, there were symptoms of reaction.

[The above it will be observed refers to only one province in Australia, that of Adelaide. That there is much gold in the country elsewhere is well known.]

DENMARK.

The Danish Ministry is engaged in a dispute with the Germanic Diet on the subject of the Holsteinderal contingent. The Diet demands that the king of Denmark, as Duke of Holstein, shall hold a separate military contingent at its disposal; and the monarch replies, in very decisive language, that he has not, and will not grant as the Emperor of Austria to keep his army "one and indivisible," and to designate whatever troops he may please to the German service. All he will promise is, that a federal contingent shall remain as a rule in Holstein, and be generally composed of natives of the duchy. The Diet crusaders find that it has made a bad bargain in restoring the sovereign authority without assuring its own influence at the same time.

DEATH OF THE GRAND DUKE OF BADEN.—Intelligence has been received of the death of the Grand Duke of Baden, which took place on Saturday night. The Grand Duke, Charles Leopold Frederick, was born in 1790—he was, therefore, 62 years of age at his death. He has been only known as the ruler of a small and unimportant German principality, noted chiefly for its revolutions.

Neither as a man nor as a sovereign was the late Archduke characterized by any extraordinary personal qualities. At one moment humbly bowing to the popular will when it was in the ascendant promising liberal institutions and laws—breaking these promises and trampling the people underfoot when restored to the full exercise of absolute power.

"TURIN, April 26, Mid-day.—Exploded, the powder magazine of the Place Pallouse, by the side of the Dora. One quarter of the capitol has been injured. Every one is in consternation. The details are not yet known; nor are the causes. It is feared that the other two magazines will follow. All is confusion."

"Since the above was received, the Journal de Turin of the above date has arrived. Under the head of "Latest Intelligence," is the following paragraph, confirming the foregoing:

"TURIN, 11.45 A. M.—Two successive shocks have been felt, like those of an earthquake. The powder magazine of Borgo Dora has exploded; the population are hurrying to the scene of disaster; the ruppel is being beaten; all the faubourg is on fire; a barrack has fellen down; two hundred deaths are spoken of."

THE RECEPTION OF ROSAS IN ENGLAND.—The official reception given to General Rosas, on his landing at Plymouth, has created the greatest indignation in England; all the papers are out against it, and the matter was brought before Parliament. We should not be surprised if he was treated as Hayman was by the London brewers. The London Merchantile Gazette, in speaking of Rosas, says:

"If, however, the accounts which have just reached this country may be relied upon, our countrymen had better reason than perhaps they were then aware of to rejoice at his overthrow; for, amongst other meditated acts of atrocity by which he intended to mark his tyranny sway it is alleged that he had left a list with the names of those whom he intended to cut off should he prove victorious in the battle he was going to fight—the battle of Monte Caseros. In this list were the names of the English inhabitants, as well as other foreigners. It is easy to conceive how hateful to him must have been the presence of our countrymen who, he may have been well assured would view his atrocities with abhorrence, and who, through the medium of the public press, would publish them in every part of the civilized world. Such is the man we have now amongst us; and we can only say, that the shorter he makes his stay, the more agreeable it will be to the nation.

LATER FROM BUENOS AYRES.—Dates from Buenos Ayres to March 8th have been received at Boston, up to which time all was quiet. The subject of reducing the tariff on foreign wheat and flour was being discussed, and a municipal government being formed. Don F. Castellanos was appointed Secretary of Foreign Affairs.

At Montevideo and Buenos Ayres the markets were unchanged. Exchange on the United States 5 per cent dis.

Private letters, dated Buenos Ayres, March 8th, states that affairs were progressing favorably. It was thought that an election for President would soon take place, and that after the establishment of a regular government measures would be taken to pay off Urquiza and his army.

Hides were lower—sales at 11½. Flour and Lumber were in demand.

Many reforms were taking place. Municipal Governments, like those in the United States, if was thought would be organized, thus doing away with the centralization of Rosas.

A special agent had been sent to the interior Provinces to effect National organizations.

The subject of reducing the duty on foreign wheat and flour was discussed, and the expediency of free competition in the sale of beef and bread.

Divisions of the Brazilian army had left Buenos Ayres for Montevideo. The minority had given in their adhesion to the election of Don Juan F. Giro as President of that Province.

The ladies of Montevideo had presented the new President with a superb national flag.

STARVATION OF A CAPTAIN AND CREW.—The following melancholy narrative is taken from a private letter, written February 25, 1852, at Valparaiso, on board H. M. S. Dido:

"We arrived at Valparaiso on the 19th prox.; we should have been here much sooner had we not delayed so much time looking after Captain Gardiner, a gentleman of fortune, who had joined the Patagonian Missionary Society, and had gone to some small barren islands off the Horn to enlighten the inhabitants, who as they were. We received intelligence from Ilio that we were to look after Capt. Gardiner at the Falkland Islands, where we proceeded, and hearing here that a vessel had left provisions and clothing for him, expecting he would call for them, we resumed our search for him to Staten, a small uninhabited island; there we could find nothing that could lead to his discovery, but a large boat moored to a tree, and on the hill was a flag-staff, with a piece of bed-tick for a flag. We cut the name of our vessel on several trees, and got under weigh the next morning. We anchored at Gilbert's Cave, about two or three days' sail; there we found a note in a tree was the following description: "Six feet deep; under this spot you will find a bottle." We dug, and found it, and in it a note as follows: "Captain Gardiner, you will find it at Spanish Harbor, at a distance of about 60 miles from this place." We proceeded to that place the next morning, after speaking to two canoes of strange-looking human beings, quite naked; they were painted, and colored shells hung round them.

There were several other canoes of this description of humanity in its worst form; they caught fish, and ate them raw, and subsisted on wild herbs and roots of trees. How they could bear the cold I cannot tell, for ten months out of twelve it is intensely cold. We happened to get there in the summer. We gave them a few articles of clothing, but they would not wear them. We left them, and resumed our search after Capt. Gardiner. We arrived at Spanish Harbor the same evening, and sent boats on shore as soon as we dropped anchor, and then I beheld a sight, which I trust I shall never witness again. Strewed in different parts of the beach were Capt. G. and two of his party. The first we saw was Capt. G. in a state of decomposition. We supposed it to be him, by there being a watch hanging to his skeleton form, and some distance from him there was another. We proceeded some distance to a cave with a lantern; when we entered there was a deadly smell at the end of the cave, where we found the remains of the others. There was furniture and cooking utensils, as though they had lived there some time. The boats' crews were allowed to have the clothes, as they found a large chest containing books and clothing, and on the lid of it was nailed his will, stating that the first ship that found them should have them. We buried them with the honors of war; and cut on the wall was the inscription: "Proceed on the beach about a mile and a half, you will find three more; do not delay, for we are starving!" We made the best of haste, and found them dead. It appeared they had been shunned by the natives, and had starved to death. We had a rough passage from Ilio to here, as is generally the case round the Horn.

It is stated that whenever the King of Siam feels like having a little field sport, he shoulders his rifle, and goes a gunning after missionaries. Nice place to expound the gospel.

A RESCUE ARRESTED.—The Rio Grande has the following: On Saturday last some excitement was created by a freely-circulated report that two Mexicans were apprehended who, from connecting circumstances, were supposed to be highway robbers and murderers. It appears that a Mexican, named Jesus Rodrigues, who was removing some articles from a rancho near this place, which ... suspected not to belong to him, was consequently apprehended, and in the cart containing the articles was found two coats of armour—not of steel, but of cow-hide and wool. These armours are made in the shape of coats, composed of an outer and inner coat of cow-hide, filled with wool, about an inch and a quarter in thickness, and neatly and elaborately stitched through with cow-hide thongs. They are in two parts and fit closely, back and front, with leather strings. When worn they form a complete panoply for the body, and are impervious to a pistol shot, if not to a rifle. It appeared in evidence before Justice Long, that the said Jesus Rodrigues had purchased these articles from one Antonio Pena, a notorious bad character, who had reserved one, and the best, for himself, with which he had started, a few days previous, for Corpus Christi Fair."

THE PERILS OF THE SEA.—Under this head, the Baltimore Sun gives the following account of a recent perilous trip made by Capt. Gay Moore, in a light ship:

It will be remembered that some time since we noticed the fact that he had been ordered by the Treasury Department to proceed to Key West, Florida, and thence to the light ship Florida, which vessel he was to bring round to Newport, Rhode Island. Its accordingly went to his post, and took possession of the ship. On the 15th of April he made sail for Key West, and after discharging the pilot, stood out to sea. On the morning of the 16th it was discovered that the ship was leaking badly on both sides of the stern. The ceiling was cut away so as to get at the leak in the hope of stopping it—the stern was found rotten to a shell, with the adjoining timbers also rotten. On the 17th the pumps were manned all the time, and sails shortened to relieve her, and come to anchor at Carysfort Light, to endeavor to stop the leak. Finding there was no chance to get back to Key West, on the 18th stood out with the endeavor to reach Charleston. All the ballast was thrown overboard. This state of things continued, heavy gales blowing during the time, up to the 24th; they were unable to carry sail, and cut away the bowsprit to ease the stern. Every thing forward was moved aft, so as to put her down by the stern. On this day but little hope of safety remained and all hands expected to go to the bottom. All was done to keep her above water, until there should be an opportunity to abandon her. On the 26th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., saw a sail and hoisted signals of distress, and at 7 spoke the whaling bark Stafford, Capt. Stafford, of New Bedford, who took the officers and crew, and three passengers on board, and removing the stores and effects. They were then in latitude 27 degrees north, longitude 77 degrees 40 minutes west. On the 29th, spoke the ship Sarah Doyd, Captain Whittamore, bound to New York from Cuba, who took them from the whaler and landed them safely in New York. This is but a sketch of Capt. Moore's log, but it will serve to show the peril they were in. There were on board fourteen souls in all, and the Captain assures us that for four days and nights, scarcely a soul pretended to sleep: so great did they deem their peril that they were apprehensive she would go down at any moment. Bold and hardy men moved about for hours, and not a word was heard except the commands of the officers. Each looked his fellow in the face as if to read his thoughts, for none spoke them. On board the light ship was a bell, and the clapper would occasionally break the feelings, tolling as it were the funeral knell. Among the passengers were Captain Place and Captain Briggs, old sea captains, and a young man from Key West. The latter, as soon as he reached the deck of the whaler, became almost a maniac, and went into spasms, so great was the reaction upon him, by the rescue from the very jaws of death.

SLAVERY, OF THE PRESS IN SPAIN.—After a long discussion the new restrictions on the Spanish press have been published in the Madrid papers. They are so numerous and severe, as to afford the most painful evidence of the reactionary spirit simultaneously displayed by the principal governments of Europe. The first decided step taken in Spain, after the sending an army of 5000 men to aid in overthrowing the Roman Republic, was the forming of the Concordat with the Pope, against which the liberal papers strongly protested. They have been so numerous, shin, bold and popular up to the present time, as to show that the liberal and the gradual progress parties are large and formidable. Whoever has been accustomed to read them, must expect to see the new system of restraint causing convulsions.

La Cronica publishes extracts from the degree on the regulations of the press, which is very long, and appeared in the Gaceta Oficial, of Madrid, on the 4th of April, preceded by an address to the Queen. It consists of 126 articles, and divides publications into three classes: books, single papers and pamphlets, and periodicals.

"Editors must be 25 years of age and pay taxes of 2000 reals in the province of Madrid, or where from 500 to 1000. Offenses of the press are of three kinds: against the King and royal family, the state, public peace, society, religion and morals, authority, foreign powers and persons. These heads; and, Several items are given under each, the press, that is so exceedingly restricted do they touch, except the merest is difficult to believe that any person tool of the government would venture to publish a sheet or even a single line on any subject whatever."

It is forbidden to publish "exaggerated maxims or doctrines calculated to disturb the tranquility of the State." "to express fear of events which may disturb public confidence;" "to excuse acts regarded as crimes;" "to attack, offend, or ridicule the laws, the sovereign, corporations recognized by the law, persons;" "to attack or ridicule the Apostolic Roman Catholic religion and its worship, or to offend the character of its ministers;" "to excite to any abolition of religion, or to allow the exercise of any change of that character whatever;" "to suppose bad intentions in official acts to ridicule officials or persons, of any person or public employment;" "to publish, without whatever in public permission, private conversations or correspondence;" "to publish, without authority, official documents," "even if correct."

EXTRAORDINARY LAND CLAIMS.—The claim of Mr. Bertuces, of New York, referring to a large body of land in Kentucky, the Boston Times says:

"We are well acquainted with parties having claims upon lands located as those described above, on precisely in this and other similar foundations. Those parties reside respectively in Philadelphia, Lancaster county, Pa.; in city, New York, Large tracts of the public lands, granted by Congress, at the close of the revolutionary struggle, to the officers of the army; the quantity being to rank and services. Col. Elegius, regulated according Artillery, whose descendants reside, Oswald, of the 2d, received 4000 acres in what was the above places, dark and bloody ground," but with regarded as "the fertility and the advantages of civilization. To this tract was added another of 4000 acres, ing, which was bequeathed to Col. Oswald by his friend Richard Henry Lee, upon the death of the latter. Both these tracts were visited, we believe, in 1818, by Col. Oswald, when returning, reported he had died every thing to be correct. Preparations were then made for a 1820, made for a general emigration of the Oswalds, by—who then principally resided in Philadelphia—the purpose of settling on and improving lands, for the plantation. This unfortunate enterprise was about to start, but business was arrested, to above, in whose hands the whole threw the whole trusted, died. This unfortunate affair into confusion, and the expedition was for the time abandoned.

A few years after, a person, who understand, is, or was until recently, a cashier in one of the Natchez banks, and a wealthy man, received a power of attorney from the heirs to visit Kentucky and resume the plans for a general emigration of the family. person started on his mission, and after a protracted absence, during which the heirs had some reason to be alarmed for the fidelity of their agent, he sent word back that the property was utterly worthless, and that it would not pay the costs of recording deeds! The heirs were astounded at this intelligence, especially after the and of one of their number, who resided in a delightful region, with soil extremely rich and fertile. After this almost indifference came over the feelings of the heirs, and the matters remained from year to year, even up to this moment without the slightest effective action being had in the premises. There is no question that this agent acted dishonestly, and that all his acts were unlawful; but the amount of means, the subject has not been prosecuted. By those interested. Some of these heirs are now reduced to extreme poverty, the handsome fortune of Col. Oswald having been swallowed up in the cause of our national independence.

THE CHANCES OF LIFE.—Among the interesting facts developed by the recent census are some in relation to the laws that govern life and death. They are based upon returns from the State of Maryland, and a comparison with previous ones. The calculation it is unnecessary to explain, but the result is a table, from which we gather the following illustration:

THE FRANKLIN EXPEDITION.—The English Admiralty has published some further documents, the result of the investigation which has been instituted, respecting the ships seen to the ice by the crew of the brig Renovation off the Bank of Newfoundland. Capt. Ommaney, an experienced Arctic navigator, from an examination of Mr. Robert Sampson, then mate of the Renovation, and from other inquiries, has no doubt that the two vessels were seen on the ice in the position described; but the regret that owing to the distance at which the Renovation passed from the piece of ice with the ships lying upon it, no fact can be elicited by which the vessels can be identified. Towards the close of his report, Capt. Ommaney says:

"Whatever ships they may have been, whether Franklin's or not, the fate of the crews must be a subject of public sympathy, and many surmises will result. My firm conviction is that these vessels drifted a considerable distance on that piece of ice. From the description given, I cannot denominate it a 'berg,' the most elevated part being no more than thirty or forty feet high, while it was five miles long, which appears very like a portion of a heavy floe, with a hummock upon it. From the fact of being found drifting with the current which sets along the coast of Labrador from Davis's Straits, I infer they came from a high northern latitude; the removal of the spars and the absence of the boats indicate that the abandonment of the ships had been a work of time and deliberation; the fact of the ships being close together has the appearance of their being consorts. If the hulls were in floating condition when released from the ice, there is not a chance that they may be fallen in with some day, as timber ships have drifted to the coast of Portugal and the Bay of Biscay."

THE FIRE AND LOSS OF LIFE IN NEW YORK.—The New York Herald of Sunday, the 9th inst., gives the following particulars of the fire and loss of life in that city on the morning of Saturday, the 8th inst.

We are again called upon to record another of those fearful calamities, which seem to be of periodical occurrence in this city. Yesterday morning, about four o'clock, a fire broke out in the building No. 102 Chatherine street, near Cherry street, involving a melancholy loss of life and considerable destruction of property. The building itself was of frame work, two stories high, with an attic. The first floor was occupied by P. H. McGuire as a boot and shoe store, while the second floor and attic were occupied as a dwelling by P. Colgan, policeman of the Fourth ward, and his family, consisting of his wife and five children. At the time the fire broke out they were all in bed except Mr. Colgan, who was on duty in another part of the ward. Owing to the very combustible nature of the materials of the building, the fire spread with great rapidity, and before the alarm was given, and before the inmates became conscious of their perilous position, they were already surrounded by the flames on all sides. The poor creatures were then seen near the windows, from which the flames were already issuing, crying for help and running about in a frantic state. None of them would venture to pass through the flames, in order to reach the windows, whence they might have been saved by jumping into the street. But they retreated into the back rooms, until all egress was cut off, in consequence of the rapid progress of the fire. The fire department were promptly on the spot, and wrought manfully, but did not succeed in reaching the unfortunate inmates until several were burned to death. Colgan lost his wife and three children.

CHEROKEE NATION.—The Cherokee Advocate, in speaking of the payment of the "per capita" money, which recently came off at Fort Gibson, says:

The noise, confusion and excitement of the "per capita" payment being over, the people have all returned to their respective Districts and homes, well satisfied that they have at last received the long expected money, for which their country east was bartered, and that they were able to pay their debts. We were much gratified at the promptitude manifested and shown by the Cherokees in paying up the merchants to whom they were indebted for goods, although in the most of these goods were sold at three prices, (nevertheless they were paid for, without a word, which fact speaks volumes for the honesty and integrity of the full blooded Cherokees.

The same paper has the following:

We understand that Jim Spaniard, who is charged of murdering Mr. Perry, of the Cherokee Nation, was killed on Saturday last near Fort Gibson, by a party in attempting to arrest him.

About fifty or sixty wagons for California, from the counties of Pope and Johnson, Ark., passed through our town a few days since. They will go the road we had the misfortune to travel three years ago—the route known as the Evans route—the best route to California from South Missouri or Arkansas.

THE COTTON CROP IN FLORIDA.—The Apalachicola Commercial Advertiser says:

"We take pleasure in chronicling the decided improvement which has taken place in the weather during the past week. Warm sunshine and seasonable rains are befitting the opening of this brilliant month in the South. We believe no serious damage has been done by the recent cold weather to the growing crops, throughout the country tributary to this city, and have little doubt that the present genial weather will soon repair what slight injury may have been produced by that cause. The receipts of cotton at this port since 1st September last amount to 137,000 bales; being about 1000 bales more than the entire receipts for the previous year. For the remainder of the season, the receipts here will not vary much from five to six thousand bales, and if present prices are maintained, the country bordering on the Chattahoochee will be completely drained of every bag of cotton. Several large planters along that river, who are in the habit of holding over their crops for a period of years, have been induced by the liberal offers recently made them to part with their crops. This will increase our receipts from 2000 to 3000 bales more than was estimated two weeks ago. The excess in the receipts here over last year will be counterbalanced by the falling off at St. Marks, and what is termed the crop of Florida will not vary a thousand bales from last year's product."

The Cotton Movement of the season is thus given in Mr. W. P. Wright's circular for the Boston steamer, which sailed on the 12th inst. The crop is likely, from all appearances, to exceed three million bales. Yet prices go up in all the markets, in Europe and at home. The prodigious increase of consumption over all preceding years, has put all ordinary estimations and calculations at fault, and secured for this mammoth crop a uniformity of fair, and, to all concerned, satisfactory prices, beyond any former example:

	1852.	1851.
Receipts at the ports	2742.000	2,102.000
Exports to Great Britain	1279.000	1,007.000
Exports to France	358.000	268.000
Exports to other foreign ports	270.000	196.000
Total exports	1907.000	1,471.000
Stock on hand	445.000	475.000

U. S. TROOPS FOR TEXAS.—A detachment of nearly 400 men left Bedlow Island, on the 8th last., for Texas, on board ship Albert Gallatin, to fill up companies B and K, 4th Artillery, 1st and 2d Regiment of Dragoons, and 1st Regiment of Infantry. The names of the officers are Bvt. Captain A. P. Howe, Adjutant 4th Artillery, commanding; 2d Lieut. Edward A. Palfrey, 7th Infantry, and Bvt. 2d Lieut. J. B. Green, 1st Infantry.

There was frost at Newberry, N. C., on the 5th and 6th inst. The Sentinel says that the present appearance of the corn and cotton crops, is by no means flattering. Corn looks yellow and sickly. Cotton is very feeble, and has a crimped appearance. The wheat crop upon which so much dependence is placed for speedy relief from the great scarcity of corn, will not make a full return to the farmer. In some sections of the District the fly is very destructive, reducing the probable yield to less than half the ordinary quantity.

SHORTENING TIME TO EUROPE.—The North American railway, to connect Bangor with the easternmost point of New Brunswick, is again agitated. The British Provinces have received assurances of help from Her Majesty's Government. A select committee in the Massachusetts Legislature have recommended State aid to the extent of half a million to the connecting link of ninety-six miles between Calais and Bangor. The whole line will add five hundred miles of road beyond the present confines of improvement. It is said to traverse a country capable, from its resources of forest, soil, mines, and fisheries, of sustaining a profitable local trade, independent of the through trade.

STEAMBOAT SUNK.—The Fort Smith (Ark.) Herald of the 9th inst. says: "The steamer Umpire No. 2, in descending the river on Tuesday morning last, struck a snag, four or five miles below this city, and sunk in about two minutes. The boat is a total loss. We regret very much the loss of this boat, at this time, as there are but few boats in the river, and only two small boats that have been running as regular packets between the mouth of the river and this city, the highest point of navigation."

THE COMMERCE OF ST. THOMAS.—The May number of Hunt's Merchant's Magazine contains an interesting account of this Danish West India Island, which lies in latitude 18 deg., 20 min., 42 sec. N., being in length thirteen miles, and in breadth three miles. The small island, with limited resources and no advantages except a good harbor, has, by its free trade policy, gone on prospering until now its imports amount to five millions. The duties charged upon imports are only one and a quarter per cent., and consignees are not required to produce invoices at the Custom-house, but only to present an account and value of their goods. This ... the British, once in 1801, and again in 1807. Each time its commerce languished under the revenue laws of Great Britain, and was revived again after its restoration to Denmark. Its population is now about 13,000, and of a mixed character.

SLEIGHING IN MAY.—The Vermont Statesman of the 7th instant says: We are informed that on Monday, the 3d instant, the stage came on runners from Wilmington, in this county, to Marlboro', 8 miles; and a farmer from New Fane Hills tells us that from his house he can see farms in Dover, which appear to be wholly covered with snow, and that the snow in the woods is still one or two feet deep on the average.

SAILING OF THE FRANKLIN.—The steamship Franklin sailed from New York to Southampton and Havre on the 8th with 150 passengers and $370 000 in specie.

TOBACCO CROP.—It is said that the tobacco crop of this season in Kentucky will be very light. The frosts and fly have nearly destroyed the plants.

Parker Pillsbury writes very despondingly in the Liberator concerning the Abolition cause in Maine, and concerning the State as a "field for Anti-Slavery culture." He has just completed "a most fatiguing and every way trying campaign" in that State, but the "meetings were generally small, and in more than one instance failed altogether." In Portland, he says, "the ranks of the tried and true have been sadly thinned and broken." The Portland Inquirer, the Free-soil organ in that city, has informed, in a "feeble affair altogether." In Saco and Biddeford he "encountered a flood of opposition," and a meeting held in one of those places left him "a dollar and sixty cents out of pocket."

Since the 1st of January, 45,870 tons of ice have been exported from Boston.

NEWS BY TELEGRAPH.

NEW YORK MARKETS.—New York, May 15.—The Flour market to-day is dull, and quiet for ordinary brands ranging from $4 25 to $4 56. Pork is dull, and prices are almost entirely nominal. The market generally is unchanged. Corn is quoted at 62 to 65c.

The bill granting lands to Illinois for different railroad projects, was ordered to be engrossed, and the Senate took up the Deficiency bill, which was discussed up to the hour of adjournment.

MR. CLAY'S HEALTH.—The condition of Mr. Clay has improved in a slight degree, and some hopes are now entertained of his recovery.

STEAMBOATS.—Louisville, May 15, 7 P. M.—The steamers Indiana and Belle Key have arrived to-day from New Orleans, and the Chancellor, Belle Donna, H. Pogram, Gen. Scott, Europa and Midas have departed for that port. The river is at a stand, and the weather is pleasant.

CHARLESTON, May 14.—The demand for Cotton during the last week has been only moderate, the sales being limited to 6000 bales. The quotation for Middling is 8¾c., but the market is dull. Freights ¼ to 5-16.

The receipts of Cotton have been again large this week, and the increase at the Atlantic ports over that of last year is now 110,000 bales, against 111,000 bales last week, and 112,000 bales the week before. [Delta.

ARRIVAL OF THE ATLANTIC.—FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.—IMPORTANT COMMERCIAL NEWS.—COTTON FIRM AND IMPROVING.—ADVANCE IN BREADSTUFFS, ETC.—New York, May 17, 8 o'clock 22 minutes, A. M.—The Collins steamer Atlantic arrived here this morning from Liverpool, bringing dates to the 5th instant, four days later than by the Canada. Her advices show a decided firmness and improvement in the Cotton market, and an advance in breadstuffs, with an increasing demand. The following is a summary of her commercial news:

LIVERPOOL MARKETS.—Liverpool, May 5.—There is a good demand for cotton, and the sales for four days preceding the departure of the Atlantic amount to 45,000 bales, of which speculators have taken 6000, and exporters 600 bales. Holders are firm, and prices (for the lower and middling grades particularly) have an upward tendency but there is no change which will at present authorize an alteration in quotations. We quote to-day as follows: Fair Orleans 5¾, Middling Orleans 5¾, Fair Upland 5¼, and Middling Upland 4¾d. Sales.

There has been an active demand for all descriptions of breadstuffs, and in many articles a clear advance in prices. Western Canal Flour is quoted at 20s@20s 6d (an advance of 6d) and Ohio 21s@22s. (an advance of 1s.) Yellow Corn 30s 6d@31s 6d (an advance of 1s@1s 6d.) White 30s@31s (an advance of from 1s to 2s.)

CONGRESSIONAL.—Washington, May 17, P. M.—Both Houses of Congress have adjourned until Wednesday, in order to attend the funeral of Mrs. Adams.

A DEATH.—Wm. Derrick, Chief Clerk in the Department of State, is dead. [Evn. Pic.

LEAD DISCOVERIES.—The Dubuque (Iowa) Miners Express says: A gentleman just down from Buena Vista, in Clayton county, informs us that a new discovery has been made there within a few days by Hutchinson and Warnack, which bids fair to exceed any thing yet seen in those mines. The first chunk found, they endeavored in vain to move with crowbar. Near 1000 pounds have been gadded off of it, (and as much more is yet in sight,) but the massive lump is still immovable.

A WILD MAN.—The newspapers of Memphis, Tenn., and of Arkansas, have, during a year past, had frequent accounts of a wild man; said to be roaming through the great Mississippi bottom in the latter State. Numerous travelers and hunters have asserted that they have seen him, but none have ever been able to get near enough to give particulars concerning the strange being. The story is just revived again. The creature is said to be unmistakeably a human being, over seven feet high, but with all the shyness and habits of a completely wild animal.

IMPORTANT INVENTION.—The Washington Telegraph states that "Mr. De Bilbery has invented one of the most important life saving and swimming apparatuses we have ever seen. Application has been made by Mr. De B. for a patent. It is a kind of frock or doublet, of ordinary dress material, made double, interlaid with small metallic boxes inflated. This doublet may be worn as an overall or upward, and it is impossible for the wearer to sink below the shoulders, and Mr. De B. asserts that a person may remain in the water any length of time, and the water has no effect whatever on the buoyancy of the dress.

DISTINGUISHED FOREIGNERS IN PARIS.—The Garden of Plants has been enriched within the last month by successive arrivals from nearly all parts of the world—such as a rhinoceros from Morocco; a lion and two cubs, male and female, from the vicinity of Constantine; a genet, porcupines, monkeys, dromedaries, gazelles, an ostrich, and several eagles from other parts of Algeria; a lama or two from South America; a bull without horns, and a wild bull from China, whose belly drags upon the ground as he walks; and lastly, a merino sheep, whose tail, in the most bushy part, is fifteen inches through.

THE ABERDEEN CARDINAL.—A correspondent of the St. Louis Intelligencer, writing from Rome on the 30th of March, and referring to the subject of the appointment of an American Cardinal, says: "To settle the matter about Bishop Hughes, I may say here that I learn from several sources that the Pope has said he should appoint none for the United States but a native American, and that the honor was properly due to Maryland as the State settled by Roman Catholics. There is no talk at present of making an American Cardinal, but some Bishop of Baltimore may reasonably expect the honor in the course of a few years."

AGRICULTURAL SCHOOLS.—Ireland has sixty-three agricultural schools; Russia sixty-eight; France seventy-five; Bavaria thirty-five; Austria thirty-three; Brussels thirty-two, and Belgium one hundred. There are numerous others in different parts of Europe.

BRITISH REGULATIONS AND STEAMSHIPS.—The British Board of Trade have issued a notice that the provisions of the amended Steam Navigation Act, 14 and 15 Vic., c. 79, would be strictly enforced on and after the 31st inst. On the 31st inst. all steamers will be required to display in a conspicuous part of the vessel their certificate to run, and the number of passengers they are allowed to carry; each vessel will now be furnished with a safety valve, free from the control of the engineer. Penalties will be enforced on masters and owners for carrying more than their number, and on passengers for forcing their way on board, or travelling beyond the distance for which they have paid. The customs' officers on and after the 31st inst., will not grant transire or permit any vessels to put to sea unless they are properly found in life-boats, fire engines, signal lights, and the other requirements for the preservation of life at sea.—Merchant's Magazine.

The Kentucky Colonization Society will send an expedition to Liberia next January.

The number of persons employed in manufactures in the United States in 1850 was 1,050,000.

Four of the Judges of the Supreme Court of New York have pronounced the nine million canal bill unconstitutional.

There are now twelve daily newspapers published in Cincinnati—eight in the English language, and four in the German.

Twenty-five thousand dollars worth of Egyptian antiquities were entered at the Custom-house at Boston on the 31 inst.

The Nacion of Madrid says that the number of public functionaries of all ranks, or persons living on the public treasury in Spain, is 225,000, or one for every five who pay taxes.

It is estimated that the annual product of all the cotton mills in the United States is 250,000,000 yards, the aggregate value of which is supposed to be more than $67,000,000.

The Sultan of Turkey has decreed a large donation of works, in Arabic and Turkish print, to the American Oriental Society. The Sultan makes this donation partly in consideration of the generous manner in which Amin Bey was received in America.

Carpets are now manufactured in large quantities both in England and the United States, the figures of which are stamped, not woven. These are produced by a pressure of 500 tons on each block, or stamp. The carpets are very beautiful, but do not wear well, and we refer to any that the dealers do not always let their customers know the inferiority, though the price is well kept up.

A few weeks ago a singular phenomenon occurred on the mountain of Tobet, in Silesia. At its apex there is a chapel. Towards mid-day, on the day of the phenomenon, a report as of thunder was heard, and the summit of the mountain became suddenly enveloped in smoke. On the clearing away it appeared rent, and the chapel, with a large number of persons, had been engulphed. How many persons perished has not yet been ascertained.

The Boston Congregationalist, and The Trumpet, have made an arrangement for each paper to keep before the people, in standing columns, a collection of Scripture texts selected by the other. So That the Trumpet publishes every week a list of texts selected by The Congregationalist; and The Congregationalist publishes every week a list of texts selected by The Trumpet. And each is pledged to continue this arrangement as long as the other will.

Queen Isabella of Spain has given to the image of Our Lady of Atocha an imperial crown of fine gold set with diamonds and Brazilian topazes, the whole worth $766,000: to the image of the Savior, at the same shrine, a similar crown, though of course smaller in size; and two bouquets of the size of a man's hand, of pure diamonds. For these things the Queen paid the jeweller Lovis the enormous sum of $1,500,000. The statues have been adorned with them and placed on the altar where the public can see them; four soldiers constantly keep guard before the shrine.

The Knickerbocker, trying its hand upon a description of fashionableism in New York, declares that many of the occupants of houses, renting for $1500 a year, live upon the scantiest fare, in order to have the means to dress elegantly and live in a fashionable street. Their parlors are handsomely furnished, but their larders are extremely lean, their fires excruciatingly feeble, and their upper rooms scrimpingly ill garnished. The men of the house dines down town, and the ladies of the family allay their appetites with slops.

DISPUTED TITLE TO GUANO ISLANDS.—Considerable excitement is awakened among shippers and agriculturists in England by the merits of a controversy at present going on respecting the right of the Peruvian government to exclusively discovered Guano Islands. T. Wentworth Butler, of Exeter, has written to the London Times, claiming that the Islands of Lobos, in the rainless district of the South Pacific, and on which immense deposits of guano are found, do not belong to Peru, inasmuch as they were not enumerated among the Peruvian possessions when she declared her independence. The islets referred to are the Lobos Afuera, and the Lobos de Tierra, the former lying in lat. 0 34 S., long. 80.45 W. Mr. Butler, it appears, had several times applied to the British government to take possession of the Islands, but without effect. He concludes his statement by expressing high admiration of the enterprise of Captain Benjamin Morell, master of an American whaler, by whom these islands were discovered, and who published a minute account of them in a book issued in NewYork in 1832, under the name of "Morell's Four Voyages." It is remarkable that in the same book is a description of the Island of Ichaboe, and that, acting on the information there obtained, the first ship sailed from England to load guano at that deposit. On the other side of the question, the Peruvian Consul declares that the above islands are included within the limits of Peru, and warns all vessels against loading there without proper authority from the government.

SUTTEE REVIVED.—The night of the first of this year witnessed one of those fearful tragedies, to the suppression of which the philanthropists, both in England and India, proudly point as one of Lord William Bentick's crowning acts in the cause of humanity. The following is pretty near the truth: The Rajah died at Pachete on the 1st of January, at about 4 P. M.; a wild cry was raised by the women of the zenana that the Rajah was dead; this was soon silenced, and a guard placed at some distance round the mahjary. On the death of the Rajah being made known to the heir, he proceeded to the apartments of his mother, received the rites, and was told to enjoy his dignity, for that her mind was made up. A pile was hurriedly made within the precincts of the mahjary. At eight o'clock, volumes of smoke told that the horrid end of that house was being carried out. The Rance walked seven times round the pyre, and then threw herself from some blocks of wood into the flames which had been lighted for that purpose. After a few convulsive struggles to escape, her ashes mingled with those of her idiotic husband, who detested her in life. [Calcutta Englishman.

Information Wanted

Respecting BERNARD RODDY, who emigrated to the United States, from the North of Ireland, in August, 1817, in company with Messrs. John Kirkpatrick and John Morrow. The friends and relatives of the said gentlemen, and all others, are earnestly requested to forward the smallest information on this subject to the Rev. H. N. McTyeire, or Rev. J. C. Keener, New Orleans, State of Louisiana.

The Editors of all religious papers in the United States are respectfully and earnestly solicited to publish the above in behalf of four orphans, whose father died in Newarleans of Asiatic Cholera, in 1851, and the support of whose large and just legal rights now before Chancery in Ireland depends upon this information.

SELECT SCHOOL,

IN MAGHEE CHURCH, CARONDELET STREET.

The subscriber, having secured the use of a suitable room in the basement of the Maghee Church, proposes to open a SCHOOL on the First Monday in May next.

The Time of Teaching to be from 9 o'clock, A. M., to 2½ P. M.

The Course of Instruction to be thorough and extensive, embracing all the Branches of Education taught in any of the Seminaries or Colleges in our country, viz: English, Latin, and Greek, Modern Languages, Mathematics, and the various Sciences—Physical, Moral and Intellectual; also, Belles Lettres.

The subscriber, after an experience of ten years or more in teaching, as Superintendent or Professor of several Collegiate Institutes in different portions of the South and West, hopes that he will be able to give satisfaction to guardians and parents.

The French, Spanish and Italian Languages will be taught (according to the judicious and popular method of Ollendorff,) at the desire of the parents, without extra charge for any or all of them—they being embraced in the First Class, with the Ancient Languages, etc.

TERMS—$6, $8, and $10 per month, according to the Class.

Highly Important to Planters and Property Holders.

BRIDGEWATER ADAMANTINE PAINT.

The superior properties of this unequaled mineral substance is now so well and favorably known that it is unnecessary to enter into an extended notice. The public are referred to our circular, embracing certificates from—Capt. Sr. C. THOMASSON, of steamer Magnolia. Wm. BROWN, of towboat Porpoise. HUGHES, VALLETTE & Co., Managers La. Dry Dock do. J. P. WHITNEY & Co., Agents do. Capt. N. B. ROBBINS, of the ship Leodes. JOSEPH BENSON, Painter 132 Camp street. And the UNDERWRITERS' CERTIFICATES.

Also, the recommendation of a large number of our most influential COTTON FACTORS and COMMISSION MERCHANTS, all of which are included in the Agent's Circular. Also, the following, received since the circulars were printed from JOHN F. MILLER, of Attakapas:

"In July last I was induced to apply the Bridgewater Mineral Paint to my Sugarhouse, and in every respect it has exceeded my expectations, and the representations made by the agents, Messrs. G. C. Bogert & Co. I therefully add my testimony to the numerous ones embraced in the Agent's Circular, and recommend the same to Planters and others as the best Weather and Fire Protector I have ever known. Where I have applied it it has been exposed to the sun since last July, and has neither blistered nor cracked, and has formed a solid metallic surface, which has proved entirely impervious."

(Signed) JOHN F. MILLER.

New Iberia, Attakapas, March 10, 1852.

In addition to the above, we have in our possession innumerable certificates from equally respectable sources, which can be seen at our office; among which are those of Capt. Wm. Cutts, of the ship Charles Cooper; Brevet Lieut.-Col. G. H. Talcott, New York Arsenal; B. S. Smith, Lieut. and Quartermaster U. S. Military Academy, West Point; D. H. Lee, late Superintendent, now Secretary of the Hudson River Railroad Company; D. O. McCallum, Asst. Engineer New York and Erie Railroad, etc.; proves conclusively, by being thoroughly tested, that it is both

FIRE AND WEATHER PROOF.

The binding, shrinking, or warping of the material upon which it is used does not affect the paint, in twenty-four hours it dries, and in four weeks becomes a perfect slate. It preserves wood from decay, and neither blisters nor cracks by exposure to the hottest sun. For covering roofs of either tin, iron, zinc, wood, canvas or paper, it is also invaluable, and particularly recommended as it is a certain PROTECTION AGAINST SPARKS AND CINDERS, and is furnished cheaper than any paint in the Southern country. All orders sent to the General Agents, or their sub-agents, promptly executed. No deviation in price. Terms—cash, or its equivalent. G. C. BOGERT & CO., Agents for the States of La., Ala., Miss., and Texas.

SUB-AGENTS—In New Orleans, Messrs. Slark, Day Stauffer & Co., Priestley & Bien, J. Waterman & Co., R. Richards, E. McPherson; Mobile, J. G. Whitaker; Vicksburg, Byrne & Anderson; Galveston, Jones & Ufford. Baton Rouge, Levi Kellum. apl7

"The Death of the Infants."

[illegible] many a sigh came frae the heart,
And tears fell frae the e'e,
When the bairns took flight to the world of light,
Where tears can never be!

The sun shone with his fairest beams,
To light them on their way,
And the lay rock high, with notes of joy,
Attuned his sweetest lay.

"Sweetest birdie, say—which is the way
That we'll gang through the sky?
We left an earthly hame to-day,
For a heavenly hame on high."

The bird up flew on soaring wing,
Till near the hour of even,
When the bairnies heard the angels' song,
At the portal gates o' heuvon!

"Sing down! gang down, sweet bird, gang down!
Nae further maun ye flee:
For there are sounds ye maunna hear,
And sights ye maunna see.

The birdie turned him to the earth,
The bairnies to the sky,
While the seraph strain awoke again,
To welcome them on high!

The Policy of Rome.

Mr. Editor: The political bearings of Romanism, apart from its religious aspect, seem to me to deserve consideration. That Rome absolutely demanded the allegiance of every other power, is conceded by all. That she still holds this claim is, in these latitudes, denied. She is diligently represented, in these days and in these climes, as tolerant and liberal—the friend of civil and religious freedom. Some extracts from Brownson's Review for January, 1852, which I find in a Cincinnati paper, open a window through which we can get a glimpse of the working of their interior machinery, and perhaps ascertain something about her motive power, her principles, aims and aspirations at the present time. I like this writer's boldness. Plain speaking carries, at least, the air of honesty:

"Protestantism," says he, "whatever its professions, is really heathenism, and nothing else. [Brownson's Review, Jan. 1852, p. 9.

"Disguise it as you will, all who are not Catholics are heathens, and all who are not heathens are Catholics. Heresy and infidelity may assume a thousand shapes, but always at bottom are they heathenisms and nothing else." [Brownson's Review, Jan. 1852, pp. 23,24.

"The first duty of every civil government is to protect the Church and maintain the freedom of religion," we say, not of heresy and infidelity, which, as far as we could ever hear, have not, and never had, and never can have, any rights, being, as they undeniably are, contrary to the law of God. [Brownson's Review, Jan. 1852, p. 26.

Now here Protestantism, heathenism, heresy and infidelity are made identical; and under the latter, cognomen it is proclaimed of them all, that "they have not, never had, and never can have any right at all." This is the liberty, then, we are to understand, which Rome is prepared to grant to "all who are not Catholics." "The first duty of every civil government is to protect the Church," (the Roman, of course.) Protestantism, alias heathenism, alias heresy and infidelity, has not any right to protection. Take another extract:

"We try all princes and secular powers by their relations to the spiritual order, and care not a fig for any of them further than they serve it. The church is all in all to us, and she is to us only through the sovereign pontiff. As Our Lord founded his church on Peter, and we are submissive to her only as we are submissive to Peter in the person of his successors. [The sovereign Pontiff, is, under God, the fountain of all the authority we respect on earth.] [Brownson's Review, Jan. 1852, p. 9.

"And therefore, we lose all the breath we expend in declaiming against bigotry and intolerance, and in favor of religious liberty, or the right of any man to be of any religion or no religion, as best pleases him, which some two or three or our journalists would fain persuade the world is Catholic doctrine. [Brownson's Review, Jan. 1852, p. 64.

"When we ourselves are afraid to assert the supremacy of the Church and the subordination of the State, and to maintain that the secular is for the spiritual, and not the spiritual for the secular; when we are afraid to acknowledge the supremacy of Peter in his successors, and deem it the part of prudence to explain away or half deny the papacy, what have we got to say to the Protestants.

* * * * * * *

"We must, therefore, if we mean to be Catholics, be truly and like the word—be Papists, and fearlessly assert the Papal supremacy. We shall never get rid of our Protestant heathen, or political politics, and have a Catholic basis on which to oppose Protestantism. This is the first thing necessary for us. This is what we become, politically and socially, as we are in faith and worship, A UNITED BODY." [Brownson's Review, January, 1852, p. 65.

The undisguised teaching of these paragraphs is plainly, that civil authority, not emanating from the sovereign Pontiff, and subordinate to papal supremacy, is not to be respected, or cared "a fig" for.. And the information is tantamount to an acknowledgment, that in the United States, there is practised a daily "prudence," which, for political ends, explains away," or "half denies, the papacy." This has been Rome's policy under all free governments. This honest reviewer exhibits her as unchanged still. She still considers, according to him, all civil power, not derived from, and subordinate to the Holy See, as usurpation; and her unbending determination, however modified by circumstances, still to put in play every "prudent" expedient, to wrest that power out of, what she considers, unlawful hands, in order that she, "the fountain of all the authority" we are to respect on Earth," may exercise it herself. One extract more:

"The active mass of our (American) people, those who influence public affairs and give tone and character to the country, we believe to be utterly destitute of all sense of religion or morality, and capable of any iniquity demanded by, their interests or their passions. [Brownson's Review, Jan. 1852, p. 64.

"In a Presidential election no party can afford to lose the Catholic vote, and no party in favor of the 'Anglo-Saxon alliance' can obtain that vote. Brownson's Review, January 1852, p. 138.

The mass of American voters are here described as a parcel of dolts, possessing neither intelligence, integrity, nor sense of responsibility. The Catholic vote, compacted into one unbroken phalanx of subordination to the successor of St. Peter, is encouragingly represented, as already powerful enough to influence the Presidential election. What next! What further revelations will Mr. Brownson make to us unless indeed he be "prudently" silent for a time? That Rome's unchangeable policy is to extend what she calls liberty, the privilege of submission to her, throughout the world, and to establish her only legitimate authority over the ruins of every government that declare her allegiance, who, that has read her history, and studied her tactics, can for a moment doubt? And that this is, now and evermore, her grand desire and aim, I am glad for one that she has, at least one writer in this country, bold and candid enough to intimate openly.

Chinese Festivity.

[We clip the following account of the Chinese Festivity from the Christian Observer, a Methodist paper published in San Francisco, California, where the Festivity came off.]

Last Saturday, the 3d ult., was a day of feasting with the Celestial denizens of our city. It seems that in connection with their myths they believe that on a certain day of a certain month the souls of the dead are permitted to come out from a state of confinement and eat and drink what their living friends shall provide for them. Having been informed by Ah Chung that this day had arrived and was about to be celebrated, several of us repaired to the cemetery in order to witness the rites. After wading through the sand in Happy Valley until we got on to the plank road, we found the Chinamen passing back and forth in large numbers, some on foot, some on horseback, and others in carriages. We soon met some returning drays with a sacrifice which had already been offered, and were on the point of turning back, as every effort to get information as to where the ceremonies were to be performed, failed, for the want of a knowledge of our language amongst the swarthy passers by—but another row of drays (for they traveled in single file) on the way out, gave us an opportunity of conversing with the draymen, who seemed to be somewhat posted up: from him we learned that there were several different companies, each of which made its own sacrifice. We went on, and when arrived, found several of the Chinese collected around a little pinnacled enclosure, while off to one side two or three others had about a half bushel of Chinese shooting crackers. In the enclosure, which was on a hill side, were two grave-shaped mounds in the upper side: in these it seemed the Chinese have been buried. Just below the grave a place had been leveled for the purpose of this festal. The drays, three in number, drew up and were unloaded, from one of which two tables were taken and spread on the place prepared for them inside the enclosure.

On one of the tables was placed a hog, which had been prepared for it by cleaning and scraping, only reserving a tuft of bristles between the shoulders; it was decorated with artificial flowers, as were each of the other offerings. Beside the hog was placed a goat, the horns and tail of which were wrapped in pink and yellow paper. These each had the head fronting the graves. On the other table were placed various fruits, fresh and preserved; bread and rice; also, wine-glasses, while some bottles on the ground showed that they did not wish their friends to thirst. On a waiter sitting on the ground they placed fowls and fish—one duck had its bill open and its tongue wrapped in colored paper. They next stuck some fifteen or twenty candles in the graves and lighted them: at the same time had a large quantity of incense sticks burning among the candles, with apparently but little order. Behind the tables incense paper was abundantly strewed.

Now the ceremonies began by lighting the crackers at the one place, which kept up a grand noise to the misery of the horses, until, they were exhausted, which was not the case before the feasting began. While in the enclosure each individual went behind the table and bowing once with clasped hands, or as often as he pleased, would first step on the incense paper and kneel, then bow three or more times, after which a wine-glass filled with brandy from the accompanying bottles, was handed to him, when he would pour a little of the brandy on the ground before him, then waive the glass to the deities, and bowing three times would rise to his feet, bow again, and give place to the next one. All went through these genuflexions and offering of wine differing with however considerable diversity of manner: seeming in many instances to think it fine sport. After all had paid their devotions, the fruit and bread were handed around when all the company, including the spectators, partook and feasted plentifully. During the feast large piles of incense paper were burned, being occasionally wet with brandy. After which they gathered up their all and returned to the city in high glee, having a more substantial feast in prospect in the evening.

During the evening their part of the city was serenaded by a few of them, who, upon a little portico made the place ring with the sound of a large gong and a drum or two of kindred harmony. A large number of Americans from below cheered them quite boisterously. We supposed every thing passed off harmoniously, as there was nothing to indicate the reverse.

Truth stands the test of the mightiest of earth.

Sunday.

O day most calm, most bright,
The fruit of this, the next world's bud,
Th' indorsement of supreme delight,
Writ by a friend, and with His blood:
The couch of time, care's balm and bay:
The week were dark, but for thy light
Thy torch doth show the way.

* * * * *

Sundays the pillars are,
On which heaven's palace arched lies:
The other days fill up the span
And hollow room with vanities.
They are the fruitful bed and borders,
For God's rich garden: that is bare,
Which parts their ranks and orders.

The Sundays of man's life,
Threaded together on time's string,
Make bracelets to adorn the wife
Of the eternal glorious king.
On Sunday Heaven's gate stands ope
Blessings are plentiful and ripe.
More plentiful than hope.

Early Methodism in Alabama.

Cayuga, Hinds co., Miss., May 12, '52.

Bro. McTyeire: In looking over some of my old papers, I found the following short account of the work of God on the Alabama Circuit, in the latter part of the year 1820. I have concluded to send you a copy: perhaps it may be interesting to some of the Alabama preachers, to hear how the work of God commenced in that country.

Affectionately yours, Thomas Nixon.

"The history of this new country is but little known. How long the Creek Indians have inhabited it, will, in all probability, always remain a secret. The late war has wrested a large portion of their country from them. The troops from Georgia and Tennessee brought back favorable accounts of their country. The ruins of their deserted towns were scarcely done smoking, and the carcases of their dead were not entirely destroyed, when the whites came swarming like pigeons into their country. The forests melted away before them, and the wilderness was soon turned into a fruitful field. Towns and villages are now rising on the banks of the Alabama, and the arts and sciences are beginning to flourish where savage barbarity and ignorance has long reigned with unrivalled sway. But, thank God those days are gone, and shall never return. Churches and temples for the worship of the living God are beginning to be erected: the melodious songs of Zion are heard: peace and plenty, with all the blessings of the everlasting Gospel, are here enjoyed. It would be impossible to describe the difficulties and sufferings of the first emigrants to this country. Many were of the most respectable citizens of the States they came from. They were pillars in the Church of God. Like Abraham of old, as soon as they had pitched their tents, they erected an altar to God. The lonesome forests, which had listened for ages to the howling wolf, the screaming panther, the yelling savage, and the hooting owl, now heard for the first time the voice of prayer and the praises of God. When paths were made from one neighborhood to another, the people of God began to come together for divine worship on the Sabbath day. The local preachers began to hold meetings, and thus they continued until the spring of 1819, when Br. A. Tally was sent a missionary to them from the S. C. Conference. He collected them into societies, and formed a two weeks' circuit, and labored with them until his health began to fail. He was greatly beloved, and when he was not able to preach he visited the societies and families, and encouraged them with prospect of being supplied from the Mississippi Conference. In December, the same year, I came on to Br. Tally's work. I had instructions from Br. George to take charge of what is now called Conecuh Circuit, and Br. Tally's work also, which formed a six weeks' circuit, about two hundred miles long and, in many places, fifty miles wide. In March, 1820, Br. Clinton from the S. C. Conference, joined me. Our hearts were united: we suffered and rejoiced together. What we suffered is known to God, in whose cause we were engaged, and to whom we must give an account in the day of judgment. In July we saw some fruit of our labor; in August we were much favored with the presence of God; but in September, "the Holy Ghost was given." The 8th of the month our first camp-meeting began. Br. Griffon, our P. Elder, was sick and could not not attend any of our meetings. This meeting was held near Fort Dale. We had fifteen tents and three preachers, Brothers Clinton, Dulany and myself: our largest congregation was about three hundred persons, one hundred of whom were professors of religion. The power of God came down on Saturday, and continued with but little abatement until Tuesday morning. It exceeded any thing that had been seen by the oldest professors of religion. The colored people shared largely in the blessings of the meeting. The tears, the groans and cries of the mourners, and the prayers and shouts of the professors, were almost incessant. There was nothing wild or extravagant: all was solemn, awful and glorious. More than thirty obtained religion. After our meeting closed, the work went on in the neighborhood. A tavern keeper said to Br. Dulany that "he was broke—he could sell no more whisky;" and from that day to this he has sold but little, so powerfully did the "word of God grow and prevail." From this meeting we went on to one on the Alabama river, at Br. Grave's ferry. Several of the young men who had professed religion, accompanied us. This meeting began Friday night, the 15th of the month; there were thirty-five tents, nine preachers and about eight hundred persons. The work began under the first sermon, and continued to increase until Tuesday morning. During this whole time the encampment was resounding with the pitiful cries and groans of the mourners, or the joyful shouts of new born souls; we had the trumpet sounded several times, for the purpose of collecting them for preaching, but in vain; their language was, "God be merciful to me a sinner! O pray for me." It was religion they wanted, and this seeking up their minds that they cared but little about attending to formal discourses. And, thank God, many of them obtained the blessing more than sixty professed religion, many of whom, stand firm to this day. (Several of the young men became preachers of the Gospel.) From this meeting we attended one at a place called the Ponds, about twenty-five miles from Fort Claiborne. Friday night and Saturday morning we had heavy rain. On Saturday evening the clouds were blown off, and we had a clear sky and pleasant weather during the balance of the meeting. The work began on Saturday night and continued until Tuesday morning. We had some opposition from the Calvinists, but we paid little or no attention to them. Our business was to point the weeping sinner to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world. We had about thirty who obtained the pardoning love of God at this meeting.

"O how unexpectedly, how powerfully and how gloriously has God carried on his work in the forests of Alabama!

"Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen!"

The Timely Warning.

A THRILLING STORY.

My father, after an absence of three years, returned to the home so dear to him.

He had made his last voyage, and rejoiced to have reach a haven of rest from the perils of the sea. During his absence I had grown from a mere child and baby of my mother's, for I was her youngest, into a rough, careless and headstrong boy. Her gentle voice no longer restrained me. I was often wilful, and sometimes disobedient. I thought it indicated manly superiority to be independent of a woman's influence. My father's return was a fortunate circumstance for me. He soon perceived the spirit of insubordination stirring within me. I saw by his manner that it displeased him, although for a few days he said nothing to me about it.

It was an afternoon in October, bright and golden, that my father told me to get my hat and walk with him. We went down a narrow lane into a fine open field—a favorite play-ground for the children in the neighborhood. After talking cheerfully on different topics for a while, my father asked me if I observed that huge shadow, thrown by a mass of rocks that stood in the middle of the field. I replied that I did.

"My father owned this land," said he; "it was my play-ground when a boy. That rock stood there then. To me it is a beacon, and whenever I look at it, I recall a dark spot in my life—an event so painful to dwell upon, that if it were not as a warning to you I should not speak of it. Listen, then my dear boy, and learn wisdom from your father's errors.

"My father died when I was mere child: I was the only son. My mother was a gentle loving woman, devoted to her children, and beloved by everybody. I remember her pale, beautiful face—her sweet, affectionate smile—her kind and tender voice. In my childhood I loved her intensely: I was never happy apart from her, and she, fearing that I was becoming too much of a baby, sent me to the high school in the village. After associating a time with rude, rough boys, I lost in a measure, my fondness for home and my reverence for my mother, and it became more and more difficult for her to restrain my impetuous nature. I thought it an indication of manliness to resist her authority, and not to appear to feel penitent, although I knew that my conduct pained her. The epithet I most dreaded was girl boy. I could not bear to hear it said by my companions that I was tied to my mother's apron strings. From a quiet, home-loving child, I soon became a wild, boistering boy. My dear mother used every persuasion to induce me to seek happiness within the precincts of home. She exerted herself to make our fireside attractive, and my sister, following her self-sacrificing example, sought to entice me by planning games and diversions for my entertainment. I saw all this but did not heed it.

"It was on an afternoon like this, that, as I was about leaving the dining-table, to spend the intermission between morning and evening school in the street, as usual, my mother laid her hand on my shoulder, and said mildly but firmly, "My son, I wish you to come with me." I would have rebelled, but something in her manner awed me. She put on her bonnet, and said to me, "We will take a little walk together." I followed her in silence: and, as I was passing out the door, I observed one of my rude companions sulking about the door, and I knew he was waiting for me. He sneered as I went past him. My pride was wounded to the quick. He was a very bad boy, but being some years older than myself, he exercised a great influence over me. I followed my mother skulkily, till we reached the spot where we now stand, beneath the shadow of this huge rock. O, my boy, would that I could have blotted from my memory that which has cast a dark shadow over my whole life, gladly would I exchange all that the world can offer me for the quiet peace of mind I should enjoy. But no! like this huge, unsightly pile, stands the monument of my guilt forever.

"My mother, being in feeble health, sat down and beckoned me to sit beside her. Her look, so full of tender sorrow, is present to me now. I would not sit, but continued standing sullenly beside. "Alfred, my dear son," said she, "have you lost all your love for your mother?" I did not reply. "I fear you have," she continued; "and may God help you to see your own heart, and me to do my duty!" She then talked to me of my misdeeds, of the dreadful consequence of the course I was pursuing. By tears and entreaties, and prayers, she tried to make an impression upon me. She placed before me the lives and example of great and good men; she sought to stimulate my ambition. I was moved but too proud to show it, and remained standing in dogged silence beside her. I thought, "What will my companion say, if, after all my boastings, I yield at last and submit to be led by a woman!"

"What agony was visible on my mother's face when she saw that all she said and suffered, failed to move me! She rose to go home, and I followed at a distance. She spoke no more to me till we reached her own door.

"It is school time now," said she, "Go, my son, and once more let me beseech you to think upon what I have said."

"I shan't go to school," said I.

She looked astonished at my boldness, but replied firmly, "certainly, you will go. Alfred, I command you."

"I will not," said I, with a tone of defiance.

"One of two things, you must do, Alfred—either go to school this moment, or I will lock you in your room, and keep you there, till you are ready to promise implicit obedience to my wishes in future.

"I dare you to do it," said I, "you can't get me up stairs."

"Alfred, choose now," said my mother, who laid her hand upon my arm. She trembled violently, and was deadly pale.

"If you touch me, I will kick you," said I in a terrible rage. God knows I knew not what I said.

"Will you go, Alfred?"

"No," I replied, but quailed beneath her eye.

"Then follow me, said she, as she grasped my arm firmly. I raised my foot—O, my son, hear me!—I raised my foot and kicked her—my sainted mother! How my head reels as the torrent of memory rushes over me! I kicked my mother—a feeble woman—my mother! She staggered back a few steps, and leaned against the wall. She did not look at me. I saw her heart beat against her breast. O, heavenly Father," she cried, "forgive him, he knows not what he does." The gardener just then passed the door, and seeing my mother pale and almost unable to support herself, he stopped; she beckoned him in. "Take this boy up stairs and lock him in his own room," said she, and turned from me. Looking back as she was entering her room, she gave me such a look—it will forever follow me. It was a look of agony, mingled with the intensest love—it was the last, unutterable pang from a heart that was broken.

In a moment, I found myself a prisoner in my own room. I thought, for a moment I would fling myself from the open window, and dash out my brains, but felt afraid to die. I was not penitent. At times my heart was subdued, but my stubborn pride rose in an instant and bade me not to yield. The pale face of my mother haunted me. I flung myself on the bed and fell asleep. I awoke at midnight stiffened by the damp night air, terrified with frightful dreams. I would have sought my mother at that moment, for I trembled with fear, but my door was fast. With the daylight my terrors were dissipated, and I became bold in resisting all good impulses. The servant brought my meals, but I did not taste them. I thought the day would never end. Just at twilight I heard a light footstep approach the door. It was my sister, who called me by name.

"What may I tell mother from you?"—she asked.

"Nothing," I replied.

"O, Alfred, for my sake, for all our sakes, say that you are sorry—let me tell mother that you are sorrow. She longs to forgive you."

"I won't be driven to school against my will," said I.

"But you will go if she wishes it, dear Alfred," said my sister pleadingly.

"No, I won't said I, and you needn't say a word more about it."

"O, my brother, you will kill her! you will kill her, and then you can never have a happy moment again."

I made no reply to this. My feelings were touched, but I still resisted their kind influence. My sister called me, but I could not answer. I would not answer. I heard her footsteps slowly retreating, and again I flung myself on the bed to pass another wretched and fearful night. O God, how wretched! how fearful I did not know!

Another footstep slower and feebler than my sister's disturbed me. A voice called me by name. It was my mother's.

Alfred my son, shall I come in? Are you sorrow for what you have done?" she asked.

I cannot tell what influence, operating at that moment, made me speak adverse to my feelings. The gentle voice of my mother that thrilled through me, melted the ice from my obdurate heart, and I longed to throw myself on her neck, but I did not. No my boy, I did not. But my words gave the lie to my heart when I said I was not sorry. I heard her withdraw. I heard her groan. I longed to call her back, but I did not.

I was awakened from an uneasy slumber by hearing my name called loudly, and my sister stood by my bedside.

"Get up, Alfred." O, don't wait a minute! Get up and come with me. Mother is dying."

I thought I was yet dreaming, but I got up melancholy, and followed by my sister,—On the bed, pale and cold as marble, lay my mother. She had thrown herself on the bed to rest; arising to go again to me, she was seized with a palpitation of the heart, and bore senseless to her room.

I cannot tell you my agony as I looked upon her—my remorse was tenfold more bitter from the thought that she would never know it. I believe myself to be her murderer. I fell on the bed beside her; I could not weep. My heart burned in my bosom; my brain was all on fire. My sister threw her arms around me and wept in silence. Suddenly we saw a slight motion of mother's hand—her eyes unclosed.

She had recovered consciousness, but not speech. She looked at me, and moved her lips. I could not understand her words. "Mother, mother," I shrieked, "say only that you forgive me." She could not say it with her lips, but her hand pressed mine. She smiled upon me, and lifting her thin white hands, she clasped my own within them, and cast her eyes upwards, she moved her lips in prayer, and thus she died. I remained still kneeling beside that dear form, till my gentle sister removed me. She comforted me, for she knew the heavy load of sorrow on my heart; heavier than grief for the loss of a mother; for it was a load of sorrow for sin. The joy of youth had left me forever.

"My son, the suffering such memories awake must continue as long as life. God is merciful; but remorse for past misdeeds is a canker-worm in the heart, that preys upon it forever."

My father ceased speaking, and buried his face in his hands. He saw and felt the bearing his narrative had upon my character and conduct. I have never forgotten it. Boys, who spurn a mother's control, who are ashamed to own that they are wrong, who think it manly to resist her authority, or yield to her influence, beware! Lay not up for yourselves bitter memories for your future years.

Bishop Janes' Address to Young Preachers.

We give two paragraphs from this practical experienced preacher:

"You are also directed to devote a part of your time to reading, and meditation, and prayer. It is very important that you should devote a large portion of your time to reading. There are young men of great fluency, lively imaginations, and pleasing manners, who can speak on almost any subject with readiness. These are in special danger of neglecting this direction. They find it much easier to spend their time in agreeable society, than in diligent reading and close, consecutive thinking. They consider not how soon the fire of youth and the vivacity of their imaginations will be gone, and that the people will expect from a man who has obtained mature age, much better preaching than that with which he satisfied them when a youth. There are those who, because they neglected this direction, were as good preachers in the first or second years of their ministry, as they are now after the lapse of twenty years. And yet these men will come to us and say, 'I have been twenty years in the conference, and it is now time I should have a station: it is time that I should go to Philadelphia.' Let me now say that no preacher should expect us to place him in a situation for which he has not qualified himself. I would also say to this class, for their encouragement, there is not one of you who may not, by diligent application, qualify himself for any position in the Church. And if you are unable to reach the highest point of intellectual attainment, you may all be first-class pastors."

"As I proposed one of these questions, I noticed a smile upon the countenances of some before me, as if they thought it a matter of trifling importance. The question was, 'Will you endeavor not to speak too long or too loud?' But my experience has convinced me that the people will endure almost any objectionable characteristic in their preacher more patiently than long and tedious preaching. The sermon may contain sound theology from beginning to end. It may be admirably arranged, and yet the people will be dissatisfied if it be long. Only on special occasions will they be willing to listen to a long discourse. And while there is danger of speaking too loud, there is also danger of speaking too low. I consider the words of the Discipline as calling attention to the general manner of delivery. There is a way of speaking that is exceedingly injurious to the speaker, and there is a way that is healthful. In early life I was not impressed with the importance of the manner of speaking, and I am now suffering the consequences of my error. I contracted a habit which was injurious, and now the sad reflection is forced upon me, that I have thrown away a large amount of usefulness. Above all, avoid a monotonous delivery. I had once a committee to wait on me requesting the removal of their pastor at the end of his first year. I was surprised. He was a man of intelligence and learning, and good preaching abilities. I asked why they desired a change. They declined giving an answer. I pressed the question. At length one of them, a man of superior sense, said he scarcely knew why their preacher did not succeed, except it was because he was monotonously good. Let your expression be varied. Lift up your voice, now and then. Wake up yourselves, and wake up your congregation, if they get asleep. It strengthens a weak man to speak aloud occasionally. Try to hit the congregation sometimes—to make an impression by every sermon you preach."

The Boy's Dead.—There is a world of feeling in the following little occurrence, which we clip from a contemporary:

Recently we were riding a short distance from the city, when we met a little girl, who appeared in great haste, and whose eyes looked as if she had been weeping. She looked as if she wanted to speak, and on our stopping, she came close up to the carriage, sobbing as if her little heart was broken, while the tear-drops were standing in her eyes, and said, "The baby's dead!" We were an entire stranger to her, but she knew of but one baby in the world, and that baby, to whom she was, no doubt, tenderly attached was dead. Those three short words were a full text for reflection the balance of the ride. We might write columns on them, but we will merely repeat to our readers what the little girl said to us, and let them reflect as we did, on the thought that "the baby's dead."

When the hour of affliction arrives, and the necessities of our nature require something more than earthly friendship, then it is that we find our sweetest solace in the beauties of the Christian religion.

Immortality.

In my youthful days I was often troubled with doubts respecting my immortality. One evening I wandered forth from the city of Washington in the Congressional burying-ground. It was the beautiful spring-time. All nature was clothed in loveliest emerald, variegated by the thousand hues of various blooms. When I arrived within the enclosure, I found myself at the romantic landscape which surrounded me. To the south rolled the noble Potomac, while just beyond stretched in gorgeous beauty the villages and fields of Virginia. Eastward presented the richly improved tobacco and wheat fields of Maryland, and Westward spread in rich grandeur the Capitol in this vast republic, with all the richness and majesty of the Metropolis of Freedom. But I now stopped to behold the cemetery; I had just seen the living, I then gazed upon the dead.

Here is the beautiful stone which tells of a more beautiful little cherub of earth in the shape of a little girl of seven. In the spring before her decease she had planted some little flowers in a corner of her papa's garden, and when she was sick she often spoke of them; and, by a strange coincidence, the very night she died, being early in Autumn, there came a frost, and the next morning the child and flowers were both seen smitten to the ground. The parents, that evening, when they buried her, took the roots that she had planted with her own little hands, and placed them in the bier by her coffin, and when they covered her in the cold ground, they placed the tufts of earth containing her flowers at her feet. Nature was then cold and gloomy; but now she has become cheerful and beautiful, and even these little flowers, which died with their little mistress, have arisen again, and waft sweet fragrance over her tomb; but where is she? Then I thought—

"Oh, when shall Spring visit the mouldering urn!
Oh, when shall day dawn on the night of the grave!"

Oh, how did these dark and desponding thoughts haunt me! Could life come from the corruption of the grave? Could immortality await mankind? While thus reflecting, I turned around and read the death of a young lady of sixteen. I paused. What—just in the opening of existence, when the world presents the greatest attractions, and cut down so suddenly; but I continued to read, and I thought surely I was guided to her epitaph; life seemed given me from the dead, and I lost my doubts of immortality in the cemetery. The verses seemed so applicable, the comparison so striking, the combination so chaste and beautiful, that I copied it upon the spot. Oh, I thought, may not the soul exist and still shine in immortal vigor and liveliness, even after it has become invisible to mortals? But to the epitaph. It doubtless stands there yet, and is as follows:

"The fairest star of morning's hour,
In that which shines in twilight skies,
Scarce risen in bright beams, the last,
And vanishes to mortal eyes.
Its loss inspires a brief regret,
Its loveliness is no'er forgot;
We know full well 'tis shining yet
Although we may behold it not.
And thus the spirit which has gone
Is but absorbed in glory's blaze,
Its beaming brightness burning on,
Though lost unto our finite gaze.
There are who watched it to the last—
There are who can forget it never—
May there, when life's dark shades are past,
Partake with her its light for ever."

How sweet to me was the thought of "still shining," after I was seen no more. How beautiful the figure, and how easy the transition from a "star" to a spirit. I left reluctantly the place, thinking—

"Shall man be left to moulder in the dust,
While fate, relenting, lets the flowers live?
Shall nature's laws, to man alone unjust,
Hid him, though doomed to perish, hope to live.
No! heaven's immortal spring shall yet arise,
And man shall bloom for ever in the skies."

Across the River.—From Doctor Dowling's "Power of Illustration," a small but invaluable treatise, we take the following paragraph:

About six years ago, says a clergyman in New York city, I was traveling to the borders of the Hudson, and on the most beautiful portion of that noble stream, where its waters seem to rest against the highlands of Fishkill, and form the Newburg Bay. I was riding on the western shore, dotted with elegant country-seats, and so elevated as to command a fine view of the surrounding county of Dutchess. Passing a substantial mansion, I observed carriages standing around the entrance, and a hearse; that plainly indicated the occasion of the gathering. It was something more than curiosity, it was the dictate of natural sympathy, that induced me to stop and mingle with the multitude.

It was easy to learn, from the first whom I addressed, that a young man, the son of parents now advanced in life, was to be buried. The clergyman in attendance was just closing his remarks when I stopped at the door; and after a short but eloquent pause in the services—for silence is always eloquent in the house of mourning—the afflicted father rose, and, overcoming the emotion with which he struggled, spoke a few words to the friends which surrounded him. Said he, "A few months ago, one of my sons removed to the other side of the river, and resides on the shore, in view of the spot where we are assembled. And now I find that my thoughts are over there far more frequently than they were before. I have long had friends there whom I loved, and I had an interest in the people, but I had no one there; but since that child has been a resident there I love to be there. So it has been with me during the few days that have passed since [illegible] has passed the river of death, as I trust, has entered heaven. My thoughts are often there now. True, I have [illegible] before—a father there, but [illegible] Now I have an interest in heaven such as I never felt till one of [illegible] children went there to live."

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

BOSTON, May 14, 1852.

DEAR BROTHER K.:

I thank you for the advice on my leaving, to bring my cloak along, and if I had an overcoat, to bring that also. They are both needed at this writing. Most heartily do I join in the poet's invocation—

"Come, gentle spring, ethereal mildness come!"

Maybe, the latitude of Boston accounts for the crookedness of its streets. For crookedness, they beat all thoroughfares my eyes have yet seen, or my feet traveled. It may truly be charged against these down-easters, that they have crooked ways. And so the wind never gets a clean, long sweep at them. The air is kept in eddies instead of currents. Very effectual and yet unintentional fortifications against bleak winds, are these crooked, angular, short and abruptly terminated streets. The whole town is a labryinth. It takes almost as much genius to go through it without getting lost as it does in the country to be a justice of the peace. But the buildings are superior. It is easy to see that Quincy Granite is not hard to be had. All about are the indications of consummate police regulations.

Yesterday afternoon Bishop Waugh preached a funeral discourse on the late Bishop Hedding. Services were introduced by Bishop Waugh, giving out the 1083d hymn,

"How blest the righteous when he dies."

Bishop Morris followed the singing of the hymn with an impressive prayer—after which the 90th Psalm and part of the 1st chapter of 1st Peter, were read by Bishop Janes. Bishop Waugh requested the choir to chant the following scripture passages: "Blessed are the dead," etc. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection," "Unto him that loved us," "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth." Sixth Job: "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away—Blessed be the name of the Lord." He described the man, the bishop, the Christian example which the Lord had given to our Church, the triumphant manner in which that gift after long use had been taken back and the cause for general gratitude in such life and such a death and devout acquiescence in this crowning providence. The venerable preacher, now senior bishop, labored under great emotion and shed tears, with his congregation, at some recital of the history and experience of his deceased colleague. Truly such a man was a grant of large magnitude to the Church. And his death was if possible greater than his life. He triumphed all through the valley and shadow of death.

An account from his own manuscript was read in the filling up the heads of the sermon. Bishop Hedding has recorded it that at four years old he had awakening, and was a fit subject of converting grace; he might have gone on then through prayer and forgiveness, to the adoption of a son with suitable encouragements and instructions. It was not till his eighteenth year that his awakenings were renewed and ended in his conversion, clear conversion. He joined the itinerant ministry in 1801. In General Conferance of 1820, several friends desired leave to present his name for the Episcopacy. He declined, firmly. In 1824 his leave was again asked. "Then, said he, I thought it would seem obstinate to continue refusal, and believing there was not the least probability of my election, I consented. When the ballot was made and the names counted the Bishop proclaimed in a calm, distinct tone, that struck me like thunder, ELIJAH HEDDING IS ELECTED." At first he reluctiated to be advanced to the office and take on him awful responsibilities to which he felt inadequate. But a resolution of the General Conference encouraged and urged him to the work for which Providence had thus marked him out. So true is it that merit is ever diffident—

"How quick and ready those to go,
Whom God has never sent;
How cautious, diffident and slow,
His chosen instrument!"

It was no common occasion and could but be deeply instructive. It was not unequal in dignity to the obsequies of a Samuel or Joshua. Well is it added, after enumerating the gift and the taking it away from the Church—"Blessed be the name of the Lord." There is material here for an uncommon book of biography.

In the Conference the appeal case, about the pew matter, draws its slow length along. Long and tedious speakers may be found even when the days are short. There was some specious reasoning in the lad, who on an examination upon philosophy, being asked for an example of the congracting power of cold and the expansive power of heat, replied: Because in summer the days are long and in winter they are short! This will not apply to orators—always. But I have heard some terse and telling speeches on the floor. The member in this case who defends the action of the Ohio Conference made an amusing but offensive illustration of the expectation of the appellant. I have told you that appellant has advocated pews against the rules of his Conference. The seat is alleged, contrary to the rules of the Conference, to have gone largely into pews and the case is tried in a pewed and organ-ized Chapel. Now, said the speaker, the appellant may think to gain his case as a certain man out West got clear of a charge of stealing bacon. The jury was empannoled and the prosecuting lawyer made out a strong case; the proof was positive. The jury retired and soon brought in a verdict of "not guilty." It was an astonishing verdict, but the circumstances, a long while after, leaked out that explained it—three-fourths of the jurymen had shared in the stolen bacon.

There are many great gray heads in the assembly. I see old Father Taylor, the mariners' preacher, moving up and down the aisles. He seems to know every body, and has a manner of greeting that for heartiness approaches a Russian hug and kiss. Dr. Bangs, old as he is, appears to carry himself in the van of the host as prominently as ever. Of his former position in such bodies I can only judge by the minutes. I never saw him before, and should never have known the man from the portrait of him with which I have long been familiar. The set of his head is the only agreement between the man and the portrait. The Indians of Canada used to designate him as "the Missionary that carried his head on one shoulder. In a pen and ink sketch of the Herald of this morning, I find the following: "The pose of his head is peculiar; it inclines slightly to one side, and it is said that when on a District, his young preachers generally, and perhaps unconsciously, fell into the same habit, and went up to the Annual Conference, after due training, hanging their heads a la Bangs."

Our Southern company was joined this morning by Dr. Doggett, who has been on to New York making a speech at the American Tract Society celebration. The Doctor looks even younger than when I saw him last—six years ago. Hard work, double work, agrees well with him. I am glad at this, not only for high personal considerations, but because it gives good prospects for the Quarterly Review in years to come.

Yours, truly, H. N. M.

A Known Tongue.

"The string of his tongue was loosed and he spoke plain."
Mark 7, 35.

"A very intelligent congregation": what Brother has not had this whispered into his ear just upon rising to preach? "The Colonel" and "the Judge": How many a sermon has been preached to those distinguished ones, at the expense of a house full of famishing souls! With such a key-note the "discourse" must needs be high-sounding—long, labored and be-labored—a serious, frizzled, word-bound eloquence. Mean while the poor "Poor" have not the Gospel preached unto them.

"A fine sermon"! Yes—if syntax is spirituality—very fine. "Has he been regularly educated?" Of course, else we could have understood him. The Apostle had rather speak "five words" with his understanding "than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue." However, the ten thousand "unknown" still have a curious charm. Brethren are fond, very, of dim notice of "the original." May be a solution of the problem of a departed glory is somewhere in the pulpit-exchange of grace for grammar. The olden Methodist preachers were men who had despaired of pleasing and therefore wielded all their powers. Public opinion was so hopelessly against them, that their eloquence became an alternative. Mr. Wesley himself was remarkably simple in his use of language, and no man ever spake or wrote more transparently. One in reading his book of sermons scarcely thinks of the author. Plainness of speech comes from a straight-forward purpose.

When men have thoughts they have words. Only, those who have most words have sometimes the fewest thoughts. Once in a while these send out an idea, as one does a friend to the grave, with words for pall bearers. Methodism owes but little of her success to this class of speakers. Her champions have ever been men not only of prayer and Christian experience, but men of thought, men of labor, men of point, men of pathos, men of words too, though not wordy. They sought and used a clear medium. The worth and weight of what they had to tell was, like Government cannon, too great to be helped or hindered by outside ornament.

The great end of Preaching is the conversion of souls. No Christian man is to be so much pitied as the pastor of a large, fashionable, wealthy Church in one of our large cities, because he is called to labor seemingly for naught, amongst a class of persons who rarely seek religion. Imposing churches, crowded audiences, large salaries, and Degrees of Divinity are a living comfort; but the recollection of sinners awakened, of happy converts, simple-hearted, grateful Church members, Itinerant privations, and Camp-meeting Revivals will prove a dying one.

"I would the precious time redeem,
And longer live for this alone,
To spend and to be spent for them,
Who have not yet my Saviour known,
Fully on these my mission prove
And only breathe to breathe thy love."

How unwise, then, to affect a style only suited to the hopeless great! to be forever attempting Gibraltar, which has not been taken and never will be! It should be a matter of great thankfulness if we, being called to preach, aim after the hopeless, that we are doomed to the hopeless, and if we use the "unknown" that we can use the known.

But, O preacher! if you really love the "Colonel" and the "Judge," and you wish to save them, as you really ought, then know that the shortest way to do that is to "preach the Gospel to the Poor," for several reasons. First: You can preach better yourself; not please you will be more pleasing; your idnes will be distinct and therefore your language clear; your heart will be full, your imagination warm, your mind quick, and therefore your speech eloquent. So that the people will be moved, and most likely your two friends—"positively pleased."

Secondly: "Preach the Gospel to the Poor" and the Poor will be convicted, the neighborhood aroused, the meeting protracted, the power of God displayed, many converted, and, last of all, may be, the "Colonel" and the "Judge" actually awakened (!)

Thirdly: Preach to the Poor, because "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister let him do it as of the ability which God giveth; that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ, to whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen."

Moreau Street S. School Celebration.

This annual treat was given on Thursday evening last. We were late, and so missed the first part of it. What a sunny time it was! The audience was large, the house was terrible with banners, the girls were pretty in white and blue and pink, the boys were washed and combed and put upon their best behavior, parents were palpitating, teachers looked pleased and proud, and there on the platform—that awful platform—sat all the big folks.

Every body's countenance was lighted with the joy of the children, and every body's heart thrilled with their sweet voices. Their forms, their innocence, their faces, their tones and the bright and smiling house—of such is the kingdom of Heaven.

No doubt the boys would say that the affair consisted of three principal parts—the singing, the speaking and the eating. We believe that it is given up that the Moreau street children sing the best of all our schools. Mr. Uber, a German friend, has taken great pains to teach them to sing by note. They sang in excellent time and spirit, and carried the several parts.

There was rather too much speaking—a very common mistake in Sabbath School celebrations, and one very difficult to correct.

One little boy of three years, an orphan, who could speak better than he could talk, raised his left hand and pointed to the "angels," and then knelt down, as he "used to" by his mother. The grace of the child was very touching.

The following pieces were the most distinctly and pleasingly pronounced. "Address to the Deity," "The Blind Child"—He asks if there are any blind in Heaven? His sister answers,

"Why ask a thing so odd"

He replies,

"O Mary, He is so good to me,
I thought I'd like to look at God"

"Passing Away," the "Wicked Heart" one of the speakers brim full of mischief; "Little Sparrow," "The Resurrection," lastly, the "Pebble and the Acorn"—very prettily spoken.

"I am a pebble and yield to none
Were this swelling words of a tiny stone:
"I am as old as the big round earth"
"I am a pebble, but who are thou.
"Rattling along from the restless bough"

It was not long ere the soil was broke,
By the peering head of an infant oak
And as it rose, and its branches spread,
The Pebble looked up and wondering said,
"A modest Acorn, never to tell what
Was enclosed in its simple shell!
That the pride of the forest was folded up
In the narrow space of its little cup"

After this the children and their friends went down stairs to play their parts in the last act of this refreshing drama. There in the basement on a long table, running all round the room, was spread what a body might call a real "feast of reason"—cakes, sugar plums and ice cream! Grown people, we have noticed on such occasions, can enjoy the children's eating and their own most heartily. We can testify that it was pre-eminently the case on Thursday night. There was enough, and actually more ice cream than enough, and not a doctor in the room.

We should like to write a good deal more to tell how much we loved one noble spirit in that scene, who moved about during the evening with a fan in his hand, whose chief delight was and is always, to do good, and to make his neighbors and their children happy; but

"He that sows with plenteously shall reap plenteously"

SABBATH SCHOOL CELEBRATION.—A grand Sabbath School celebration took place at Brooklyn N. Y. on the 15th inst. About 900 children participated in the ceremonies, and as no single room could hold them, two different churches were opened for their reception. John S. Folk, Esq., was chief marshal of the procession.

THANKSGIVING DAY IN VIRGINIA.—The Episcopal Convention of Virginia has adopted a resolution to memorialize the Governor of that State to unite with the Governors of other States in setting apart one day in the year for prayer and thanksgiving.

PRESBYTERIAN GENERAL ASSEMBLY.—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States convened at Charleston on the 29th inst. This is the first time we believe, that the important ecclesiastical body has ever met south of Virginia. The Courier of the 21st says: "Upwards of 200 clerical and lay delegates, from various parts of the United States, were in attendance, and additional ones are expected, as the Assembly will continue in session some ten or twelve days.

PENNSYLVANIA EPISCOPAL CONVENTION.—The Pennsylvania Episcopal Convention assembled at St. Andrew's Church, Philadelphia, on the 18th instant. After the roll was called, a motion was made by Mr. Ashurst, lay delegate from Ephrata, to admit lay delegates from the Colored Church of the Crucifixion. The subject was postponed until the 19th, after the Bishop's address, by the following vote: Clerical, 43 to 40; lay, 38 to 20. After an ineffectual ballot to elect Secretaries, the Convention adjourned until the following day.

THE MAINE LIQUOR LAW IN MASSACHUSETTS.—A dispatch from Boston, dated the 19th inst., says: The Governor's veto of the Liquor Law was warmly debated in the Senate to-day, and an attempt to pass it in spite of the veto, failed by a vote of 25 to 15. A new bill was then introduced to meet the Governor's principal objections, passed and sent to the House of Representatives.

ANOTHER COMET.—A dispatch from Cambridge, Mass., dated the 10th, says: "A telescopic comet was discovered this morning by G. P. Bond at the Observatory."

IRISH IN THE UNITED STATES.—A writer in the London Times states that from 1820 to 1851 there have arrived in the United States 1,549,351 Irish—and when 250,000

METHODIST GENERAL CONFERENCE.—Boston, May 20.—The Conference this morning voted to establish a Book Concern and depository in California. Also a Repository in Chicago, to be under the care of the Cincinnati Book Concern. The remainder of the morning was occupied with addresses on the subject of Foreign Missions.

The anniversary of the Missionary Society was held yesterday afternoon in the Bromfield street Church. Bishop Waugh presided and addresses were delivered by the Rev. Mr. Hoode, of Indiana, Rev. Dr. Nast, of Ohio, Rev. Dr. McClintock, of New York, and the Rev. Mr. Sheer, of Baltimore. There was a second meeting in the evening, at which the Rev. Mr. Wise, of New Bedford, Rev. Dr. Simpson, of Ohio, Rev. George Loomis, of New York, and Rev. Dr. Durbin, delivered addresses.

General Conference of the M. E. Church, North.

May 14th.—The matter of most interest in this day's proceedings is the memorial from Boston, on constituting a court of appeals.

To the Rev. Bishops and members of the General Conference of the M. E. Church in General Conference assembled:

Rev. and Dear Fathers and Brethren:—Your petitioners beg leave to submit to your consideration the following draught of a delegated Annual Conference. And as in duty bound, they will ever pray.

S. COMFORT,
Boston, May 14, '52. H. MATTISON.

DELEGATED ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

Question. Who shall compose the Delegated Annual Conference, and what shall be its regulations and powers.

Answer 1. The delegated Annual Conference, shall consist of all the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and of one delegate from each Annual Conference, to be chosen by ballot, who shall have traveled not less than seven full calendar years, from the time of admission on trial, and who shall be in full connection at the time of such election.

Ans. 2.—The senior Bishop who shall be present shall be ex officio chairman of the Conference. But should neither of the Bishops be present, the Conference shall elect a Chairman pro tem from its own body. And two-thirds of all the members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

Ans. 3. The Delegated Annual Conference shall meet on the fifteenth day of November in the year 1853, in the city of Philadelphia; and thence forward, annually on the same day in each year at such place as the Conference shall from time to time appoint.

Ans. 4.—The powers of the Delegated Annual Conference shall be strictly and exclusively judicial.

Ans. 5.—It shall have the authority to decide upon the constitutionality of all the legislative acts of the General Conference, and to suspend the operation of such as it shall decide to be unconstitutional.

Ans. 6.—It shall have authority to try, censure, suspend, or expel an accused Bishop, and to try appeals from censured or excluded members of an Annual Conference, under such rules and provisions as the General Conference shall prescribe.

The Committee on Episcopacy offered the following Resolution.

"The Committee have also had under consideration that part of the Bishops' Address which relates to strengthening the Episcopacy, and recommend the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That we will, at this session of the General Conference, elect three additional Bishops."

They make and unmake so handily and have so much of the raw material out of which to make Bishops, that the Committee seem strangely enough to stint their supply. The Zions' Herald says:

We could nominate impromptu a whole corps of New England men who could honorably take their seats by the side of the present excellent incumbents.

In such an "impromptu" of course much would depend upon one's notion of what qualities are requisite to make up a man fit for the office of a Bishop. For our part, we suppose that when the Aloes yields a bloom, the Church yields a Bishop.

On the 15th the action of the Ohio Conference in the case of J. S. Inskip, was reversed by a vote of 87 to 81—a case which involved the Pew question. By this action it is declared that the rule of the Discipline in regard to pewing churches is advisory. Its caption is, "what advice shall be given!"

The appellant was a "representative man"—the exponent of all who are for pews, organs, lay representation, and for a fundamental, universal, continual, born ideal and new ideal experiment (Methodist) Church.

The question became one between two great parties, which hold respectively two great sets of principles—the "go-ahead," and the "hold-on." Dr. Taylor of the former or, at least such the former, winds up an argument with this sprightly passage:

"I. Finally, Strebeck's doctrine of the book agrees with the spirit of Unity and the fundamental idea of old-fashioned Methodism. The Methodist Church, sir, thanks to God, is not a fossil nor a collection of fossils. It has life and power and progress in it. In the hands of Wesley, blessings on his glorious memory! it was the first begotten child of Providence. That illustrious man, when turned out of the established churches, went to the prisons, to the coal-pits, and to the high-ways and hedges. Thus began the system of itineracy. When the work had become so vast, and so extended, that the few educated and ordained clergymen in his ranks could not meet the wants growing up around him, he sent the most gifted and pious of his brethren into the field, and thus was originated what is styled lay-preaching. Thus, exactly thus, grew up the entire system. To follow the openings and thus secure the support of Providence, was the grand idea of old-fashioned Methodism. Every rule, every notion, every desire and wish had to bow to this general principle. Now, however, there has grown up a race of new-fashioned Methodists, who, in trying to maintain the integrity of our cause, forget the fundamental idea of our economy. If we wish to keep Methodism as it was in the hands of our forefathers, we must accomplish this wish, not by doing what our forefathers did, but as they did."

On the 18th, the Conference was occupied all day in the Appeal case of the Rev. A. N. Maccabee, from the Pittsburgh Annual Conference.

THE METHODIST CONFERENCE.—Boston, May 18.—In the Methodist Conference, to-day, the appeal of Rev. J. M. Stagg located without his consent by the North Indiana Conference, was taken up and the decision of that Conference reversed.

The appeal case of Rev. Mr. Taylor, of the Michigan Conference, was next taken up. The charge was keeping a man and his wife members of a church in Detroit, when they were residents of another charge twenty miles distant. For this he was admonished. No decision was reached by the Conference at the adjournment.

This afternoon the Conference made an excursion down the harbor, as the guests of the "City Fathers."

THE METHODIST GENERAL CONFERENCE.—Boston, May 19.—The Conference met at the usual hour this morning. The decision of the Michigan Conference upon the case of Geo. Taylor was affirmed. The finding of the Ohio Conference, charging lawbreaking on sundry members of the church, in 1848, for violating the Conference resolutions adopted in 1845, against Odd Fellowship, was declared disorderly by the Committee on Itinerancy. Rev. H. Slicer moved a substitute, declaring it not competent for an Annual Conference to censure members for joining societies, and that the action of the Ohio Conference be annulled. The substitute was laid on the table by a vote of 99 to 78, and the report adopted. The report of the Committee on Missions, favoring a separate organization of the Methodists in Africa, having reference chiefly to Liberia, was taken up, and the discussion of it occupied the remainder of the session.

Catoma Mission, Alabama Conference.

To Rev. E. W. Sehon, D. D. Secretary of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South.

DEAR BROTHER:—I take this opportunity to send you a brief report of this Mission. It contains twelve appointments, two of them white and ten colored. We have been regulating the classes, and find the membership to be two hundred and ten, ten of them white members. We have also examined the members, as to their knowledge of experimental religion, and we are glad to say that they talk with good understanding of their religious experience. Many of them seem to enjoy the spirit of religion. Others are seeking the the forgiveness of their sins. We have dropped some probationers. We have under catechetical training about one hundred and twenty children. But they do not exhibit much of former teaching. At the present rate of expense it will take about $700 to defray the expenses of this Mission this year. We would be glad to make the expense less but we know not how. And those who are better acquainted here than we are can not devise at present any mode by which to reduce it. $100 was contributed by the Missionary Society for the support of the Mission. But as we had to take $200 of this to defray the expenses of last year, before we could leave the Arcola Mission for the patrons of that Mission refused to defray the expense of the Missionary, or for want of ability. For they have millions of wealth, nor because the Missionary did not do his duty, for no complaint was ever heard from any of them that we were remiss, but they have excused themselves from the performance of this their duty, for reasons known to themselves; and will, in all probability, think of it no more, unless they should see this, until they stand before the Judgment Seat of Christ there to give an account of their stewardship. But we believe the patrons of this Mission will not see us leave the Mission in debt. We ask an interest in the prayers of the Church, that God's blessing be on us and our labors.

Richmond and Madison Mission, La.

DEAR BROTHER:—This work was known as the Richmond and Madison Colored Mission. This year the mission is let off, and it is called Richmond and Madison; and I suppose that Richmond means the circuit, and Madison means the mission: and I was a little at a loss to know which I was sent to; but to be on safe ground I took both. In the circuit we have no church, three small congregations, one members. One accession this year. We have organized two Sunday Schools, some twelve to twenty children in each.

To show how destitute we are in this country of religious influence, at one of the Sunday Schools we could find no one in all the country round about who could pray in public, for a Superintendent. Having obtained the consent of one who is not religious to act in the capacity of Superintendent, at his first meeting he read, sung a hymn, and then told the people that he would pray, if it did not require a greater degree of seriousness than he thought he had. They are going ahead. We have a Bible class, which meets once a week.

In the mission we have eight appointments, preach to some six hundred negroes, ninety-five members of the church, and some two hundred children under catechetical instruction. Our work has to be done exclusively on the Sabbath day, which requires three sermons on that day, besides other exercises. Our last quarterly meeting has passed: it consisted of two sermons by the P. Elder. A quarterly meeting amounts to but little on this work. This portion of the work knows but very little of the labor and love of the P. Eldership. During the six years past the people here only had sight of two P. Elders, and only one sight of each; and we know not when we will ever see another, for my worthy P. Elder told me when he left that his health and circumstances were such that he could not return before Fall, if then. Methodism has but little help in this country, and a strong tide to contend against. I fear for its success.

This swamp abounds with large cotton plantations, and so far there is a fine prospect for a crop: but unfortunately for this country the majority of the proprietors of these places live in other regions, where they enjoy more health and society. Those who live here have some other motive than that of pleasure.

On a plantation near here, within the last few days, there have been nine deaths from cholera, and still other cases occurring.

JOHN PIERS.

Richmond, La., May 17.

A Word To a Mother.

AT THE GRAVE OF HER CHILD.—In the cool of the evening, writes Mary, wife of John Milton, Rose took me into the churchyard, and scattered the little grave with flowers; and then continued sitting beside it on the grasse, quiete, but not comfortless. I am wised to think she prayed. Then Mr. Agnew came forthe and sate on a flat tombstone hard by; and without one word of introduction took out his Psalter, and commenced reading the Psalms for that evening's service, namely, the 41st, the 42d, the 43d, in a solemn voice; and methought I never in my life heard anything to equal it in the way of consolation. Rose's heavie eyes gradually look up from the ground into her husband's face, and thence up to heaven. After this, he read, or rather repeated, the Collect at the end of the Burial Service, putting this expression, "As our hope is this our dear infante doth." Then he went on to say, in a soothing tone, "There hath no misfortune happened to us, but such as is common to the lot of alle men. We are alle sinners, even to the youngest, fayrest, and seeminglie purest among us; and death entered the world by sinne, and constituted us mortal as we would not, even if we could, dispense with death. For, whereuntoe it conveyes! From this burdensome, miserable world, into the generall assemblie of Christ's first-born, to be united with the spiritts of the just made perfect; to partake of everie enjoyment which in this world is unconnected with sin, together with others that are unknowne and unspeakable. And there we shall agayn have bodies, as well as soules; eyes to see, but not to shed tears; voices to speak and sing, not to utter lamentations; hands, to doe God's work; feet, and it may be, wings, to carry us on his errands. Such will be the blessedness of his glorified saints; even of those who having been servants of Satan till the eleventh hour, labored penitentlie and diligentlie for their heavenlie Master one hour before sunset: but as for those who, dying in mere infancie, never committed actuall sin, they follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. O, think of this, dear Rose, and sorrow not as those without hope: for be assured, your childe hath more reall reason to be grieved for you, than you for him."

With this, and like discourse, that distilled, like the dew, or the small rain on the tender grasse, did Roger Agnew comfort his wife, till the moon had risen. Likewise he spake to us of those who lay buried arounde, how one had died of a broken heart, another of a broken heart, another of suddain joy, another had let patience have her perfect work through years of lingering disease. Then we walked, lowlie and composedlie home, and at our supper peacefully, Rose not refusing to eat though she took but little.

Letter from Rev. Theodore Clapp.

To the Editor of the N. O. Christian Advocate:

SIR:—I shall regard it as an especial favor if you will allow me space for a few words in reply to the letter of "Woodsman," in your last number. Let me begin by saying that I admire the spirit of his communication. It is clear and generous, noble and forbearing. It affords me the sincerest pleasure to believe that he is one who could not intentionally do an unfair nor an unjust deed. I am perfectly satisfied that he did not mean to misrepresent my sentiments. I hope the next time he visits New Orleans we shall have the happiness of "speaking face to face, that our joy may be full." [John.

Notwithstanding, I feel certain that Bro. "Woodsman" misunderstands my views concerning the new birth and atonement. What the Divine record says concerning these topics, I believe, according to the best understanding I can form of its import, that Jesus Christ "died for our sins;" that he "died the just for the unjust;" that "he gave his life a ransom for all;" that he is the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world;" that "we have redemption through his blood," and final admission to the realms of immortal glory. If it be asked what now is the meaning of all this phraseology, and much more that is like it, certainly it is to my mind that there is a necessary connection between the sufferings and death of Christ, and our renewal to holiness, our everlasting redemption from sin and misery. This I most conscientiously believe. I have no objection to the phrase "atoning blood," though it is not, I think, to be found in Scripture. A vast deal of learning, criticism and deep philosophy have been employed to fathom the mysteries of the atonement. Mysteries belong to God; "revealed things to us and our children."

Can we not savingly "receive the atonement," unless we adopt some particular creed, some particular explanation concerning its nature and bearings? The atonement is one thing—the gracious interposition of Christ in our behalf; the doing all that was necessary to be done to provide the means and the way for our salvation this is one thing; in all this I most fully believe. The philosophy, the theory, the theology (so to speak) of the atonement is another thing. About this orthodox Christians are differing with one another, and saying as hard things of one another as they have ever said of Parson Clapp. Is it not time to learn wisdom? Is there not good reason for taking the ground which I do, that the atonement was indispensable for human salvation, without insisting upon particular and peculiar theories in regard to it, which are of human origin? Most assuredly I do not believe "that Jesus died to appease the wrath of his Father," but I hold that his death was indispensably necessary to deliver us from sin and eternal ruin. The blood of martyrdom is precious, but that of Jesus was an infinitely holier sacrifice than the death of a merely human saint: it was that of spotless innocence pleading for a lost and guilty world; that of "a Lamb without spot and without blemish slain from the foundation of the world." Now I profess to look upon this glorious sacrifice with as much admiration, wonder, hope, faith, penitence and gratitude as any Calvinistic or Arminian divine living, though I do not adopt all their explanations and philosophies touching its metaphysical nature, use and relations.

Moreover, I believe that all men, in consequence of their connection with Adam, become sinners as soon as they are capable of sinning, and would go down to eternal destruction, were they not prevented by the rich and unmerited grace of God through Christ. I believe that this grace is especially manifested in recovering men from depravity by a process which is termed in Scriptures regeneration, or the new birth, I believe "that except a man be born again of the Holy Spirit," he can never reach everlasting happiness; that "he must be new-created in Christ Jesus;" "that old things must pass away and all things become new," or he will be lost for ever. I also hold that the new birth is a change of the whole soul: its thoughts, affections and purposes, as well as the outward life. Of course, in my judgment, the term is used in the Bible to signify interests vast as immortality, boundless as illimitable space, and destined to increase in grandeur through the mighty, incomprehensible roll of eternal ages. Entertaining such views, I can not conceive of words more calculated to degrade and debase what seems to me superlatively solemn and magnificent, than the sentence, "the new birth scarcely amounts to any fact in metaphysics, or to any real distinction in morals."

Perhaps I ought to offer an apology for calling "Woodsman" a brother. I do so because we are both children of one common Father; the professing disciples of His Son; fellow sinners dependent on the same pardoning mercy; fellow pilgrims destined to lie down in the same grave; fellow heirs of the same glorious promises; and fellow partakers of the same unfailing, immortal hope through Jesus, our great Deliverer.

Respectfully yours,

THEODORE CLAPP.

P. S. I hope I shall some day have the pleasure of hearing "Woodsman" preach in my own pulpit.

The Wesleyan Missionary Anniversary

Was held in Exeter Hall, London, on Monday the 2d of May. The collections for the week considerably exceeded those of last year.

Taking into the estimate the distressed state of the societies during the past year, our friends have great cause to feel proud of the sustained interest of their people in this noble enterprise.

Mr. John Henderson of Glasgow, presided.

The Financial Report of the Committee was read by Rev. E. Toole, one of the general Secretaries.

The summary of Receipts was as follows:

The total Ordinary Receipts of the Mission House, and from the Districts in England, Scotland and Wales, have been	£ s. d.
The Hibernian Missionary Society	6,000 0 0
The Juvenile Christmas offerings	3,000 0 0
	5,198 1 1
Total Ordinary Home Income	£75,814 1 1
Contributions of Foreign Auxiliary Soc'y,	14,000 0 0
Colonial Grants	5,000 0 0
Legacies	5,000 0 0
Donations on Annuity	1,000 0 0
Lapsed Annuities	2,000 0 0
Dividends, Interest, &c.	2,000 0 0

To which must be added the legacy of £2,000.

Some of the speeches were very able. The very last Dr. Bunting arose. The Rev. John Farrar had preceded in a speech of great sprightliness and point. In which he said:

"It has struck me, since I came into this hall that this seems to be a day for mutual congratulation—a day almost for unalloyed satisfaction. I cannot express the peculiar feeling of mind which I have had in hearing that excellent report, to which we have all listened with so much pleasure. (Applause.) I have wished, almost, we could have brought back some of our sainted fathers from the grave, to have sat here and listened to it. I could have liked John Wesley to have heard of the success of Christian missions in the world, as they have been reported to us to-day. (Applause.) I have been taken forty years, to the first Missionary Meeting attended; and I wish, from my heart—I should not like to inflict my injury upon that individual—but I wish that one excellent and venerable individual, who was present at that meeting in Leeds, and who, in his own mainly and eloquent way, advocated the cause of Christ, would tell us the effect that forty years of successful missions have produced upon his mind."

Let the whole tribe of agitators say what they try to say what they please, a more noble spirit and more noble man than Dr. Bunting has never been seen in the Methodist, or any other Church of God. We can see the venerable old man, as he stood amidst three thousand friends, who rose to do him reverence, may be for the last time:

"The Rev. Dr. Bunting then rose and was welcomed with loud and reiterated cheers which continued for some minutes, the meeting rising and continuing to stand during the delivery of the Rev. Doctor's speech. When the applause had in some measure subsided he said—You will kill me with kindness—you really oppress me with your great Christian kindness. If I had a better physical system, I might be able to bear with it; but I can assure you, my Christian friends, that I am unfeignedly thankful. I had a similar given to me by my excellent friend Mr. Farrar, who threw out a sort of challenge to me and seemed very kindly to wish to know what I thought of the present meeting, and the circumstances under which we are assembled, and of the report which we have had. I can only say I heard it with pleasure; and now that we have approached nearly to the close of the meeting, I am filled with joy. (Cheers.) I joy and rejoice with you all. I could not but remember, as I had the pleasure of sitting near my old friend Mr. Taylor, the time when we commenced in a little parlor, at Bramley, to set a-going what is now established and organized society. We did not set a-going the work of Methodism or Methodist missions. That honor was conferred on other men; but we thought it right to attempt something by which the Methodist Connection, on a larger and more systematic scale, should be enabled to take part with other Christian communities in their missionary enterprise. A few of us met at Mr. Naylor's parlor, at Bramley, near Leeds—two of us from Leeds—the late Mr. Beckley and myself; and Mr. Watson, who was with that promptitude which he always evinced, the moment he was called upon to support that cause. No, it was Mr. Watson from Wakefield, and Mr. Morley from Leeds—it was my mistake. You see how little I am to address a meeting. (Cries of no, and cheers.) I have forgotten all technology now. In this place I could say every thing; I could "sit and sing" anyway, in this place, and in such a frame of mind as I am now in. But I remember there was a time—I do not mean to give a theological definition of the term—when there was silence in heaven for a short space. That silence I have noticed on this occasion, and I should have been glad to have been permitted to enjoy that silence and the pleasing and delightful recollections with which it was accompanied, to the close of the meeting; but the Secretaries have, at last, in their ingenuity, hit upon some plan which has made it compulsory on me to relinquish that determined purpose. They have put into my hands a report which it does afford me the highest satisfaction to recommend to you. It is with very cordial and respectful thanks to the society are due to John Henderson, Esq., for the manner in which he has conducted the business of the meeting." (Cheers.) I say that has at all watched and been conversant with the great movements that have been taken place in our country, in reference to the cause of religion and Christian enterprise, could refuse to assent to such a resolution as this!

Who could, by possibility, decline the duty or of calling upon you to thank Mr. Henderson, for coming among us this day, and conducting the business of this meeting as he has done! (Cheers.) I can never forget the untold services which Mr. Henderson has been the instrument of rendering to the cause of religion in this country, and to the cause of religion on foreign stations, and in all our colonies, by the

...lus which he has given to the great question of the Sabbath. (Cheers.) Let me say to my honored friend, (for so he permits me to call him, and it is not the first time that we have met,)—let me say to him, that it was honour enough for Almighty God, in the condescension, to confer on any man to be the chief instrument, of calling forth the great Sabbath movement;—to be, I might almost say, the chief instrument; but certainly, (I may say, with truth,) a principal and most efficient instrument in creating, in the Christian world, a sense of the great duty of promoting Christian Union. The separatist spirit will not tell for the cause of our Master, and anything that unites us more closely to each other will better fit us for his service. As to the Evangelical Alliance, you all know, who know anything about it,—(and I hope you are careful to know something; for it is a great movement; and though it may not have answered all the expectations of some of our honoured friends, yet it has answered the purposes of Providence,) you all know the origin of the Evangelical Alliance. Well, for these two things, as well as for many other deeds of love and mercy, we are indebted, under God, to the liberality and zeal of our present excellent Chairman. Forgive me—forgive me;—I cannot speak any longer,—I will, if I could. Clocks are very great nuisances—[it was now half-past four by the clock in the Hall]—sometimes you find them great conveniences, especially when men like myself talk longer than your think necessary,—but, on this occasion, that clock is a great nuisance. I see some of the leading members of the committee, who have the management of this Hall, and I do think they must begin to contemplate, whether they are not also called upon to obey the apostolical injunction, and be enlarged. If we cannot enlarge here, we must enlarge somewhere else. I remember, when the first meeting was held, about the erection of the Hall, with a view to the accommodation of Religious Institutions, it was thought that the Hall would be large enough;—and large it is, and admirably has it answered its purpose. But the musical people are coming into a little competition with us, and they tell us that we must go at this time, or at that time. Now, music may be all very fine, but I am quite certain that there will be no music to night, to a christain heart and christian mind, equal to that musical, and delightful, and harmonious feeling which we have experienced to-day. (Cheers.) Forgive me, my dear friends; I would do better if I could. I have always entered into the work upon this principle, that if others will not speak, "the stones" must "cry out." In these occasions I have made, or attempted to make, many a missionary speech, and preached many a missionary sermon, when I occupied the place that others now do. I am thankful that I have had anything to do in this work; I wish it had been done better. I am well aware as anybody can be, that I have not done it well. They need not pester me with anonymous letters about my imperfections and infirmities. (Hear, hear," and laughter.) I am well aware of them. An anonymous letter was put into my hand last Thursday, just as I was going into the pulpit. It is no use their writing to me. I am humble as they can make me. I am thankful that I have been permitted to have anything to do in this great and glorious cause; and now when I see what I have seen to-day, and felt that I have felt to-day, I am almost ready to say, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word." The venerable Doctor resumed his seat amidst enthusiastic applause.)

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

RAILROAD FROM NEW YORK TO MONTREAL.—The completion and opening of the Troy and Rutland Railroad, which has just taken place, has placed Montreal within reach from New York in 11½ hours, going through by daylight at this season.

DAILY MAIL ROUTE TO CALIFORNIA.—An express line overland from St. Joseph, Missouri, to Sacramento City, has been established. The first train left on the first of May, taking out the nursery stock for the several stations of the company, and the second is to leave on the 10th of June. The stations of the company are Fort Laramie, North Fork of the Platte, South Pass, Salt Lake City and the head of Humboldt. The number of wagons in each train will be ten, and the limitation of passengers forty. Time from St. Joseph to Salt Lake City twenty-five days; fare $100. To Sacramento sixty days; fare $150.

RAILROAD SUBSCRIPTION.—The people of Rheon county, Tenn., have decided, by a majority of over six hundred, to subscribe in the name of the county $150,000 to the capital stock of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, and to pay the subscription by a county tax for five years.

GOV. BOUTWELL AND THE LIQUOR BILL.—We make the following extract from the message of Gov. Boutwell, of Massachusetts, in returning, without his signature, the Maine Liquor Bill, which had passed the Legislature:

"After a careful review of the whole subject, I am brought to this conclusion: That a measure of this sort can not rest safely and permanently upon the reception of representative bodies of men—that it must have the sanction of the people—that that sanction must contain the moral as well as political power of The State—that a decision by open ballot would possess very little moral force—and finally, that the secret ballot furnishes the only proper means of ascertaining the public judgment."

THE UPPER RIVERS.—The St. Louis Intelligencer of the 22d says: We are now constrained to believe, from all accounts, that we are to be again visited by high water. The Chara from St. Joseph yesterday, reported the Missouri rising rapidly at that point when she left; and the Excelsior, from Dalena, reports the tributaries of the Upper Mississippi putting out full, and the greatest rise of the season now coming down. The river opposite about on a stand yesterday, having fallen in all some fifteen or sixteen inches, but the rises above, if true as reported, will unquestionably bring it up again in a hurry.

WISCONSIN.—The Wisconsin, published at Milwaukie, says: Since this State has been settled there never was so favorable a time for the emigrant with a small capital to invest in farms. The California excitement has thrown hundreds of improved farms into the market, which may be purchased at a price so low that it is not more than one-half of their real value. Such opportunities we venture to say, will not happen again in ten years—for there is no country in the Union which can grow so many products as our genial soil.

FRESHES ON THE PLAINS.—The St. Louis Evening News of the 21st inst. says: The effects of the Chara down this morning inform us that it was reported at Weston and St. Joseph that there was considerable sickness among the California trains now out on the plains. The disease has every appearance of cholera, and its appearance was driving a goodly number of adventurers back. The Chara brought down ropes six or eight emigrants who have abandoned the trip. It was reported that eight or nine persons had died in Holliday's train, and it was current that the cholera had made its appearance among Major Sibley's command soon after leaving Fort Leavenworth, and up to Hinkle-dopper Creek, nine or ten deaths had taken place, and there were quite a number still down with the epidemic. These reports had created considerable excitement among the few remaining emigrants at Weston and St. Joseph, and numbers had delayed their departure or entirely given up the trip. St. Joseph, Weston and Fort Leavenworth were comparatively healthy, and there were only a few scattering emigrants yet remaining at either point, the great mass having started on their long and tedious journey.

COPPER BLOCK PRESENTED.—The presentation and acceptance of the beautiful copper block contributed to the National Washington Monument by the state of Michigan, "as stricken of her tract in the Union," took place at Washington on the 8th inst. Mr. Harvey Sister Senator from the Peninsula, and Mayor Lenox, of Washington, delivered most eloquent addresses, and were listened to by a crowd of highly respectable spectators. The centre had a fit audience, and the whole passed off very creditably and satisfactorily.

RELIEF OF SICK AND DISABLED SEAMEN.—The Secretary of the Treasury has issued to Collectors of Customs certain regulations in relation to sick and disabled seamen. He directs that hospital relief shall be confined to American seamen, and such foreign seamen as have served for three consecutive years on board American vessels, and to boatmen who are liable to pay hospital money. Seamen or boatmen, deemed incurable, or those employed in the fisheries, are not entitled to the benefits of the marine hospital fund. The period of hospital relief is restricted to four months, except by the special authority of the Department. In ports North of Newbern, North Carolina, there will be allowed for suitable lodging, boarding and nursing, the sum of three dollars per week for each patient, and in those south of that place, three dollars and fifty cents per week for each patient. Relief is not to be extended to seamen for diseases contracted when out of the service.

INDIANS IN FLORIDA.—The Savannah Republican gleans the following facts in relation to the pursuit of the Indians in Florida, from a correspondent of the Florida Republican:

The little band of volunteers, some forty in number, under Maj Gen. Hopkins, together with Col. Hart and others, from Jacksonville, were at Melbourne, Lake Monroe, on the 6th inst. A letter from Mr. John Hosten informed the party that a fresh trail was seen the day before above Lake Harney, which must have been made by Indians. Upon this assurance the band immediately took up the line of march in that neighborhood, and scoured the country on the east side of the St. Johns, down to the waters of the Indian river. The country was found all burned off, and as no white lived or traveled through that section, the conclusion arrived at was that Indians must be somewhere in the vicinity. The efforts to discover them were, however, unavailing. On the supposition that the Indians may have passed to the other side of the St. Johns, the party crossed that river, and resumed their operations on the western bank. On the 9th instant the band arrived at Orange Mound, above Lake Helaby. Here they met a lighter with provisions, which had been previously ordered by the General to be at that point at their arrival. From this point their operations were to be as follows:

A small detachment was sent to Fort Gatlin to protect the families in that neighborhood, as Indian signs had been discovered within twenty miles of that place. Another division was to accompany the General up the river in boats, to scour the swamps and creeks along the St. Johns, to Fort Taylor, on Lake Wimer. And a third detachment was to be sent, by land, to explore the country on the left bank of the St. Johns, to meet the party near the former, at Fort Taylor, where the band was again to concentrate.

The correspondent then says: "The utmost cheerfulness prevails, notwithstanding the hard service these command has to undergo. Indian signs have been seen, and we are sanguine that we shall be able to push the marauders back to their limits, if we shall not succeed in capturing them."

DUELING.—The Memphis Eagle and Enquirer of Tuesday, says:

We are informed that a disease resembling cholera from its fatality in the absence of regular medical treatment, appeared on the plantation of Judge Rock, some ten miles below this, on the Arkansas side, on Sunday last. Some half or 37 negroes have died, out of 70. A similar disease made its appearance some two weeks since on Mr. Andrew Polk's plantation, on the Mississippi side, below Commerce, which, however, was soon arrested by proper medical treatment and precautionary discipline among the slaves. The remainder of Judge Rock's force was brought to this city yesterday.

SEAMEN SAVED IN PERU.—The New York Herald of the 21st contains the following statement, made by Captain Clark, of the brig Joseph Aldion, which arrived at New York that morning, from Saguala Grande, Cuba:

The brig Lucy Watts, Capt. Watts, of Warren, Maine while loading at the port of Saguala Grande, was visited by orders of the Spanish Government, and one rebel seamen taken out of her, on the grounds that he was a deserter from a Spanish man-of-war.

The day succeeding, the Captain was ordered to present himself at the town with two more of the crew, which he did, and these two men were taken from him, and put in prison along with the first man taken, while the Captain could get no answer to his inquiries why this was done.

Capt. Watts applied to the American Consul, as also a resident in Sagua, and he addressed a letter to the authorities asking that the men should be restored to the vessel, stating that the Captain was prevented from loading the vessel, and that he should take a process against the act. The answer the Consul received was, that the authority which took the men from the vessel was competent to take men from the vessel of any nation, and that the men would not be sent on board again, and that if Captain Watts made any protest, he would render himself liable to be taken from the vessel, put under arrest, and sent to Havana. Captain Watts did make his protest, but when Heft, it was not known what the result would be, though it was certain that the vessel would not be allowed to leave, unless she paid all the expenses of the imprisonment of her men, as well as those incurred in taking them from the vessel to the town, which is some twenty miles from the bay.

These facts can be proved by all the masters of vessels then laying in the port of Sagua in Grande, and the protest of Captain Watts was signed by some ten of them.

(Signed) J. CLARK, master of brig Joseph Aldon, &c.

INDIAN VENGEANCE.—The Mobile Register of Thursday says:

We learn that within a few days past, a most savage and sanguinary occurrence had taken place among a branch of the remnant of Choctaw Indians. One full blood Indian in the upper part of this county, near the region of the Tallahoma, and between Beaver Meadow and Citronelle. It is stated that some ten days since, a young Indian, the son of a somewhat noted character known as "Old Bill," was severely stabbed or cut by another Indian in a fight. He was carried off and placed under the care of a physician. "Old Bill" upon hearing of the occurrence, threatened that he would shoot and take the assailant of his son. Some days after, a citizen, in passing through the woods, came upon the body of an Indian who had been shot, and which has literally been stripped of its skin, and this had been stretched and suspended upon the limbs of a tree.

It is believed that this dead body is that of the object of Old Bill's revenge, and that the latter, in pursuance of the usages in his tribe, has taken the life of his enemy.

CONGRESSIONAL.

WASHINGTON, May 17, 1852.

SENATE.—Mr. Mangum moved that when the Senate adjourn it be to ten o'clock to-morrow, to give an opportunity to attend Mrs. Adams's funeral; which was modified to adjourn over to Wednesday, and agreed to.

Mr. Butler presented the memorial of the American Medical Society, recently in session at Richmond, setting forth the deplorable condition of emigrant passengers for want of medical attendance as required by law.

Mr. Underwood presented a bill changing the mode of compensating Senators, Representatives and Delegates in Congress, allowing a salary of two thousand dollars per annum and twenty cents per mile mileage, calculated upon air line between latitude and longitude, deducting $10 per day for absence, except for sickness to take effect from and after the 3d of March next.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the Deficiency bill.

HOUSE.—On motion of Mr. Richardson, of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee on Territories, the House proceeded with the special order of the week, being the territorial business, when several bills were put on their passage, or otherwise disposed of.

Mr. Fowler, of Massachusetts, moved that when the House do journ it adjourn to meet to-morrow, for the purpose of enabling the members to attend the funeral of the late Mr. Adams. He said that the individual referred to in the first widow of an ex-President who has died since Washington—during the sitting of Congress, and hoped there would be no objection to the motion.

Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, moved to substitute Wednesday for to-morrow.

Mr. Stanley, of North Carolina, opposed the amendment. He meant no disrespect, he said, to the memory of the deceased, but while he was desirous that members should attend the funeral alluded to, he was, at the same time, averse to any unnecessary delay in transacting the business of the country; and moved to adjourn till to-morrow at one o'clock.

The previous question having been carried, Mr. Jones of Tennessee, called for the yeas and nays on the amendment, which was negatived: Yeas 80, nays 93.

The amendment to sweet's amendment having been rejected, the question recurred on Mr. Fowler's motion, which was agreed to—yeas 117, nays 69.

The House then went into committee of the whole, Mr. Gentry, of Tennessee, in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the bill for the relief of the heirs of Gen. Jackson.

Mr. Stanton, of Tennessee, said that he was opposed to the bill, because it was unjust to the country to grant the money. He was willing to do justice to the heirs

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Louisiana Interior.

[illegible] Journal of May 3d says: "We are speaking of the interior of Louisiana, and in this vicinity [illegible] want of rain. It has been very dry for the last three weeks, and the signs are sullen dry weather. The [illegible] have suffered much; grasing for cattle is drying up, and the corn and cotton are beginning to feel the want of rain."

Of West Feliciana, it says: "The cotton, corn and sugar cane are all doing well and the prospect now is for a good crop."

The Baton Rouge Gazette, of the 22nd, says: "Rain is much needed here, both for comfort and good of the crops, which are suffering for it."

A Happy Parson.—Our friend of the Baton Rouge Gazetta has been travelling in the parish of Livingston, and his delight time finds vent in eulogy of a Louisiana Arcadia:

We reached Springfield on the Sabbath, when we listened to an eloquent sermon from the village pastor. The church was well attended, stores and all places of business were closed, not a grog shop was to be seen, and [illegible] natural consequence [illegible] was found. We learn that it has been without [illegible] for more than two years—that speaks well for "plawood" morality. The trip was one of pleasure. The roads are good, the young ladies beautiful, the old ones fruitful. Crops looked well, though sadly in want of rain; cattle in good order; milk, butter and honey abundant.

We are pleased to notice that a spirit of progress and improvement seems to pervade the people. New and neat farms are being opened on all sides, and farms are being enlarged, houses and fences repaired, roads worked, and everything betokens that, though the people are not rolling in wealth, they are surrounded with the comforts of life and are contented and happy.

Our heart was gladdened every few miles by the sight of school houses, and school children, and we returned with an exalted opinion of the morality, the independence and hospitality of the good citizens.

Episcopal Convention.—The Annual Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Louisiana will assemble in St. James's Church, in Baton Rouge, to-day, and remain in session several days.

Cholera.—The Madison Journal, of May 21, says: We have the pleasure to announce that the cholera has subsided on the plantation of Mr. We field, and that the cases on hand are readily yielding to medical treatment. We learn that Mr. W. has lost eight negroes in all.

It is reported that the cholera, or a disease closely resembling it, is prevailing on the Compromise Plantation of Mr. Hill. Three deaths were reported to have taken place at last accounts. A virulent form of diarrhœa has been prevalent in this community for several weeks, and still exists to some extent; were this allowed to go unchecked, cholera will be very likely to ensue. It readily yields to the proper treatment.

A Sugar-House Burnt.—The sugar-house and refinery of Drs. J. & H. Perkins, about two miles from Baton Rouge, was completely consumed by fire on May 19. The fire originated in that part of the building in which the sugar is placed in moulds. It is not known how the fire originated. The establishment was insured to the extent of $75,000; it cost about $120,000, and with the building and machinery, sugar to the amount of $15,000, was destroyed, making the actual loss to Drs. Perkins $60,000. Total loss, $135,000.

Died.—On Monday night, 3d inst., at 11 o'clock, at Houma, Parish of Terrebonne, La., Goyoso Carney Raby, Esq., of the Parish of Assumption, La., aged about thirty years. At the time of his death he was the District Attorney for the Fifth Judicial District of Louisiana.

From Texas.

By the arrival last night of the steamship Mexico, Capt. Place, we have received Galveston papers to the 20th inst., but they do not contain much news.

The Crops.—The Western Texan says the farmers in that region are beginning to complain of a want of rain; though the crops were not really suffering, they soon will, unless they should have rain.

The Nacogdoches Chronicle says the crops in that vicinity are growing rapidly.

Cholera.—The Washington Lone Star is informed by Mr. George Hancock, of Austin, that the cholera is spreading its fearful ravages in Bastrop and Webber's Prairie. A citizen of Bastrop lost, by this disease, six negroes in [illegible] two days.

The Rivers.—The Trinity river is reported to be falling, as also is the Brazos, and several steamers are aground in the latter.

The King of Siam and the Missionaries.—The Troy (N. Y.) Whig has the following:

Yesterday there was published in our paper the following paragraph:

An exchange paper says that whenever the King of Siam feels like a little field sport, he shoulders his rifle and goes a gunning after missionaries. Nice place that to expound the gospel.

In reply to which, a correspondent sends us the following:

"Troy, May 7, 1852.

"I notice in your paper, this morning, a paragraph from an 'exchange,' which is calculated to convey an erroneous impression in relation to the King of Siam. The missionaries in Siam have already had free access to the people, and for the past ten years have had every facility for circulating books and tracts among them. It is true that, about two years since, the Roman Catholics were expelled from the kingdom for non-compliance with a royal edict issued by the late King. But since the accession of the new King, in April, 1851, they have been invited to return; and the present King, who is favorable to European improvements, and desirous of opening his ports to foreign trade, has issued a royal edict, permitting foreign residents to locate in any portion of his dominions, and allowing free toleration to all religious denominations. The missionaries at present resident in the capital are favorites with the King, and have been invited to his palace several times. And the two physicians, Drs. Bradley and House, have recently been called to attend one of the royal ladies, with such success as to draw forth the following note, (e verbatim copy) which certainly does not look much like his 'going a gunning' after missionaries:

Royal Hall, Grand Palace, Feb. 7, 1852.

"My Dear Sirs—My mind is indeed full of much gratitude to you for your trouble, and some expense of medicine, and most valuable favor to my dear lady—and mother of a little infant, daughter—by saving her from approaching death. I cannot hesitate longer, after perceiving she was undoubtedly saved. I beg, therefore, your kind acceptation of the accompanying present for Dr. D. H. Bradley, who was the carrier of her, and for Dr. House, who had some trouble in his assistance, for being your grateful reward. I trust previously in the manner of ouring in the obstetrics of America and Europe, but I am sorry to say that I could not let the same lady believe before her approaching death, (i. e. until she saw death approaching,) because hindered were many more, who had her according to their custom. Your present curing, however, was just now wonderful in the palace. I beg to remain your faithful well wisher."

J. P. Prameenda Mongkat, the King of Siam.

To Messrs. D. B. Bradley, M. D., and S. R House, M. D.

The missionary who sends the above, says, "never before had any foreign physicians been within the forbidden precincts of the harem of the royal palace." It is a sign that the barriers of custom are breaking down. The ladies of the mission, at the request of the King, are now engaged in teaching the royal ladies the English language. [Troy Whig.

Later from Brazil.—A Rio letter in The Boston Journal, dated April 12, says:

"The weather is very hot and dry, and the yellow fever is making fearful havoc, particularly on board the shipping. No vessel can remain in this bay while the present state of things exist more than five days without getting the fever on board; consequently there are not, and in fact there have not been for weeks, any of our naval ships in this port. They are mostly at Montevideo. Some of the American ships have suffered most severely, and I have known of several that could not muster hands sufficient to get out of the harbor. The American ship Victor sailed for New Orleans about a fortnight since with only two men able to do duty. Many others have been here, as it were, entirely deserted. The Swedish brig Delphin has lost three consecutive captains within the past two months, and the berth is now vacent.

"I notice in bonad a fine ship, the Catalpa, 120 days from the Sandwich Islands, for New Bedford, with a cargo of oil. She sails to-day for home. We have also in from New York, in a passage of 90 days, the ship Race-hound, bound for San Francisco, with 276 of the most filthy rowdies that it was ever my fortune to behold. I hope that they will get away before they contract this fever, for it would make terrible work among them. For the past day or two we have had very fine showers, which we hope will occur with sufficient frequency to break up this pestilence entirely."

Mutiny and Hard Times on Lake Erie.—The steamer Globe, which left Buffalo for Chicago on Wednesday, April 21, arrived at our dock on Saturday, May 1, having been detained by the ice which she encountered opposite Erie, compelling her to return and attempt to make Dunkirk harbor, which she was not able to do. During all this time she had been lying in the ice, without being able to extricate herself until Friday last.

The Globe had upwards of one thousand passengers on board, who were chiefly emigrants. After she became imbedded in the ice, Capt. Pratt found it necessary to reduce the service of the table to two meals per day, which were furnished, and which enabled the stock of provisions to hold out.

On Thursday, April 29, a body of dock passengers, the most of whom were Irishmen, with one or two Germans, rose in revolt, and attempted to obtain the control of the boat, with the avowed object of securing the provisions, stores, etc., and furnishing themselves more liberally with articles which they wished to obtain, than they had received them from the officers. Having armed themselves, they endeavored to take possession of the kitchen, pantry and stewards' rooms, but were met and overpowered by the officers and crew of the boat, assisted by the well disposed portion of the passengers; and being brought under subjection, they were confined under hatches, and an efficient guard was posted night and day over the hatches to prevent them from again coming on deck.

During the melee, three persons only were injured, and those not dangerously. The most severe wounds were received by the ringleader, who was cut by an axe in the face and back. The boat sustained some damage by the wanton breaking of a glass and sunset work around the state-rooms.

Both wheels of the Globe were disabled in the ice, and she lost a smoke-stack in the gale of Friday night. [Detroit Advertiser.

By Telegraph.—Washington, May 22, c. m.—Senor Larrainzar, Envoy Extraordinary from Mexico, to-day presented to President Fillmore the letter addressed to him by President Arista relative to the Tehuantepec Treaty and the American Company. President Arista states, positively, that Mexico will never consent to the opening, by foreigners, of the route across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. The Mexican Envoy says that if this enterprise is carried into effect at all, it must be done by the Mexican Government. In taking this step, Mexico contemplates the possibility of a war with the United States, but [illegible] to suppose, and to [illegible] her is it. [Phi.

The Cotton Region.—A correspondent in the United States Gazette, writing from Memphis, Tennessee, May 1, says:

"Large shipments are now making from this point to New York city, and the [illegible] money comes from that supports the underground railroad, and other contrivances by which the anti-slavery society carry on their machinations against the peace and prosperity of the South. A letter from New York says:

Mr. Wm. Johnson, the treasurer, we believe—at all events one of the leading officers of the Anti-Slavery Society, was arraigned, tried and found guilty of the offence of coining and passing counterfeit money. It appears that this worthy, who was an English abolition emissary, had for some years been in the habit of manufacturing large quantities of spurious coin—an occupation for which his original calling as a silver-worker particularly qualified him. He joined a church, and soon took a high rank in the association for spiriting away foreign slaves. Money speedily became plenty in the coffers of the kidnappers, and Mr. Johnson, thinking doubtless that he was doing God and himself service at the same time, waxed bolder and more reckless in his nefarious pursuits. But the eye of justice was upon him, and its hand eventually grasped him. He proved a most excellent character, but in vain. Neither his exemplary piety, his philanthropy, nor his philosophy, could save him. The evidence of his guilt was irresistible; he was convicted, and sent for a term of years to the State Prison. We condole with the Anti-Slavery Society upon their loss of such a valuable officer and such a worthy member of this respectable fraternity.

Pennsylvania Episcopal Convention.—Philadelphia, May 18.—The Pennsylvania Episcopal Convention assembled this afternoon, in St. Andrew's Church, and after the call of the roll a motion was made by Mr. Ashurst, a lay delegate from the Epiphany Church, to admit a lay delegate from the colored Church of the Crucifixion. The subject was finally postponed until to-morrow, after the Bishop's address, by the following vote: Clerical—ayes 42, noes 40; lay vote, ayes 38, noes 29. After an ineffectual attempt to elect Secretaries, the Convention adjourned.

Methodist General Conference.—Boston, May 17.—The Conference re-assembled this morning, Bishop Morris presiding.

The appeal case of the Rev. J. N. Maccabee was referred back to the Pittsburgh Conference.

The appeal case of the Rev. Mc. Stepp, of the Indiana Conference, was taken up, but no action had on it.

The Conference unanimously accepted an invitation to be present at Faneuil Hall, to listen to the Hon. Daniel Webster.

Two large committees are in attendance, chiefly from Philadelphia, representing both sides of the toy delegation question. The committee of the Conference on that subject will give both sides a fair and impartial hearing. It is probable the session of the Conference will extend into June, and that before the adjournment at least three new bishops will be elected.

Methodist General Conference.—Boston, May 18.—The Conference reassembled this morning, Bishop Morris presiding. The appeal case of the Rev. John S. Inspich, which was discussed yesterday, was again taken up for consideration. Rev. Dr. Bangs offered a resolution to reverse the decision of the Ohio annual conference, whereby it affirmed that Mr. Inspich was guilty of contumacious conduct and violation of his pledge. The resolution was ruled out of order and an appeal voted down amid considerable excitement. The motion to reverse the decision of the Ohio conference was carried by eighty-nine to sixty-two.

Various alterations in discipline, concerning the missions, were adopted.

The appeal case of Rev. J. N. Maccabee was ordered to be taken up on Monday morning and tried with closed doors.

After some other business, of no general importance, the conference adjourned.

The Catholic Council at Baltimore.—Baltimore, May 16, 1852.—The third public session of the Catholic Council was held in the Cathedral this morning, in the presence of an immense audience.

At 10 o'clock, the ecclesiastical body left the Archiepiscopal mansion in procession, arrayed in full canonicals, and accompanied by acolytes as cross and candle-bearers, and passed around the square chanting, to the front of the cathedral. The streets, doors and windows were thronged with spectators. The services in the cathedral were of the most solemn and imposing description. Pontifical high mass was celebrated by Francis N. Blanchet, Archbishop of Oregon, at the close of which Bishop O'Connor, of Pittsburgh, delivered a discourse on the origin of the Catholic Church, choosing for his text the 16th verse of the 18th chapter of Matthew. After further ceremonials, the council returned in procession. On Thursday, the session closes, when Bishop Fitzpatrick, of Boston, will preach.

Gold from Europe.—Letters from Liverpool, per Atlantic, state that there is great probability of large shipments of gold from thence to New York. The Europa had $100,000 engaged on Boston account.

Land Warrants in New York are quoted at $125 for 160 acres; at $65 for 80 acres, and at $32 50 for 40 acres. The market, however, is very unsettled, and will remain so until the Senate disposes of the homestead bill.

An Army of Lawyers.—According to Livingston's Law Ledger for 1852, our country has 25,000 lawyers, whose annual income "is not far from $30,000,000."

Bishop Otey on Spiritual Rappings.—The St. Louis Signal publishes a letter from Bishop Otey, of Tennessee, upon the subject of Spiritual Rappings. The Bishop, it seems, had paid a visit or two to the Foxes, and intimates a belief from what he heard and saw there, that the noises were but an adroit and clever piece of trickery. One Shedrach Barnes, long ago thought, and showed it was trickery, too, but neither very adroit nor very clever.

Discovery of yet another Planet.—It was recently announced that M. Gasparis, at Naples, had discovered a new Asteroid, the fifth first seen by him. By the last steamer, information was received that Mr. Luthee, at the observatory of Dilk, near Dusseldorf, had recently found yet another, with a Right Ascension of about 12 hours, and a north declination of about 8 degrees, which is the seventeenth planet now known to exist between Mars and Jupitee, all of which were unknown fifty-two years ago

Sickness on the River.—The steamer Indiana arrived at Lonisville, on the 14th instant, from this city, with about one hundred and fifty deck passengers, mostly Irish immigrants. There were twelve or thirteen cases of ship fever and cholera on the passage up, five of which proved fatel.

Cholera.—The cholera is stated to have appeared on the plantation of Mr. James Dalton, six miles northwest of Canton, Mississippi. Within a very few days he has lost by it ten negroes. The symptoms of the disease are vomiting, purging of white serous-looking fluid, and violent cramps. These are followed by a collapsed stage, when death closes the scene in a few hours.

The Escatau Cuban Prisoners.—The New York Herald says that the Cuban prisoners who escaped from the Spanish penal colony of Ceuta, opposite Gibraltar, were Don A. Lagco, Braga Miranda, Don Ignacio Belaprez and Don Juan O'Rourke, Cubans, and Major J. Schiessengor, a Hungarian.

They arrived at Liverpool on the 3d instant, and will soon leave for the United States.

From Utah.—We have advices from Utah to the 20th of March, but the news is unimportant. A grand Legislative Festival came off in true Mormon style on the 4th of March. The Governor and Legislative Assembly of Utah convened with their ladies in the Territorial House, on Thursday, at 1 o'clock p. m. The Hon. Z. Snow, Ass. Justice of the Supreme Court, Joseph L. Heywood, Esq., U. S. Marshal, and Seth M. Blair, Esq., U. S. District Attorney, joined the party as guests, with their ladies. About two hundred guests were present, and the ceremonies were opened with prayee by John Smith, the chaplain. Gov. Young and Hon. H. C. Kimball led off in the dance. The Governor also delivered an address at the supper table, and at 2 o'clock a. m. the assembly was dismissed by the Hon. O. Spencer.

A New Civ.—Mr. T. P. Barnum has bought up about one-half of the city of Bridgeport, and having charmingly laid it out, advertises to sell at first cost every alternate lot, making the payments to suit all circumstances. The remaining lots advanced in value by the adjacent improvements, will furnish him with his share of the profits.

South Carolina Railroad.—We understand, says the Augusta Constitutionalist of Sunday, for the first time since it was built, the up and down trains yesterday passed over the new road around the inclined plane. It is described to us as a beautiful and substantial piece of work.

Railroads.—The receipts of the Cleveland, Columbus and Cincinnati Railroad Company, during the month of April, 1852, amounted to $62,544 74, against $28,701 for the same month last year. Increase, $23,674 74 for the month this year—equal to about eighty per cent.

Massachusetts Supreme Court.—It is reported that Gen. Caleb Cushing was nominated for the Supreme Court of Massachusetts by Governor Boutwell, but rejected by the Council. It is said Fliny Merrick will now be appointed.

Central America.—Dates from Guatemala to April 1 have been received. The Republic continues tranquil the only symptoms of disturbance being among the Indians of Santa Cruz; the insurgents of the mountain having been completely subdued. Gen. Carrera had completely re-established his power. San Salvador is also quiet, and commercial affairs are prosperous. Gen. Cabanas, the principal partisan of the recent invasion of Guatemala, has been elected President of Honduras. He is the chief of the liberal party. The news of the withdrawal of Nicaragua from the Confederation is confirmed.

Islands Swallowed Up.—The whale ship John and Elizabeth from, the Pacific, reports having experienced a severe shock of an earthquake in February, and subsequently discovered that the Grampus Islands had been swallowed up, being covered with water to the depth of 30 fathoms. Another island, near by, was also swallowed up.

Emigrants for Liberia from Ohio.—The Cleveland Plain Dealer is informed by the agent who is now up the Reserve, that a considerable number of the colored people of Ohio are making preparations to emigrate to the coast of the year. Among these men, there are several mechanics who will make useful citizens of the new Republic.

The Present Pope [illegible] Pius IX. is engaged in [illegible] which contains the following description of the first appearance of Mrs. Adams, which took place at [illegible] in 1785:

"The reception of the republican Minister was in every way marked by those testimonials of respect due to her personal character and her eminent place in the public regard. It was attended by the President of the United States and the members of the Cabinet, the principal officers, and many of the members of the two Houses of Congress, and a large body of citizens, official and unofficial. The religious services were performed by the Rev. Mr. Pyne and the Rev. Mr. French, and the body was followed to the grave by one of the largest funeral processions ever witnessed in this city, the following gentlemen acting as pall bearers: Hon. W. R. King, Hon. Mr. Mangum, Hon. Mr. Sumner, Hon. Mr. Fowler, Mr. Seaton, Mr. F. D. Stockton, Hon. C. M. Conrad, Hon. Linn Boyd, Com. Morris, Gen. Jesup, Mr. R. Smith, Mr. W. T. Carroll.

"Mr. Charles F. Adams, of Boston, the only surviving son of the deceased, did not reach the city in time to close his venerable parent's eyes, but time enough to unite with the other members of the family in paying the last offices of affection to her remains."

A grand monument has recently been uncovered in Rome. It is the Casai Rotondo, which until now has had the appearance of a hill with a house on the top surrounded by olive trees. It is now found by being trimmed down to be a noble mennment resembling the tower of Cecilia Metella.

The West Indies.—A correspondent of the New York Herald thus speeks of the Island of Jamaica:

"The recent accounts from Jamaica are most gloomy, and we learn that orders have been received there to abandon the cultivation of sugar on many estates, unless it can be produced at a price hitherto proved to be impossible; and Mr. Price, also a friend of Mr. Cobden's, who was sent out some years since from Liverpool, with credit to a large amount, to buy up the depreciated sugar properties, and teach the stupid old planters the scientific and profitable mode of sugar-growing—which, by the by, he most signally failed in doing, having got less produce from the same land than the stupid old planters did before—has now stated the impossibility of growing sugar with remunerative. In the present condition of the Island, and the low range of prices caused by the act of 1846, and slave competition, although the British free-labor grower has still a differential duty of some 4s. 6d. in his favor.

"If this be the case in Jamaica, we may be sure the pressure is felt more or less in all the other Islands."

French Spoliations.—The Courrier des Etats Unis coincides an article on this subject as follows:

"It concerns, then, the honor of the United States Government, that the French Spoliation bill should at length be passed. It is now fifty-two years since France actually paid the indemnity it provides; and it is high time that the depository should pay it over to those entitled. The majority of the newspapers very properly insist upon the necessity of now passing the bill, and, for our own part, we are disposed to bid it God speed, were it only to get rid of this odious and lying (menteur) conjunction of words—"French Spoliation," which tends to saddle upon our country a responsibility, the whole weight of which the United States should surely bear alone."

The California Fugitive Slave Bill.—The bill which has passed the California Legislature, in relation to fugitive slaves, provides for the surrender to their original masters of all colored people in California who were slaves before they were brought into California, thus virtually repudiating the doctrine that California was a free territory by virtue of its old Mexican law, and that slaves could not be held there to service after the conquest. Mr. Van Buren, a member of the Legislature, who figured in New York at the last Presidential election as a free-soiler, voted for it, while Mr. Brodsrick, formerly a New York hunker, bitterly opposed its passage. It is said there are no slaves in California to which the bill will be applicable.

Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents.—In the report of the Committee of the Board of Supervisors on the Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents, published in the New York Herald, there were some blanks which we are now enabled to supply by the courtesy of Mr. Valentine, the Clerk of the Common Council. They enjoy and yet receive from the City Treasury $4000 per annum; from the State Treasury, $8000 per annum, and the proceeds of licenses to theatres and circuses in this city, equal to $6050 per annum. Total from the City Treasury per annum, $4000. Total from the city and state per annum, including theatre and circus licenses, $17,000.

Later from Buenos Ayres.—By an arrival at Boston we have advices five days later from Buenos Ayres. Business was quiet. The upper Provinces had all sent deputations to Urquiza, and it was thought all the Provinces would confederate under a Central Government, with a President and Congress. Fears were entertained of trouble at Montevideo, where the Oribe party were in the ascendant and the Brazil treaty unpopular.

Colored Bishops Consecrated.—Rev. Messrs. Payne and Nazareth, of the colored Methodist Episcopal Church, were, on the 13th instant, consecrated in New York as bishops. The ceremony of consecration took place in the Second Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church.

Highly Important to Planters and Property Holders.

BRIDGEWATER ADAMANTINE PAINT.

The superior properties of this unequaled mineral substance is now so well and favorably known that it is unnecessary to enter into an extended notice. The public are referred to our circular, embracing certificates from—

Capt. St. C. THOMASSON, of steamer Magnolia.
Wm. BROWN, of towboat Porpoise.
HUGUES, VALLETTE & Co., Managers La. Dry Dock
J. P. WHITNEY & Co., Agents do.
Capt. N. B. ROBBINS, of the ship Leodes.
JOSEPH BENSON, Painter, 132 Camp street.
And the UNDERWRITERS' CERTIFICATES.

Also, the recommendation of a large number of our most influential COTTON FACTORS and COMMISSION MERCHANTS, all of which are included in the Agent's Circular. Also, to the following, received since the circulars were printed from JOHN F. MILLER, of Attakapas:

"In July last I was induced to apply the Bridgewater Mineral Paint to my Sugar House, and, in every respect, it has exceeded my expectations, and the representations made by the agents, Messrs. G. C. Bogert & Co. I cheerfully add my testimony to the numerous ones embraced in the Agent's Circular, and recommend the same to Planters and others, as the best Weather and Fire Protector I have ever known. Where I have applied it, it has been exposed to the sun since last July, and has neither blistered nor cracked, and has formed a solid metallic surface, which has proved entirely impervious."

(Signed) JOHN F. MILLER.

New Iberia, Attakapas, March 16, 1852.

In addition to the above, we have in our possession innumerable certificates from equally respectable sources, which can be seen at our office; among which are those of Capt. Wm. Cutts, of the ship Charles Cooper; Brevet Lieut. Col. G. H. Talcott, New York Arsenal; R. S. Smith, Lieut. and Quartermaster U. S. Military Academy, West Point; O. H. Lee, late Superintendent, now Secretary of the Hudson River Railroad Company; D. O. McCullum, Ass't Engineer New York and Erie Railroad, etc.; proving conclusively, by being thoroughly tested, that it is both

FIRE AND WEATHER PROOF.

The bonding, shrinking, or warping of the material upon which it is used does not affect the paint; in twenty-four hours it dries, and in four weeks becomes a perfect slate.

It preserves wood from decay, and neither blisters nor cracks by exposure to the hottest sun. For covering roofs of either tin, iron, zinc, tarred canvas or paper, it is also invaluable, and particularly recommended, as it is a certain PROTECTION AGAINST SPARKS AND CINDERS, and is furnished cheaper than any paint in the Southern country. All orders sent to the General Agents, or their sub-agents, promptly executed. No deviation in price. Terms—cash, or its equivalent. G. C. BOGERT & CO.

The proprietor has made it a point, to ascertain the result of its use in such cases as came within his knowledge and observation, and he invariably found it to produce the most salutary effects; not unfrequently, after nearly all the ordinary preparations for worms, had been previously resorted to without any permanent advantage. This fact is attested by the certificates and statements of hundreds of respectable persons in different parts of the country, and should induce families always to keep a vial of the preparation in their possession. It is mild in its operation and may be administered with perfect safety to the most delicate infant. ☞ Sold by all Druggists in New Orleans, and by nearly all Druggists and country merchants in the United States. may22-1y

CHURCH BELLS.

CHURCH FACTORY, STEAMBOAT AND LOCOMOTIVE BELLS constantly on hand, and PEALS and CHIMES of Bells (of any number) cast to order. Improved cast-iron YOKES, with moveable arms, are attached to these Bells, so that they may be adjusted to ring easily and properly, and springs also, which prevent the stopper from resting on the Bell; thereby prolonging its sound. Hangings complete (including Yoke, Frame and Wheel,) furnished if desired.

An experience of thirty years in the business by their late father, enabled him to ascertain the best form for Bells, the combination of metals, and degree of heat requisite for securing in them the greatest solidity, strength and most melodious tones; which improvements, together with his very extensive assortment of patterns, are now held by the subscribers, who have grown up in the business, and who will use every endeavor to sustain the reputation which the establishment has heretofore enjoyed, both in this and foreign countries, the Bells from which have repeatedly received the highest awards of the New York State Agricultural Society and American Institute, and at which were completed Chimes and Heavy Alarm Bells for different parts of the Union and Canada.

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS will still be manufactured by the subscribers, of which they will have constantly on hand an assortment of Transit Instruments, Levels, Surveyor's Compasses, (plain, nonius and improved,) etc. Also, Brass or Composition Castings of any size cast to order.

VOLUME II. NUMBER 18. NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JUNE 5, 1852. WHOLE NUMBER, 70.

The article below is from the "St. Louis Intelligencer." It should have been headed WAKE UP! We are glad to see the secular press awaking to the political evils with which the policy of the Church of Rome threatens our country. Mr. Brownson, Archbishop Hughes and the editor of the "Shepherd of the Valley" are unmasking their batteries. They avow their aim is political power, that they have it, and that having it once fairly, their purpose is to wield it against liberty and for the faith. Allegiance to the Church of Rome is incompatible with a hearty allegiance to this or any other government. Rome has prostituted the Church to the world; she seeks worldly aggrandizement and power, and yet claims to be the only Bride of Him who has said "My kingdom is not of this world." She seeks for, contends for, power and place, and has both to the exclusion of every other form of religion in Spain, Austria, Portugal, Italy, Mexico, Brazil, Peru and France, besides in many smaller countries. This prostitution constitutes her the "Great Whore" "with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication." Rev. 17:2. We dread her not as a Church, but as a Political Power.

Religious Liberty in America.

Our attention has been arrested by a somewhat remarkable article on "Religious Freedom," in the last number of the Shepherd of the Valley, the Roman Catholic organ published in this city. As the maintenance of liberty in religious matters is a principle no less deeply involved in the whole structure of our political system than the perpetuation of civil liberty, we stand upon equal ground with the Shepherd of the Valley in the consideration of this subject. The startling announcements made by that paper—startling from their audacity, rather than any novelty they present—seem to us deserving of very serious attention from every man who acknowledges the enjoyment of civil and religious liberty combined as the chief blessing of our favored nation, the corner stone of our future greatness, and the true secret of our unexampled prosperity. The article we refer to is over three columns in length; but its essence may be given in about three lines: It is, that the Roman Catholic Church denies and disavows the doctrine of religious toleration. That nothing but the want of ability prevents its opposing and extirpating "heresy" in this country with the strong arm of the temporal power; and that (in its own words) "if the Catholics ever gain—which they surely will do, though at a distant day—an immense numerical majority, religious freedom in this country is at an end." There is nothing new nor strange in these assertions except their boldness.

That we may not be accused of misrepresenting the Shepherd, we give the most significant passages in its article. We ask our readers to consider them well; such comments as we have to make are necessarily deferred for want of room till to-morrow. The article, it seems, was called forth by the comments of the Philadelphia (Roman) Catholic Herald upon some "detached fragments" from previous numbers of the Shepherd, advocating substantially the same tenets. Some Virginia subscriber to the Herald, a Catholic surrounded by Protestants, is badly worried by seeing the extracts republished by the papers around him, and sends them to that journal with an account of his distress. The Philadelphia editor, more prudent or less honest than his St. Louis contemporary, mildly requests him to retract, and "would fain hope that they are not to be considered as the expression of his deliberate convictions." But our friend deliberately reiterates, at great length, all that he said before, and denounces "the cowardly system of misrepresentation and concealment which led English Catholics, in the unhappy times from which we are emerging, to attempt to throw dust in the eyes of contemporary heretics by disavowing the practices of their brethren in better days and other lands." Frank enough, in all conscience.

The extracts sent to the Herald are as follow:

"The Church, we admit, is of necessity intolerant; that is, she does every thing in her power to check, as effectually as circumstances will permit, the progress of crime and error. Her intolerance follows necessarily from her claim of infallibility; she alone has the right to be intolerant."

"Heresy, she inserts in her catalogue of mortal sins; she endures it when and where she must, but she hates it and directs all her energies to effect its destruction."

"If the Catholics ever gain—which they surely will do, though at a distant day—an immense numerical majority, religious freedom in this country is at an end. So say our enemies. So we believe."

"We have said that we are not advocates of religious freedom, and we repeat we are not. The liberty to believe contrary to the teachings of the Church, is the liberty to believe a lie; the liberty to think otherwise than it permits, is the liberty to abuse the mind and pollute the imagination; from such liberty may we and those we love at all times be preserved."

The Shepherd complains that some of these extracts are given unfairly and out of their proper connection, and comments itself upon their original intention. The first and second paragraphs it simply re-asserts as facts. The third, it says, is a simple expression of its own opinion, which, even as it stands, it believes to be the truth, and will neither retract nor apologise for. But it supplies a paragraph which originally preceded it, to this effect; "The so-called religious bodies are intolerant—that is, at the practical toleration of this age and country is not a result of Protestant principle, and that as soon as any one sect gets the superiority, it is at an end. An enlightened view of the principles of Protestants glory in declaring, as well us of that universal influence which the efforts of our forefathers have made a part of the Constitution, we are fully justified in contradicting so far as they are concerned. Then comes the third paragraph as above, in connection with the following:

"So we believe. But in what sense do we believe it? In what sense are we the advocate of religious intolerance? In the sense in which the enemies of the Church understand the word? By no means. We simply mean that a Christian people will not consider the ridicule of Christianity; the denial of its fundamental truths, of the immortality of the soul and the existence of God; the overthrow of all religion and morality; matters beneath their notice and condemnation; that the foundation will be laid for a legislation which shall restrain the propagation of certain doctrines; that men will no longer be permitted to attack dogmas with which morality is inseparably connected."

We supply this last because the Shepherd complains of its emission. Plainly it does not change the sense or the significance of what precedes; for in the vague threat of "a legislation which shall restrain the propagation of certain doctrines," is ample room for edicts as persecuting and as bloody as any that ever authorized the tender mercies of the Inquisition, or consigned heretics to the flames.

It also explains the expression, "religious freedom," in the fourth paragraph, to mean the same as that "damnanda omnimode libertas conscientiæ," (liberty of conscience worthy of all condemnation,) spoken of by Gregory XIV, in an encyclical letter of 1834; and quotes from another of his encyclical letters the expressions, "the pernicious contagion of indifferentism," and "the curbs which must be put upon the unbridled license of thought and speech;" and asks if its language is any stronger than that of the Holy Father. It is not, indeed; but opinions differ about the value of his authority.

The following extracts from the Shepherd's own reply to the strictures of the Herald, will show the opinion it deliberately and finally assumes. We have every wish to state it fairly, and only regret the impossibility of copying every word:

"Well, then, is this doctrine of toleration a Christian doctrine, or is it not: does it come from heaven or hell, from God or the devil; do we see any thing of it in the Bible, in the Fathers, in the actions or writings of the Saints, in the trentises of the doctors of the Church: was it heard before the birth of Protestantism: has it not been condemned by the Council of Constance, and repeatedly by the Supreme Pontiffs; is it any thing more than a convenient theory, got up that Catholics living amongst Protestants may meet with less ill will; are not the French philosophers and their disciples its most zealous advocates; is not Gibbon full of it; has it ever had any thing more than a theoretical existence, except where it has been practically impossible to carry into active operation the principles which it condemns; was St. Thomas right when he said that "it is a much worse thing to corrupt the faith, by which life is given to the soul, than to falsify money, which is an assistance to the temporal life;" did he reason correctly from these premises when he argued that temporal princes might justly punish convicted heretics? Have we stated any thing rash, erroneous, offensive to pious ears, or savoring of heresy, in the extracts given above: is our opinion, as to the consequences of the spread of Christianity in this country, improbable: may we not expect the Church and Christian rulers to act again as they have acted; is it not our boast that the Church never changed, and is not her history an open book, which all may read, which we can not close if we would, and of which we are accustomed to say that we have no cause to be ashamed!

* * * * *

Religious toleration and civil toleration are, however, we admit, things perfectly distinct. The first every Christian is bound to condemn; the second he will and must approve wherever it is expedient.

* * * * *

We will say, however, that we are not in favor of roasting heretics, and that if this sort of work is to be revived, though in our miserable times it is quite impossible, since men have no belief which they care to propagate, or for which they dare endure, if persecution is to be renewed, we should rather be its victim than its agents; but we are not, therefore, going to deny the facts of history, or to blame the saints of God and the doctors and pastors of the Church for what they have done and sanctioned. We say that the temporal punishment of heresy is a mere question of expediency; that Protestants do not persecute us here simply because they have not the power; and that where we abstain from persecuting them, they are well aware that it is merely because we can not do so, or think that, by doing so, we should injure the cause that we wish to serve. We are all intolerant—all of us who believe."

Rev. Chauncey Richardson, A. M.

The Texas Wesleyan Banner, of April 17, brought us the sad intelligence of the demise of this eminent Minister of Jesus Christ. That number contained the announcement of his death, and a promise of a suitable memoir, which will doubtless soon appear in the columns of the journal he so long and so ably conducted.

Such a man as the deceased does not belong to one Conference or to one Church. He is the common property of Christians, and justice to the dead and duty to the living require that his name and virtues should be made public to magnify the grace of God which was manifested in him, and to excite the emulation of those who are now threading life's thorny pathway to the same

"Undiscovered country
From whose bourne no traveler returns."

This article does not profess to be a regular obituary. I have not the facts and dates necessary for such a notice, but respect for the commanding talents and superior excellence of our dear departed brother, prompts me to pay this tribute to the memory of a late fellow laborer in the great work of the Gospel Ministry.

Bro. Richardson was in the fiftieth year of his age and twenty-eighth of his public ministry. He was a native of the State of Vermont, and the earliest years of his ministry were successfully spent in his native land. Subsequently he spent several years in Alabama, and in 1839 he immigrated to the Republic of Texas.

My personal acquaintance with him commenced in 1842. He was then President of Rutersville College. In 1844-'45, he was Presiding Elder on Rutersville District. In '46, '47 and '48 he filled the same office on the Galveston District. In December of this year the two Texas Conferences resolved upon the publication of the Texas Wesleyan Banner, and Bro. Richardson was appointed Editor. In 1850 the General Conference re-elected him to the same office.

For several months previous to our last Conference, he felt that his declining health would require him to resign an office he had filled with so much credit to himself and advantage to the Church. He did so, and was appointed Presiding Elder on the Galveston District.

After the adjournment of Conference I had a pleasant interview with him in the city of Houston. Alas! little did I think it would be the last I should ever have! His breath was then precarious, and he expressed his deep regrets that so heavy a charge had been assigned to him, but said he was determined to attempt to discharge his duties if he died a martyr to his work. After commencing his first round of Quarterly Meetings, he addressed me a letter from Matagorda. In this he says: "My health has been very delicate since we parted in Houston; I am scarcely able to perform any service, but I do not spare myself in the least; I travel and preach in great affliction. A severe cough troubles me." With such heroic devotion did this great and good man continue his labors until death arrested his prayers!

Bro. Kerr, the stationed preacher at Matagorda, says that while there he seemed far more spiritual and heavenly-minded than usual. He was evidently ripening for heaven. He frequently expressed to Bro. K. his conviction that that round would close his itinerant labors—a presentiment which has proved too true.

His last Quarterly Meeting was held in Houston, from which point he started to his home in Rutersville. When but twenty miles from Houston at the house of Brother John Patton, he was taken worse. Here he sent a messenger for Mrs. Richardson, by whose assiduous attentions, and careful nursing he hoped to recover. When Sister R. arrived, she found him able to walk the room, cheerful in mind, and, as all supposed, improving in health. He spoke of starting in the morning for home. Mrs. R. was called out to tea. She was absent but a few minutes, and on again entering his room, to her utter amazement, she found him laying upon the bed in articulis mortis. He fixed upon her one sweet look of recognition, but that voice which had greeted her in such affectionate tones on her arrival, was now forever hushed in death! His mortal remains were conveyed to Rutersville for interment.

Bro. Richardson received many evidences of the esteem and confidence of the citizens of Texas, and especially of his brethren in the Conference. He filled the office of Chaplain to the Senate of the Republic. He was President of the Texas Bible Society, and the Texas Literary Institute. He was a member of the Convention which organized the M. E. Church, South, and a delegate in its first General Conference. Since Dr. Summers left Texas, he has filled the office of Secretary of our Annual Conference, to the entire satisfaction of his brethren. But it is needless to specify; from the organization of our Conference, he has been its most active and efficient business members, and none can fully appreciate his worth but those who have been witnesses of his untiring devotion to the duties imposed upon him.

But he has gone, and our bereaved hearts bleed while we look around in utter despair of finding one to supply his place. A vacuum has been created in the ministeral ranks which it will be hard to fill.

One great object of Bro. Richardson's life—one that for twelve years past was always present in his mind—one that he never for a moment lost sight of, amid all his multifarious engagements and duties, was the permanent establishment, and liberal endowment of Rutersville College. To this object he devoted himself with an energy and constancy beyond all praise. Now that he has gone, and his grave will occupy a conspicuous position on College Hill, I would respectfully offer a suggestion. The citizens of Rutersville are erecting a stone church. Let them go on and complete it, and inscribe upon its imperishable walls the honored name of RICHARDSON, that we who servive, and coming generations, as they shall worship in the hallowed spot, may call to mind the virtues of him whose loss we now deplore.

Another suggestion: Had Brother R.'s life been spared, he proposed, from his numerous, carefully written and thoughtfully revised sermons and addresses, on various subjects, to prepare a volume for the press. A ministerial life of twenty-eight years, so laboriously and usefully spent as was his, must certainly afford sufficient incidents to form an interesting and profitable memoir. Doubtless a man of his careful literary habits has preserved ample materials for a small volume, and sketches of his personal history might be so interwoven with his addresses and sermons as to prove a profitable book for all, and an invaluable legacy to his brethren in the ministry. Mrs. Richardson is fully adequate to the task of preparing such a volume. If she declines it, I hope our Conference will place the necessary materials in the hands of some judicious person whose literary habits qualify him for the task, and whose high appreciation of Bro. Richardson's rare qualities, would prompt him him to enter upon the work con amore. I hope that ere long the "Life and Labors of Richardson" will be announced as one of the standing publications of the Church South.

A few further reflections upon the character of the deceased, I will reserve for a second paper.

American Bible Society.

The thirty-ninth anniversary of the American Bible Society was held at Broadway Tabernacle, on Thursday morning last, Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen in the chair. The meeting was opened with the reading of the 21st chapter of Revelation, and prayer by Rev. Dr. Spring. The President made the usual opening address, as follows:

While we are permitted to-day to record the continued manifestations of divine goodness toward the American Bible Society, we are led to the renewed conviction, that to the Word of God we must look for the principles and spirit that shall accomplish the best schemes of benevolence, for the welfare of man in time and forever. When the nations of the earth shall renounce the selfishness of interest and ambition, in their intercourse with each other, and reduce their diplomacy and policy to the sway of the great laws of social duty given in the Word, then will the sword return to its scabbard, and peace and joy and salvation fill the whole earth with blessings.

The world must perish without the Bible. How else shall the strifes and woes that afflict the nations be healed! Ever since men have pursued war as a remedy, it has shown itself efficient only to waste and destroy; the scourge of God and the rod of his anger to punish, to humble, and to blot out. What has been gained to our race by ages of war? The bones of the victims are bleaching on a thousand battle fields, and the earth has been made one vast grave-yard.

Could some happy being from another planet visit us, and seek for the cause of all this desolation, amazement would chill his soul to hear that it had been the work of man in murderous conflict with his brother man. Let the peace-speaking Book of Life go abroad to convince the nations of its own blessed way—that "to love our enemies, to do good to them that hate us, and pray for them that despitefully use us and persecute us," will overcome at last, and be the sure remedy and the best relief for the worst of evils.

It should not be forgotten that our daily prayer for universal peace and concord will find its answer in the operation of no new principles. There are to be no further chapters of divine revelation. The very same Gospel made known to the shepherds, and preached by our Saviour, will bring it all to pass. "Peace on earth and good will to men," were the glad tidings of salvation then, and the Redeemer waits to bestow it, in its fulness, on suffering man to-day.

The measure of prosperity enjoyed in our own country can be traced to the prevailing influence of God's Word. The pilgrims who first landed on our shores, loved its doctrines, and their children for many generations have been imbued with it. Here they learned to reverence the law, to fear God and obey the magistrates; and moreover, herein they were taught the duties and the rights of conscience; that God required a voluntary service, the homage of the heart, rising spontaneously, without restraint; and, therefore, by a universal statute of His Kingdom for angels and men, the mind and conscience of every accountable creature, by right and duty, was free. And the light and power of such principles will, by God's blessing, go forth to make a free and happy people on any spot in His universe.

This will heal the woes of humanity, and repair the ravages of sin; will redeem a people from the bondage of corruption and debasing passions, and restore them to the purity and liberty of the sons of God. Nothing has ever brought individual man into such consideration as the Gospel. The thought that for his sake compassion was felt in heaven, and suffering willingly endured by the Son of God, while it abases him in the dust, as it should, exalts his immortal nature.

The worth of the soul is learned from the price laid down for its redemption, and wherever the report of the Saviour's sufferings is borne, there also are carried the tidings of deliverance through his name, and this, when received into the heart, makes free in the best sense, and prepares for and hastens the consummation when the prison doors shall be thrown open, the chains fall from the captive, and the oppressed of every land go free.

The Treasurer's Report was read by Joseph Hyde, Esq., General Agent and Assistant Treasurer.

The Managers' Report was read by Rev. Dr. Brigham, from which we gather the following facts:

During the past year two of the Vice Presidents, John Griscom, LL. D., of New Jersey, and the Hon. James M'Dowell, of Virginia, have been removed by death.

There have been added to the Society during the year 73 Life Directors, 1190 Life Members, and 63 Auxiliaries.

The receipts of the year, from all sources, amount to $308,744 81; being an increase of $31,842 28 beyond those of the previous year; and $24,130 67 more than was ever received before by the Society during any single year.

The number of Bibles printed during the same period is 239,000, and of Testaments 476,500, making a total of 705,500 copies.

The number of Bibles distributed is 221,450; and of Testaments 444,565, making a total for the year of 666,015. This is an increase of 73,583 over the issues of the previous year, and makes an aggregate, since the formation of the Society, of 8,238,982 Bibles and Testaments.

The Society has prepared a Royal Octavo Bible, in plain, for the use of families, and for the aged, who require a larger letter; and a New Testament in French and English, in parallel columns. The Board has likewise published the books of Joshua, Judges, Ruth, 1. Samuel, 11. Samuel, and 1. Kings, in the Choctaw tongue, under the direction of the Rev. Cyrus Byington, of the Choctaw Mission, and the Gospel of John, in the Grebo language, for the Protestant Episcopal Mission in Western Africa.

The Collation of the English Bible, mentioned in the two previous reports, is now completed, and an account of it will be furnished in the report of the present year.

The Society has had in its employ thirty-one Agents through most of the year, including two in Texas and one in California.

Grants of Bibles and Testaments, in greatly increased numbers, have been made by the Board to local auxiliaries, to the various Missionary Boards, to Sunday Schools, to Seamen and Boatmen, to the Blind, and to individuals for gratuitous distribution among the destitute both at home and abroad.

Besides the grants of books, $30,900 has been granted by the Board in money to aid in publishing the Scriptures in foreign lands, especially in China, Northern and Southern India, and in Turkey, France and Russia, under the direction of various Missionary Boards and Bible organizations.

The Society has purchased grounds, and commenced the erection of a new Bible House in Astor Place, the present house being now quite too small.

Sir Roger de Coverly's Chaplain.

After Sir Roger, the principal personage at the Hall is its veritable chaplain. The Knight, afraid of being insulted with Latin and Greek at his own table, had stipulated for a clergyman with a little learning, but if possible, with some slight knowledge of backgammon. The determination of Sir Roger to incur the risk of being knocked down with a weapon he was unable to wield, is admirably characteristic. Nothing can exceed his mildness and his condescension, but he would be the last to tolerate a brother near the throne. When he attends the Assize she whispers his congratulations in the ear of the judge on the fine weather that has accompanied his lordship in his circuit, that by an appearance of familiarity he may keep up his credit with the county; and with the same patriotic design he, in the middle of a trial, interjects a speech, which is nothing to the purpose. His purpose, however, is gained, and the common people gaze with respectful wonder at the magistrate who is not afraid to speak to a judge. The rule of Sir Roger is paternal, but then he is ambitious, in return, to maintain among his dependents the submission of children.

The chaplain is a scholar notwithstanding, but he is also a gentleman, and has not the ill-bred vanity to parade his erudition before the ignorant. It is to pay rather too dear for the character of a pedant to forfeit a character for sense, and to be voted vulgar, conceited, and a bore. The chaplain, we may suppose, had learnt to flavour his conversation with the juice of the grape without thrusting upon the company the stalks and husks. Addison's notions of a pastor comes out in the description. The parson is the arbiter of all the disputes of his parishioners, and lawsuits have been unknown for the thirty years he lived among them; but it is upon the sermons that the Spectator lays the principal stress. The advice of Paley to his pupils to make one and steal three, is improved on by the chaplain, who composes none at all, but, with the concurrence of his patron, has digested those of our burning and shining lights into a connected system of practical divinity. Accordingly, when Sir Roger inquires who preaches to-morrow, he is answered, "The Bishop of St. Asaph in the morning, and Dr. South in the afternoon." Addison heartily wishes that more of the clergy would follow his example, and study to pronounce effectively the masterpieces of the pulpit, instead of wasting their spirits in abortive efforts of their own. The duty of cultivating the art of reading is much dwelt upon by Addison, and it is to be feared that the accomplishment is still very rare. As the best music, badly played, makes indifferent melody, so false elocution degrades the finest composition to a level with the worst. The coldness with which Dryden spoke his plays at a rehearsal, destroyed any spirit his genius had infused; but Nat Lee delivered inferior dramas with a force which induced a performer to throw aside his part, in despair of acting up to the recital of the author. While the best discourses of our Church of England divines were heard with apathy, because the clergy read so much worse than they wrote, Benjamin Franklin, no Methodist or enthusiast, found a charm in listening to Whitfield's sermons, however uninteresting the matter, for the sake of the exquisite modulations of voice which gave to every word its appropriate accent.

The recommendation to Smith and Thompson to preach South and Tillotson is of more doubtful expediency. Every cultivated mind must prefer the finished compositions of genius to the vapid commonplaces of ordinary men; but the practice has never been countenanced by the public, and the clergymen who avowed the system of the Coverly chaplain would lose the consideration of the bulk of his hearers, or, if he keeps his own secret, it is discovered at last, and he is brought in guilty of the double crime of incapacity and deceit. Franklin, who agreed with Addison, was unable to save a friend from utter desertion after it had once oozed out that his long applauded eloquence was a happy memory for the writings of others. Several instances of the inconvenience which attends the proceeding have occurred within the limits of our personal knowledge. A large-nosed man, irritated to find that his Sunday volume was in regular course of delivery from the pulpit, invited the curate to dine, and laid the book open on the drawing-room table. A surviving friend having published a selection of sermons by an admired preacher—who, if there was truth in ghosts, would have risen up to scare the printer from his task—an enemy forthwith blazoned the sad fact that they were so many reduced copies of famous originals. Another popular favorite was plagued to print a particular specimen, and, weakly consenting, the true author reclaimed his thunder. A still more painful predicament was that of a certain respectable rector who—in an evil and indolent hour—got a friend to assist him, and heard one afternoon his own morning discourse, paragraph after paragraph, declaimed above his head with torturing emphasis. The orator, in all the blaze of ignorance, spared neither voice nor gesture, while his unhappy precursor, to whom every syllable was like a sentence of death, sat a suffering spectacle to pews and gallery. A short time since a printed sermon was sent to the entire body of the clergy, with an intimation that, upon order, a regular supply would be kept up at a shilling a piece. Like the answer of Shakspeare's clown, which fitted all questions, the piece was suited to every text; and the author enclosed a list, with a letter of the alphabet attached to each, and recommended the preacher to be guided in his choice by the initial of his parish. The device was to prevent a coincidence of texts between neighboring pastors, which might have led to detection. Anxious to accommodate the meshes of his net to all kinds of fish, he was careful not to offend any party in the Church; so that, what with the universality of his subject, and the universality of his creed, he was in a continual strait. But the clergyman is in a worse, who, in the midst of the riches of our English divinity, buys a paltry shilling's worth of an obscure scribe. Since to copy is prohibited, the wisest course is to imitate, and, by sitting at the feet of Gamaliel, to grow qualified to stand in Gamaliel's place. Our best discourses could not any how be delivered to country congregations in their present form. They were expressly penned for an enlightened audience, and, without numerous alterations to adapt them to rustics, would fly above their heads instead of reaching their hearts. Luther knew a priest who preached to an almshouse of ancient widows on the duties of marriage, and admonished them not to be negligent in the performance thereof. The inapplicable and the incomprehensible are all one in the result. [London Quarterly.

Wesleyan Annual Missionary Sermon.

The Annual Missionary Sermon at Centenary Hall was preached, on Thursday last, by the Rev. Dr. Bunting. The room was filled.

Before announcing his text,

Dr. Bunting said, that much correspondence had taken place, and much time had been expended, respecting the service in which he was about to engage. On the day previous to that on which it was necessary that the list of anniversary services should be publicly announced, he learned that the Committee of Management had been unable, in consequence of prior engagements on the part of those to whom application had been made, to obtain a preacher for that day (Thursday.) He felt then, but still more so now, that he was unequal to the duties; unwilling, however, to add to the perplexity of those who, on such occasions, had to encounter perplexity enough, he had consented to undertake the duty. The Rev. Doctor made some apology for reading parts of his discourse, which was a practice he had not been accustomed to recommend or to follow. Several times during the delivery he laid down his notes, and spoke extemporaneously. We understand that pressing request has been made for the publication of the sermon entire.

The discourse was founded upon Rom. xv. 15—21.

"Nevertheless, brethren, I have written the more boldly unto you in some sort, as putting you in mind, because of the grace that is given to me of God. That I should be the minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles, ministering the gospel of God, that the offering up of the Gentiles might be acceptable, being sanctified by the Holy Ghost. I have therefore whereof I may glory through Jesus Christ in those things which pertain to God. For I will not dare to speak of any of those things which Christ has not wrought by me, to make the Gentiles obedient, by word and deed. Through mighty signs and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God; so that from Jerusalem, and round about unto Illyricum, I have fully preached the Gospel of Christ. Yea, so have I strived to preach the Gospel, not where Christ was named, lest I should build upon another man's foundation: But as it was written, to whom he was not spoken of, they shall see: and they that have not heard shall understand."

In a brief exordium the preacher observed, that persons who had been long accustomed to enjoy peculiar religious privileges, were prone to imagine, that exclusive possession of such privileges, in point of fact, had created an exclusive title in point of right. On such false and ungenerous principles, the Jews of old time fancied themselves to be deeply aggrieved by the admission of believing Gentiles to the benefits of religion. So, in the present day, there were those who, while they fancied themselves in the possession of religious privileges, were totally unable to bring their minds to that wide expansion which would constrain them to desire with the Psalmist, "Let the whole earth be filled with His glory." Virtually, they forbad preaching to the Gentiles (heathen) that they might be saved.

From the passage of Scripture quoted, he had chosen those parts which had the most direct bearing on the Missionary work. He should notice:

I. the general nature of St. Paul's ministry;

II. The class of persons among whom he most delighted and most preferred to exercise that ministry;

III. The testimony of God by which it was accompanied;

IV. The effects produced upon those among whom he labored;

And V. The privilege, honor, and happiness which the Apostle felt to be conferred upon himself, by a call to the disposition of his time and talents to this particular Missionary work.

The text spoke, first, of the general nature of St. Paul's ministry. On this subject, the Apostle began by declaring, that grace was given unto him that he should be "the Minister of Christ." The word here [illegible] "Minister" was, composed of [illegible] words, the one signifying work, labor; and the other conveying the idea of something belonging to the public—a care for the affairs and welfare of others. The character which St. Paul here claimed was that of a man called of Jesus to sustain a public ministry and office, and to devote himself to the public service. Among the Athenians there was a particular magistrate who bore the very name here appropriated by the Apostle to himself. These magistrates, whilst possessed of considerable property, were expected to be always ready to undertake any public duty and to occupy the most burthensome positions for the public welfare; their pecuniary resources being available, if need were, to the purposes of the state, and their lives ready to be offered in sacrifice to the public good. Christian Missionaries were equally public benefactors, and entitled, therefore to public support. In reference to his public work, the Apostle said that, he offered up the Gentiles unto God. In this clause (ch. v. 16) he used a different word, one which had a direct allusion to the priesthood under the law, and by the use of which he meant that, as the Levitical priests were set apart to serve God in holy things, according to the ritual of the Jewish economy, so he was bound, in the exercise of his office in the Christian Church, to administer the same ordination of the new and better covenant. The Apostle having given a general view of his ministry, described the means whereby he was enabled to serve God in his day and generation, and to prepare for the Lord at his coming an act of oblation. He declared that for this purpose he administered the gospel of God—that is, fully preached the gospel of Christ. Preaching had been in all ages the grand instrument of Christian labor and success.

He would next consider the information contained in the text as to the first class among whom the great Apostle most preferred and rejoiced to exercise the ministry of the word. He was eminently, he said, "the Minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles"; and was described as unambitious—thinking it an honor to preach Christ to them to whom he had not been previously preached, among whom He was not known, and "to whom He was not spoken of." The terms here were most expressive of the appalling state of mankind by nature. He (the Rev. Doctor) especially begged their particular attention to that part of the discourse. They would hear much, during that and succeeding anniversaries, of the success which had every where attended the proclamation of the gospel; they ought to hear such tidings—and was there not success? Whilst, however, they were rejoicing, they could not overlook the crying necessity that existed for further effort and further work. There were countless tribes of men—immortal men—among whom still Christ was not named; who knew not his name, who were unacquainted with his glory and his grace, his dying love, his miraculous resurrection, his glorious ascension and intercession; they were strangers to his redeeming acts and saving grace. Christ was the source of the Christian's sweetest enjoyments. His "name" to those that loved him was "as an ointment poured forth." After alluding to various circumstances in which the "name" of Christ was precious to the believer, the Doctor said—"To whom do we apply for succor in the the most solemn crisis?—'in the hour of death'—do we not call on the name of Christ, and say, 'Lord Jesus receive my spirit!' Brethren, I confidently appeal to your own experience, is not the name of Jesus essentially associated with every thing holy and happy. You have often sang,

"Thy mighty name salvation is,
And keeps my happy soul above."

I wish you would he kind enough to sing it now." The congregation then rose and sang the second verse of the 209th Hymn:

"Thy mighty name salvation is,
And keeps my happy soul above,
Comfort it brings, and power,
And joy and everlasting love;
To me, with thy dear Name are given,
Pardon, and holiness, and heaven."

The name of Christ was essentially associated with every thing holy and happy; how unspeakably awful then would be the believer's state were he deprived of that grace and peace which were bound up in the "name" of Christ Now, in this very state—so horrible to a real Christian—were uncounted millions of heathens now found. Having enumerated many of the privileges to the Christian to which the heathen was a total stranger, he said the condition was comprehended in this expression, "Amongst them Christ is not named." How much such persons required Missionaries; and how desirable, for their own sakes and for Christ's honor that his "name" should be mentioned among them!

He had no time to say any thing to the "testimony" of God by which this Apostle and his ministry was especially distinguished "through mighty signs and wonders;" and not only miraculous demonstrations of divine sanction, but what the Apostle emphatically called "the power of the spirit of God," in direct and perfect soul-renewing energy.

He might also have mentioned the [illegible] produced by the gospel among primitive converts. "They became obedient [illegible] —obedient both in word and deed.

He would dwell very briefly upon the head of his discourse—the privilege, honor, and happiness, which Paul felt conferred upon himself by the call to particular Missionary work made upon time and talents. He said, "Grace is given to me of God, that I should be the minister of Jesus Christ." Every Christian should feel the same [illegible] to him, he should [illegible] the providence of God [illegible] it as a special "grace" [illegible] ferred. This "grace" was [illegible] members of the Church [illegible] their several localities [illegible] that general place of [illegible] lia,) assemble to show [illegible] their prayers and [illegible] contributions for [illegible] nth.

... niana—Mt. Auburn—surpasses it in beauty. Each is a splendid Necropolis. In Greenwood Cemetery I was particularly struck with a monument to a pilot who nobly lost his life in saving the lives of others from a shipwreck. It stands on an eminence looking out upon the Bay, is surmounted by his own exquisitely carved statue, and speaks courage to all his daring brothers who pass in view of it as they "go down to the sea in ships." Such honor to the dead has vast moral effect. Of like nature is another monument, in another part of the cemetery, surmounted by the figure of a fireman bearing a child in his arms out of the flames.

My wanderings among the sights of New York were no where more satisfying than in the famous establishment of the "Brothers Harper," 239 Pearl street. I am much indebted to those gentlemen for having had the liberty of the premises allowed me, with a good guide, where I saw the process of bookmaking from the moveable type to the stereotype, and from the Child's Primer to the gilding and binding of their great Illuminated Bible. The June number of the Magazine was already completed, of which I was favored with a copy in advance of issue, and the printers were at work on the July number. The items of this establishment have often before been published. I will only add one more, which to half the world will be of more interest than the details of bookmaking—I have never seen a collection of finer looking young ladies than those who find employment here, stitching and folding. The young gentlemen especially may conceive a higher zest for what bears the imprint of Harper & Brothers, by the assurance that it passes through a succession of fair hands and bright eyes.

Touching the Magazine, I am informed that ninety thousand subscribers are supplied—this at $3 a subscriber, makes a sum that one might stare at. But the costly materials, and more still, the costly talent worked into it, are such as large and spirited capitalists can only outlay. Mr. Abbott has gone to Europe to complete his Napoleon sketchies. "Can the Ethiopian change his skin?" To this assertion of impossibility, the enterprising spirit of these times may answer—"No: but somebody can do it for him." Mr. Abbott has undertaken something like it, in ripping up the settled opinions of the world about the Corsican, and white-washing a name which most writers have thoroughly black-washed. Some of his Puritan friends here have suggested that after he is done with Napoleon Bonaparte, he ought to take up Judas Iscariot, and make out a fair character for him.

Yesterday evening, after taking tea with a friend in Brooklyn, an opportunity offered of hearing a distinguished divine, whom I have been desirous, for a long time, to hear—Henry Ward Beecher. He has a large and strong and, I am impressed, a very pious church here, called Plymouth Church. The Presbyterians, Old and New School, repudiate connection with him, but the abolitionists do not. I set him down as Congregational. My interest in the preacher had lately been increased by the book of his talented sister, Mrs. Stowe. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is all the rage, in abolition circles. A talented family, surely—father, sons and daughter. Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, you may remember by the accounts of the papers at the time, gave Kossuth a singular and hearty welcome in his church, for which some ill natured priute dubbed him "General Beecher." It was a week-night ordinary service, and the lecture room was crowded. The people were singing away in Methodist style as I entered, only accompanied by a rich-toned piano, that helped the music much. The preacher was slightly elevated upon a platform: he looks not over thirty-three years, is of low stature, and ungainly carriage and address; but every feature of the face and head is promising—the large eyes especially so, which speak a world of emotion, and the mouth wide enough and willing to let it out. His subject was, "The influence of a fixed, definite belief in a future existence in making men moral heroes, strong to do and endure, patient and happy, in this." Of course, the text lies in the 11th chapter of Hebrews. He did every way and said every thing with apparent incoherence, but finally the point was made, the deep powerful impression produced that this faith makes heroes of the only true sort. Now he leaned his back against the wall, and crossed his legs, then advanced and almost tilted over the platform, now wedged his right hand under the cuff of the left sleeve, then put both hands into his pockets. There was the utmost carelessness of mien or method, and yet somehow the discussion of the subject went on. Thought constantly overran expression; the style was plain, very plain, and peculiar for strength rather than elegance. Illustrations abounded, and they were frequently of a sort that nothing recommended them but their aptness to illustrate the laboring sentiment. The preacher concluded by reading, all through, that hymn of Charles Wesley—"And let this feeble body fail." At the conclusion of it, he said: "There, if that isn't gospel I don't what is. Let us unite in prayer."

Altogether, I take Mr. B. to be a most effective, as he is an active, public speaker, earnest, intent on doing good; good on any subject, and ready on short notice—an orator of the trip-hammer sort—anything but a smooth-shaven, pointless respectability.—There is an unction in his sermons and prayers, and souls are converted. If he would ... off the Abolition lecturer and confine ... if to the gospel preacher functions, all who hear him would be his friends as they must be his admirers.

PHILADELPHIA, May 22.

Yesterday evening was a lively time at Girard College. It was the celebration of the 102d anniversary of Girard's birthday. I was not aware I had fallen on such a lucky day for visiting the College till on the spot. A large part of the audience was made up of the mothers and sisters of the boys who are beneficiaries, and there are three hundred of them. In one department of the building devoted to such purposes, the crowd listened to some very good original declamation by the older boys. Grateful eulogies on the founder were spoken. When the speeches, interspersed with singing, were concluded, the boys went in order to early supper. A gala-day board was spread for them. They ranged up and down two long tables, ate neatly and were in the best order and keeping. Their sleeping and study apartments were thrown open for the inspection of visitors. The domestic arrangements would, I think, have pleased the careful and benevolent founder could he have looked upon his adopted family of orphan boys. But there he stood, in cold statue, fronting the entrance to those marble halls. His dull, cold ear heard none of their praises. When their evening meal was over, the boys dispersed in chatting groups—some to the play-ground, mounting the swing, some to less bold amusements, and some went about with their mothers showing them the grounds and receiving affectionate lessons to be good and learn their books. It was a scene of life and joy and promise I cannot describe; these boys of helpless and almost hopeless condition provided for, and all based upon the beneficence of one man. None can be admitted over ten years of age, and by a liberal construction of the will they may remain till eighteen years old. Girard, in his own style, made provision for a thorough and practical education. He wished his orphan boys "taught things and facts not in signs and words." But there was one provision of his will that has not been, could not be carried out—the exclusion of the Bible. Only think of it—three hundred boys kept eight years, and grown up to young men, and educated within walls where no Bible is! The Bible is there. On each boy's seat is a Bible and a hymn book. The Principal is a worthy Methodist. Christianity is there, not by the invitation or permission of the founder, but by constraint of public opinion, to sanctify these fountains. May each fountain be healed before it issues forth upon the wide world without!

WASHINGTON CITY, D. C., May 25.

MY DEAR BROTHER: I had the pleasure on last Sabbath of attending and taking part in religious services in the Methodist Church South of this place. It was an agreeable surprise to find our brethren occupying such a neat and commodious Chapel of their own. The owe on it yet $2,700, the balence of purchase money, and of some improvement made since the building came into their hands. The worthy Pastor, Rev. L. Rosser, starts out to-morrow, and we will travel together as far as Richmond, raising this sum. It is rather unfortunate for a man to get the fame he has won for himself as a money-raiser. If there be a mired wheel in the Conference his shoulder is pretty sure to be put to prying it out. May he have the same success in his appeals for the Church in the Metropolis, as attended them for that in Alexandria! I have enjoyed the kindest hospitality of the parsonage the last two days, and thus had a tolerably full and fair view of the wants and merits of this Southern vine, and its claims upon the connexional bounty, and therefore commend him and his cause to most liberal consideration. His church is steadily on the increase, well attended and not without spiritual prosperity.

I have spent a few hours to-day and yesterday in the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, (New School,) now holding session here. The meetings are conducted with admirable propriety, and have afforded a profitable entertainment. The sermon of the retiring Moderator, Rev. A. Barnes, has excited interest. It was delivered before I came, but a strong anti-Southern passage has been quoted to me. Dr. Barnes is represented as saying, in substance, that the Methodist Church, North, and the Quakers were the only sects that had taken proper ground on the slavery question. The Assembly, when a motion was subsequently made to print the sermon, refused to do so, inasmuch as it "contained certain sentiments to which they were unwilling to be committed."

Whether the sentiment above quoted was one of them, I cannot say. Such a sentiment would certainly not have been put forth in the General Assembly, (Old School,) now meeting in Charleston, S. C. The New School branch are confined mostly to free States. Very few delegates are counted below them, and the Congregationalist School "messengers" or representatives of Congregationalist Associations are present, making cheering reports of their condition, and bearing salutations. Indeed there seems to be but the slightest shade of difference, amounting in some places to a union and co-operation that blends them to the eye of an outsider. It is very gratifying to see and hear these fraternal manifestations. Indeed, one reverend representative, (Congregationalist,) from Wisconsin, in giving the relative numbers of Congregationalists and N. S. Presbyterians in that State, apologized for the excess of the former over the latter, and averred they had not been unfair or over-zealous in producing that unequal state of things!

Of all the clergy in the Northern States, among whom there are deservedly many great names, I suppose none surpass or equal the Unitarians for the elegance and thoroughness of intellectual furniture. As to theology, of course, they are to be regarded far out of the way, and as for piety, there is deadness among their churches. They have, as a class, a singular facility at shedding clerical vestments. This may come of their business views of the ministry, rather than lack of godliness. If it be taken up as a profession, in a mere business point of view, nothing hinders its being put down when a better prospect opens. President Sparks and Hon. Mr. Bancroft, the historian and diplomatist, were once Unitarian preachers. Others, of eminence in literature and politics might be added to the list, who have quit the business of calling sinners to repentance and gone to what pays better. I was shown the church in Boston where the Hon. Mr. Everett not only has preached but was once the settled pastor! So much for man-made preachers, be they never so well made.

In the galleries of the houses of Congress one's interest, unless on an uncommon occasion, is limited to the brief time requisite, with guide chart in hand, for finding out the "lions" below. It would be as easy to make a speech on the levee, in the heat of commerce, amid the din of drays and steamboat whistles, as in the "Lower House." I judge by the scenes of to-day and yesterday. Strong lungs and a quick ear are indispensable in a representative—to hear and make himself heard. The constituents should feel in duty bound to read the speeches printed, for if they were not made for them I am at a loss whom they were meant for. In the Senate 'tis dignified and calmer, but even there to-day I heard one of the Arkansas Senators tell a doleful tale in behalf of some Indians the Government had been owing money to this long time. "Lo the poor Indian!" What a moving subject! and the honorable gentleman said some fine things. Most of the time I could see but a single eye turned to him (the President not excepted) and that was the Chairman of the Committee on Finance. But in the Supreme Court the highest idea of tribunal dignity is realized. There sit the Judges in gowns. The Court of Areopagus would be awed in their presence.

The Smithsonian Institute has workmen slowly carrying on the buildings and laying off the ample grounds about. In the last month or two a rich gallery of Indian portraits has been added to its growing attractions. Mr. Corcoran, a private citizen, opens to visitors his own gallery, where are specimens of the fine arts in painting and sculpture not excelled by any I have ever seen. Here is the Greek Slave in her modest nudity.

But I have so fatigued myself in looking after the great men and the great things hereabouts that an end must come to this epistle.

Temperance Memorial.

On the eighth day of March last, the Legislature of Louisiana passed an act which gives to "Police Juries of the Parishes, the Selectmen of the towns, and Mayor and Aldermen of the cities" the "exclusive power to make such laws, and such regulations for the sale or the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors as they may deem advisable; and to grant or withhold licenses from drinking houses or shops, as a majority of the citizens and voters of any ward, parish, town or city may determine, by ballot."

By the same law the State relinquishes all right and title to grant license.

The Grand Division of the SONS OF TEMPERANCE of this State have accordingly memorialized the Mayor of this city, not to grant any more licenses to drinking houses until the vote shall have been taken as the law prescribes; and to fix the 14th of June, when an election for delegates to the Convention for forming a new Constitution is to be held, as the time for voting on this question.

The memorial is in accordance with the law, and the law is in accordance with the great principle of self government, and all the dictates of humanity. A few nights since we were called to see a man in the prime of life, who was thought to be dying with mania a potu. Poor fellow! "Don't have it published," said he, in one of his lucid intervals, "that I died from intemperance. I am a young man—but it is all from bad association—they will have to bear part of it, too. I would give a thousand worlds, D——, if I could have your chance." God is merciful. It is now likely that He who willeth not the death of any, but would rather that all should come to him and live, has lengthened his span. We have noticed that the most noble hearted and the most ingenuous by nature, ne they are the most companionable, are most of all liable to be the victims of this social disease. In this city there are temptations and facilities, and influences, to make a young man intemperate, which it is melancholy to see. Nearly every corner is a drinking house; some of them are far superior, in attractive elegance, to any thing of the kind in London or Paris. The Gin Palaces of England, so much written of us inviting by their splendor, are dull, cheap shops, beside the "Gems" of New Orleans.

It is said that one Irishman with a barrel of whisky, only requires twelve Irish customers to make a good living. It is amongst those twelve—the poor laborers—that we see more immediately the ruinous effects of drink. Their homes, their wives, their children, tell the story that "Father is a drunkard."

The memorial, however, puts the question upon its financial, that is, its municipal aspects. The cost to the city is to be added to the cost which individuals pay, to make out the rate at which gentlemen who deal in spirits are making "an honest living."

"By a 'Report of the Prisoner's Committee, to the Work House of the late Second Municipality, from the 31st of December, 1842, to the 31st of May, 1843,' it appears that of two hundred and seventeen persons committed, one hundred and sixty-one, or nearly three-fourths of the whole number, were Intemperate.

"It is established, as a well-attested fact, derived from an examination of the different criminal records of New Orleans and other cities, where such tables have been kept, that two-thirds, if not three-fourths, of all the crimes of every kind, punishable by law, and which cause such heavy expenses to these cities, are directly or indirectly to be attributed to the sale and use of intoxicating liquors. Of the arrests made by the Police of the late Second Municipality, during one year, ending June 31st, 1851, twenty-one hundred and twenty-three were made of those who are returned as 'Drunkards.' From the 1st of January to the 31st of March, 1851, (three months) the expense to the late Second Municipality, alone, for the Police Jail, the City Prison, the Day Police, the Levee Police, the Night Watch, and the Work House, amounted to the sum of $36,381 92. For the same, for one year, ending the 37st day of December, 1851, it amounted to $99,292 58. Three-fourths of this sum is $74,469 43½, which amount is levied upon the tax-payers and property holders, to defray the expense brought upon the city by the sale and use of intoxicating drinks. In addition, the city is compelled to make large appropriations, on account of the pauperism and sickness occasioned by intemperance. The cost of the maintenance of the Charity Hospital, for the year 1851, was $67,074 48. Of those who were admitted to this institution, during this year, on account of diseases engendered by intemperance, one hundred and ninety-eight were afflicted with that evidence of most beastly drunkenness, 'Delirium Tremens.'"

When the vote is taken we shall vote an open ticket, "No License." Throughout the State, planters are complaining of the petty thefts of their servants; pigs, chickens, corn, eggs, all the disposables, are in hourly danger of being absorbed by the greggery and drunk by the negro. This money loss will be very apt now to work out a moral gain.

The French may possibly drink without getting drunk, and gamble without losing money, which some affirm, but it is certain that no other people can.

General Conference M. E. Church, North.

MAY 19.—The main discussion of this day was whether a Missionary Bishop should be elected for the benefit of Liberia, or whether ordination should be allowed by the presbyters of the Liberia Conference, or whether a Bishop, colored, (!) of Liberia should be elected and allowed there to stay, or whether one of the regular Bishops should be requested to visit Liberia. Of course "much might be said on both sides."

Dr. Bangs advocated a Liberia Bishop.

Dr. Durbin a Bishop of Liberia—diocesan a temporary, missionary, specific Bishop.

Dr. Elliot that one of the Bishops should visit Liberia.

Dr. Peck, that the President of the Conference, or the presbyters, should be authorized to ordain.

Dr. Bangs said—

"With regard to the idea of the unity of the Methodist Episcopal Church, or the unity of the Episcopacy, it was altogether a fanciful idea with him; he did not believe in it. Suppose they should establish a church in China. Were we to force the Chinese to send delegates to us, to deliberate with us, and to be inseparably associated with us in church organization? The idea would be preposterous. They had the example, too, of the Primitive Church. Who that was acquainted with ecclesiastical history, had not read of the Bishop of Alexandria, the Bishop of Jerusalem, the Bishop of Athens, the Bp. of Ephesus, and so on? Look at the consequences of sending a Bishop to Africa to superintend the mission there. All the white missionaries who have been sent had died, save one—Bro. Seys—and two returned sick. He was in favor of having Bro. Seys ordained Bishop for Africa in 1840, and he believed it would have been right to have done so. But it would appear from the facts, that Providence had raised up a man—an African, in Liberia—that was now well qualified to take the Episcopal office, provided he were elected to that station. He thought he saw the finger of God pointing out the right course to pursue, in raising up a man there who had proved his competency to superintend the work, by superintending it so far as he could without Episcopal powers."

MAY 21.—Same discussion continued. Dr. Cartwright was for sending one of the Bishops out to Liberia.

"Now (said he) what was there about that sickly, deathly climate which had been introduced as an argument against that substitute? That it was a sickly climate he was not prepared to deny; but several of his brethren seemed to have the idea that a man could not spend one night on the shores of Africa without giving his life as a forfeit for his hardihood. Our last Superintendent came back as fat as a lion. Several other brethren had returned well and sound. He thought that no man who was afraid to go to Africa ought to be elected Bishop, and he would go against him if they would let him know it. Suppose a dozen or two should die, they had forty candidates for the office; (great laughter) there was no end to the chapter. He could produce twenty men who would say, 'If you will elect me I will go to Africa.' There was hardly a candidate for the office that would not go. Some little nervous misgivings might come up now and then, but those would soon be smoothed away. There was as ready a road to heaven from Africa, as from the U. States. He would pledge himself that if we elected any General Superintendents, they would take the field; if not, let them back out, and the Conference would fill their places with other men."

Dr. McClintock said he doubted whether we had authority, as the Discipline now stands, to send our Bishops to sea, and say they shall go to Africa. Such a doubt existed in his mind and in the minds of others, and he could not vote for the substitute. He preferred the proposition submitted by Dr. Sandford, to amend the third restrictive rule so as to allow of the election of missionary Bishops. He thought this proposition could be sent round to the Annual Conferences, and the General Conference could elect a Bishop, leaving his ordination contingent on the passage of the proposition through the Annual Conferences, and so, at the end of twelve months, all this difficulty would be settled."

On the 19th, Dr. McClintock called up the following resolution, which had been lying on the table for a few days:

"Resolved, That a committee of one be appointed, to meet with the Rev. Leroy M. Lee, in the city of New York, after the session of this General Conference, and, in conjunction with him, to appoint a suitable person or persons to copy the records of the General Conference up to the year 1844, inclusive, at the expense of the said Dr. Lee, which copy, after due examination and certificate, shall be handed over to Dr. Lee, as the agent of the M. E. Church, South.

"Mr. Griffith said he had been thinking over the subject, and there were several aspects which he thought worthy of consideration before they acted upon the resolution. One was whether these brethren had any right to ask for the records. In the second place, all reasonable men had an object in view for any course they proposed. Was the object in this case to make a book?

"John A. Gere said he looked with pleasure upon the application when it was made, and he hoped it would be granted. He thought the Southern Church had a right to this record, as they had formed part of the church when the record was made, and were as much interested in it as we were.

"B. Holmes opposed the motion, on the ground that it might have an influence upon the suits in which the Church was at present engaged.

"Dr. Hodgson said he could see no objection to the adoption of the resolution.

"Dr. Cartwright said this question had come up before he was ready, but he would give it a passing notice. When he looked at the relation of the M. E. Church, South, he thought they had no right to ask this power at their hands. And if they assumed this right—a thing they were apt to do—he thought it was no discourtesy to give them a flat denial. When he looked at the hostile attitude they had taken, he thought it was the wrong time to come forward and ask such a favor as this, in the name of courtesy. He did not know what Eastern folks would think, but Westerners, said the Dr., who were born in a cane-brake, cradled in a gum tree, and graduated in a thunderstorm, have no faith in such courtesy as that. He was like the old belligerents, who are said never to have given or asked quarter. He neither ran after the devil nor from him, and he never intended to.

"Dr. Durbin said he was in favor of the resolution. They were not to render evil for evil; and if these brethren of the South had done all the evil which had been alleged, we did not mend the matter by measuring evil back to them again.

"Mr. Parks said it mattered not to him whether the Church South had treated them with courtesy or discourtesy. He thought there was a constitutional objection to this proceeding.

"Dr. Bangs said that for whatever injuries the Church South had done to us, they had received their recompense. But even if they had not, the Scripture said, "charity never faileth"—and that was a sufficient answer to what his old friend Dr. Cartwright had said.

"J. A. Collins said he wished to offer the following resolution, as a substitute for the original one:

"Resolved, That the Book Agents at New York be, and they hereby are, directed to publish, in convenient and proper form, the journals of the Methodist Episcopal Church, from the year 1800 to 1836, inclusive.

"Mr. Reese said he had an interest, common to the Methodist Church at large, with regard to the connection between the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the M. E. Church, South. His station was on the border, and he was very well satisfied that if the General Conference were in the position he occupied, they would very soon know how to vote on this subject. He could see no evil in granting the request, but he could see a great deal of mischief that would arise to our own interests, by the refusal of the request. Every thing of this character was eagerly seized upon to widen the breach already existing between the two sections."

Mr. Slicer was opposed to the present motion, but wished a publication of all but parts involving private character.

Dr. Tippett opposed, because it would burden the Book Room with unsaleable books.

"Dr. Elliott said the Church South had, and would have, access to these journals until all litigated questions were settled; so that it seemed there was no present need for the passage of the resolution.

"The question on the adoption of the substituto was then put and carried."

So, after a good deal of hemming and hawing, it was carried! Thanks, noble Brothers! After some pains justice will be got out of you anyhow—by the way of emesis, if not by pure good nature. But after all they do not give the journals to us who ask, but to the public, who do not ask.

We do not believe that the public opinion of the membership of the Church North will sustain such narrow-minded action. We believe that the Ministers are, for the most part, in conflict with their people, except in New England, in all their policy in regard to the Church South, on the question of intercourse and property, and that such constant violation of sound public opinion is sowing the wind to reap a whirlwind.

On May 22, we have the disposition of the Church Suit.

"After the reading and approval of the records, Mr. Davis presented a report from the committee on the Church Suit, concluded with the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the decision of the question of appeal from the decision of Judge Nelson, and the settlement of the whole business at New York, be referred to a commission of five persons, including the Book Agents at that place; and that the case in Cincinnati, in like manner, be referred to a commission of five persons, including the Book Agents at that place.

"Resolved, That the additional members of said convention be appointed by ballot, and that each commission is clothed with full powers to act.

"The report of the committee was adopted."

The course of the Conference by ... forring to individuals the responsibility of ... ciding whether or not to appeal, and by ... ling that committee by ballot, is as above ... dodging of the main question as ... perpetrated. But what is it they do not ... to say outright? Is it that they do, or ... that they do not, appeal?

By this arrangement every man votes ... the yeas and nays are not called. It is ... that they wished to not, but not to ... public opinion. It looks prodigiously like ... New England delegates calculated to appeal they would need no ballot or scape-goat committee, because at home public opinion is with them. But if they guessed they "had better not"—why, the committee and the ballot would be just the thing. So that we ... to believe, as we long since stated, that the Church North will not appeal. If we ... disappointed it will be in the company of those that exercise the "charity" which "beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things."

METHODIST GENERAL CONFERENCE, NORTH.—Rev. ... 24.—Rev. Mr. Greene, representative of the ... Methodist Church in Canada, being about to ... livered a parting address to the Conference, in which ... alluded to his late Bishop Hedding as having been a ... sionary to the people of Canada. There were now ... two hundred ministers connected with Canada. The ... sent Conference, continued Mr. Greene, would ... be a marked one in the annals of the church.

The resolution altering the discipline so as to allow of ... the election of missionary bishops to be submitted to the ... annual conferences for approval, was laid over until ... morrow.

A resolution was adopted recommending to the consideration of the Board of Missions in New York, the establishment of an Italian mission.

The Conference fixed upon Indianapolis as the place for holding the next session of the General Conference, which takes place in 1856.

Reports concerning the pay and allowance to various branches of the clergy were referred to a special committee of five.

The death of the Rev. J. D. Collins, of the Cuba Mission, was announced, and appropriate resolutions were offered, which were unanimously adopted.

The report presented on Saturday, concerning the new Tract Society, was next taken up, but before ... was had, the Conference adjourned.

On Saturday a report was adopted directing the ... the Sunday School Advocate, after the close of the ... volume, every week instead of monthly, and ... to not less than one-quarter of its present size, and ... there to increase the price slightly, so as to allow ... use of finer paper, typography and illustrations.

Boston, May 25.—The Methodist Episcopal General Conference reassembled this morning, and after the ... preliminary business, proceeded to the election of ... when the following were announced as the successful candidates: Rev. Dr. L. Scott, of New York; Rev. ... son, of Cincinnati; Rev. O. C. Baker, of New ... and Rev. E. R. Ames, of Indiana.

Dr. Durbin was also elected as Missionary Secretary.

The following officers were then elected: Dr. ... senior editor of the New York Christian Advocate and Journal; Dr. J. McClintock, editor of the Quarterly Review, New York; Wm. H. Hasner, editor of the Southern Advocate; Dr. William Nast, editor of the Christian Apologist, Cincinnati; Dr. B. Kidder, editor Sunday School books and papers.

Dr. Bond, Editor again.

We suppose of all that the General Conference of the M. E. Church North has done no action will take the church generally more on surprise than the election of Dr. Bond to be senior editor of the New York Christian Advocate and Journal.

We have seen things shaping that way for a good while. In the New Orleans Advocate of February 28, our readers will have noticed the following, in the editorial column:

"Dr. Bond upon the Stage Again.—Even North, seem likely to resurrect the ex-editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal. The present difficulties there are those in which his forte lies. Who can tell but he may again be editor of the great official Organ, 200 Mulberry street! The editor (12th inst.) says:

'Our worthy predecessor stepped into office on Friday last, and is to remain in New York for several weeks. He will immediately put to press his 'Appeal,' and editorial ... published in the Itinerant, during the ... cal controversy of 1828-31. The whole ... constitute a most important volume. It ... be preceded by an Introduction, and ... ted by notes.'"

Though somewhat prepared for it, ... announcement quite took our breath. ... wide room for speculation is this action ... the Conference. So far, the Conference ... done three things which are in the ... public opinion, in the Church North. ... made a Bishop, upon the slight cause of ... health; refused to decide outright ... or not an appeal should be taken from ... Nelson—"I would thou wert cold or hot," ... and elected Dr. T. E. Bond editor. ... there considered as the soul and ... of the Church division. His editorials ... the General Conference of 1844 are ... ted there, as well as at the South, ... been ill-judged, presumptuous and ... tory. Throughout the South it is the ... ion of those informed, that had any ... man occupied the post of editor, at this ... of that paper, the vexed question ... North and South might have been ... without a Church rupture. Dr. B. ... feel himself equal, more than equal, ... adjust, compel into quiet the agitating ... ments. Had he not met and vanquished ... Radicals? and out-generaled the ... litionists? and out-argued Mr. Collins? ... now that there was only one ... "monster," should he not also ... into his nose? or bore his jaw ... a thorn? It would be a short work ... was. The blow was dealt, but it ... "monster" and divided the Church.

The Methodist public must regard election to be a full endorsement by the ... eral Conference, North, of the ... sion, and an ample guarantee for ... and for future, constant, ... hostility to the Church South.

The Doctor by nature abhors ... "voice is still for war"—of course ... one sterling trait in the hoary ... is not given to change. We ... that in forty years he has not, ... opinion, an argument, an anecdote, ... prejudice, or a medical ... would be all the time, Prot. Chlor. ... or, Sub. Murias. Hyd., or Calor. Hyd. Hydrargyri Chloridum Mitis.

Evidently, the Doctor's belligerent ... have the intrinsic worth which ... him to the favorable regard of the ... Conference. The Lay-delegate ... the one upon which he is ...

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

tor is a champion of skill, of power, but his successes are of very questionable worth to his own party. Two of his victories are equal to a defeat. He throws into violent opposition and action, individuals and parties which might by a milder course be quieted, satisfied, or gained over. We venture to say that his election invests the Methodist side of the question with a temper and quality against which it will be easy for the Lay-representative side to make headway. Henceforth they will be regarded more as the opponents of Doctor Bond, than the advocates of a change in Church policy. We do not believe that we mistake public opinion in the Methodist Church.

It may be that one trouble at a time will be reckoned best; in that case the influence of the editor elect upon the Church-Suit Committee will be against appeal. But should an appeal be taken, and the Doctor get fairly into fight after his old style of bitter personalities, we believe that the result will be either a radical change in the constitution of the Church North, or another separation from her body. We judge of the future by the past.

Dr. Bond has been a prominent actor in the only difficulties which the Methodist E. Church has had to meet. In each, his policy was obtained. And every time the result has been disastrous to the unity of the body and has limited unchangeably the extent of her influence. If, for instance, it were important that she should contend against slavery, what is the value of a policy which forever has shut her out from access to both master and slave? It is surprising that the General Conference North should have so acted in the face of all past experience.

Jefferson Circuit, E. Texas Conference.

DEAR BRO. MCTYEIRE: We have some good times in Jefferson Circuit. The good Lord is reviving his work in this part of his vineyard. There have been, during the present year, some ten conversions, and about fifty accessions by letter and probation. We are praying and laboring for a general revival. Pray for us. Yours in Christ,

SAMUEL LYNCH.

MAGAZINES FOR JUNE.—The Ladies' Repository, Godey's Lady's Book, Sartain's Union Magazine for this month, are at hand. For variety of illustration, neatness and taste of typographical execution, and, doubtless, for valuable matter, they are ne plus ultra. The improvement of the times may be correctly estimated by the advance in this department of periodical literature.

Obituary Notices.

DIED—When the good and lovely of earth die, when those who loved them with intensest affection have cast the last look of anguish into the cheerless grave, how desolate would it be, how utterly miserable, but for the thrilling accents which fell from the Saviour of the world, announcing for the first time that death is not an eternal sleep!

These thoughts crowd upon our minds in pursuing the melancholy task, the paying the last tribute to the memory of Mrs. CAROLINE S. BOWMAN, wife of Rev. James Bowman. The deceased was born 27th April, 1817, and died in Tensas parish, La., 12th of May, 1852. She early gave to God the freshest and most ardent devotions of her nature; exhibiting a constant and unvarying piety truly worthy of imitation. She was an affectionate child, a tender and confiding sister, a devoted wife, and a prayerful mother. Her life and her influence were devoted to the service of her heavenly master. Her death was a Christian's triumph; she gave the shout of victory, she sang a hymn. The scene around her dying couch was sublime and blessing—her husband, physicians, friends and servants—told all to serve, to seek God, and to prepare for the hour of death.

Thou art happy now,
Mid angel hosts in Heaven above,
And on thy bright and beauteous brow
There rests a crown of conquering love.

DIED—At her father's, in Tensas, La., MISS C., third daughter of Rev. James Bowman and Caroline S. Bowman, on the 4th day of May, 1852. Born 28th November, 1849.

"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

DIED—As above, ANN E. BOWMAN, second daughter of same parents, on the 6th day of May, 1852. Born, February 15th, 1852.

Although so young she praised God in the midst of life, and told her friends to meet her in Heaven, in language eloquent beyond description.

DIED—Also, as above, WM. G. BOWMAN, third son of same parents, on the 18th day of May, 1852. Born March 15th, 1841.

William was a most excellent boy; loved by all, and regretted by all. His father took pleasure to see his mother while dying. They sang and praised God together. He told her that he would soon meet her and his sister in a happy land, where they would never part; and in a few days he calmly fell asleep.

Thus the mother and half her children are tenderly housed in Heaven. Happy mother, happy children! The disease of all was the measles, with flux.

I had stated nothing but the truth when "The Religion of Money."

Five years after this conversation a very curious paper fell into my hands. In "The Religion of Money," the reader has only been introduced to the public part of this Remarkable traffic. In what follows he will see the secret of its negotiations. We may indeed form some idea of the nature of a business from the appearance of the shop; but to know thoroughly we must get behind the counter, we must talk to the clerks, we must examine the books, and inspect the warehouses.

EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN SYNOD OF VIRGINIA.—This body met at Harrisonburg on the 13th inst., and adjourned on the 19th. Rev. J. W. Campbell, of Augusta, and Delegates were appointed to the General Synod, which met at Winchester in May, 1853. Rev Dr. Harkey, of Rockbridge, Md., was present, and delivered an address in favor of establishing and endowing the Illinois State University at Springfield, to effect which $37,000 have already been contributed. Rev. W. Fisk, of Martinsburg, also delivered an address on the subject of missions.

General Intelligence.

Arrival of the Philadelphia.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

News from Australia and the Sandwich Islands.

The steamship Philadelphia, Capt. McGowan, arrived last evening from Aspinwall via Havana, bringing the California mails to the 3d ult., a large number of passengers and a small amount of gold dust on freight. The Philadelphia left Aspinwall on the evening of the 25th ult., and Havana on the evening of the 1st inst., arriving at the South West Pass yesterday morning.

United States steamship "Saranac," Capt. Pendergrast arrived at Havana on the morning of the 1st inst., (from San Juan del Norte,) and will sail in a few days for Philadelphia.

THE MINES.—The news from the mines is encouraging, and continual improvements are being made in the facilities for getting out gold.

STEAMER WINFIELD SCOTT ON FIRE.—The steamship Winfield Scott took fire while lying at San Francisco on the 24 ult., and at one time, she was in imminent danger of being consumed. The damage, however, was not great.

DROWNED.—Dr. E. J. Rutter, Surgeon of the U. S. ship Vincennes, was drowned at San Francisco, on the 28th of April. He was about to sail for home on a visit to his family, from whom he had been absent two years.

REPORTED MURDER OF A RAID OF SERENADERS.—The San Francisco Herald says: "Mr. John McComb, of Gregory's Express, brings down news of a letter having been received in Sacramento by Mr. Boley, informing him of the murder of an entire band of serenaders known as Benaldson's. Intending his nephew, who was one of the company, while on the road from Shasta to Shasta Butte City. Great anxiety is felt for the arrival of further intelligence."

ARRIVAL OF ANOTHER CLIPPER SHIP.—The clipper ship Eclipse, Capt. Hamilton, arrived at San Francisco on the 24 ult. in 104 days from New York. She made the trip from New York to Valparaiso in 65 days, and from the latter place to San Francisco in 30 days. Her best day's run was 325 miles.

A CHINESE RACE.—The Herald has advices that a real Chinese bark had sailed from Manilla for San Francisco with 121 passengers.

A communication from Sacramento, dated April 23, says:

In the Senate this morning the Special Message of the Governor, relative to the great increase of Asiatic emigration to this State, is being read. The Governor recommends that some effective and salutary measures be adopted to check this class of emigration. He refers to the fact that a large proportion of this emigration are what are commonly denominated Coolies. The Governor is of opinion that these contracts of Chinese speculators should not be respected by the authorities of this State.

The Chinamen have addressed a long letter to the Governor, in which they respectfully expostulate with him in regard to his course.

ARRIVAL OF THE CLIPPER SHIP CHALLENGE FROM CHINA.—The Herald of the 5d says, the splendid clipper ship Challenge, Capt. Land, has actually crossed the Pacific from Japan to San Francisco in 18 days. Her greatest log distance in one day was 300 miles; greatest net gain in one day, 335 miles; greatest speed per hour, 10 miles; average log the whole time per hour, 10 miles; average on through line per hour, 9 miles. She comes in ballast, and brings 553 Chinese passengers.

SLOOP-OF-WAR VANDALIA.—The U. S. sloop-of-war Vandalia arrived at San Francisco on the 2d ult., bringing dates from the Sandwich Islands to March 27.

THE INDIANS.—Intelligence from Shasta says: "During the past week the Indians have displayed their usual industry in the commission of depredations against the property of our citizens. So far as heard from, twenty-four animals have been stolen from this vicinity within the past few days. It is probable that we have not heard of all that have been taken."

RIOT AT SACRAMENTO.—A serious fight occurred at Sacramento, during which two men, one of the Jo. Chanirau, were shot. Neither of them, however, were killed.

Sandwich Islands.

Advices to the 21st of March have been received from Honolulu. The news, however, is not of much importance.

Thirty-three whalers, nearly all American, touched at the ports of the Sandwich Island in ten days, between the 5th and 25th of March. Some appear to have met with great success, while others, after nine months' voyage, are reported without a barrel of oil. Twenty-five vessels in all had arrived during the spring season at the port of Hilo, six of which had sailed, leaving nineteen at anchor on the 12th of March.

Later from China.

The San Francisco Herald says: "We have received Hong-Kong papers to the 17th March, being twenty-seven days later than previous advices. The screw steamer Panshaw had arrived at Hong-Kong from England, and was about to be put upon the route between the ports on the East coast of China. This is a new era in the trade of that part of the world."

The North China Herald of the 6th of March, contains a correspondence between the Commissioners of the American and Chinese Governments regarding smuggling, and the exportation of grain from consular ports in China. From the letters on the latter subject, we learn that the Hon. Dr. Parker, acting American Charge d'Affaires in in China, has called on his subordinates (the Cousuls) to issue instructions to the merchants to desist from the exportation of rice, wheat, and other grains, pending a reference of the question to the United States Congress.

In the same letter the Hon. and Rev. Dr. Parker endeavors, in courteous style and strong argument, to convert his Chinese contemporaries in the principles of free trade, but apparently without producing much impression. The Friend of China, commenting upon the correspondence, says:

The object of the Chinese Commissioners in this business is clear enough; they were fearful that foreign dealers would aid the opposing dynasty by carrying food for the insurgents, and so wished to check such assistance by getting Plenipotentiaries and Commissioners to issue instructions to their countrymen to desist from the exportation of grain. With the Hon. Dr. Parker they succeeded.

Isthmus Items.

PANAMA WATERWORKS.—Books of subscription to the Panama Waterworks Company were to have been opened on the 1st. The Star says the scheme is a feasible one, and promises large dividends. The water is to be brought from Juan Diaz Pacoro, a distance of 11 miles.

NEW GRENADIAN DECLARATION OF WAR.—The Star gives an abstract of the famous declaration of war by the New Grenadian Government, against any and all nations who may dare to assist or countenance Flores in his expedition against Ecuador. President Lopez asks of the Government permission to confiscate the property of all natives and foreigners in New Granada who have been guilty of aiding Flores in any way.

PASSENGERS.—The Echo of the 11th speaks of the probability of there being but few strangers in Panama, shortly, owing to the frequent departures of vessels.

U. S. BRANCH MINT.—We have been politely furnished with the following statement of the deposits and coinage at the Branch Mint, New Orleans, during the month of May, 1852:

DEPOSITE.

California gold	$374,200 15
Foreign gold	9,907 05
Silver parted from California gold	2,340 45
Silver from other sources	8,741 29
Total value of deposits	$396,248 91

COINAGE.

Gold (23,000 double eagles)		$460,000 00
Silver (60,000 half dollars)		30,000 00
Pieces, 83,000	Total coinage	$490,000 00

THE JAPAN EXPEDITION.—The New York Herald, in speaking of the Japan expedition, says: "We have learned from practical and reliable sources—through the medium of some of the officers of the Dutch frigate Prince of Orange, now lying off Castle Gordon—that we shall have a tough job in getting the Japanese to consent to a commercial intercourse with us; and so far from obtaining a peaceable negotiation and treaty, the Emperor of Japan is making preparations to give us a warm greeting—that he has strongly fortified every part of his coast, and that he has a nation of well equipped soldiers ready to pounce down upon us. They agree in thinking our force is utterly inadequate to the task of making an entrance into the city of Jeddo, and doubt the sufficiency of the quantity of 'metal' for pounding down any of their batteries, which are all of the strongest construction; and that if the Japanese have no war marine, they are otherwise well provided. The nation is warlike and united, and the country altogether difficult of access."

NEW SCHOOL PRESBYTERIAN ASSEMBLY.—Washington, May 24.—The New School Presbyterian General Assembly reassembled this morning, and, after the preliminary exercises, a resolution of thanks was moved by the Hon. Mr. Bissell to the Rev. Mr. Barnes, for his sermon before the assembly, and requesting a copy for publication. This led to a spirited debate, Dr. Wisner, Mr. Beman, Rev. Mr. Pollock and others, objecting to its printing, as being unprecedented, and as containing views and expressions to which the assembly did not desire to be committed.

Rev. Mr. Smith, Rev. Mr. Hawley, Rev. Mr. Woodruff, and others, advocated the publication as due to the learned author, and as a remarkably clear and satisfactory expression of true Presbyterian doctrine. The resolution was finally indefinitely postponed, with the understanding that the sermon is to be printed unofficially.

The addresses of the delegates from corresponding bodies were received—Rev. Mr. Ames representing Connecticut; Rev. Mr. Carpenter, Massachusetts; Rev. Mr. Wallace, New Hampshire; Rev. A. H. Clapp, Vermont; Rev. Mr. Blake, Maine; Rev. Mr. Miles, Wisconsin; and Rev. Mr. Doggett, New York. These addresses were very fraternal, and were handsomely responded to by the Moderator, who alluded with great force to the ancient relations of these several ecclesiastical bodies, and reciprocated all the kind expressions uttered.

Rev. Mr. Beman introduced a resolution that the assembly procure a block of marble for the Washington Monument, to bear the following inscription: "The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, met at Washington, 1852"—and that each member of the assembly give one dollar for the purpose. The resolution elicited some remarks, and was passed—the Rev. Mr. Eckard, Jacob Gideon and Carter Braxton, Esqs., being appointed a committee to carry it into effect.

The election of delegates to foreign bodies took place in the afternoon, the Rev. Dr. Hatfield being chosen for the General Association of Connecticut; the Rev. Dr. Campbell to Massachusetts; Rev. Silas Hawley to Maine; Rev. H. A. Smith to New Hampshire, etc.

The report on Church extension was then taken up, and the Rev. Mr. Stillman, of Buffalo, moved the adoption of the first section, relative to the education of the ministry. It requires each presbytery to present the subject to all the churches, and obtain an annual contribution, and to find out and sustain suitable young men for education. Each convention is also to have a standing committee of the General Assembly; and this committee shall employ a salaried secretary to attend to this work; each presbytery to apply its contributions to their own candidates, and pay over the surplus to the secretary of the Assembly's Committee. The different theological seminaries are also required to send up annual reports to the Assembly.

Rev. Mr. Miles defended the report at great length against objections arising from the fear that it would produce collisions with other bodies, and that it is sectarian.

Rev. Mr. Hotchkin desired to know how the proposed plan differs from an ecclesiastical board.

Rev. Mr. Noyes wished to know whether it was the design to re-invigorate an existing system, or to substitute a new one.

Dr. Duffield and others sustained the report, but pending the discussion, the Assembly adjourned until to-morrow.

ANOTHER STATE.—A writer, in one of the Northern papers, speaking of the prospective increase in the number of States, says: It is not improbable that before the expiration of a year Oregon will apply for admission into the Union; the northern portion having already the requisite population to form a State, leaving the southern portion still in Territory of the United States. California may be rich in gold and other minerals, but the elements of moral power, based on the development of industry, by a sturdy and laborious population, are accumulating faster in Oregon. Oregonians will become the Yankees of the Pacific coast, and from Puget and Nootka Sounds will start the expeditions of the modern Argonauts. What a pity we have not got the coal dip of Vancouver's Island. The Island of Vancouver holds a position in regard to the North American continent not unlike that of Great Britain in regard to Northern Europe.

FROM VENEZUELA.—The New York Tribune is in receipt of the Correo de Caracas and the Republicano to April 21. All is tranquil in the country. President Monagas had applied to Congress for appropriations sufficient to send a Charge d'Affaires to New-Grenada, and another to Spain. He has also in a special message, dated April 22, proposed military preparations on account of the attempt of Flores in Ecuador. He regards the expedition of that adventurer as prompted by European conspirators against the Republics of America. His desires that Congress should fix the number in which the army shall be raised in case of an invasion, decide what act shall be considered as a declaration of war, whether the President shall command the army in person, and what shall be the course of the government in the event that the progress of the war should remove the army into the territory of other States. Congress was to take early action on the message.

NATCHEZ INSTITUTE HALL.—On Saturday the 29th ult., the corner stone of the Natchez Institute Hall was laid in the city of Natchez in presence of a large concourse of citizens and the Masonic fraternity, with imposing ceremonies, Gen. Quitman and Judge Rubulsson delivered addresses on the occasion.

DEDICATION.—A new Odd Fellows Hall was dedicated to Benton, Lowndes county, Ala., on the 11th ult. Quite a large number of the brotherhood were present. The Hall was dedicated about 10 o'clock, in a solemn and impressive manner by the M. W. Grand Master, P. C. Smith, of Montgomery. A procession was formed and marched to the church, where an oration was delivered by Rev. P. H. Lundy, the orator of the occasion, before an immense audience. After the conclusion of the speech, all who were present, ladies and gentlemen, (and there were hundreds) repaired to a barbacue in an adjacent grove, where a well spread table was in readiness for them.

ARRIVAL OF THE RAJAH OF COORG IN ENGLAND.—The Rajah of Coorg, a principality of Hindostan, on the Western Ghauts, arrived on the 5th instant, at Southampton. He came over to England to have his daughter educated—a singular and interesting event in the history of the native princes of India. The Rajah is the sole drunk with the passengers during the voyage. His daughter is an intelligent and interesting child. He was accompanied by Major Drummond as his guide. His servants were six in number. The Rajah and his daughter left Southampton, with Major Drummond and his family, by an early train on the 6th, to take lodgings at Mivart's Hotel, previous to his taking a private residence. The Rajah and the Major returned to Southampton in the afternoon, and the whole of the family and suit proceeded to London by the 7 P. M. train.

The Rajah's wives left the Enzine steamer completely veiled, on Monday night at 9 o'clock, and were conveyed to Radley's Hotel in a closed carriage. They were met at the door of the hotel by the Rajah and one of his principal attendants, who both held umbrellas over the heads of the ladies as they alighted. As soon as they alighted they took the umbrellas themselves, and completely screened themselves from view. During the process of their alighting from the carriage, however, a glimpse of one of them was obtained, and it was noticed that the lady had a thin gauze veil over her face, and fine black eyes. The Rajah was exceedingly anxious that no one should observe the ladies, and appeared agitated until they were safely in their apartments. His agitation was so great, it is said, that he had considerable trouble that he could not open the door of the apartment, and imagining it was locked, he requested that the gas should be extinguished in the passage where they were standing, which was immediately done. The Prince has given up his caste. He is a pensioner of the East India Company, and has been residing at Benares on an allowance of £12 000 a year.

Yesterday the Rajah's six servants, who by his desire, observed most strictly the rules of their caste, had eight pounds of food allowed them, which consisted of rice, onions and greens, which they cooked and ate in the open air at the back of the hotel. They eat but one meal a day, and their drink is water. They are in fact Oriental vegetarians and teetotallers. At night they sleep in the passages and under the tables in the hotel. The servants are right Hindoos, and among their baggage were a large number of native cooking utensils and a quantity of Eastern food. As soon as they arrived at the hotel they made preparations for cooking their meal. They wanted to cook by the side of a stream of water, but this they could not be accommodated with. They were very busy in the court yard of the hotel, in the evening about 6 o'clock, in culinary operations. Previous to lighting their fires, they carefully washed their hands and feet, and then commenced levying out their stores of provisions, which consisted of a number of small bags of rice, by the side of which was a lemon. After lighting their fires with wood and coal, they crouched down and kept them alive by blowing them with their mouths, at the same time stirring vigorously their food, which was simmering in brass pans.

FIRE-WELLS IN CHINA.—A writer in the Mobile Advertiser gives the following:

Some two hundred years ago P. Lemedo, a French missionary in China, made the following statement in a work upon China: "Just as we have wells from which we draw water, thus the Chinese have wells from which they draw fire. In many parts of China they have but to bore a hole into the ground, and they have a flame strong enough to cook anything by it."

Although Aristotle speaks of a similar pheuomenon in Persia, and the same is observable in certain coal mines, particularly in Italy, in the Appenines, this statement of P. Lemedo was regarded as one of the many apocryphal tales which are current about the little-explored country. But modern observation confirms it. Mr. Pauthier, in his excellent work upon China, says that this surprising geological phenomenon is very common in many parts of China, and is used there for the most different purposes, even for the melting of metals. In Canton, he says, there are many houses in which such fire is continually kept burning, and used for illumination and cooking. The only trouble in procuring it is to bore a hole in the ground, when, by approaching a light to the opening, the gas ignites and you have a fire, varying in intensity according to the size of the hole. The Chinese convey this gas into their rooms by means of bamboo canes, and use it for illumination. This light is entirely smokeless and is similar to our gas light. Mr. Pauthier cites an ocular witness, Mr. Tonperte, who says that the poor in the winter often bore holes in the sand about a foot deep, ignite them with a handful of straw, and then warm themselves at them. These holes, from which gas issues, the Chinese call hong-tsiug, literally fire-wells.

THE SHEPHERD'S DOG.—Without the shepherd's dog the whole of the mountainous land in Scotland would not be worth a sixpense. It would require more hands to manage a flock of sheep, gather them from the hills, force them into houses and folds, and drive them to markets, than the profits of the whole stock would be capable of maintaining. Well may the shepherd then feel an interest in his dog. It is he, indeed, that earns the family bread, of which he is content with the smallest morsel. Neither hunger nor fatigue will drive him from his master's side; he will follow him through fire and water. Another thing very natural is, the understanding these creatures have of the necessity of being particularly tender over lame and particular sheep. They will drive these a great deal more gently than others, and sometimes a single one is committed to their care to take home. On these occasions they perform their duties like the most tender nurses. Can it be wondered at, then, that the colley should be so much prized by the shepherd; that his death should be regarded as a great calamity, of which he forms, to all intents and purposes, an integral part; or that his exploits of sagacity should be handed down from generation to generation, and form an small share of the converse by the cosy ingle on long winter nights?

A recent statistical return states the population of Austria and her different possessions to be 36,514,486.

Foreign News by the Cambria.

The Baltimore Sun contains the following telegraphic abstract of the news brought by the Cunard steamer Cambria, arrived at Halifax on the 26th ult.:

ENGLAND.

The proceedings of Parliament are of considerable interest. A motion was made in the House of Commons on Tuesday, inquiring into the system of education pursued at Maynooth College. An amendment was added to consider the bill to repeal the Maynooth College endowment, and all other grants for religious instruction.

The resolution to abolish the duty on paper, newspaper stamp and advertisement tax, was rejected.

The Government intends to send a military force to Australia.

The woolen manufacturers are alarmed at the prospect of a deficiency of wool in Australia.

The militia bill was still being discussed in Parliament, without any decisive action having been attained.

The Crystal Palace, which was purchased for £70,000, is to be immediately re-erected at Sydenham, for an ornamental garden.

Captain Howard, of the ship Renovation, has made a deposition concerning the ships seen by him in the ice, supposed to have been Franklin's. He thinks they were whalers.

It is rumored that Lord Glengall succeeds Earl Kalhousie as Governor-General of India.

FRANCE.

The fete at Paris on the 10th of May was purely military, consisting of 60,000 troops, with a half a million citizens and strangers as spectators.

The Prince President Napoleon arrived on the ground at noon, at the head of x brilliant staff, and reviewed the soldiers. He presented standards to the Colonels, and mounted by the imperial eagle.

Napoleon subsequently addressed the army, saying that the Roman eagle, adopted by the Emperor Napoleon, was the last striking emblem of the regeneration and grandeur of France. It disappeared with her misfortunes, and ought to return when France had recovered from her defeats, and was again mistress of herself, seemed no longer to repudiate her own glory.

"Resume, then, soldiers, these eagles, not as a menace against foreigners, but as a symbol of independence, as the souvenir of a heroic epoch, and as a mark to each regiment of nobility, and a pledge to die, if need be, in defence of the emblems so often led by our fathers to victory."

This address was immediately placarded throughout the city.

The clergy, headed by the Archbishop of Paris, numbering 800, mustered around a gorgeous alter erected on the field, and bestowed blessings on the standards. The troops then defiled, and the ceremony was concluded. Two thousand crosses and medals were also distributed.

The President was well received; the infantry cried "Vive Napoleon!" the cavalry cried "Vive l'Empereur!" and the operatives of Faubourge St. Antoine, on the contrary, notified their employers that they would work instead of being present at the fete.

The festivities continued in-doors for three days, and on Tuesday fifteen thousand attended a grand ball at the Tuileries. On Wednesday a banquet was given to eight hundred generals and superior officers.

The Minister of the Interior has written to M. Arando, exempting him from oath of allegience to the President.

Gen. Changarnier has refused to take the oath of allegience, and, writing from Mulines, he says that Napoleon repeatedly attempted to make him swerve from his duty, and lend himself to his ambitious designs. He also charges him with having many times offered him the rank of Marshal, and also another military title never revived since the fall of the Empire. He also proposed to endow it with enormous pecuniary advantages. He also accuses Napoleon of perjury, and congratulates himself that he was proof against the President's bribes.

A letter from Count Chambourg, calling on the Legitimists to refuse to take the oath of allegiance, is attracting great attention.

AUSTRIA AND RUSSIA.

The advices from Central and Southern Europe principally refer to the movements of the Emperor of Russia, and his visit to Vienna. The arrival at Vienna of Prince Windisgrats and the Ban, and the expected arrival of the Duke of Bordeaux, indicate that his visit relates to business rather than pleasure.

Among the names of twenty-six exiled Hungarians, publicly affixed to the gallows at Vienna, appear the names of Count Alexander Teleky and Count Pulsky.

Kossuth's relations arrived at Dresden on the 5th inst., bound for Bremen.

TUSCANY.

The Grand Duke of Tuscany has abolished the constitution and restored matters as they were in 1848.

INDIA AND CHINA.

The India mail has arrived with Trieste and Calcutta dates to the 7th of April, and China to the 28th of March.

New outbreaks had occurred in India, and an expedition had sailed to attack a rangoon.

The St. Louis Republican of the 20th ult., contains a telegraphic report of the proceedings of Congress on the 27th and 28th, which we copy:

WASHINGTON, May 27.

SENATE.—A memorial from the Society of Friends in New England, was presented, asking for the repeal of the fugitive slave law.

Mr. Sumner proceeded to explain it, when the Chair called him to order.

An exciting debate ensued, and the memorial was laid on the table.

The Senate subsequently took up the Deficiency bill, and adjourned without taking the question.

HOUSE.—Mr. Mallory presented a petition praying for the establishment of a steam line from New Orleans to South Florida; also, a petition of James Montgomery, offering Congress the benefit of his important invention to prevent steam disasters, and asking the construction of a steamer on this model, by which he can carry the mail from New York to Liverpool in six days.

The consideration of the bill, granting land and the right of way to the Missouri railroad, was resumed. Mr. Babcock moved that the bill be laid on the table; negatived—yeas 74, nays 91.

Mr. Florence submitted a bill for guarding against steamboat accidents, by punishment.

The Pre-emption bill was taken up, the pending amendment rejected, and the bill passed.

Mr. Hall, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back the Senate bill, with amendments, giving the right of way and land to the Missouri and St. Louis and Hannibal Railroad.

The morning hour expired before action was had on the bill.

The House went into committee on the Indian Appropriation bill. A long political debate ensued.

Mr. Polk said that he believed that every aspirant for the Presidency in the democratic party had written letters that, if elected, he would veto any bill for the alteration or repeal of the fugitive law. He asked Mr. White, of Kentucky, if he was prepared to say the same for Gen. Scott.

Mr. White replied, that no trusted Gen. Scott would make no such declaration in advance. Old Churubusco would not take a position at 54 40 and fall back to 49.

Mr Polk replied, presenting all allusions to this deceased relative, when the committee rose and the House adjourned.

WASHINGTON, May 28.

SENATE.—Yesterday the Senate rejected the Cullom amendment to the Deficiency bill—18 to 26.

HOUSE.—Yesterday the House ordered the bill donating lands to aid in the construction of the St. Joseph and Hannibal, and St. Louis railroads, to be engrossed for a third reading, and resumed the consideration to-day, when the previous question on its passage was seconded, and Mr. Jones moved to lay the bill on the table, expressing a hope that it would be kept there until after the Democratic Convention.

Professor Mandeville's System of Reading.

When Mr. Mandeville entered upon his duties as Professor of Belles Lettres, in Hamilton College, New York, he commenced to investigate the structure of the English language. He was led to this, on finding the common method or system, if it can be called a system, entirely inefficient to meet and explain the difficulties daily presented. His students would come to him with cases perfectly parallel to those adduced under the rules given in their books, and yet demanding a different delivery; and then with other cases, for the delivery of which their books gave no information whatever. In many cases the sentence could be delivered with much greater force and beauty, by neglecting the rules and yielding to common sense.

Seeing no reasons why the sentences of our language might not be classified, as well as the words, he commenced a thorough investigation of their structure. He commenced with Addison's Spectator; and, critically examining the first sentence, and ascertaining its peculiarities, he transcribed it to a ledger. He then examined the second sentence, and, if he found it like the preceding, he placed it under that sentence; but if he found it unlike, he placed it on another page. He treated every succeeding sentence in the same manner: if similar to those already found, it was placed with them; but, if dissimilar, it was assigned to a new page. At first, new sentences fast accumulated, yet as the advanced, they more seldom appeared; and finally, his work consisted in transcribing examples of the same kind. Not a new sentence was to be found; and yet, that he might have every variety of structure, he continued his reading through three hundred standard works written on different subjects, and in different styles.

Satisfied on this point, his next labor was to see whether those sentences could be classified; and whether they might have a peculiar and uniform delivery. After a cautious examination of all his examples, he was fully satisfied that these classes have a peculiar construction, and a uniform delivery, modified by emphasis which is governed by a few simple and definite laws.

This result, if a sound inference from existing data in the language, must have, as a basis of instruction in reading and oratory, a nature which can scarcely be estimated. Its utility is not confined to these; it extends to several other branches of education.

If the whole fabric of the English language can be resolved into a few sentences; if each is distinguished by peculiarities which render its recognition easy; the pupil can readily make himself acquainted with their structure, and be able to analyze page after page of any work, sentence by sentence, giving the characteristics, proper punctuation and natural delivery of each sentence. The pupil is put in possession of the two great elements of power to read with accuracy and elegance: in the first place, a knowledge of what is to be read, and, in the second place, of the manner of reading it, the sentence, and the peculiar modulation it demands.

THE DEAF AND DUMB, BLIND, INSANE AND IDIOTIC OF THE UNITED STATES.—The National Intelligencer publishes a tabular statement compiled from the Seventh Census, showing the number of deaf and dumb, blind, insane and idiotic persons in the United States. We condense from it the following facts:

The aggregate of deaf and dumb persons in the United States is 10,108; of whom 5,231 are white males, 4,238 white females, 354 colored males, and 290 colored females. The aggregate of blind persons is 9,702; of whom 4,519 are white males, and 3,473 white females. The aggregate of insane persons is 15,768; of whom 7,669 are white males, and 7,459 white females. Of idiotic persons the aggregate is 15,706; of whom 8,276 are white males, and 6,933 white females. The total aggregate of persons suffering under the afflictions enumerated is 51,279; of whom 25,693 are white, and but 4,427 colored. This would seem to indicate that the blacks suffer but slightly from those afflictions which are generally considered the most calamitous to which human nature is liable.

Mr. Webster in the Right.

NEW ORLEANS, June 4, 1852.

Messrs. Editors of the Crescent:

GENTLEMEN—I notice an article in your number of this morning, which originated with a correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger, and which appears to be going the rounds of the papers. This article calls in question the accuracy of Mr. Webster's learning in matters purely literary, and points out particularly what is considered a blunder on his part, in attributing to Dr. Johnson what should have been attributed to Goldsmith; for, says the writer, the couplet is taken from the "Traveller." It would be out of place at this time to enter into a defence of Mr. Webster's literary attainments. But whoever shall take pains to examine that point, will find that, though this great man is particularly distinguished as a statesman and a jurisconsult, he is among the dii majores in a point of view purely literary. He may be less familiar with contemporary authors than some of us who took up to the giddy height to which he has climbed from a distance far beneath; but such writers as Shakspeare, Milton and Pope, are as familiar to him as household words, nor do I believe there is a single line in one of these authors which would not be recognised by him at once.

In the present instance, the couplet alluded to in the criticism—

"How small, of all that human hearts endure,
That part which laws or kings can cause or cure!"

quoted in the late speech at Faneuil Hall, is from Dr. Johnson, and not from Dr. Goldsmith. For, though it is a quotation from the Traveller, it was not written by the author of that poem, but by his friend. To all persons familiar with the history of the Traveller, it is known that Dr. Johnson furnished Goldsmith with nine lines, and that the couplet which Mr. Webster quoted, and which he ascribed to Dr. J., is included in the number. I would fain flatter myself that this correction might be a caution to critics to adopt the advice of Jean Jacques Rousseau, never to criticise an author more learned than themselves. Otherwise they may, as in the case of the critic who has darted from his perch to pluck a feather from the soaring eagle, but add another to the numerous examples which illustrate the truth of the saying of Pope, that

"A little learning is a dangerous thing."

MR. WEBSTER AND POETRY.—The Hon. Daniel Webster, although well versed in international law, and constitutional affairs, it appears, has grown somewhat rusty in the English classics. Some months ago a Boston bookworm caught him tripping with Milton, and now a correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger has detected, in his Faneuil Hall speech of Saturday, as great an error, in ascribing to Johnson what properly belongs to Goldsmith, a much better poet. The quotation referred to is as follows:

"How small of all that human hearts endure
That part which Kings or laws can cause or cure."

Those lines were written by Goldsmith, not Johnson, and will be found in the latter part of the TRAVELLER.

FOREIGN NEWS.

PER HUMBOLDT.

The New York Tribune has the following brought by the steamer Humboldt:

The Humboldt arrived at seven o'clock this morning with a large cargo of continental merchandise, and a number of passengers. She left Havre on the 5th, anchored at Cowes during the afternoon (after receiving the usual mail from Southampton at one P. M.) this morning at 7 o'clock, and brought the papers of the 10th, brought by special train from London for the associated press of New York. The state of the tides on the French coast, the Humboldt was obliged to leave the Havre docks three hours before the regular date of sailing. Her mails were consequently not delivered to the proper authorities in time to be forwarded by the regular steamer of the 15th, and this circumstance from Southampton to New York, a short time of great inconvenience on the other side of the Atlantic, and we once more recommend that the mails for the Havre docks in tool ter for the future be sent to the docks at the appointed dates, that they may be in time to get several days previously, and not, as often of course, to wait for the proper steamer, which it was the intention of the Post-office to dispatch from England every Wednesday. The arrangement of this kind would prevent the disappointment of an arrival like the present, which, so far as the mails were concerned, amounts to gratuitity.

The mail steamship Hermann, Capt. Illgen, left Bremen on her way to Hamburg, on the 5th instant, and after a passage of twelve days sixteen hours—the shortest one she has ever performed.

The mails mail steamship Medway arrived at Southampton on the 8th, with specie, value $1,504,977 on passengers.

The steamer America arrived at Liverpool from Sunday, the 9th.

The specie in the bank of England, according to the return on the 6th inst., was £19,901,400. Consols (money) were last quoted 96¾, and Mexican 29 per cent., in consequence of unfavorable news from California. California gold was much depressed at Sydney, Australia and on January 26. Gold has been discovered in New Zealand, in the Island of Waiheki, fifteen miles east of Auckland. The Deputy Governor was stated to have sailed for the spot, for the purpose of collecting information and specimens, and further details were expected in the course of a few days. From the New South Wales mines the reports seem to be very favorable, and large instances of individual success continue to be cited, while, according to the last accounts received at Sydney, the yield at Port Phillip, (Victoria) notwithstanding the want of water, was almost equal to any experience. The total export from Sydney had now reached £793,000. Mr. Hargraves had left on a new tour of discovery to the Northward, and would probably go as far as Moreton Bay.

The Mayor of London entertained the Earl of Derby and other ministers in a splendid banquet at Guild Hall, on the night of the 9th. Lord Derby made a speech, from which we make an extract:

"Not many days have elapsed since a Right Honorable gentleman, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in a speech fully and amply refuted the unworthy notion that a mere effort and genius cannot grapple with the ordinary affairs of state, that a man possessing high and vivid imagination and great eloquence, cannot be a commercial and financial topics—most eloquently demonstrated to an admiring House of Commons the great progress which our trade and commerce made in recent years, and showed how great was the increased employment on the part of the people, without affecting the revenue. There was one however, which may flight flow. friend in that able did not touch upon, and properly did not touch because it did not belong to the fiscal and financial part of the subject, to which his attention was then and exclusively devoted. although he did not touch upon that topic, it is one which I—no government ought to lose sight of in looking at the social and moral condition of the people, not only in regard to the duty and the advantage of the employer, but which may be productive of much good to those employed. Whether they be engaged in commerce, are yet more directly connected with the administration of the affairs of this great empire, I feel sure the confidence of any portion of the people in the interests of a single, which is confined to the interests of a single, or if it deprives a sphere of its attention which it is to all; and the problem which to reconcile apparent interests; that, while giving no undue advantage to one class of our fellow citizens over those of the interests of all, and by mutual concessions and compromises, may blend one harmonious whole.

The whole system of government in every country is a system of compromises and concessions, not of undue compromises, not of unworthy sacrifices of principle for the sake of compromise between conflicting interests, but of mutual concessions between apparently conflicting interests. The whole system of our Constitution is a system of compromise. The Throne itself is based upon a compromise between arbitrary monarchical power and the qualified restrictions which are exercised by hereditary governments upon the minds of men. Our House of Lords is a compromise between the exclusive aristocracy and a body purely representative. The institution of nobility, at least yearly and perpetual, is a compromise between the claim of the great hereditary families to obtain this great advantage from the ranks of the people, thus blending the aristocracy with the Commonality.

Here is a system of compromises between those elements on the one side and the power of the people on the other, by which the full means are given to the expression of every popular wish. The Providence preserve it to us as a most valuable compromise, even the ministerial power of spiritual dominion over the clergy upon the elective dependence of the clergy upon the call of the flocks over whom they are called to preside. It is a system of compromise, and he best of the arduous post of conducting the vast and affairs of this great empire who knows how to the various portions of the great machine, to the various conflicting claims of mutual checks and balances, and the removal of one of which the action of the whole might, perhaps, be more rapid, but machine would be disordered and disarranged.

My Lord, be an easy task for a Minister to please every occasion of every gust of popular feeling before the gale, and in congratulating the people on the state of its progress, success and resources, to say what direction that gale is blowing, and is bearing him upon a lee-shore, or upon a dangerous rock, with the more certain destruction the more surely he may trust be in use the popular breeze which fills the sails—not the course in the pathway of the wind that blows, but blindly before it, but in skilfully yourself of it to speed you on your destined course, and steadily hand upon the wheel, and with mind and eye upon one single object—the safety of the good the crew and the precious cargo—to consider, not the ability of your progress, but the certainty of the you are pursuing. Then, by the blessing of God, in spite of opposing forces, let the wind blow from the or from the South, the steady hand at the helm may speed the vessel on her destined course, whether that be East or West.

My Lord, I will know that such a course is not that at all times will secure to the Minister who pursues the greatest amount of momentary or popular applause. I have that opinion of my countrymen that I am certain they will more consider the steadiness of the course the rapidity of the progress. They will look to the object which the government have in hand, and if they see them proceeding in their own course, steadily and determinedly, evading themselves no doubt of popular favor, but rather exerting me kindly following the passions of I am convinced that in the long run, a Minister will obtain the approval, and ultimately the confidence of the country. I may, my lord, have for myself and for my colleagues a bold and undertaking. I know the difficulties which in and in any country attend the faithful discharge of duties, but I am convinced that no Ministry is of the confidence of this country which does not put itself and upon its own convictions, and trust that the majority of those convictions will in the long run follow themselves upon the sympathy and support of the

We may feel that we have as arduous task before us, we must not fall from the want of a clear perception of what we ought to take, or a clear appreciation of the difficulties we have to encounter. We may have enemies within our own central; but, my Lord, we shall not fall, and if in any degree we shall deserve confidence and support of this country, it will be our hope, it is our boldest and highest ambition, that we cease to hold that office with which the favor of and the confidence of the people have invested us unimpaired to those who shall succeed us, and transmit unimpaired to them the freedom of the British Constitution, of the and welfare of the Sovereign and her dominions, and that we shall leave England as, I trust, we subject of attachment and love to her own and no other, as a nation and friendly respect nations of the civilized world with whom we de all occasions, to maintain the most cordial and relations."

Within the last few days the Count, who is still in Piedmont, has been tried in Milan, condemned to an infamous death, and actually hung in effigy.

CONGRESSIONAL.

WASHINGTON, May 22, 1852.

The Senate did not all to-day.

HOUSE.—On motion of Mr. Richardson, of Illinois, the House went into committee of the whole on the special order, and took up a "bill to amend an act to create the office of Surveyor-General in Oregon, and to provide for the survey and to make donations to settlers on public lands."

On motion of Mr. Richardson, the committee took up a bill to provide for the protection of the Territories of New Mexico and Oregon.

Mr. Peaslee, of New Hampshire, explained the provisions of the bill, the first section of which authorizes the distribution of arms in the Inhabitants of New Mexico and Oregon, under certain regulations; and the second section authorizes the President to call out the militia, and to accept the service of volunteers, whenever he shall deem it necessary.

Mr. Phelps, of Missouri, spoke at considerable length against the placing arms in the hands of the people of New Mexico, who could either use them on the occasion of an insurrection, or dispose of them to hostile Indians, and concluded by opposing that portion of the first section of the bill which authorizes the arming of the inhabitants generally.

Mr. Weightman, delegate from New Mexico, stated that the population of that Territory is 61,000, of which only about five hundred are Americans, and between two and three hundred are natives of foreign countries. He then referred to the sheep and other descriptions of stock, amounting, at a low estimate, to $1,700,000, which the Government of the United States is bound by treaty to protect, and explained the particulars of a murder referred to by Mr. Phelps, and showed that the American who fell was the aggressor, and concluded by vindicating the character of the native inhabitants of the Territory.

An amendment, proposed by Mr. Richardson, extending the provisions of the bill to Texas and California, having been adopted,

Mr. Jones, of Tennessee, moved another amendment, requiring that the sum required should be defrayed out of the $200,000 annually appropriated for arming the militia of the United States, which was also carried, and the bill to be laid aside to be reported to the House; as was a "bill to amend the act to establish the Territory of Oregon."

Other bills were similarly disposed of; when the bill to amend an act creating the office of Surveyor-General of Oregon, etc., which was laid aside in the morning, was again taken up, and debate having been limited to fifteen minutes, it was ordered to be reported, after having been amended in various particulars, with a recommendation that it pass.

The committee then rose, and the House resumed and adjourned.

WASHINGTON, May 24, 1852.

SENATE.—Mr. Butler presented the credentials of Wm. F. De Saussure, Senator from South Carolina, in the place of Mr. Rhett. He qualified and took his seat.

The President laid before the body a report from the Secretary of the Navy, in answer to a resolution relative to the comparative value of bituminous and anthracite coal. It was referred.

The Senate then, on motion of Mr. Atchison, went into executive session on an Indian treaty.

When the doors were opened, at half past two o'clock, The Deficiency bill was taken up, when, after debate, the amendment for the repair of the Long Bridge was rejected—20 against 23.

An amendment was adopted for the payment of extra Clerks in the Census Bureau.

The Senate after further proceedings adjourned.

HOUSE.—The first question before the House was a motion submitted a few days since by Mr. Clark, of Iowa, to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the Senate bill to relinquish to the State of Iowa certain reserved salt springs; and the rules having been suspended,

Mr. Clark explained the nature of the bill, which was then read a third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Jones, of Tenn., the rules were again suspended, and a resolution passed making reports from committees during one hour daily the special order, until the entire list of committees shall have been called over.

Mr. Hall, of Mo., Chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, then reported back from that committee the bill granting lands to all the States, for the benefit of the indigent insane, with an amendment; and moved its reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. Bissell, of Ill., moved the postponement of the further consideration of the bill for a fortnight, and that it be printed.

Mr. Orr, of S. C., called for the yeas and nays, which having been ordered, the motion of Mr. Bissell was agreed to—yeas 106, nays 49.

Mr. Hall then reported other bills from the Committee on Public Lands, which did not elicit any discussion.

On motion of Mr. Houston, Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the House went into committee on the state of the Union, and took up the House bill, No. 44, making appropriations for the next fiscal year.

The House resumed, and Mr. Stuart moved the usual resolution, to limit debate to five minutes.

Mr. Bayly moved to amend the motion by inserting two hours.

Mr. Cilngman moved to lay the resolution on the table, and called for the ayes and noes, when it voted in the affirmative, and 54 in the negative.

Mr. Jones, of Tennessee, who temporarily occupied the chair, decided that the ayes prevailed, under the constitution, which provides that such motion is carried when one-fifth of the members present vote in the affirmative.

The yeas and nays were ordered upon the appeal, pending which a motion was made that the House adjourn, on which the ayes and noes were ordered, and the motion was negatived—yeas 65, nays 50.

Mr. Clingman withdrew his motion to lay on the table, and also his appeal.

The resolution was then modified from fifteen minutes to two hours, which was agreed to.

The House again went into committee on the state of the Union, and Mr. Washburn, of Maine, is making a one hour's speech, amidst much confusion, with reference to the position of the whig party and the fidelity of the compromise measures, contending that it cannot be determined by resolutions of a convention adversely to public opinion. He denounced the so-called Union party, and insisted that the true question at issue was not whether the fugitive slave law was unconstitutional or not, but whether another, equally sure and effective, might not be substituted.

CONGRESS.—The Louisville Courier of the 20th, contains the following summary of the proceedings of Congress on the 25th ultimo:

Senate.—The House bill relinquishing to Iowa certain reserved lands of salt springs was passed. The bill authorizing the construction of a railroad through public lands in certain cases was opened to be enforced. The Deficiency bill was then taken up, and the appropriation of $110,000 due the Indians for services in the war of 1812, was rejected, when the Senate adjourned.

House.—Mr. Hall, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill granting to Wisconsin power to impose a tax on all lands hereafter sold in said State, from and after the day of sale, which was passed.

Mr. Bisney asked leave to introduce a resolution, in effect that at the time of the liberation of the Irish exiles, a national ship should be at Australia, and that the President prefer them a conveyance to this country—objected to. Mr. Hall, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a substitute for the Senate bill granting pre-emption rights to the settlers on the Menomonee river, in Wisconsin, by making the bill general on all unsurveyed lands, pending a motion to refer, the House went into Committee of the Whole on the Invalid Pension bill. Messrs. Bayly and Carter made political speeches, after which the committee rose, and the House passed the Invalid Pension bill and the Navy Pension bill, and then adjourned.

MORE INDIAN AND MEXICAN MURDERS.—By the arrival of the steamship Yacht, yesterday, we have received files of the Brownsville (Tex.) Flag to the 22d ult., from which we take the following items:

MORE DEPREDATIONS.—Five men killed by a motly gang of Indians and Mexicans.—It again becomes our duty to record the report of the perpetration of another scene of bloodshed and plunder, which, if our information be true, would more resemble the work of fiends incarnate than human men. We are informed by a gentleman just arrived in town, that, on the evening of the 10th inst., a gang of about 40 men consisting of Mexicans and Indians, attacked a party of seven Americans, who were encamped at a Lake called Campacanas; five of those at the camp are said to have been murdered, and their property taken into Mexico. Two of the men, fortunately, were on the margin of the lake shooting ducks at the time, and they succeeded in making their escape. These robbers and murderers are said to have crossed the river some forty miles above this place, on Friday, the 7th inst., and a detachment of them openly re-crossed it again soon after perpetrating their hellish deed, bearing with them as trophies, the right hand of each of their slaughtered victims, while the remainder of the savages coolly encamped on the ground where the massacre occurred, expecting, no doubt, another feast of blood from those whom they deemed absent from the camp, and would probably return unsuspicious of danger.

An effort has been made as we learn, to raise sufficient men to repair to the ground and bury the dead, but such consternation prevails among the thinly scattered settlements, that no one can be induced to move beyond the precincts of his own habitation—and even those he is in hourly expectation of being murdered or plundered, and we have no government troops here of a nature to pursue these fiends—though if we had, they would have recrossed the line and be under the protection of Mexico long before this best mounted troops could reach the place of carnage. There we have no law to reach them. What will our government do for us? It does seem to us an emergency sufficiently momentous for our State government to take measures of protection, at least until some can be had from the general government. An exposed and bleeding frontier calls loudly for aid. Shall we have it.

Since writing the above, we have received the following communication in relation to the matter:

BROWNSVILLE, May 13th, 1852.

MR. EDITOR.—Dear Sir: It becomes my painful duty to request of you to give publicity in the American Flag, of one of the greatest most brutal outrages ever perpetrated in a civilized country.

On last Monday evening the camp of seven Americans, a take called Campacanas, in this county, was attacked by about forty Mexicans and Indians residing in Mexico, belonging to the Carankaway and Campacuas tribes, and being, as is said by them, instructed by the authorities in Mexico to kill and plunder all American citizens near this frontier—succeeded in murdering five out of the seven, and taking away a considerable amount of property, a greater portion of which belongs to the undersigned. Also acting, as they say, under the instructions of the aforesaid authorities, they mutilated the bodies of the murdered men, taking the right hand of each to testify that they were entitled to the reward of thirty or forty dollars offered by Mexico for each American they murder on this frontier.

Now, sir, the above needs no comments; I have stated facts as they are, and although it has been five days since the murder and robbery, I have not been able to get people enough together who are willing to go only eight or nine miles from the river to bury the dead, the dread of the depredations and Indians from Mexico being so great that the few Americans and Mexicans in that vicinity do not dare to leave their ranches and families unprotected.

WARREN ANDRUS.

COURT MARTIAL.—The Court Martial at Ringgold Barracks is still progressing, though with what result we have not been able to ascertain. We learn that most of the higher officers of this, the 8th Military Department, are present at the session, and that business of importance is engaging its deliberations.

ROMAN CATHOLICS.—We have just learned that the members of this enterprising church have recently completed arrangements for its permanent establishment in this city, and on a scale that not only promises its rapid increase as a church, but from the liberality of the arrangements, promises much for the rapid developement of Brownsville. We learn that a Bishop of the above church arrived in New Orleans from Europe, en route for Brownsville. This Rev. Bishop, it is said, brings with him a number of priests and nuns, and that he comes prepared with the means for the erection of a church on a larger scale than the present one, also for the establishment of a convent and college, for educational purposes. If this be true, as we are informed, Brownsville will soon again commence her march of improvement with colossal strides. All that we desire is peace—let us but have that, both with ourselves and neighbors, the natural advantages of our situation and enterprise will accomplish all we desire.

THE MECHANIC'S WIFE;

OR, THE RESULTS OF PERSEVERANCE.

"Well, Augustus," said Marianne, as the former entered a little room, which, without carpet, curtain or ornament of any kind, served as kitchen, sitting room and nursery, "we are really settled down at house-keeping. Don't it seem comfortable, after so many privations?"

"Yes," answered the young husband, trying to smile, as he glanced, first at his handsome wife and then at the neat little pine supper-table, and then at the cradle, where slept a little charming boy of six months, "but mine is such a life of toil that I have no time to enjoy anything—not even to play with Fred."

"But it seems to me," returned the wife, very thoughtfully, "that it need not be just so. We are not in debt; we both have health, and I am willing to be very economical. In order that we may have time for enjoyment, and improvement too. Say, shall we try the experiment?"

She handed him a cup of tea as she spoke, and looked up into his face with a sweet and hopeful smile; but his face was deadly pale, and an unbidden tear stood in his eye as he answered moodily:

"I don't know how that can be. Every moment taken from my labor is so much taken from our scanty income. We cannot afford to attend places of public amusement; in our present low style of living, we cannot mingle in the first society, and I will never consent to enter any other than good society, if we live nine; and as for improvement, my education was so neglected in my childhood that I have little taste for reading; and besides, we have nothing to read."

"Oh, yes," said the wife, "we have enough to begin with. Here is our beautiful new gift Bible, which we must read every morning and evening; and here is our NewYork paper, with good improving matter enough to last one or two evenings. In a week, and you can easily have a share in a public library to fill up the rest."

"But how shall I find time, my good, planning wife?"

"Thank you, Augustus, for the compliment, and now I will plan on: We will rise early, and work diligently all day. Then, if you think you need to work longer, you can bring your work into my room, or I will take Fred into the shop, and one of us will read and tend the baby while the other works. Won't that be a good plan?"

"I rather think it will," said the husband, beginning to show a little more interest, "but I'm thinking also, that my hesitating and blundering manner of reading will not be very edifying to you. I shall make but sorry work of it."

"Well, suppose you do. I have a Webster's Dictionary, and we will have that open before us, and look out every word of which we do not understand the meaning. If our progress is slow at first, we shall have nobody to laugh at us, and we shall soon find ourselves improving rapidly."

Augustus smiled incredulously, but seemed disposed to encourage his wife to go on. "You are indeed a noble planner; but what shall we do on the Sabbath? I suppose you expect to advance fast in the church of mind, when we have a whole day to ourselves?"

"Yes," said Marianne, "I think we may, though our arrangements must be somewhat modified. You know we have a seat in Dr. C——'s church, and I think that the young men's Bible Class, and prepare the lesson in the morning, while I attend the meeting. Then I will stay in the afternoon, and let you go to the afternoon service and the Bible Class. In the evening we will read."

"I've no objection to that, but as a compensation for my Bible Class, you must join the Ladies' Sewing Circle, and I will take care of Fred one afternoon in the week to let you go."

"Thank you, dear husband. I will gladly accept your offer, if you will let me stay alone one evening in the week while you attend our excellent Lyceum Lectures. And now let us begin this very evening. I feel that every moment is lost till we do. We have much encouragement. Only think of the many learned men who have educated themselves, and risen to respectability and usefulness, wholly through their own exertions, even after they were somewhat advanced in life. Roger Sherman, for instance, and Elihu Burritt, and a host of others.

The young wife became quite enthusiastic as she proceeded, and would have spent the whole evening in her disquisition upon self-education, had not Freddy, awaking from his nap, required some maternal attention.

Augustus took up the Bible, and read a good chapter, and declared that he had never before read such a chapter. The plan was fairly begun.

Augustus was a pale, spare, young man of nine and twenty. His education, as he said, had been sadly neglected in his youth. He had been bound apprentice to a rough shoe-maker in the country, and had unhappily settled the question in his own mind, that he was doomed to ignorance, and a low and degrading employment for life. He had imagined, also, that his relations were willing to lose sight of him, and his sensitive nature was stung to the quick. After a few years of vexation and toil, he wandered far away from home and friends and familiar associations; and a wonderful was, that he was not buried away by the awful whirlpool of error and vice, and dashed upon the rocks of utter destruction!

He had, however, been favored with the instructions and prayers of a christian mother, and had seen examples in his own family, of high purpose and noble and successful effort. He had, therefore, preserved an unsullied reputation, had acquired a little property, had married an intelligent, cheerful, healthy girl of twenty summers, had removed to a "city of shoemakers," where his occupation was honorable, and where his aspiration after respectability and independence might hope to be realized.

But on the afternoon preceding his conversation, he had been unusually annoyed. He had suffered some embarrassment in getting settled in his humble tenement—had sustained some losses, and heard a bitter sarcastic remark from an aristocrat on that place, which crimsoned his pale cheek, and sent him home through a cold rainstorm, wearied in body, depressed, vexed in spirit, and almost determined never to make another effort.

He was, and supposed he ever must be, a poor shoemaker of L.

Twenty years had elapsed, and a family group were arranged around a marble centre table, in the parlor of a magnificent house in the city of L. A gentleman of some fifty years, had just divested himself of his outer garments, and dressed in a rich velvet gown and embroidered slippers, sat reading the journals of the day. A lady some years younger, sat by his side, her face beaming with intelligence, benevolence and gratified pride, as she gazed at her dignified and honored husband, and then at the lovely group of children around the table.

One was a noble youth just returned to spend his college vacation at home; another was a tall, graceful girl of sixteen, who had finished a long recitation to her brother, and was preparing to cheer the circle with her ever welcome music on the piano. A bright boy of twelve was performing a problem in mathematics, and a little cherry-cheek girl was drawing pictures on her slate, and teazing every body to tench her.

Presently, the door-bell announced a visitor. A person entered and presented a subscription for religious charity.

"Put me down a hundred dollars," said the good man, and the collector departed blessing the giver.

When he was gone, the gentleman said: "My dear, did you think to send the cook and four to the poor woman on the corner?" "Yes, and Frederick and Mary have been to see that sick family, and carried the clothes and medicines." "Yes, papa," said little Kate, looking up from the house she was drawing, "they carried away my new stockings." "Shall I send and get them back again?" said the father. "I no, indeed!" said the child; "I sent them. Poor little Charley's feet were cold and bleeding!"

The father now remarked that it was time for family worship. In a moment all was silent—books, slates, papers and work were all laid aside. A neat gilt Bible, bearing the marke of constant usage was brought. The son read an interesting portion. The whole family joined in a familiar hymn, and the father led in prayer, and worshipped the father of mercies in spirit and truth, from the fullness of a grateful heart.

After an interval of silence, the son looked up as if from a reverie, and said—"Father, I think I have heard you say that your youth was neglected, that you were once poor, illiterate, almost an infidel, and entirely discouraged. It would be extremely interesting to us to learn by what means the Mayor of this good city, and the trustee of our college, the Superintendent of our Sabbath School, and the Deacon of our Church, have risen from so unpromising beginnings, to his present station."

The eyes of the good man filled with tears, his lip quivered, he covered his face with his handkerchief, and for some time no whisper was heard from the astonished audience around him. He was thinking of the poverty and ignorance of his early days—of the religious errors which had well nigh caused his destruction—of the way in which a kind Providence had led his thoughtless steps, amid all the dangers around him—of the blessing he had received in his lowly, admirable wife, of the days of toil, and nights of hard study, in which she had shared, and cheered him on like an angel of light and love, and lastly, of the countless blessings, and honors which now surrounded him. At length he uncovered his face, and amid stilled sobs, said to his wife, "tell the children, dear, the conversation we had together, just twenty years ago to-night, around our little pine tea-table."

He was the shoemaker of L——.

A DREAM REALIZED.—Some time during the past summer, a stranger stopped at one of the watering places on the mountains South of Waynesboro', Pennsylvania. After his arrival there he was taken sick, and for several days was apparently deranged. On his recovery he informed the proprietor of the house that during his illness, he had dreamed for three nights in succession that he had discovered at a certain distance in the mountain, under a rock, an earthen crock, containing a large amount of silver. At this the worthy host expressed surprise, and spoke of it as a mysterious dream.

Afterwards, however, they were walking together in that direction, when the dream was again adverted to by the stranger, and the proprietor at once proposed an examination to satisfy their curiosity. The rock was soon found, and after carefully brushing the leaves away, it was removed, and in their utter astonishment, there sat a crock full of silver. They took it out and conveyed it to the house, and on examination it was found to contain $400, all in half dollars, which was divided equally between them.

The day after this discovery, the stranger was about to take leave of the mountain, and complained to his friend, the proprietor of the springs, of the inconvenience of carrying the silver, when an exchange was proposed and made, the stranger receiving bankable paper for his silver. It was not long after his departure, however, that the proprietor made another discovery—the four hundred dollars in silver was counterfeit, and he had thus been ingeniously swindled out of two hundred dollars. [Norwich Courier.]

MORE EFFECTS OF THE "RACEHORSE."—The Syracuse Star says that a highly respectable young lady of that city has been sent to the Utica Lunatic Asylum, in consequence of aberration of mind, caused by attending the rapping demonstrations in that city.

LOUIS NAPOLEON AND THE POPE.—The story that Louis Napoleon meditated depriving the Pope out of his temporal power, is decidedly contradicted, in the last letter of M. Gellierdet to the Courier des Etats Unis. He announces that the government of Napoleon has determined to withdraw the French troops from Rome as speedily as possible, and that the French Embassador to the Holy See has been brought to Paris that he may be conferred with on that subject.

Arrival of the Arctic—Four Days Later from Europe—Cotton Steady—Slight Improvement in Breadstuffs.

NEW YORK, June 1.

The Collins steamer Arctic has arrived from Liverpool, whence she sailed on Wednesday evening, the 19th ult.

Liverpool Markets.

LIVERPOOL, May 19.

The market closed this evening steady and quiet, and no special change has taken place in prices since the sailing of the Cambria. The sales for the three days of this week amount to 35,000 bales, of which exporters and speculators have taken 15,000 bales.

In breadstuffs a better feeling has prevailed, and large sales have been made, with a slight improvement in prices.

French News.

General Lamoriciere, and several other Generals, have refused to take the oath of fealty prescribed by President Napoleon, and considerable excitement has prevailed in consequence.

Charleston Cotton Market.

CHARLESTON, May 28.

The business in the Cotton market this week has been moderate, the sales summing up 6000 bales. Prices have fluctuated slightly during the week, but they range today the same as the last quotations—strict middling being 9¾c.

The increase in receipts at all the Atlantic ports, compared with those of the same date last year, is 110,000 bales.

The freight on Cotton to Liverpool is ¼d P lb.

Democratic National Convention—First Day's Proceedings.

BALTIMORE, June 1, P. M.

The city is thronged with strangers and the excitement is great. The Buchanan men are working hard and are now engaged in caucus with the Virginia Delegation. They will stick to their man till the last, as was resolved this morning. Gen. Butler has written a letter in favor of Gen. Cass, who he says is entitled to the nomination. Gen. B. calls upon his friends to vote for Cass, and wishes to be considered out of the field as long as Cass is in it.

It is thought that the friends of Gen. Cass will unite with those of Butler should they be compelled to give up their favorite. The Cass men suspect the Maryland Delegation are inclined to go for Douglas. Lookers-on think Douglas will be the nominee.

The Georgia difficulty is not settled. Lumpkin stands firm for Cass, and will contest the seats of the Mississippi Delegates unless it is amicably arranged. There are forty-six Delegates who claim seats. Either Mr. Davis, of Indiana, or Cave Johnson, of Tennessee, will be President of the Convention. The friends of Gen. Houston are pressing his claims with great energy. The NewYork Delegation is said to be divided between Cass and Douglas.

NewYork Markets.

NEW YORK, June 1, P. M.

The Cotton market to-day is dull. Flour is brisk, and sales of 4800 bbls. have been made—Indiana and State brands $4 06@$4 25. Southern $4 31@$4 50. Wheat is unchanged. Corn is improving. Pork dull and heavy—Prime $10 25; Mess $18. Lard is held at 9¾@10c.

Further from the Convention.

BALTIMORE, June 2, 5 P. M.

The NewYork Delegation has just fired a salute of 31 guns in front of the Hall, under a banner on which is inscribed, "NewYork for Cass." The Convention met on the call of the President. The Chairman of the Committee on Organization and Credentials, said he was not ready to report. The immense crowd retards business very much.

Further by the Asia—Arrival of Specie.

The Asia brings $125,000 in specie from France. Hollingshead's circular quotes Middling Orleans Cotton at Liverpool at 5¼d., and Fair Orleans at 6¾d.; Mobile 5¾d. At Manchester on the day the Asia sailed business was less active.

Havre Markets.

The Havre Cotton market was quiet, closing on the 19th at an advance of from 1f to 2 francs. Orleans 65 to 90 francs. The stock of Cotton on hand was 90,000 bales, being a considerable increase since last accounts at Liverpool. In corn, n fair business has been done. Beef has advanced from 2s. to 2s. 6d. Pork commands extreme rates. Bacon has advanced 1s., and Lard 6d. Consols 99¾.

The steamer Franklin arrived out on the 20th, and the City of Glasgow on the 21st.

France.

France is quiet. Odillon, Muret and Broglie have refused to take the oath to the President.

MR. WEBSTER AT FANEUIL HALL.—A dispatch from Boston, dated the 22d inst., says: Faneuil Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity to-day to hear Daniel Webster speak. The distinguished orator was introduced to the vast assemblage by the Mayor, and was received with great enthusiasm. He spoke for about one hour, avoiding politics altogether, and confining his attention to the prosperity, progress and destiny of the country, which he painted in glowing colors. He paid a warm tribute to the enterprise of Boston and the industry of her citizens. The members of the Methodist Conference were present by invitation.

Highly Important to Planters and Property Holders.

BRIDGEWATER ADAMANTINE PAINT.

The superior properties of this unequaled mineral substance is now so well and favorably known that it is unnecessary to enter into an extended notice. The publio are referred to our circular, embracing certificates from—

Capt. Sr. C. THOMPKINSON, of steamer Magnolia.
Wm. BROWN, of towboat Porpoise.
HUGHES, VALLETTE & Co., Menagers La. Dry Dock
J. P. WHITNEY & Co., Agents do.
Capt. N. B. ROBBINS, of the ship Leodes.
JOSEPH BENSON, Painter, 132 Camp street.
And numerous WRITERS' CERTIFICATES.
Also, the recommendation of a large number of our most influential COTTON FACTORS and COMMISSION MERCHANTS, all of which are included in the Agent's Circular. Also, to the following, received since the circulars were printed from JOHN F. MILLER, of Attekapas:

"In July last I was induced to apply the Bridgewater Mineral Paint to my Sugarhouse, mud, in every respect, it has exceeded my expectations, and the representations made by the agents, Messrs. G. C. Bogert & Co. I cheerfully add my testimony to the numerous ones embraced in the Agent's Circular, and recommend the same to Planters and others, as the best Weather and Fire Protector I have ever known. Where I have applied it, it has been exposed to the sun, since last July, and has neither blistered nor cracked, and has formed a solid metallic surface, which has proved entirely impervious."

(Signed) JOHN F. MILLER.

New Iberia, Attakapas, March 10, 1852.

In addition to the above, we have in our possession innumerable certificates from equally respectable sources which can be seen at our office; among which are those of Capt. Wm. Cutts, of the ship Charles Cooper; Brevet Lieut. Col. G. H. Talcott, New York Arsenal; R. S. Smith, Lieut. and Quartermaster U. S. Military Academy, West Point; O. H. Ludlow, Superintendent, now Secretary of the Hudson River Railroad Company; D. O. McCallum, Ass't Engineer New York and Erie Railroad, etc.; proving conclusively, by being thoroughly tested, that it is both

FIRE AND WEATHER PROOF.

The heading, shrinking, or warping of the material upon which it is used does not affect the paint; in twenty-four hours it dries, and in four weeks becomes a perfect slate. It preserves wood from decay, and neither blisters nor cracks by exposure to the hottest sun. For covering roofs of either tin, iron, zinc, wood, canvas, or paper, it is also invaluable, and particularly recommended, as it is a certain PROTECTION AGAINST SPARKS AND CINDERS, and is furnished cheaper than any paint in the Southern country. All orders sent to the General Agents, or their sub-agents, promptly executed. No deviation in price. Terms—cash, or its equivalent. G. C. BOGERT & CO.,

WRITTEN IN ILLNESS.

Now in the field of sunset, Twilight gray,
Sad for the dying day,
With wisps of shadows binds the sheaves of gold,
And Night comes shepherding his starry fold
Along the fringed bottom of the sky,
Alas, that I
Sunken among life's faded ruins lie—
My senses from their natural uses bound!—
What thing is likest to my wretched plight?
A barley grain cast into stony ground,
That may not quicken up into the light.

Erewhile I dreamed about the hills of home
Whereon I used to roam;
Of silver-leaved larch,
And willow, hung with tassels, when, like bells,
Tinkle the thawing runnel's brimming swells,
And softly filling in the front of March
The new moon lies,
Watching for harebells, and the buds that ease
Hearts loveforn, and the spotted adder's tongue,
Dead heaped leaves among—
The verdurous season's cloud of witnesses;
Of how the daisy shines
White, 't the knotty and close-nibbled grass;
Of thickets full of prickly eglantines,
And the slim spice-wood and red sassafras,
Stealing between whose bows the twinkling hents
Suck up the exhaled sweets
From dew-embalmed beds of primroses,
That all unpressed lie
Save of enamored airs, right dalntily,
And golden-ringed bees:—
Of atmospheres of hymns,
When wings go heathg up the blue sublime
From hedgerows sweet with vermill-sprouting limbs,
In April's showery time,
When lilacs come, and straggling flag-flowers, bright,
As any summer light,
Ere yet the plowman's steers
Browse through the meadows from their traces free,
Or steel-blue swallows twitter merrily,
With slant wings shaving close the lovet ground.
Where, with his new-washed ewes thick huddled round,
The careful herdsman plies the busy shears.

But this fond seeming now no longer seems—
Aching and drowsy pains keep down my dreams;
Even as a dreary wind
Within some hollow, black with poison flow ers,
Swoons into silence, dies the hope that lined
My lowly chamber with illumined wings,
In life's enchanted hours.

When tender oxlips mixed through yellow strings
Of mullein stars, with myrtles interfused.
Pulled out of pastures green, I gaily used
To braid up with my hair. Ah, well-a-day!
Happy the blue eyes of another May
Open from rosy lids; I shall not see,
For the white-shroud-folds. If it thus may it be
O Father, Son, and Spirit! holy Three!
As death is closing round me into night,
Comfort the darkness with religious light.

The Religion of Money.

PART SECOND.

Reader, are you acquainted with a tract in which it is clearly shown, that in the Romish Church every thing is SOLD, while in the gospel every thing is GIVEN, and that thus, between the religion of the Pope and the religion of Jesus Christ, there is a "great gulf fixed"? At all events, here is the second part of it, which may in case of need serve for the first as well.

It was after "The Religion of Money" had gone through six editions (now, more than two hundred thousand copies have been sold) that an editor of a daily paper, too honest himself to believe in the possibility of the numerous corruptions of the Church of Rome, started doubts as to the accuracy of the facts brought forward in this little treatise. As I was the author, I thought it best to write to the then Archbishop of Paris, M. de Quenleu; and I told him that the last edition of "The Religion of Money" being exhausted, I had taken the liberty of inclosing a copy, which I earnestly entreated him to read, and to point out any inaccuracies, however trifling, that I might thus be enabled to correct them, before the next edition went to press. In conclusion, I said, that if he did not send any answer, I should regard his silence as an approval of what I had written.

A week later, as I was on my way to the printer's, I received a letter from the Vicar-General, fixing a meeting at his own house, by order of the Archbishop. On my arrival at the time appointed, I found the Grand-Vicar seated in the midst of books and papers, and quite prepared to convince, if not to win me over. As this was not my object, I put my questions one by one, distinctly. "Is it true—yes or no, is all I ask—but is it true that your church people pay to be baptized, buried, etc.?" Now I solemnly avor, that to each of these questions the Grand-Vicar was compelled to answer "Yes;" only he disputed the price, assuring me that baptism only cost twenty sous, while I had set it down at forty-five; that the wax candle offered at the first communion, and valued by me at three francs, fifty cents, "is not thicker than that," showing me his little finger.

I admired his simplicity, and went on with my questions. I must, however, plead guilty to an omission of which I was convicted by the Vicar-General. In my text I had said nothing about marriage; the Vicar obligingly informed me that this, like all the rest, had its price. I beg pardon; but I again affirm that the Grand-Vicar was obligod to confess that, as I had already said, every thing is sold in the Romish Church. Undoubtedly, like a skillful casuist he pretended that it was not the spiritual grace that was paid for, but only the ministering of the gruoo. To this I replied, that so purely logical a distinction would never be grasped by simple minds; and that although the priest may not profess to sell any thing but his trouble, the people will nevertheless believe that it is the sacrament which he sells, and by which they purchase salvation. I withdrew, perfectly convinced that I had stated nothing but the truth in "The Religion of Money."

Five years after this conversation a very curious paper fell into my hands. In "The Religion of Money," the reader has only been introduced to the public part of this Romish traffic. In what follows he will see the secrets of its negotiations. We may indeed form some idea of the nature of a business from the appearance of the shop; but to know it thoroughly, we must get behind the counter, we must talk to the clerks, we must examine the books, and inspect the warehouses. Well then, my readers have already seen the shop; we will now exhibit the rest. This system of trickery must be unmasked; this ecclesiastical trading must be unmasked; and this infamous commerce, in which souls are the merchandise, must be buried beneath the ruins of its own downfall. To hasten this downfall is my present object, not for the pleasure of demolition, but to prepare the way for rebuilding. The throne cannot be occupied by two sovereigns, by the Pope and Jesus Christ. The Pope must come down, and Christ must be seated thereon. The system of the Romish Church is but that of making gods of the clergy, just as Paganism made gods of its idols of wood and stone; and if I strive to overset the idol, it is that the pedestal may be restored to God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, to whom alone it belongs. But at the very threshold I am met by an obstacle. What I have to state is so extraordinary, so monstrous, that I dread the effect of such a demand on the faith of my readers. How meet the difficulty? Simply by assuring them that I have in my possession, and am ready to show them, on application through the bookseller, the following original and authentic papers:

1st. The Circular addressed to the clergy.

2d. Two letters addressed to myself by the agent who signed it, and in which the above traffic is plainly avowed.

3d. A Letter from a Catholic priest, sent by the said agent to my house, to ascertain exactly who I was, as I had merely sent my name without any qualifications to the former. It will be seen by this letter that the agent refused to sell me one relic, valued at a few francs only, in order to oblige me to take the whole packet of eighteen relics; or rather, having found out who I was, he would not allow me to have the relic in question.

4th. An extract from the sentence pronounced in a court of justice, in a public sitting on the 14th of November, 1842, proving the fact of this traffic in Popish goods, by the condemnation of the traveling agent. This document is stamped, signed and authorized. I now proceed to lay the facts before the reader:

The traveling agent of the "General Correspondent of the Catholic Apostolic Agency of Rome, in France," having sold articles to a certain amount to several abbes, from whom he was unable to get payment, came one new-year's day to consult a friend of mine as to the best method of obtaining justice, placing in his hands the circular, which this friend subsequently gave into mine, and which I now give to the reader without further preface; for, I repeat it, there is no fiction here—nothing but a simple statement of facts. Behold, then, this mysterious circular, addressed to the clergy, copied word for word, and accompanied only by some reflections of my own:

"AGENCY
"Of the Catholic Apostolate,
"Established at Rome

"For the dispatch of all kinds of Ecclesiastical Affairs.—(See Gazette du Midi, of the 15th October, 1833.)

"GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE.

"CIRCULAR
"To the Clergy of France.

"POUR HONORARIES.*

"Not to be paid for till the papers have been received.

"M.'

"It is enough that a work tends to the glory of God, to the edification of the faithful, and to the increase of the respect due to the Holy See, to the which the Church of France is bound by her very bowels, to insure its acceptableness to the French clergy, whose zeal is a guarantee for its success."

Delicious style of prospectus! But we proceed:

"It is this assurance, sir, which, when I was at Rome, induced me to accept the agency of the Catholic Apostolate for France, in order to co-operate in securing the advantages which this agency is calculated to procure for the 'most Christian kingdom.' It is with this view that I have the honor to transmit to you the inclosed prospectus of the principal objects which may be obtained at Rome through the medium of the agency; and also the bulletin in which you can write the list of such as you wish to receive. Your zeal, sir, for the glory of God, and for the welfare of the souls committed to your charge, inspires me with full confidence in your choice of the articles best calculated for the attainment of this two-fold object in your parish."

I beg the reader's pardon, but I cannot repress the desire of repeating the assurance that it is not I who speak; that I am the faithful copyist of a paper which, if he desire it, I can place before him. Having said this for the last time, I proceed:

"You will transcribe the list of articles literally in the bulletin, and after having filled it up according to the inclosed directions, you will forward the duplicate, keeping the original in your own hands, to enable you to verify the correctness of the return. Having the goodness to frank the packet—[excellent suggestion!]—as the sine qua non of its reception, and that of all missives connected with the agency."

What caution! what suspicion! and all with reference to the clergy. But let us read on, and we shall see better, or rather worse still:

"You will then receive with all possible dispatch, and in the manner pointed out in the bulletin, those articles entered in your list, unless there be any that are not be procured at Rome.

"Receive the assurance," etc.

[We suppress the signature.]

"Correspondent-General of the Agency of the Catholic Apostolate in France, at Manduol, by Nimes (Gard.)

"To be franked. [Third notice to this effect!]

"List of the principal objects to be procured through the medium of the Catholic Apostolate Agency at Rome, as well as of all such as affect the glory of God and the salvation of souls."

To say nothing of the interests of the Pope and the clergy. But we hasten to the particulars, of which we copy but a part, a fair sample of the whole document.

"PONTIFICAL BRIEFS.

"1st. For the personal use (indult) of the privileged altar, by which Plenary Indulgence is gained for those souls in purgatory to whose benefit the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass is applied. 12 frs. 50 cents."

It must be confessed, that if the sufferings of souls in another world are alleviated by the purchase of such an Indulgence, it would be the height of cruelty in their friends and relations to reject this cheap opportunity of helping them. But surely the conduct of the Pope presents the very climax of cruelty, since having at his absolute disposal the whole treasury of works of supererogation, he yet neglects to apply it, en masse, to the release of the souls suffering the fiery penance. It would cost him so little; and the good done would be so great. But no! the Pope can not grant the slightest alleviation to the very poorest of these souls, till he has received the sum of twelve francs, fifty cents. "No money, no Pope! I would rather think that the Pope does not believe in purgatory, than suppose him so hard-hearted as to leave millions of souls in a state of torment, when it would cost him nothing to save them from it. It follows, indeed, that the sale of an Indulgence, in which we do not believe, is thus a mere traffic. * * * You cannot admit this last supposition! Return, then, to the first. Choose between them. The Popes are monsters of cruelty, or of hypocrisy!

"3d. For Plenary indulgence after confession and sacrament, on the anniversaries of birth, baptism, first communion, entrance on the religious life, taking holy orders, and any other great epoch in life. 10 frs. 80 cents."

How accommodating are these Indulgences! Have you committed a fault? You go to confession: some penance is imposed and the fault is thus washed away. Transformation the first. Suppose, however, that the penance imposed is irksome to you. What is to be done in this case? Nothing but to buy the Indulgence that releases you from the obligation of fulfilling it: and thus, for 10 francs, 80 cents, you are perfectly free. Transformation the second. Now, as Indulgences are sold according to the degrees of sin, it follows that, from transformation to transformation, the redemption of your faults is reduced to a payment of money.

"4th. To obtain the same favors twice every month, not only for yourself, but for your relations and connections, to the third degree of affinity inclusive. 10 frs. 80 cents."

You are perhaps astonished, candid reader, at this offer of Indulgences for relations, who are perfectly free to purchase them for themselves, if they desire it. But do you not see, that it is possible they might not desire it? And thus it is necessary to give the well disposed members of the family, to the good Catholics, the means of providing them with this advantage in spite of themselves. So even he wills none of these things, shall have them. Admirable mode of including even the obstinately sceptical in the bargain, and of thus indefinitely extending the business and its favors!

"5th. In favor of confessors, who may thus grant to their penitents a Plenary Indulgence, after absolution, on certain days of devotion. 12 frs. 50 cents."

Why should the Indulgence, which is to benefit the penitent, be made in favor of the confessor? Just in order that, by passing through his hands, he may realize a small profit upon it.

"6th. For conferring the power of Indulgence on crosses and medals, and for 'Vrigiter,' (consecrating) chaplets. 12 frunes 50 cents."

The Pope gives his benediction daily at Rome, to priests and people, to all who go, or are taken there. But as the Pope can not, even by the appointment of Jubilees, bring every body to Rome, he has to mourn over the fact of these benedictions passing to the provinces, not through his hands, but through those of the bishops. What is the remedy? To send what he can not give. An excellent method of multiplying and making it useful! The Pope blesses the cardinals; the cardinals bless the priests; the priests bless chaplets, crosses, and medals; and thus the Papal benediction, and subdivided into streams and rivulets, flow into every corner, of the earth, to return to him in one great ocean of gold and silver.

"9th. To choose a confessor invested with the plenary authority of the Holy See, with power to absolve from censures, irregularities and cases reserved for the Pope. 25 frs."

Somewhat strange, surely, that the Pope should SELL the cases reserved to himself! Why, then, reserve them? Was it because the bishops were unworthy or unable to decide them? That could not be: for here they are given over to any body who will pay for them. The reservation, then, was nothing more than an artifice to enhance the value. The preceding favors had been sold for half the price.

"12th. For the commutation of vows of all kinds. (The price varying according to the price.)"

Monstrous iniquity! I have taken a vow of celibacy, of poverty, of chastity; and from each of these you will give me a dispensation. But let us pause: it may be said that we are indignant without cause, since nothing is specified. A little further on, the thing is made clearer.

"14th. For a domestic chapel in which mass may be celebrated. . . . Idem."

Ecclesiastical avarice follows you even to your homes. You are not permitted to give yourself up to devotional exercises at your own house, without first purchasing the permission. This reminds one of those directors of privileged theatres, who only allow others to be opened on payment of an indemnity. In all this the Popes act like patentees, who make over the right of exportation for a consideration. Thus the thing is sold in the gross by the Pope, the half-gross by the bishop, and retail by the priest.

"15th. Brief of extra tempus, extra tempora, and interstitiarum, to receive, quam primum, the holy orders of sub-deacon, deacon and priest, as quocumque episcopo cum sancta sede communionem habente."

This Latin will excite suspicion in the mind of the reader who does not understand it, that it involves something mysterious; he is not far wrong; but I am not going to scrutinize it—the following note is explanatory enough:

"It costs less when the postulant is provided with letters dimissory from his bishop, than when he has merely his excorporation; but either of these papers is a sufficient qualification for the pontifical brief, of which the lowest price is 149 frs. 70 cents."

Through all this, one thing is plain enough; that is, the Pope's endeavor to baffle the bishops. The fact is, that to obtain holy orders, a paper, called a letter dimissory, must be obtained from the bishop, and paid for like all the rest; but here the Pope interposes between the merchant and the purchaser, and offers to dispense with the bishop's paper, thus closing the market against him. We shall see presently that the bishops have looked with no favorable eye on this agency of the Catholic-apostolates.

"DISPENSATIONS.

"1st. Dispensations of all kinds for the celebration, and the sanction of prohibited marriages."

For example. In marrying a heretic you expose your soul to damnation, as well as the souls of your children, and, of course, this is the ground on which the church opposes such unions: but take a dispensation, give money, your marriage is legalized, you may expose yourself to damnation without any further scruple. Eternal shame! shame upon men who, in order to quiet uneasy consciences, pretend to believe in Satan, and then, for the sake of a golden key, themselves open for them the gates of hell!

"2d. Dispensation from the vows of virginity, et cetera."

Yes, reader, you have read, and I have copied correctly. It is thus in the circular: "Dispensation from the vows of virginity;" and this circular is to the clergy. We will be brief and plain: A priest cannot have a dispensation from celibacy, but from chastity. But no: this I am convinced can not be the intent of the permission, though it may be thus interpreted. And do you not see that nature, outraged in the person of the priest, will lead him to seek and accept any interpretation? I leave it to the reader, be he father, brother or husband, to judge of the danger, and then, IF HE DARE, let him send his child, his sister, or his wife, to the confessional of the compulsory bachelor priest.

"3d. Dispensation from the celebration of obligatory masses, for which funds are wanting. 27 frs."

It is stated in "The Religion of Money," that a town priest who accepts masses at thirty sous each, can make them over to a country priest to celebrate, by paying him half the sum. It appears that this is not all, and that this broker priest can be dispensed, not only from the personal celebration of the mass, but from the mass altogether, even though paid for performing it, by making over to the Pope the sum of 27 francs. So then, simple-minded Roman Catholics, pay your priest to chant, or mumble, a mass with such and such an intention, and he will receive your money, transmit 15 or 20 per cent. to the Pope, and neither say your mass himself nor appoint any one else to say it. Would it not have been better to keep your money?

"4th. Dispensation from the obligation of reciting the Breviary, or other prayers, or duties, etc. 21 frs. 60 cents."

That the Pope should give dispensations from obligatory works, such as fastings, vows, etc., is easy to be understood; for we know that these penances have only been invented in order to make dispensations indispensable; but it is indeed an enormity deserving special remark, that the Pope here dispenses with "prayers." It affords the most infallible proof of his own disbelief of the efficacy of prayer, and shows that, according to the Romish Church, prayers are not prayer, in the true sense of the word, but a repetition of words imposed as a penance. At school, the master gives as an imposition a certain page to be copied, ten, fifteen, or twenty times; so in the church the priest imposes the repetition of fifteen or twenty Paters. But in the course of the week the scholar gains a number of good marks: he shows these, and the imposition is repealed—idem—the penitent has money, he gives it to the priest, and so, "no more Paters to be said." If the Pope and his clergy assure me that it is not so, and affirm their belief in God as hearing and answering prayer, I reply, "If you do indeed believe this and yet interpose to prevent prayer being made, it is plain that you deprive the faithful of the grace of God, in order to have their money, and you thus make a gain of their damnation."

"AUTHORIZATIONS AND FACULTIES.

"1st. To read forbidden books, and to keep them in your house, etc. 21 frs. 60 cents."

My pen falls from my hand as I copy these words. Nevertheless, reader, let us take courage and see the matter to the end. If a certain book is forbidden by the Pope, of course it is because the reading might be injurious. How then should the sum of 21 frs. 60 cents disinfect the book? I do not understand, and am bound to conclude, that the Pope is content to pollute the minds of his priests, provided they pay him for the contamination. Still, let us endeavor to find some good motive for the permission to read bad books. Perhaps it is allowed as a means of refuting them. Well, but if the priest read the book with this praiseworthy intention, why make him pay for the opportunity of doing good? It should not only be afforded him gratis, but he should rather be rewarded for a work so well calculated to benefit souls as the refutation of a bad book. But no! the Pope has but one rule,—he sells every thing, he never gives. We are then thrown back upon our first supposition,—immoral books are authorized by Rome, allowed to the priests, as special dainties, for a PRICE.

"2d. Authorization and faculty for blessing the sacerdotal ornaments, and for using all the other benedictions reserved to bishops, etc. 12 frs. 50 cents."

The Pope again cheating the bishops! I do not wonder the bishops attack the agency, and bring its agents before the courts of justice.

"3d. Authority and dispensation for conferring the Papal benediction on the dying."

Surely the Popes would sell themselves if any one would buy them.

But it is enough. I have no heart to copy more. Only this: I warn you, that if you are thinking to publish some useful book, instead of helping you, the Pope will impose a tax upon it, as the equivalent for his approval. Thus, when on the title-page of a Roman Catholic book you read these words, "With the approval of the Pope, or the bishop," understand that the only meaning of this inscription is, that the author has paid into the Papal or episcopal purse a sum varying "according to the conventional forms."

Are you desirous of having a saint in your family? My prospectus enlightens you as to the sum fixed for introducing to the Holy See the grounds on which you claim the beatification and canonization; so that, in due course of time, you can have the pleasure of honoring your uncle or your cousin, along with all the saints of the calendar, and soon a crowd of worshippers will kneel before the golden calf you have desired, and the Pope himself has set on high.

There is also the current price of relics of the true cross; only it is said these, in a parenthesis, "difficult to procure," just as bookseller might note of some rare book in his catalogue, that there were but few copies remaining.

In conclusion, the prospectus warns you, that to secure the transmission of the articles, the amount of the order must be at least twenty-five francs—that several persons might unite in forming a list, but that it must be signed by one only,—and this brings me back to our traveling clerk.

He had introduced himself to an abbe, and had received an order; he had then repaired to the house of another priest, had shown his commission, and received another; and this he had done till orders in that diocese were of sufficient value to pay for a journey.

Some weeks later a package arrived at —. Know, reader, that I could put a proper name in the place of these dashes; and if I do not, it is because my object is to attack things, not persons. I respect or pity the clergy of Rome. I detest the institutions of Rome.

The package of relics, indulgences and dispensations arrived then at the abbe's house, and he rejoices in the hope of selling retail what he had bought in the gross; but, O cruel disappointment! the bishop refuses his sanction.

"But, my lord, these relics and papers are perfectly authentic."

"That is true."

"They possess, then, the same virtues as those which you yourself procure from Rome to sell again to us."

"Undoubtedly."

"Why, then, keep me from going to the fountain-head, and oblige me to receive these articles through the channel of your intervention?"

"Because"—

"Why! because"—

"Because"

"I do not understand you."

"So much the worse."

"But, my lord, what am I to do with the relics?"

"Return them to the traveling agent."

"And what if he refuse to take back his merchandise?"

"You can refuse to pay for it."

The abbe was obliged to submit to his diocesan, but he avenged himself on the agent, to whom he refused payment. And in order to strengthen his hands, he associated with him such of his brethren as were implicated in the same cause. The traveling clerk, although the representative of a house pretending to act only "to the glory of God," grows angry, institutes legal proceedings, carries the case before a court of justice, and is condemned there.

Reader, let us take leave of the agency and its clerk, and turn to what is of more importance—Rome and its traffic. Declare then, yes or no—declare with your hand upon your heart—is this a religion of money? Do you not blush to think that this is, perhaps, the religion of your hands—it may be, your own? Will not all these enormities open your eyes to the light of simple common sense? Can you still, without disgrace and shame, nay, without danger to your immortal soul, continue in a church which makes merchandise of its salvation? For myself, I have desired to fulfil a twofold duty towards you; to point out error—this I have done; and to show the truth—this I am about to do.

My condemnation of the doctrines of Rome implies no condemnation of the doctrines of Christianity; on the contrary, I separate the two things as the wheat from the tares. The one will enter heaven, the other will be cast into hell. But how, you may ask, am I to distinguish real Christianity, since Romanism assumes that distinction to herself? The answer is simple. The wheat—the good seed—was sown first by the Saviour himself; the tares were not scattered till afterwards, by the enemy. Thus the good grain of Christianity is that which fell from the hand of Christ and his Apostles, and the bad seed is that which was brought in later by the Romish clergy, too fond of honors, power, and gold not to be enemies to truth. In other words, truth is the gospel from the lips of Jesus Christ and the pen of his apostles; falsehood is all that priests have added to this gospel. Now the difference between the gospel of Christ and the teaching of Rome is too striking to escape the notice of any who will compare the two. From his lofty throne the Pope exclaims, "Bring me money, money, and I will save your souls!" From His exalted cross Christ says, "By grace ye are saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God." The Pope, scared by the echo of this sentence, forbids the reading of the Bible; but, blessed be God! societies are formed, which, in spite of the thunders of Rome, go forth and distribute His Word to the utmost limits of the earth. The exasperated Pope exclaims, "O people! you are deceived; read it not!" Christians reply, "We do not wish you to take our word—read for yourselves!"

"No!—close your eyes!"

"On the contrary, examine!"

"Believe me; I am Pope!"

"Rather believe the gospel; it is the Word of God!"

"I tell you that you require a dispensation for reading all bad books; pay me, then read the Bible."

We, on the other hand, invite you to read the Bible—to read it without payment. As Christ "ever spake openly to the people;" as the apostles wrote openly to all the churches; so do we. We have nothing to conceal. We proclaim the truth in the high-ways, upon the house-tops; and this book, containing the very words of Christ and his apostles, we bid you take it without money and without price; for if you are poor, know that we give it.*

"Come to Rome."

"No, go to Christ."

"I will give you my Papal benediction."

"Christ will give you everlasting life."

"I will confess you, you shall do penance, I will absolve you; or rather, you shall buy it of me; me, the successor of St. Peter."

Peter himself speaks, and in the gospel exclaims, "Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast believed that the gift of God could be purchased with money." Acts viii. 20.

"Buy! buy my consecrated chaplets, my ecclesiastical dispensations, my plenary indulgences!"

"No—'Without money and without price,' says the Lord. 'Come unto me, ye that are weary and heavy laden, and you shall find rest to your souls. Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly of heart. I am come to seek and save that which was lost. Look unto me, and be saved!"

"No, no! It is false! Buy! buy!"

Heaven's thunders fall upon the Vatican; Luther and Calvin stand up with the Bible in their hands; the printing-press comes to their aid; the Holy Scriptures are translated into all languages; and the people, aroused from slumber, ask each other, how it is that they have borne the yoke of Rome so long? The truth of God revives the face of the earth, and in a few years one-third of Christendom abandons the Pope, to follow the gospel. The rest, too careless to examine, remain as they were, and receive baptism, the host, and extreme unction in the church; remain in unbelief, and live in sin.

Roman Catholics, such is, in general, your position! Is it well to keep it? You may, without much danger, laugh at the Pope; but beware! "God is not mocked." My advice is very simple—read the Bible! My request is not unreasonable—examine these things! You know that Rome cheats you; but it is not enough to recognize error, we must also seek and receive the truth. And I end with these words—words spoken by God Himself, and deserving all your attention—"God so loved the world that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Now that you have heard this declaration, Jesus adds, "Light is come into the world, but men loved darkness rather than light." Are you of that number? If so, listen, and you shall hear how the Lord Jesus explains your preference of darkness—"Because their deeds are evil."

Will you, on the contrary, seek after and receive the truth? Then it is you that He says, that "your works are done in God;" and it is for you that he adds, "He that heareth my word, and believeth on Him that sent me, hath everlasting life."

* When the Romish clergy pretended that our Bibles were falsified, the author of this little tract made a public offer, through the daily press, to distribute Romish Testaments, if the clergy would sanction it. He received in answer an anonymous letter, requesting him to keep silence.

* A delicate manner of indicating the Scale of Prices.

General Conference M. E. Church, North.

JUNE 1.—J. A. Collins said there was a matter that had been introduced there which had affected most severely an important section of our work. He had received intelligence of it in a way that left no mistake as to the character of its bearing, and he asked, in view of the facts they had before them, that something might transpire there that would relieve the case of its disastrous effect. If the Conference would permit him, he would make a statement which he hoped would result in some relief to that quarter. He received a telegraphic dispatch on Sunday in relation to this matter, which he did not answer; he received another telegraphic dispatch yesterday (Monday) which he did answer, and last night he received a long and strong memorial, or protest, signed by some of the best men in this country, and some of the best members of the M. E. Church in the city of Baltimore, in regard to the subject. Now, if the Conference would permit him, he would make the statement to which he had referred.

A motion was made that Mr. Collins have leave to make a statement to the Conference; to which an amendment was offered, that all others have the privilege of making statements.

After a rapid and random discussion, the amendment was lost, and without taking the question on the original motion, Mr. Collins was allowed to proceed, by courtesy, no one making objection.

Mr. C. said a discussion occurred in the General Conference, a few days ago, which, unfortunately, took a direction which had awakened a great sensation in the city of Baltimore, and he had no doubt it would wake up a still greater excitement in other sections of the work. This led to the protest or memorial referred to, which is signed by several of our ministry, traveling and local, and laymen of the highest respectability and piety, including such men as brothers R. G. Armstrong and Isaac P. Cook.

It will be recollected that in the discussion to which allusion is had, Br. H. Bangs made some remarks in regard to a certain class of citizens which drew from him (Mr. C.) a reply, in which the ground was taken, that wherever went the M. E. Church, in its doctrines and organization, there went the true gospel and true Methodism, and that of course all who joined the M. E. Church did so under the Discipline, and according to the Discipline. That speech of his seemed to be misunderstood or misconstrued somewhat, and in reply to it, or rather following it, a member of this Conference in a speech had indulged in highly offensive remarks, which had produced great excitement in the city of Baltimore. In the speech of the member it was distinctly stated that not merely in his own opinion, but in the sentiment of New England—of the great West—of the General Conference and the entire church, slaveholders were placed in the same category with horse-thieves and men-stealers; accompanied with the declaration that we had as many slaveholders in the church now as we wanted, and that those who were in were only there by sufferance, and not by right.

James Porter, of the New England Conference, (to whom the remarks of Mr. C. were understood to apply) rose and said that the statement of Mr. C. was not entirely correct. It was said in his remarks the other day, that to New England people, and to the citizens of Boston, and to Boston Methodists, who regard many slaveholders the same as men-stealers and horse-thieves, the remarks of Brother Collins were tantamount to saying that the Methodists are disposed to throw their fraternal arms around all the villains in the country. The speaker said nothing on the merits of slavery, but simply referred to the views entertained of it in certain quarters, to show the necessity of a reply to Mr. Collins. In subsequent statements he gave his own opinion, as for instance that we have slavery enough now in the church and wanted no more, and this was in order. He hoped Brother Collins would be permitted to go on, and that he would be allowed to reply.

Mr. Collins said he supposed, that the brother meant it was the opinion of Harrison and Company, for it certainly was not general; he believed there were but very few who hold it. It was not the sentiment of New England, nor of the West, the General Conference or the Church, and was unjust in its application to that section to which he referred; and what the people there complained of is, that this statement goes out to the Church and the world uncontradicted, that they are no better than horse-thieves and men-stealers, and that they are in the church simply by sufferance and not by right, and claimed to be in the church by [illegible] under the Discipline of the church, and that they were not here merely by sufferance and tolerance. They wished it to be understood that that is their position, and they wanted the General Conference to disavow the opprobrious epithets of horse-thieves and man-stealers; and he endorsed their views fully and completely.

He knew well the community upon which these assertions fell, in and out of the church, and he must say that they were wholly unmerited. The citizens in the section of country referred to are distinguished for their intelligence, integrity and high sense of honor. And the members of our church there, to say the least, will not lose in comparison with their brethren for piety and Christian character. They are as sound and consistent Methodists as can be found in this land or any other. He would also remark, that the course pursued in certain quarters, upon the delicate subject alluded to, had only been productive of mischief and evil. In the Convention which formed the new Constitution of Maryland—

Mr. Collins was interrupted by Mr. L. B. Bangs, who objected to his proceeding.

B. S. Hill, of the Erie Conference, said that Bro. Collins made remarks the other day that were offensive in some sections.

Brother Porter had made remarks offensive to Mr. Collins' section. He was prepared to hear Mr. Collins, provided other brethren could have the privilege of making speeches.

A motion was here offered to allow Mr. Collins to proceed, and Mr. James Porter said if Bro. Collins deemed it necessary for the peace of the Southern portion of the church, he did not object to his proceeding, and he hoped no brother would object. He knew what he said, and all he wanted was, that he might have an opportunity to reply, if it was necessary, to place the matter in its true light.

J. L. Smith moved that Mr. Collins have leave to speak ten minutes, and Mr. Porter ten minutes in reply, but afterwards withdrew the motion.

Mr. Goode then moved that the whole subject be indefinitely postponed.

B. S. Hill said, the other day, Mr. Finley submitted certain propositions, which were laid upon the table. [The proposition referred to proposed so to amend the Discipline as to prohibit slaveholders from membership to the church, and to establish a test to secure the liberation of such slaves as are present held by members of the Church.] The Erie Conference looked upon these propositions as perfectly safe, and [illegible] they would, if examined, meet the approbation of the General Conference [illegible] ren, however, had claimed that [illegible] had committed some great offence in that paper before them. He [illegible] ing an opportunity to explain, [illegible] hours, but had not [illegible]

The previous question was [illegible] sustained, and the [illegible] pone the whole [illegible]

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, June 19.

Baltimore in Trouble.

It will be seen, in the proceedings of Gen[eral] Conference, North, published on the first page of our paper, that Baltimore has been disturbed by the action of the Conference on the Pew Question, and especially by the speech of Mr. James Porter, which we gave entire in the last Advocate, in which he said that "Boston Methodists" regarded "these [illegible] the same as men-stealers and horse-[illegible]. Mr. J. A. Collins called up the matter; but little was made out of the N. England brethren. The discussion took a turn that showed plainly—"least said soonest mended."

When we consider that the slaveholding members of the Church North were hopelessly in the power of their brethren, the abolitionists of New England, New York, Ohio and Indiana, we can not but think that they came off very well to have only been called "man-stealers and horse thieves." Nothing but pure mercy prevented the majority of the Conference from so amending the Discipline as to prohibit slaveholders from admission into the Church.

Baltimore is really to be pitied. In 1844 [illegible] old Mistress of Methodism sat, in her [illegible] bonnet, as a queen, and dispensed her [illegible] justice to her Southern friends. Ha, [illegible] would rectify the Church; the South was wrong; the North was wrong. "You're all wrong," said she. "Please ma'am, yes ma'am," said the Yankees. "Here," said [illegible], take this resolution and make the most of it." Resolved, That it is the sense of this Conference, etc. The old lady was [illegible] at the result: the New England [illegible] had out-calculated her; but she has a pretty confident countenance ever [illegible] and still felt in herself the motions of [illegible] importance. However the Scriptures [illegible] "Pride goeth before destruction, and a [illegible] spirit before a fall." And so the old lady is low enough now.

On the 28th of May—the day after the [illegible] 27th—she might have been seen in deep [illegible] mourning for the loss of the section of [illegible] Discipline against pews, which was very [illegible] to her; and now at the close of the Con[illegible] her knees, asking every body, [illegible] not to talk so:" say that her "dear slaveholders were hot horse-thieves." Nobody [illegible]. At last John A. Collins gathered [illegible] lady up and conducted her off, soothingly: "Come along, mammy: don't mind [illegible]; they're a desperate, ungrateful, uncer[illegible] set." At the door the old queen rallied, [illegible] her bonnet to the top of her head, "John!" cried she, "I won't stand it, I'll set for myself."

The Baltimore Conference doubtless ex[illegible] to have supplied one of the Bishops [illegible] of the Book Agents. She had men well fitted for each of these posts. Of all her wishes, but one was complied with. Even the putting in Doctor Bond to the editorship was an unexpected alternative. Her people could not have been made to endure the Rev. A. Stevens; but even greater trouble than that has come upon her. The fact is, the position occupied by the M. E. Church, North, in the city of Baltimore, is an anomalous one. The field belongs legitimately to the South. There would be infinitely more propriety in the Church South forming a Baltimore Conference than there was in the formation of a new Arkansas or a new Kentucky Conference by the General Conference of the Church, North.

Editor at Home.

To our inexpressible pleasure, who should make his appearance in the office on yesterday but the editor himself, Bro. McTyeire; looking hearty, good-natured, and all ready to do his own work: "Rejoice with (me) for I) have found the (man) which was lost."

MISTAKES.—We have sent out a few accounts to our agents, in which we have doubtless made mistakes in not crediting persons who had paid; and probably in not putting down names of those who still owe. A brother writes that he finds the names of two itinerant preachers, who are good agents, down and charged with the year's subscription: certainly a great oversight on our part; for all itinerant Methodist preachers, who act as agents of the Advocate, are entitled to the paper free. They are laboring hard, as well as we, to furnish the people with religious news—they by obtaining subscribers, means to carry it on, and we by trying to furnish a sheet useful and creditable to our mutual [illegible].

TRACTS OF NAPOLEON ROUSSEL.—We have inserted on our first page No. 2 of "The Religion of Money," from the pen of this able, Protestant French Divine. We are not aware that his tracts have ever before been published in this country, excepting his "Why does your Priest forbid you to read the Bible." His style of controversial writing is a model; he has points without sharpness; by his reasoning he convicts the Romanist of error but he impresses much more by the fairness of his mind and the sweetness of his temper. We shall continue to publish from him. The articles are long, but not heavy.

GERMAN CHURCH LOT.—The Trustees of the 1st German Mission in this city have purchased a very [illegible] site in the First District [illegible].

Lagrange College.

We are in receipt of a handsome catalogue of the officers and students of this excellent institution. The faculty is an able one, and consists of Edward Wadsworth, A. M., D. D., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy; James W. Hardy, A. M., Professor of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy; Oscar F. Casey, A. M., Professor of Latin and Greek Languages; Thomas G. Rice, A. M., Professor of Pure Mathematics; Robert S. Hodges, A. B., Rector of the Preparatory School.

The number of students in the regular and preparatory departments is 131.

The faculty, in an address to their friends, say in few words all that we could desire to:

"We congratulate the friends of the College on its improving condition. The general department and conduct of the students, and their habits of study, are as good as we have ever known in any college. The current expenses of the institution are met, and the endowments are receiving proper attention. We desire the aid of all the friends of education; by increased labor in the cause of sound learning, and by strict attention to the duties of instruction, it is our wish and purpose to merit their favor and co-operation."

CHOCTAW CORRESPONDENCE.

[Our correspondent below is a native Choctaw. Many of our readers will recognize in him an old acquaintance. We will heartily undertake to forward to Bro. Lewis whatever friends may wish to contribute to "Choctaw Testament."]

DEAR BROTHER: I am now on Doaksville Circuit, Choctaw Nation, Indian Mission Conference. It has sixteen appointments, which we fill in four weeks. Thirteen of these appointments have meeting houses. We have had an addition, more or less, to the most of the appointments. At present our members are (in general) in warm and healthy condition. Bodily, our numbers are sickly; and we have lost five adult members tho present year, and several children of our members. We have but eight Sunday Schools organized, and in happy operation. What we most need in our Sunday School is Choctaw New Testament. Choctaw Testaments can be got in our nation; but the means of getting them we have not. Fifty cents buys a copy of Choctaw Testament. Many of N. O. C. Advocate readers may think that if fifty cents is all for Choctaw Testament, we might afford to buy us a one. Well, I can say this much—that Choctaw Testament does sell in our Nation, more or less every week." But it is comparatively recent since the publication of Choctaw Testament, and thousands of our people have never seen it yet; and, we are poor. It is true that New Orleans have seen Indians in the city with pocket full of money to lay in supplies of goods, but what are half a dozen Indian merchants out of the population of near 27,000? Masses of the people, sirs, are truly poor, in every sense of the word—bodily, spiritually and mentally. And the present year is very hard, necessitous year. We have no money, no meat, no bread and no navigation. Little River, two miles from me, a branch of Red River, I see is rising to-day. Very little corn for sale in the Nation. Hundreds are daily experiencing the affliction of hunger in our Nation. Mr. St. Bertheletty, a merchant, and a Catholic gentleman at Doaksville, has been measuring out corn on credit. Many of those he credits he does not know; but he knows that they are suffering, and he says they must have some.

Many hundred bushels of corn have been measured out in Doaksville for the last few weeks. Major J. G. Heald, a merchant at Choctaw Agency, I am told, had several hundred bushels of corn sent from Missouri, and was measuring them out on credit. What benevolent hearted merchants we have in the Nation. Will you please whisper to your friends that our merchants are so kind to us as to provide food for our body, but we want Choctaw Testament. Tell your friends to give us 50 cent pieces, with an assurance that it will buy a poor Choctaw man or woman a New Testament in his or her own language. And if your friends give us any thing, do you tell them that you will take charge of such contribution, and report to us of the same.

Mobile Sabbath School Missionary Society has done great deal of good in distributing Choctaw Testament in the Nation. The Society provided me with money, and therewith I bought Testaments for distribution among the poorest class on my works. But the present year I use the money of the Society in educating Mitchell McCurtain, a very promising boy, and a late pupil of mine. He is studious and apt scholar; I know his studious habit and capacity for learning; he commenced with me in alphabet in 1849; but he was in the highest class at our last examination last July; and the highest class was composed of two girls, or young ladies, and two boys who were my pupils in the year 1841, which was the first attempt at school teaching I made. After that you will recollect I was sent off by the Mobile Juvenile Missionary Society to Georgia, and did not labor amongst my people until 1846. We have an unfinished chapel—our Choctaw brethren and friends have given nearly $300. We want about $100 to finish it. Who will give us help? If any feel willing to give us any help, tell them the chapel is at Choctaw Academy: only Methodist Institution in the whole Red River Valley of the Choctaw Nation. It is in a thickly inhabited country. Take charge of the contribution, if any contribute any thing; and I know they will give money; I know who lives in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama. Ah! Alabama! the name Alabama makes me feel at home.

Yours, truly, D. W. LEWIS.

Doaksville, C. Nation, May 26.

YOUR POST OFFICES.—A short letter, directed to us, having on the top of the page the name of the Conference and the Circuit where you labor, and underneath the names of the several post offices in its bounds. How easily could you write it. Do please try.

IMMIGRANTS ARRIVING.—The New York Commercial advertiser of the 10th inst. says: Ten thousand six hundred foreign immigrants arrived at this port yesterday afternoon, and the additional number of 3,605 arrived at quarantine before 10 o'clock this morning, making 6,205 in less than twenty-four hours.

Dr. Nast—Missions to Germany.

At the Anniversary Missionary meeting of the M. E. Church, North, on the 10th ult. at Boston, Rev. Dr. McClintock, in an admirable speech, paid a deservedly high compliment to Rev. Dr. Nast:

"In 1821, two young men entered the University of Tubingen, in Germany, from the Gymnasium, to complete their education. They were both well trained according to the German plan; both of promise and talent, both were to be theologians. They formed a friendship at the University, and for six years lived, studied and formed their plans of life together; and they supposed their lines of life would run parallel, that they would both be theologians, ministers probably, with the usual ambition of an enterprising and talented German student, both professors and lecturers. In 1827 they both finished their studies at the University. It will be enough to show how widely different are the plans of the Almighty Providence that rules over us, from our purposes and arrangements, to say that the name of one of these young men was a name that has filled all the literary world—a name at which theologians in Europe and America have been accustomed for years to turn pale, and of which they have not yet lost their dread, and it will be many years before they shall lose their terror—no less a name than that of David Frederick Strauss, the author of the 'Life of Jesus;' and the other the name of William Nast, who has just spoken. In eight years from the time he left the University, Strauss had written that famous book, in comparison with which all that infidelity had done before was as nothing; that book of pride and power, of clear, acute, philosophical, and yet worldly and wicked thinking, which has puzzled Christendom and which puzzles it still. And in those eight years William Nast had come to America, with blasted hopes and fainting heart, with no sure Christianity, with no hope in this life, and with no hope and hardly any belief in the life to come; and in eight years he had been led by Providence, through many a lane of sorrow and darkness up to the hour when that memorable awakening occurred, which resulted in his glorious birth unto God. Though that great book of Strauss's has done and is doing an enormous work of evil there, it is not rash to say that what God has done in converting Wm. Nast here, and sending him to be the first German Missionary in this land, will more than counterbalance all that Strauss and his book have ever done. That Providence which always works by compensations, which never allows a poisonous plant to grow without planting in some other spot an antidote, raised up William Nast to counteract that evil work, and to be the instrument of converting thousands upon thousands of his fellow-countrymen here, and then to be a most powerful and potent agency to convert his Fatherland, to reconvert his Fatherland, rather, to bring it back to that glorious faith and sure religious experience, from which it has so widely wandered. And all this is a single answer to the question why we should send missions to Germany.

* * * * * * *

"Other objectors, educated and scientific men, ask why we send missionaries to Germany—that land so renowned for its scholarship and theology; that land all studded with cathedrals, filled with gymnasiums and high schools, the land that boasts the universities of the day.

"Dr. McClintock answered this question by relating some incidents which happened to him when in Germany, showing the great need of the people for religious instruction. He had been informed there were more than a thousand villages in Germany where there was never a sermon preached except by some wandering friar. And not only was there this need in the obscure villages, but the university towns and large cities required to be stirred up to new religious life. And that is the reason why missionaries should be sent to Germany. As Bro. Nast said, there is just as much need to send missionaries there to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ, as there was for the Lord to raise up John Wesley to preach the gospel in England.

"He said he might be considered extravagant, but he thought this was the greatest work they were called to do; for, when Germany should be reconverted; when those 2000 faithful pastors of theirs should be multiplied to 50,000; when the Spirit of God had breathed a new soul into those ribs of death, throughout that glorious land, filled with those strong-minded, bold and energetic men; when such men as William Nast were multiplied by thousands; he should not be afraid, under God, looking up to him for his blessing, and calling for the Pentecostal fire, and believing in its approach; he should not be afraid to promise, and very soon, the conversion of the world."

PARIS CORRESPONDENCE.

PARIS, May 13, 1852.

So many important and interesting events have taken place since my last letter, that I scarcely know how or where to begin. However, I shall take up religious matters first, leaving political matters for the end, if there be room.

Our religious anniversaries, or May meetings, have just been held in Paris. Of course, we cannot boast, as our brethren on the other side of the channel, of a hundred such anniversaries or more; every thing is still, comparatively speaking, in its infancy here. But we can, this year, speak of the excellence of our few meetings, of the large number of persons come from the country to attend them, of the marked improvements in the reports of the various societies, of the interesting facts they contain, and of the brotherly spirit that has pervaded the speakers and the hearers from beginning to end.

The custom is here to crowd those anniversaries, now twelve in number, in as small a space of time as possible; to begin them by a general prayer meeting of all the churches, and to terminate them by a meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, and a religious service in which the Lord's supper is distributed by the members of the different churches. This year the prayer meeting, held on the 26th April, was more numerously attended than it ever had been. At the concluding meeting, on the 5th May, about 100 persons took the Sacrament from the hands of Independent, Free Church, National, Lutheran and Wesleyan Ministers.

To begin with the Bible Societies, we have three at work in France.

1. The sole aim of the Protestant Bible Society is to distribute the Protestant copies of the Holy Scriptures, with or without the Apocrypha, to the Protestants of France. This association gives a testament to every youth, at the time of his or her confirmation, and a Bible to every newly married couple; 5000 testaments and 2000 bibles have thus been circulated last year. The receipts and sales amount to rather more than $7000. Expenses, $5600.

2. The French and Foreign Bible Society distributes the Scriptures, whole or in parts, but without the Apocrypha. It has on sale Protestant and Catholic versions. Last year it distributed, chiefly by means of colporteurs, 12,747 bibles, 90,387 testaments, and 3,380 detached portions of Scriptures. Receipts, $20,000, including $12,000 for sales. Expenses, $13,000. During the nineteen years of its existence, this society has distributed in France 1,072,692 copies of the Scriptures, whole or in parts. The report mentioned some very interesting facts, related by its colporteurs. One was that of a poor woman, whose cottage was burned, with all it contained, and who regretted nothing so much as the loss of her bible. She was overjoyed with pleasure when the colporteur offered to give her one. An old man was spoken of, as learning to read, though ninety-two years old, that he may be able to study the Bible. A colporteur in Belgium was said to have distributed 18,000 copies of the Scriptures in ten years, and to have exhorted more than 200,000 persons.

3. Besides these two societies, the British and Foreign Bible Society is very active in this country, where it has employed 62 colporteurs, last year, under the superintendence of an experienced agent, Mr. De Pressense. It appears that for the last ten years, this society has expended on an average $50,000 a year on France, and it has not been without good results, as numerous conversions have abundantly proved. Amongst others, Mr. De Pressense related the following anecdote: Ten years ago a colporteur of the society accosted on the road a man who seemed to be in a very bad humor, because it was found afterwards, he has just lost a lawsuit against one of his relations. He conversed a long time with him, and at length persuaded him to buy a New Testament. Two years ago this same man wrote to the agent of the Society in Paris, declaring that he had been converted by means of this testament, and was so desirous of doing some thing in order to spread the Scriptures, that he was ready, if allowed, to become a colporteur. He now is one of the best agents of the society, and has already presented two more colporteurs from the persons converted by his means.

These three societies have spread 120,000 copies of the Scriptures during the past year.

Our Home Missionary Societies are two in number, viz: The Evangelical Society and the Central Society.

1. The Evangelical Society is in the hands of dissenters. It was founded in 1833, and employed that year 1 minister, 1 evangelist or unordained traveling preacher, 2 schoolmasters, and 3 colporteurs. Now it has in various parts of France, 20 ordained ministers, 11 evangelists, 47 school-masters and mistresses; it also possesses a Normal school, which contains 32 students. This year, it has besides taken up the work of the American Swiss Committee, which was supported by the "American Union," of which Dr. Baird is, I think, president; this adds eleven evangelists to the number of its agents, who thus are nearly 100. According to the report, the labors of these agents are encouraging. The receipts are $30,000, which is a larger amount than in any preceding year, but the expenses are larger still, $35,000, which leaves a deficiency of $5000.

2. The Central Society is in the hands of the National Church. Its purpose is to supply ministers, and help of various kinds to localities where the Protestants are so few, that they are not entitled to have their church expenses paid by the State. The number of agents of this society was not stated. Receipts, nearly $10,000, which is $1600 more than last year. Expenses not quite $7000. There is nevertheless a deficiency of $950, because of a former debt, not yet paid. Pastor Frossard, one of the agents of the society, highly interested the meeting by the account of a visit he had just made to Estissac, a village of 1500 inhabitants near Troyes, where about 500 persons have abandoned the Church of Rome within the last twelve months, and become converts to Protestantism. He noticed the zeal with which the people had begun the building of a temple, without having any funds. Though he arrived in the village in the middle of the day without being expected, he was immediately asked to preach, the peasants were brought together, some from the fields, some from the neighboring market town, and in the short space of two hours, a large congregation was assembled to hear the word of life. The singing was led by the band of the place, consisting of six brass instruments. After the service, the pastor was met by two gensdarmes, sent by the priest, to ask for his passport. One of them begged his pardon for thus accosting him, and added he was obliged to do his duty. "I am pleased to see you perform your duty," answered Mr. Frossard; "I only wish everybody did the same. I have come to this country for the sole purpose of telling the inhabitants to do their duty, and you may be assured that if they were all Protestants you would have much less work to do."

The priests are of course very much enraged at such conversions, and they do all in their power to excite persecution against our converts. I am very sorry to say that in this case they seem to have succeeded, and orders have been given from the authorities to have the school-house shut at Estissac, and to suspend for the present the building of the temple.

The Paris Missionary Society, the only one of the kind in France, is supported by Christians of all denominations. It employs 20 missionaries, 18 of whom occupy 11 stations amongst the Bechuanas and the Bassoutos of South Africa. They have been severely tried during the past year, in consequence of the Caffre war, and if we are to believe the report read at the meeting, the English and their allies are as much to be blamed for this war as the natives themselves. Touching incidents were related, showing the influence of the gospel on these hitherto degraded people. In one case, Moletsane, a Bassouto chief, a friend of the French mission, obliged to repel the attacks of the British allies, put them to flight after killing 300 of their men. But he would not suffer his soldiers to pursue the enemy, and stopped them by saying: "Hasn't enough blood been shed like that?" He only lost fourteen men, who were afterwards found on the field of battle, each with his testament hanging with a string from their necks. The position of the Missionaries was a very trying one, for on the one hand, the unconverted natives believed them to be in the pay of the whites, and therefore looked upon them with suspicion; and on the other hand, they could not have any friendly relations with the whites. However, no station was abandoned, and encouraging results were obtained in some places; 302 passports or certificates of intelligence and good conduct were delivered last year, by the missionaries, to natives going to the Cape, to hire themselves out. In the station of Bethulia, the converts had subscribed $156 to the Society, notwithstanding the failure of their crops. At Carmel 17 neophytes were baptised last New Year's day. The Committee have announced their intention of beginning a mission amongst the Mahommedans of Algeria, and of opening in Paris a missionary institution, in order to form and train missionaries. Six candidates have already offered themselves. Receipts, $18,000; expenses, $20,000. There is, however, no deficiency, as a good deal of money was on hand from the preceding years.

The Society for Promoting Primary Instruction amongst the Protestants of France, has, since it was founded, twenty-three years ago, spent $88,000, in grants for schools, and helped in various ways 1043 school-masters and mistresses. It has a Normal school, with 22 pupils, (the largest number it can accommodate for the present,) under the superintendence of an experienced and most able Swiss minister, Pastor Gauthey. The operations of last year are as follows: 22 schools opened, 99 grants made, personal pecuniary help given to 11 male and 7 female teachers, 46½ bursaries (?) paid for the training of teachers in different Normal schools. Receipts, $8700; expenses, $8400. The Society is presided over by Guizot, the celebrated writer, Professor and ex-Minister of Louis Philippe. He took the chair at the last anniversary, and made the opening speech with his usual eloquence and talent, but I am sorry to say that he showed such tendencies to Popery, as displeased very much the Protestant Christians, and caused the Roman Catholic paper to say that Mr. Guizot was coming over to the Pope. He began by saying how pleased he was to speak about primary instruction in a temple, and thus to unite education and religion, for if it be true that instruction is nothing without education, it is also quite true and necessary to add, that education exists not without religion. Experience shows this both in England and in France, where the Church in the one, and the State in the other, have taken up the cause of primary instruction. England, however, has an advantage over France, according to the learned professor, inasmuch as education is already christian there, whilst in France, it has a tendency to become so. The National Society, and the British and Foreign School Society are at the head of education amongst our neighbors; here it is still the State that takes the lead. Still the Church is doing much in France, and will always do more. The Protestants have their society, which has done something, though little; the Catholics have numerous teachers of schools. Here Mr. Guizot enumerated with a certain complacency the resources of the Romish Church, putting them on a level with Protestant efforts. "She (the Romish Church) has to-day in France 25 male religious associations, and 85 female ones, devoted to this great work; 7590 schools of the Freres of the different denominations, and 8300 schools of Sisters receive about 980,000 children. Amongst others, the "Brethren of the Christian Doctrine, (Freres de la doctrine Chretienne,) number 4950; they have 893 schools and 38 seminaries, where the pupils are boarded. The 'Sisters of St. Joseph' are 4500, and have 700 schools," and so on. "Do not those details prove that within the bosom of the Christian Church, Catholic and Protestant, the movement in favor of popular instruction is active, general, and already efficacious."

Well might the Union, the political paper alluded to above, exclaim: "For Mr. Guizot, between Catholics and Protestants, this zeal is all one, and the end is the same. It is Christian education, given by a Christian Church!!"

We do not admit this at all, and cannot but suspect the author of such a declaration to have a decided leaning towards Popery. No, the instruction given by the Romish "Freres" and "Sœurs" is not Christian; it is on the contrary the most stupid, when not the most immoral, of all instruction, and we wonder that any Protestant, and particularly Mr. Guizot, who certainly must know their doings, could have placed their schools on the same moral level as those of Protestant and pious teachers.

But to return to the anniversaries, these, and others, which I shall mention in my next, are held in the afternoon and evening, the mornings being devoted to Pastoral conferences, which are of two kinds: General Conferences, open to all ministers, to whatever denomination they belong; and special conferences, open to ministers of the State Churches only. They were attended by about 70 ministers, the greater part of whom had come from the provinces, in order to be present at the religious anniversaries. The question discussed in the General Conferences was the following: "The Position of Protestantism, in presence of Popery in the actual state of things, the dangers that threaten it, and the means to avert them, in whatever relates to the liberties of the Press, the Pulpit, and the School." In the course of a lengthened discussion which lasted three days, from 9 to 12 o'clock each day, many facts were brought out which showed an attempt at persecution on the part of the Papists, but the general impression seemed to be that the Government had no hand in them, and was not ill-disposed against Protestants. No resolution was come to. The special conferences were occupied with examining the decree of the 26th March, which reorganize the National Reformed Church, as I explained a month ago. Some ministers raised a very strong feeling against this decree and against Pastor Coquerel, an ex-Representative, who was found to have had a hand in framing it. He and his party supported it on the contrary. The discussion was, at times, very hot, indeed, and ended by the following mitigated resolution, which was unanimously adopted, both parties voting in its favor: "The Conference, whilst acknowledging the benevolent intentions which have animated the Government in its decree of the 26th March, is opinion that the Reformed Church, regretting what there has been in that decree sudden and irregular, must make every reserve for the future, for its religious independence, and asks that nothing which concerns it, be regulated henceforth without its co-operation." Thus the members of the Conferences submit to the decree, whilst they protest against its having been made without the co-operation of the Church.

I had intended to have mentioned the fete of the "Eagles," which took place last Monday, and was very brilliant, indeed, but space forbids. Paris is filled to overflowing with strangers who have come for the fetes, to the number of more than 200,000. The fireworks will be let off to-night, and promise to be the finest ever had in Paris. The crowd will be immense; may there be no accident! As our house is well situated to see them, I expect our balcony to be filled with friends.

J. P. C.

SHREVEPORT CORRESPONDENCE.

On a recent visit to the country I was glad to observe what will afford great pleasure to your merchants, as it assuredly does to the rural community, that the present growing crops augur profit and plenty for the coming year. A luxurious growth of corn covers the hills in every direction, sporting its crested tassels and burnished silks, and waving like a sea of greenness, far as the eye can explore. The cotton plant, owing to the unfriendly influences of cold and wet, has been retarded in its growth, but, under the influences of more favorable weather, it is now fast recovering its wonted healthfulness, and will soon assume a vigorous and growing aspect. It was my good fortune to meet with the circuit preacher at one of his mission appointments, and I was honored in the use of his hymn-book and Bible. The importance and agreeableness of this peculiar work never before impressed me so thoroughly as then. Every thing seemed impressive, beautiful, solemn. The rude desk and ungarnished cabin did not detract from the interest of the occasion. Ethiopia was here stretching out her hands, and the Church, in the person of the Missionary, was meeting the demand—dispensing the bread of life to her sons. There they were gathered in considerable numbers, on Saturday night, after a week of labor, and the interest depicted in every countenance showed that toil had not caused them to forget nor to neglect their stated time of worship. Their favorite part, singing, was done in earnest—if not with the understanding, certainly with the spirit; and in prayer, every petition met a deep and sincere response. As hearers, these poor blacks might be held up as models to the church-going world. The mighty truths of the Gospel seem to break in upon their crude and uncultivated minds with all of their God-derived energies. They seem to stir the inmost depths of the soul, and to call up the dormant sense and powers of the moral being. It is the meridian effulgence beaming upon an atmosphere of intellectual and spiritual darkness; it is the soul arising from torpor, and looking out upon the splendors which cluster around an immortal destiny. Services were concluded in the Methodist way by calling for mourners. A good bench, stout and long, was immediately thronged with a company of agonizing seekers. To me it was an affecting sight to see these poor creatures, thus bowed, humbled, broken, groaning for deliverance, and to be instrumental in loosing them from the shackles of sin, was to my mind a privilege worthy an archangel's ministrations; and more enviable is the position of those to whom this privilege falls, than the situation of those who are doomed to nervous toil, that they may meet the demands of an enlightened and overweening fastidiousness. What a glorious inheritance of labor has fallen to the lot of Southern Methodism, in the demands of slavery upon her evangelical energies? When will she arouse those energies? And when will she bring her munificent resources to bear upon this all important interest?

The claim of the slave upon us for the Gospel is imperative; it is of right the true and providential remuneration for his position and labor, and it is at our peril that his claim is disregarded. The country—the whole country—and especially the Church, needs to be awakened to this subject, and until this duty is fully met, the South may expect the curses of a discriminating Providence upon her political, domestic, and religious institutions. Very truly did Randolph of Roanoke say, that "the heathen are at our door." Thousands of our negro population, who have never heard the Gospel, are now sitting upon the very threshold of Southern Methodism, whilst from the observatory of ecclesiastical ambition, her telescopic philanthropy sweeps the Californias and the Empire of the Celestians. There can be no objection, certainly, to expansive and world-wide views of the Gospel aggression. This is as it should be, and much honor redounds to those noble-hearted men, who are urging the enlargement of our foreign missions; but is it not time to scan the home-field more narrowly, and see that these starving beneficiaries of the Church receive the bread of life? Some thing should be done to press this matter closely and intense home to the consciences of the people: It is not to be done by cramping or contracting our operations abroad, but by a studied, persevering and zealous effort, of the ministry and laity, to open the eyes of the slaveholder and of the home Zion to the fearful responsibilities which press upon them here. Probably were every foreign mission[illegible] ry recalled, and the cost of their support withheld, the colored missionary work would not be a whit bettered thereby, because the evil does not grow out of an over drainage for foreign supply but is rather the result of apathy upon this particular point.

It affords your correspondent great pleasure, as likely enough it does yourself, to contemplate the fraternal issue of the "new birth" controversy. It would cost me no scruple whatever to occupy Dr. Clapp's pulpit now and I except to the brotherhood of this distinguished divine. Our practice and devotion are often truer than our theories or theology, and I am willing to believe, that with all of his errors of doctrine, he has a true heart. But whilst I cannot repel the fellowship of erroneous sincerity, I wish to enter a protest against some of the sentiments of his late communication. Original sin and vicarious atonement, upon the denial of which the main argument of my "vindication" was based, so far from receiving his assent are again virtually rejected, and therefore my conclusions must rest where they are. What else does this language signify, "I do not believe that Jesus died to appease the wrath of his Father?" If not, why did he die at all? This is a view lower than Arianism, and smacks exceedingly of the teachings of Socinus. "I believe that all men, in consequence of their connection with Adam, become sinners as soon as they are capable of sinning." How carefully does this sentence avoid the true issue, that men are born in sin! They become sinners, and how! (I quote one of the Dr.'s sermons,) "through the influence of education and example." But were the unsatisfactory and equivocal character of this letter, the sentiment that creedsare to be condemned, will, I am sure, meet the hearty disapprobation of all who love the truth. Sincere and good men may oppose them, but in so doing, they are unwittingly giving in the free thinking age, a most potent and baleful element of Infidelity. The attempt of Dr. Clapp to detract from the importance of a definite theology concerning the atonement must be looked upon with much suspicion. This sheet-lightning divinity, which answers Bible! Bible! to every interrogatory, with ever coming to a point upon any subject, is, I fear, the legitimate forerunner of a bold and extravagant skepticism.

Address

Of the Board of Directors of the New Orleans Jackson and Great Northern Railroad Company to the Citizens of New Orleans.

FELLOW-CITIZENS:—In view of the election to be held on Monday next, for the purpose of determining on the sale [illegible] or rejection of the ordinance for subscribing to the stock of the Company confided to our administration, we deem it our duty to lay before you the present position of the enterprise, the prospects of success, and the probable returns of the road, with its influence on the progress and prosperity of our city.

It is known to you that this road is not intended merely to connect New Orleans with the town of Jackson, in the State of Mississippi, but that it is the only link now required in the great chain of roads already in progress, which will bring us in immediate contact with a population of 15,000,000 of souls, thereby extending to an incalculable amount the social and commercial intercourse between New Orleans and all that portion of the immense valley lying east of the Mississippi river. There is no one generation in this statement. Charters are already granted, subscriptions already made. State aid in Mississippi and Tennessee already accorded, by which the [illegible] our road from Jackson to Florence, and from Florence to Nashville, is secured. This line of road from New Orleans to Nashville intersects the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, the Charleston and Memphis road, thus giving us direct railroad communication with the Atlantic seaboard and with the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys; and it will give its connection with the railroads now in actual progress through Virginia, conduct us in almost an air line to Baltimore, Washington, Philadelphia and New York.

We have been actively engaged since the organization of the company in preparing the measures necessary to put the entire road between New Orleans and Jackson under contract during the present year. As fast as it can be located by engineers who have been engaged for that purpose, whose arrival is expected within a month, it will be advertised for contract, and we entertain no doubt that by the 1st January, 1854, the entire road from New Orleans to Jackson will be graded in readiness to receive the iron, and that the whole road will be in active operation before the end of that year.

The spirit which has been awakened on the entire line through the State of Mississippi, is based on the condition that you will respond to the action of your Municipal Council, and that you will not falter now that success is within your grasp. In the single county of Madison, in that State, we confidently anticipate aid to the amount of five hundred thousand dollars, more than half of which has already been subscribed. In other counties the subscriptions are advancing with almost equal rapidity, and in Tennessee the State itself has agreed to give one thousand dollars per mile for providing the iron. The whole of this vast scheme, so pregnant with [illegible] results on your prosperity, your fortunes and the future growth of your city, depends on your vote on Monday next. If you sustain us in our efforts, an unequalled career of extended commercial enterprise, with all its train of benefits, is before you. If you reject the golden opportunity, the reaction will be as sudden as it will be ruinous; for months will not elapse before the effects will be felt in pervading all branches and affecting all kinds of property. The confidence inspired by the mere hope of obtaining the road, and the effect of which is already evident in the increased activity among our mechanics and merchants, in the increased number of buildings now being constructed, and in the increased value of real estate, will disappear as if by magic, and not a few of you, to your surprising silence, alike careless at the failure of all our efforts to awaken you to a sense of what is due to yourselves and your families, will abandon their home to its fate, and seek elsewhere communities where their enterprise will be met in a different spirit and their energies secure suitable reward.

In two or three years from Monday next, if your vote shall respond favorably to the call made on you by the trains of cars will be hourly entering your city, laden with the produce of fifteen States, and bringing you passengers from the extremes of the Republic in less than three days. New Orleans, from her climate, her unbounded hospitality, social and hospitable character of her citizens, and the attraction of her public amusements, will become the fashionable winter residence of thousands of wealthy planters with their families from the North and West. Hotels and stores and hotels will be crowded with these visitors in the months. Our merchants will become importers as well as exporters; our direct trade with Europe will receive a sudden and rapid extension as soon as the western demand from which we are cut off by the want of sure and speedy communication, shall find permanent stocks of foreign goods in the stores of our dealers, accessible at all seasons, and all stages of water. Our increased population will secure ready employment, and liberal wages to the mechanic, the drayman, the laborer of every kind. Our markets will be abundantly and cheaply supplied at all seasons. Life in New Orleans will become more agreeable and attractive as the comforts of home are augmented and cheapened. And, above all, our citizens will no longer be mere birds of passage, migrating at each [illegible] will become permanently fixed among us, [illegible] wealth by their home expenditure, and our influence by the weight always attached to a large stable population.

These are but feeble and inadequately expressed views of a portion of the great benefits you are to derive, and what is the cost? A mere original investment in the stock of this road, for a term of six years, of one half dollar in every hundred dollars that you own in real estate. For that paltry sum you have been burthened with far heavier taxes laid to pay the interest on an old debt entailed on you by mismanaged city affairs. A special tax for that purpose of 1 or even 2 per cent. per annum has been no unusual call on you, and has been promptly met without the least prospect of return. How then can you hesitate in view of the enormous advantages to be derived to submit to so small a burthen as one-half of 1 per cent., to be returned to you in a work which will encourage labor, multiply the resources of industry, increase your population and augment the value of your property, even if you obtained no direct dividends from your stock. But so far from this being the case, you are merely asked to make an investment of this trifling amount in a stock which will yield heavy returns in dividends. We can demonstrate to you that an work on this continent ever offered a surer guarantee of large profits, and we will give you the estimates for your own examination that you may appreciate the reasons which induce this conviction.

Before doing this, however, we will remark that by no other plan than the one which is now prepared for raising the means to build the road can justice and equality be obtained. About one-third of the property of this city, owned by absentees, by companies or by successions of deceased persons. All of this property will be greatly increased in value and its revenues augmented by the proposed improvement, without one dollar of contributions from the owners, unless this tax be voted. The St. Charles and St. Louis hotels, the banks and their property, the fire companies and their property, the succession of John McDonough, Fowler and Paulding, the buildings owned by the wealthy men who live abroad on the route of real estate in this city, will all be exempted from taxation in such works but will reap the benefit of the enterprise, the capital and the labor of those who remain, are identified with the fortunes of the city, unless this tax be supported by your votes. Such a result is repugnant to common justice, and ought not to receive your sanction.

We will now proceed with the statistics of the road, and leave you to judge whether we overstate its probable profits as a mere investment or speculation. In doing, this we will take the whole line to Nashville as one road, although the capital required to be raised from here to Jackson is only three millions of dollars. We do this because propositions are already made to us to convey to the stockholders and subscriptions of all the other links in the chain, and to give us the control of the entire road and its appurtenances.

The distance from New Orleans to Nashville by way of Jackson is assumed to be about 550 miles, and the entire cost of the construction and equipment of a railroad of a single track over this distance is estimated at ten millions of dollars. By its intersections, and connections with other roads, it will furnish the facility of traveling from New Orleans to Memphis in twenty-four hours, to Cairo in twenty-four hours, to Nashville in twenty-four hours, to Louisville in thirty hours, to Cleveland on Lake Erie in forty-eight hours, to Baltimore via the Memphis and Charleston, or the Virginia roads, in forty-eight hours; and at Chattanooga, by diverging on to the Georgia roads, the passengers from New Orleans can be landed at Charleston or Savannah in forty-eight hours. In short, the extension of this road to the Tennessee river will place New Orleans in contact by railroad communication with the Capital of every State in the Union east of the Mississippi river, reducing the average time of travel to the most remote to seventy-two hours, and diminishing the expense in like proportion.

Our city, from which the road is to start, has a population of 130,000, and the cost of the road will not exceed ten millions of dollars.

The system of South Carolina railroads, starts from Charleston with a population of 40,000, and at a cost of near nine millions of dollars. Our road runs through an eminently fertile and productive country for its entire length, after traversing some twenty miles of low ground near the city. Their roads, for great distances, pass through regions entirely insignificant in population and production. Our road is about five hundred and fifty miles in length. Their whole system is only 240 miles in length. Yet the gross receipts of these Carolina roads, in the year 1851, reached one million of dollars, and after defraying expenses, interest on loans, and a reserve fund of more than one per cent., yielded a dividend of seven per cent. to the stockholders. If such be the results of the enterprise of Carolina; if roads in other States have been self-sustaining and dividend-paying roads, at an original outlay always double, and frequently fourfold that of ours, what results may not be anticipated from our improvement, passing through a country of gigantic resources, full of wealth, of profund, of population, and of wants that requires an active intercommunication between city and country—a road that commands by its connections and intersections a greater extent of country than any similar work in America.

In estimating the results of this road, it is not to be forgotten, that if our delay in undertaking works of this kind has been unfortunate in its effects on our progress, there are some counterbalancing advantages which will form a source of profit. We can build roads now with greater efficiency and at half the cost of roads built twenty years ago. Science has advanced, experience has imparted her lessons, materials have diminished in price, labor is cheaper, more effective and more accessible, and the heavy item of iron is at less than half its former price. These are some of the causes that make this investment one of certain heavy returns.

We assume that a great railroad from New Orleans to Nashville, with an adequate equipment for the necessities of its service, will yield returns for the transportation of passengers both ways, for freight or produce brought to New Orleans and supplies carried back, which at rates now current will amount to three millions of dollars. This amount is less than the present annual and rapidly increasing gross revenue of the New York and Erie Railroad, only 460 miles in length, and will be derived from the following sources:

200,000 through and way passengers at an average of $5	$1,500,000
500,000 bales of cotton at $1 50	300,000
Agricultural and mineral productions of Tennessee, Virginia and Kentucky	500,000
Horses, mules, cattle, sheep, etc	100,000
Merchandize, groceries, and supplies of all kinds from New Orleans to the interior	600,000
	$3,000,000
If 40 per cent. of this amount be deducted for expenses, according to the experience of other Southern roads	1,200,000
There would be left a net receipt of	$1,800,000

This amount being equivalent to an interest of 18 per cent. on the investment.

We do not mean to say that so heavy a dividend would be declared or desirable, but we show, as we think, conclusively, that after allowing for any possible errors or over-calculations, the receipts of the road would suffice to make the stock one paying a dividend of eight or ten per cent., besides leaving an ample surplus for extending and improving the accommodation to the public in accordance with the increasing business of the company, and justifying a constant diminuation in the rates of toll for passengers and merchandise, so as to accomplish the great purpose of the work, the growth and prosperity of our city.

It is the earnest conviction of these facts, fellow-citizens, that has imposed on us the duty of laying this address before you. It is the intense desire we feel to see our city assume the proud rank which nature seems to have designed for it, which makes our duty a pleasant one, and we tell a "labor of love," for which we shall feel amply repaid by the satisfaction of seeing our efforts result in your increased happiness and prosperity.

JAMES ROSS, President.

Address

Of the Board of Directors of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad, to the property holders of the city of New Orleans.

FELLOW-CITIZENS—In appealing to you for aid and assistance in the construction of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad, the Board of Directors have thought it incumbent on them to present you some facts in relation to this grand enterprise, to which they most respectfully call your attention.

This company is permanently organized under a charter to construct a railroad from Algiers to Washington, in the Parish of St. Landry, via Thibodaux, Borwick's Bay, New Iberia, etc., a distance of about 100 miles, by which all this rich section of our State, which is almost entirely cut off from access to this city during several months in the year, will be placed within a few hours proximity, at all times and at all seasons.

There is no portion of Louisiana which affords the same advantages for the development of these resources, in which the inhabitants of this city depend for a supply of the necessary articles of food. By the construction of this road, our supplies of beef, mutton, poultry, the products of the dairy, fruits, vegetables, etc., etc., would be considerably increased, and be sold at greatly reduced rates; the mechanic, the laboring man, in fact every housekeeper in the city would derive an immediate and material benefit from the opening of this road.

In connection with this, it can not be denied that one of the prominent causes which has retarded our growth as a city is the high price or cost of living, and anything tending towards ameliorating this heavy burden and greatly increasing our prosperity, will tend to augment our population, which will add to our resources. What we most require is a permanent population, actively and profitably employed. Situated as we are at present, we have to depend entirely on the precarious navigation of our rivers and bayous; all of our energies are called in requisition during a few months in the year to meet its exigencies, after which we remain comparatively idle till the rivers rise the next season, and so on in succession; trade, in all its branches, is thereby rendered precarious, and the enterprise of our merchants completely paralyzed. The last seasons, navigation opened unusually late, and thousands of thousands of dollars have been sunk by the delay of two months, when nearly all the intercourse with the interior was suspended, during which time obligations were daily maturing, and had to be provided for at almost any sacrifice, to maintain credit, and our citizens deprived of the benefits of our interior trade during the most important part of the season.

Fellow-citizens, these views are comparatively of importance in calculating the benefits to flow to the stockholders, and citizens generally, of New Orleans, from the construction of this road. The entire trade of Texas is within our reach, if we will extend our arms out to grasp it. Our charter provides for an extension of this road into Texas, and with this view the road will be located, and constructed in such a manner as to accommodate the enormous freight and travel which this route must necessarily command when extended into Texas, and eventually into Arkansas and Missouri, to St. Louis.

The superior sagacity and enterprise of our sister cities of Baltimore, Philadelphia, Charleston, Savannah and Mobile, have already railroads in operation or in the course of construction, extending to the Ohio, Tennessee and Mississippi, by which a large portion of the produce of those rich valleys has been taken from us. But we are thus far without a road on the west of the Mississippi, and the trade of a region of country large enough in extent to form an empire, and capable of sustaining a population of several millions, is now open to us, if we will take advantage of it at once. There is no time for delay; a few years more and we may find to our cost that the favorable moment is gone, and that we have lost the trade of the West, as we have already done of a portion of that east of the Mississippi. The enterprising people who are settling Texas, with a rapidity almost unequalled in the annals of emigration, will soon command sufficient influence to undertake similar works themselves, and may be less disposed to join us. Now, we know that, not only are they favorably disposed towards us, but are willing to contribute liberally, in land, or even build the road themselves, if we will meet them at the Sabine. And so likewise will Arkansas and St. Louis, if we will meet them at the line between Louisiana and Arkansas.

This road will also tend to develope the resources of our own State, by inviting immigration and bringing into immediate cultivation millions of acres of as fertile lands as can be found in any State of the Union, thereby increasing our wealth and population, the benefits of which must accrue to the citizens of New Orleans, in the disposal of the rich products of the soil and the profits in the return supplies.

The private subscriptions now amount to nearly $750,000—say $437,000 on the part of the city and Algiers, and about $310,000 from a portion of the parishes through which the road will be located. The books were only open from four to twelve days, and were closed by a preparatory to the organization of the company and election of the Board of Directors, but they have been again opened since last issue, and will so continue during four months, in the parishes of Jefferson, St. Charles, St. John the Baptist, St. James, Assumption, Lafourche Interior, Terrebonne, St. Mary, St. Martin, Lafayette, Vermillion, St. Landry, Orleans right bank, and at the office of the company in this city. Books will also be sent in a short time to the parishes beyond Opelousas, on the line of the road to Texas, and the branch to Arkansas. We confidently rely on large private subscriptions from all the parishes, in addition to those already received, and are assured that if any deficient, a resort to taxation will be had and cheerfully acceded to.

The Board of Directors have been assiduously engaged since its organization in making the necessary arrangements, and can now frankly state that in a short time the location of the road will be commenced, and its construction prosecuted with vigor. The road will be commenced at several points at once—one of these points will be from the Mississippi above the city, where the main line leaves the river for the Lafourche, at or near Thibodaux and the line to Berwick's Bay, and from Washington to San Jacinto on the Teche. By pushing these portions of the road under contract in advance, the planters of Lafourche, Opelousas, Attakapas, Terrebonne and Lafourche Interior, will be placed within a few hours of New Orleans, to connect by steamboat at the temporary terminus at the river. The company will thus be at once deriving more than sufficient revenue to defray current expenses while the other sections are being completed. It is determined to place the whole route under contract, and complete it at the earliest possible moment.

The terminus of the road will be on the other side of the river, opposite the centre of the Third District, but each district of New Orleans will be accommodated with a depot at such places as may be found most advantageous to its wants.

The Board of Directors of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad in recapitulating some few of the great advantages which may derive to the property holders of the city from this undertaking, confidently rely on their good judgment in sustaining this truly Louisiana Road, the benefits of which are almost incalculable to all classes of our population. New Orleans is preeminently a commercial city—and so long as our commerce thrives so long will the owners of real estate derive an income from the capital invested in this species of property, which must increase or decrease with the growth of the city. Population will always follow the laws of trade, and go where it derives the most benefit from its labor; not so with your houses and lots; their site is fixed, and here they must remain, be our prospects good or bad. Look for a moment at the benefits which railroads have conferred in aid to other cities, in the enhanced value of real estate which has been brought about by the greater amount of commerce and traffic, which these roads, in opening new avenues, never fail to produce, and as a necessary consequence, tend to invite population and capital, and which invariably follow in their train.

The value of the real estate of New Orleans is now about seventy-five millions of dollars, on which we ask a contribution in stock subscription of two per cent., say $1,500,000, payable in six years, or at the rate of one-third of one per cent. per annum. For this you will receive certificates for an equal amount in the stock of the road. This can scarcely be called taxation, as we design giving you a fair equivalent for each dollar temporary loan, reimbursable at a future period with annual dividends thereon; and to those property holders of limited means whose tax would be under fifty dollars per annum, we confidently assert that more than that amount will be saved yearly, to each family, by the cheapening of their daily marketings, to say nothing of the advantages in common with the large property holders in the enhanced value of their estate.

It is admitted that property is already heavily burthened with taxation, and unless something be done, the evil must continue to exist—we can overcome this by opening new avenues of trade, adding to our resources, increasing our interior trade, attracting population by the cheapness, diversity and value of our products, and the diminished cost of the first necessaries of life, creating at home a permanent population which will require houses and stores, and as a rapid increase in the value of real estate will follow, and this course alone will produce a diminution in rate of taxation. Traders and others can afford to pay higher rents when their business is proportionally profitable, and it is not saying too much, when we assert that the prosecution of the New Orleans, Opelousas, and Great Western Railroad, along the Red River parishes, and its ultimate extension into Texas, Arkansas, and St. Louis, may be compared to the discovery of a new Mississippi. The most sanguine could scarcely now calculate the extent and value of the commerce and travel on this road in ten years time, if we act immediately and before any rival scheme shall have supplanted us in the way.

A new era is about to dawn on our State and city if you only aid in developing it. We have succeeded in making New Orleans one city, it now remains for us to make it what nature intended it for, a great one. The present Constitution of the State, which has so effectually and unfortunately tied us down, will soon be replaced by a new one; no doubt more in accordance with the spirit of the age—all fatal restrictions will be removed, capital will then flow to us for safe and profitable investment, and with the projected railroad improvements, will be placed beyond the reach of contingency, a career of real prosperity, founded on the solid accumulation of wealth, will soon touch the most skeptical that we have not miscalculated the benefits of these great works of internal improvement.

Aid us, then, fellow-citizens, in forwarding this undertaking—your prosperity is now at stake, and the decision is in your own hands—second the efforts of these enterprising friends in the city and country who have so liberally contributed by subscription, and who will devote their time to the completion of this noble enterprise—if you refuse the desperate aid, such adverse action must tend to depress still further the true value of your property, by convincing the world that we are not disposed to better our condition, and will sink us still lower in credit and reputation.

Obituary Notices.

WILLIAM T. WALL entered as a student in the preparatory department of Centenary College, February 11, 1850. In October, 1850, he was advanced to the Freshman Class. His perceptive faculties were fine, his memory tenacious, his judgment sound, and his ability to fix his attention and concentrate his whole mind upon his studies, almost wonderful. The consequence was, that he had no superior in his class. He construed the most difficult passages in the Latin and Greek languages with ease and accuracy, and the solution of the most difficult mathematical problems was accomplished with equal facility. He closed the Freshman year with great honor to himself, and was regularly advanced to the Sophomore Class, which he entered in October, 1851, during the whole time he was with us, he never received a demerit mark. He was obedient and faithful, and received the affection of his class-mates, and the approbation of every member of the Faculty. In April, he felt that a few weeks of recreation were absolutely necessary to his health, which had become impaired by long-continued and too close application to his college duties. I gave him permission to spend a few weeks at his home in Harrisonburg, La.

Shortly after his arrival there, he was attacked with local inflammation, which soon became general, and terminated his earthly career, May 20th. While with us he made a profession of religion, joined the Methodist Church on probation, and at the end of six months was admitted into full connection. So far as was known to us, he was a consistent Christian, and he left cheering evidence that he was ready when the messenger came. As a son, a pupil, an associate, a Christian, he was an example. Young, lovely, pious and talented—he is gone "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." With every prospect of a bright career of usefulness and honor, he has been cut off in the 19th year of his age, leaving many friends to mourn his early death.

R. H. RIVERS.

Centenary College, June, 1852.

BROTHER MCTEIRE: MARY E. NIXON, my daughter, was born August 2d, 1836, and died May 17th, 1852. She was an amiable, well-disposed child, and early became deeply impressed with the importance of becoming religious. She obtained religion at Union Camp Meeting, near this place, a little more than two years ago. The same day she died. I said, "Mary, do you remember how happy you were when you got religion?" She said, "O yes!". "Do you feel the same peace and happiness now?" "Yes, the same." "Are you afraid to die?" "No." "Do you feel fully satisfied, that if you should die now, you will go to heaven?" She replied with great confidence, "Yes." I left her a few minutes, and when I returned, she extended both hands towards me, and with a sweet, innocent smile, said, "O pa, my dear Saviour has come!" And then said, "Who are these that are here—don't you see them?" I replied "No—how do they look?" She said, "They are beautiful!" She then said "I am going up, up." I said, "Up to heaven?" She said "Yes, up—I am in the middle of the river—I shall soon be over." She then commenced breathing like one falling to sleep, and quietly passed over to the other shore, where with "saints in light" she will live forever. "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Affectionately yours, etc.,

THOMAS NIXON.

General Intelligence.

Arrival of the El Dorado.

TWELVE DAYS LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

LATER FROM THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The U. S. Mail Steamship El Dorado, Capt. Mitchell, U. S. N., commanding, arrived yesterday from Aspinwall, (Navy Bay,) via Havana, having sailed from the former port on the 9th and the latter on the 15th instant.

MINING INTELLIGENCE.—The news from the mines continues to be of the most cheering description. Water is plenty at nearly all points and the miners are doing well. Quartz mining is increasing, and parties continue to make large investments in machinery, etc., to facilitate operations. A company of four San Francisco capitalists are about to commence quartz mining on Hunting Bar, Middle Fork of the Calveras, on the most extensive scale. The entire weight of their machinery is 200,000 pounds. The freight on the boiler alone, from Stockton to the mines, will be $10,0.

Four men, working a claim in Tuolumne county, had averaged a pound of pure gold a day for several weeks.

Mr. Ross, formerly of Louisiana, had recently discovered an exceedingly rich lead of gold in Tuolumne county.

LEGISLATIVE.—The Legislature adjourned on the 5th instant, after a very protracted session of four months.

FRENCH IMMIGRANTS.—A number of French immigrants have arrived in San Francisco. The Alta says that they are composed of the better class of citizens, who do not come here merely for the purpose of accumulating a pile to spend elsewhere, but for the purpose of establishing themselves for life.

INDIANS.—The difficulties with the Indians in Southern California continue, and the accounts from San Diego are not as satisfactory as had been anticipated.

There appears to be a disposition in Lower California to perpetuate hostility with the Yumas and other warlike tribes on the southern borders.

A detachment of U. S. Infantry and Dragoons recently returned to San Diego, from a three months' campaign to the Gila and Colorado. This expedition, commanded by Major Heintzleman and Major Fitzgerald, two as gallant and able officers as the service can boast, was one of very considerable hardship and privation, though not attended with any real suffering, but one of terror and devastation to the savages.

The Indians near Bidwell's Bar and at Stringtown met on a fight on the 10th inst. Half a dozen or more of them were killed. The whole number engaged was nearly three hundred.

Two Indians have been hung at Stringtown. In that section most of the chiefs and honest men among the Indians known to be friendly, have procured certificates from miners and merchants well known, that they are good, etc., which they carefully wrap up and carry with them, and seem to take great satisfaction in presenting their credentials to every man they meet with a rifle.

THE CHINESE.—Chinese are daily arriving at San Francisco, and the excitement relative to their settlement in the State is augmenting.

The total Chinese population now resident in California is estimated at 12,000, and its increase will probably be from 50,000 to 100 between this and the 1st January next.

The public feeling awakened in the minds of the subject of Chinese immigration, by the famous Woodby bill, and subsequent discussions of the subject, appears to have subsided to a great degree. The papers state that the number and character of this people were much exaggerated and misrepresented, and in some districts they had been driven from the mines at short notice. In others, however, the miners held meetings, adopted their course of policy, put up the mining claims of the Chinamen at auction, gave the owners the proceeds of the sales, and told them to go away.

A meeting of miners was held at Foster's Bar on the 2d inst., when it was resolved that the Chinamen be requested to leave the precinct, and Atchison's Bar within four days.

At a miner's meeting recently held at Centreville, Eldorado county, the Chinese there were notified to leave, and none others are to be allowed to come thither.

The Marysville Express states that a grand fight occurred between about one hundred and fifty Chinese, and thirty Americans at Atchison's Bar. The informant of the Express says the Celestials were decidedly in the wrong, and that they got most beautifully whipped.

SENTENCE ACCOMPLISHED.—An appeal having been taken to the Supreme Court in the case of a man named Tamper, sentenced to death for grand larceny, the sentence has been affirmed, and will be carried into execution.

MISCELLANEOUS.—The Methodists of Marysville have subscribed $5,200 towards school enterprise. The fine brick building for the purpose will be completed forthwith.

It is now thought that the dreadful fatality heretofore attending cholera in Marysville and vicinity, was owing to the use of damaged flour which was sold there in large quantities.

Business in San Francisco is improving.

Nine State prisoners, confined in the jail at San Francisco, made their escape in the night, by means of a false key. None of them have been caught.

LEAD ORE.—A gentleman of Stockton has discovered a vein of lead ore, in Tuolumne county, said to be very rich.

THE NEW CUSTOM HOUSE AT SAN FRANCISCO.—The site for this building has already been "filled in," been put in possession of the government contractor. It is embraced in the square bounded by Washington, Sansome, Jackson and Battery streets. The foundation of the edifice is to be built of Quincy granite, and the remainder of upper stories of brick, manufactured by a new apparatus which Mr. Adams (the contractor) has brought out with him, and which will be put in operation near the city.

FROM THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

OPENING OF PARLIAMENT.—By an arrival at San Francisco, Honolulu papers to the 17th of April have been received. The Polynesian gives a high sounding description of the opening of Parliament on the 15th. The building in which the ceremonies took place is capable of containing between two and three thousand persons, and it was densely filled on the occasion.

After the benediction by the Chaplain of the House of Representatives, His Majesty, King Kamehameha, read from the throne a speech in the Hawaiian language. He says:

"My relations with all foreign nations, excepting only France, continue to be of the mostly friendly character.

"The peace of my kingdom has been threatened with an invasion of private adventurers from California. An appeal was made to the United States Commissioner which being promptly acted on by Capt. Gardner, of the United States ship Vandalia, tranquilized the public mind. I have taken some measures to create a military force, in the training of which Capt. Gardner has been pleased to render important assistance. Such a force has been considered indispensable, to enable me to protect efficiently the lives and property of all who live under my dominion. It will be for you to provide the means of maintaining such a force permanently, so as that the very defenceless state of my kingdom may not invite the evil disposed to invade it."

He expresses himself very liberally towards his subjects, and tells them if they are not satisfied with the Constitution he granted them in 1840, he is ready to grant another "for the good of my people."

When His Majesty had retired, an address was prepared in reply, expressing the most profound loyalty and veneration for the great head of the nation.

BUSINESS OF THE ISLANDS.—From a report of the Minister of the Interior, it appears that licences amounting to over $25,000 have been granted to stores, etc., during the past year.

The total number of foreign letters sent and received from December, 1850, to March, 1852, was 27,787, of which 15,200 were from and sent to the United States.

The exports of coffee have been considerable, and it is estimated that 200,000 pounds now remain in the Islands.

THE METHODIST CHURCH CASE.—The New York Commercial states that the U. S. Commissioner, Mr. Nelson, has prepared his report in the Methodist Church case, and that it will be submitted to the U. S. Circuit Court as soon as the attorneys for the parties have agreed upon certain stipulations now pending between them, in reference to some of the items in the account of the stock of the Book Concern. It will probably be some days after the report is rendered before the court makes its final order in the premises.

RAPID PASSAGE.—The clipper ship Grey Eagle arrived at Philadelphia on the 10th inst., having made the run from Rio Janeiro in twenty-three and a half days. This is the shortest passage on record.

From Texas.

By the arrival last evening of the steamship Louisiana, Captain Lawless, we have received intelligence papers to the 11th instant.

DEATH ON THE LOUISIANA.—Two of the passengers on the Louisiana, on her recent trip from New Orleans, died of cholera, after she arrived at Galveston.

DROWNED.—While the Louisiana was lying at Indianola, James Smith, a son of Captain Jeremiah Smith, of that city, fell overboard from the guard, and was drowned.

ANOTHER NEW PAPER.—The Neon Pioneer is the name of a paper just started in Leon county, Texas, by Messrs. Wood, Horner & Co.

THE RIVERS.—The Washington Lone Star says: The Brazos has fallen considerably, within the last few days; but there is still the greatest abundance of water for the largest class river boats to run in perfect safety, between this place and Quintana.

The Colorado has recently been very high, the mail stages being unable to cross at the different ferries between Lagrange and Austin.

CHOLERA.—The Washington Lone Star publishes a letter written by a Methodist minister at Rutersville, in which he says the cholera is making sad havoc in that vicinity. Four wagoners were recently found dead on the road, having died of cholera, with no one near them to witness their sufferings and death.

LOCO INDIANS.—The San Antonio Texan of the 3d inst. says: Quite a number of Lipans visited our city on Saturday last, and have been loafing about ever since, gambling, drinking, and begging. Most of them are the greatest, dirtiest looking "lords of the forest" we have ever seen. They are not necessarily so, for we are informed that these same dirty looking, wretches were furnished by Major Howard, on his late visit to their country, with plenty of good blankets and other apparel, but these they left at home, and came with their rags and tags so as to look as poverty-stricken as possible, for the purpose of exciting the sympathies of our citizens.

Louisiana Interior.

CHOLERA.—The cholera has again made its appearance in the parish of Lafourche Interior. It is confined almost exclusively to the white population. A number of deaths have already occurred, among them the late sheriff of that parish Leon Falgout, jr., and his wife, who died after a brief illness of a few hours only. No new cases, says the Minerva of the 12th inst., have occurred within the last three days, and it is to be hoped that the disease has left us.

The Madison Journal of the 11th says: "The weather continues dry, seasonably warm throughout the day, and decidedly chilly at night. In the early morning fires are quite comfortable. The general health of the parish was never better. The cholera has entirely abated, and in view of the perfectly promising prospect we have solemnly cause of thankfulness to the giver of all good, for the numberless blessings we enjoy.

DE SOTO PARISH.—The Police Jury have elected the following officers: John Liddell, Esq., President; Paul McEnery, Clerk; O. D. Stillman, Treasurer; F. F. Stubbs, Parish Attorney, and C. H. Dabbs, Parish Physician. The Register says that the parish does not owe one dollar and has money in the Treasury.

TERREBONNE.—The last Thibodaux Minerva says: The business season with our steamboats is fast drawing to a close. The Doctor Batey intends suspending her trips on the 1st proximo. The steamer Terrebonne has finished her last trip for the season, having made her last trip in the canal on Tuesday last.

THE WEATHER, CROPS, ETC.—The Madison Journal, of June 11, doubts if more promising crops were ever seen in this parish than at present. "Cotton is just commencing to bloom, and corn will prove an abundant harvest with a seasonable shower or two more.

We learn verbally that the crops in DeSoto and in Sabine are doing remarkably well.

FROM THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—By the arrival at New York of the ship Thomas W. Sears, later advices from the Cape of Good Hope have been received. It would appear that some portion at least of the large force now in the front has been actively employed, as letters received from Fort Beaufort state that the burghers connected with Gen. Somerset's division have captured about 1000 head of cattle in the neighborhood of Whittlesea. One of these burghers, named Morris, had been killed by the enemy. Some other portions of the troops had also made some captures, but we cannot definitely learn to what extent.

One letter from the above place, Fort Beaufort, says that a few days since two waggons proceeding from thence to the Blinkwater, with ammunition, were attacked by Kaffirs on the road. The oxen were taken by the assailants, and a young Englishman, about seventeen years of age, who has only been in few months from England, was killed.

The new Governor had not yet taken the field, but he was expected to do so soon.

A letter from Major Gen. Somerset's camp states that 1500 head of cattle had been captured, and six Kaffirs killed. It says that Gen. S.'s force is about 2500 strong, but provisions are very scarce, and it is impossible to make more than one or two days march at a time.

FROM RIO JANEIRO.—By the arrival at Philadelphia of the clipper Grey Eagle, dates from Rio Janeiro to the 17th ult. have been received.

The yellow fever continued to prevail to a limited extent among the shipping in the port.

The British steamship Teviot of 2700 tons, cleared on the 14th for Southampton, with 2,000,000 sterlings in specie.

The Brazilian Senate was engaged in discussing a project for a loan for the payment of interest on the public debt. The Chamber of Deputies was considering a project for granting to a company the privilege of constructing a railroad.

Some experiments were making, under the sanction of the Emperor, with a view to erecting the electric telegraph in Brazil.

Freights were scarce and low. The clearances of coffee from May 1 to May 15, were 98,500 bags. For the whole season the clearances exceed 1,700,000 bags. Superiors were quoted at 4,100 to 4,200; Fine, 3,900 to 4; Regulars, 3,650 to 3,750. The flour market was dull.

FROM BUENOS AYRES.—Dates from Buenos Ayres to the 24th of April, have been received at New York.

The Progreso of the 19th has an interesting leader on "the necessity of a general revision of the Custom-house Laws;" with the important though incidental intimation that the Government is actually engaged in devising means to rectify the pressing abuses. The general views advanced by the Progreso are all in the genuine free trade strain—the more acceptable in that we are entitled to regard them as the "shadow of coming events."

A painful sensation has been created in town by the news of a defection of several Cacliques, who apparently invoke patient pretexts to give a colouring to marauding incursions. Energetic measures are adopted to crush the evil in the bud.

On the 17th of April, the Diplomatic and Consular bodies paid their respects to H. E. Don Urquiza, as Representative of the Foreign Relations of the Argentine Confederation. The reception took place at the Quinta of San Palermo, when H. E. M.'s Charge presented Don Urquiza with a collection of recently published wars and charts of the Uruguay and Parana.

On the 19th Dr Pena, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, embarked for Montevideo and Rio de Janeiro on a special secret diplomatic mission, the object of which had not transpired.

IRON SHIPS IN LIVERPOOL.—A letter from Capt. Gredg, of the iron ship Shandon, of Greenock, is published in the London Shipping and Mercantile Gazette, detailing a collision with an iceberg during a voyage from Greenock to Montreal on the 1st of April last, and shows the superiority of an iron vessel, when properly conducted, in resisting a shock which probably would have terminated disastrously to an ordinary wooden vessel. The letter says:—"About 2 A. M. I went to take some rest, but had not been long in bed when I was awoke by a sharp cry of 'hard up the helm.' I was on deck in an instant, when a fearful sight was presented; an immense iceberg lay right before us, not more than the ship's length distant. I awaited with awful anxiety the result; the ship was going ten and a half miles an hour, before a heavy sea. The shock was not so great as I expected. There was a noise like thunder, and then a crash; after the blow the vessel recoiled about her own length astern, and came with fearful violence head on again; she then fell with her larboard bow on the ice, and struck several times with great violence. By this time (which only occupied a few minutes) we had got the sails braced aback; and so got her clear of it—her bowsprit and jibboom had been carried away, and I expected that the whole bow was stove in; but on going down to the forecastle, and from that to the coal and sail locker, found all was right; and, on the carpenter sounding the pumps, found the vessel was not making water." She afterwards got into the ice, which she did not get clear of for twelve days, and safely arrived at Quebec on the 22d.

SPIRITUAL RAPPINGS.—The St. Louis Intelligencer devotes half a column to a review of the spiritual rapping theory, since it first started in the family of Mr. Fox, in Hydesville, Wayne county, N. Y., in 1848. The Intelligencer does not believe in the spiritual part of the operation, but is confident that it is not all humbug. The editor thinks the rappings will at some future day, be accounted for, philosophically, and that those who now cry humbug and collusion will be convinced that they formed their opinions preamturely."

MURDER OF AN AMERICAN CREW.—Letters have been received at Salem, Mass., from the Consulate at Zanzibar, dated March 10, which state that the American schr. Queen of the West, from Dartmouth, Mass., was cut off at Morlaian, Madagascar, by the natives in December last. The captain and crew were murdered, and the vessel burnt. The French authorities had captured 16 persons implicated in the affair, and were awaiting the action of the American government. The particulars of the outrage have been forwarded to Mr. Webster, at Washington.

FROM PONTO RICO.—Advices from Mayagues to May 27 have been received. There is no news of importance. Molasses was very high, and little to be had at any price; none to be shipped on deck at any rates of freight. Sugar came in rather slowly, partly owing to the rain, it having rained every afternoon for some twenty days previous. Fruit of all kinds was very scarce and high.

THE RELIGIOUS EXCITEMENT IN SWEDEN AND NORWAY.—The situation of the State Church has been matter of anxious discussion among the Priests in Stockholm, and the wish is expressed that a General Council, consisting of Priests and Laity, should be called by the King to take measures to stem the progress of heresy, or that a simple Synod of Priests shall undertake it. Meanwhile the tendency towards religious freedom constantly increases, and a union has been formed to further the cause.

Whig Convention.

BALTIMORE, Wednesday, June 16, 1:50 P. M.

The Convention assembled at noon, and organized temporarily by appointing the Hon. Geo. Evans, of Maine, as Chairman. A committee was appointed to select officers for the Convention, and one to examine the credentials of delegates. The Convention then adjourned to 6 o'clock this evening, when it will assemble to receive the reports of the committees and complete its organization.

The Southern delegations have held a caucus, in which they have adopted a platform on which they place the Tariff, Internal Improvements, and the Compromise, as finality. The friends of Mr. Webster accept this platform.

BALTIMORE, Wednesday, June 16, 2 P. M.

Three whig caucuses have been in session this morning, and upon comparing notes it is generally conceded that Mr. Fillmore is out of the question. The contest is now considered to be between Mr. Webster and General Scott, and Webster's chances are regarded as the best.

The whig Convention has met, and after appointing committees to report officers for organization, and to examine the credentials of members, adjourned to 6 o'clock this evening.

BALTIMORE, Wednesday, June 16, 3:55 P. M.

The Committee on Organization have selected the Hon. John G. Chapman, of Maryland, as President of the Convention, by a vote of 17 to 15.

A census of the delegates from all the slaveholding States has been held, in which was adopted a series of resolutions to the following purport:

First—Declaring the general forbearance of the government of limited powers, and denying its right to exercise powers not expressly granted in the Constitution.

Second and third—Are in relation to the rights of the States, which are strongly insisted upon.

Fourth—Declaring against the doctrine of intervention in the affairs of other States.

Fifth—Declares in favor of an economical administration of the Government, and of a Tariff for revenue, and such as will give proper encouragement to all branches of industry in every section of the country.

Sixth—Declaring in favor of a system of River and Harbor improvements by the General Government.

Seventh and Eighth—Endorsing the Finality of the Compromise Measures in all their parts.

The friends of Mr. Webster have unanimously acquiesced in these resolutions, and express a determination to sustain them when brought before the Convention.

National Whig Convention.

BALTIMORE, June 17.

The Convention last evening adjourned immediately after completing its organization, until noon to-day, in order to allow the Committee on Contested Seats time to make up their report.

The Compromise Resolution.

BALTIMORE, June 17.

The following is the compromise resolution, forming a portion of the platform adopted by the Southern Delegates in Congress:

Resolved, That the series of measures, commonly known as the "Compromise," including the Fugitive Slave law, are received and acquiesced in by the whig party of the United States, as a settlement, in principle and substance, and as a final settlement of the dangerous and exciting questions which they embrace. That so far as the Fugitive Slave law is concerned, we will maintain the same, and insist on its strict enforcement, until time and experience shall demonstrate the necessity of further legislation, to guard against it evasion or abuse, and to prevent its present efficiency from being impaired. That we deprecate all further agitation of the Slavery question, as dangerous to our peace, and will discountenance all efforts toward the renewal or continuance of such agitation in Congress or out of it, whenever, wherever and however the attempts may be made. That we will maintain this system of measures as a policy essential to the nationality of the whig party, and to the integrity of the Union."

Among the Vice Presidents of the Convention, are the Hon. Wm. L. Goggin, of Virginia, Wm. Whaley, of South Carolina, and J. C. Van Winkle, of Louisiana.

National Whig Convention.

BALTIMORE, June 17, 1 P. M.

The Convention met to-day at noon, and have occupied the session so far in discussing the rules, modes of voting, etc., which are to prevail during its sittings.

General Scott's prospects seem to be brightening.

Further of the Whig Convention.

BALTIMORE, June 18.

Mr. Jessup, of Pennsylvania, will draw his amendment, giving members of the Committee on the Platform power to cast the electoral vote of their respective States, and a substitute, offered by Mr. Ewing, of Kentucky, was adopted without debate. Various resolutions were referred to the Committee. Mr. Davis, of Florida, introduced a resolution declaring that the Convention would not support any man for President whose opinion on the Compromise is not known. Mr. Hollis offered a substitute, declaring that the Convention would support any man who might receive the nomination. The substitute was received with great cheering. Mr. Davis withdrew his resolution with the intention to offer it at another time. Leave was given to the Committee to sit during the sessions of the Convention, and several resolutions were sent to them for consideration. Mr. Ewing, of Kentucky, moved that the Committee be instructed to support the Southern Platform, but the motion was not acted upon. Mr. Watts, Chairman of the Committee on Credentials, presented a majority report in favor of the New York and Virginia delegates.

NEWS BY TELEGRAPH.

WHIG NATI

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

COME.... By W. Allingham.

To coax the timid verdure
Across the hills of Spring.
Blue skies and gentle breezes,
And soft clouds wandering;
Birds in a budding spray;
And larks in ether spring;
Pulse, a wider day,
Love joy to everything.

The gay translucent morning
Lies glittering on the sea;
The goundly sprinkles shadows
Athwart the dazzled lea;
The round sun's sinking scarlet rim
To vapor hideth he;
The darkling burrs are cool and dim.
As verdant night should be.

Our earth is not grown aged
With all her countless years;
She wakes, and never wanting—
In glad, and nothing fears.
The glow of air, broad land and wave,
In season reappears!
And shall, when slumber in the grave
These human smiles and tears.

O, rich in songs and colors,
Thou joy-reviving Spring!
Some hopes are child with Winter,
Whose fears thou canst not bring;
Some voices answer not thy call
When sky and woodland ring;
One form come not back at all
With primrose-blossoming.

So Solast-flying swallow,
The upward-yearning seed,
Find Nature's promise faithful,
Attain their humble meed.
Parent! thou hast also form'd
These hearts which throb and bleed;
With Love, Truth, Hope, their life hast warm'd,
And what is best, decreed.

THE NEW SCHOLAR.

BY MARY ENTING.

"Girls! girls! Do you know we have got a new scholar?"

It was Laura Barnham, one of the younger boarders in Miss Stone's Seminary, who shouted this to a group of her mates in the yard, just before morning school hours. The girls crowded around her like so many ants around a lump of sugar, each asking a different question at the same moment.

"What is her name?" "How large is she?" "Do tell! where did she drop from?" "When did you see her?" "Is she coming into school to-day?" "Is she green, Laura?"—were among the inquiries. The last was the question of Abby Holden, a handsome but pert-looking girl, only a head taller than those of her age around her. A sort of sarcastic smile played over her lips and in her fine black eyes, marking her as one of the genus school-girl—species, "a great deal."

"How you crane a body! You make my ears ache!" returned Laura, pressing both hands over them. "I tell you, I only just had one look at her, as I was coming out of the parlor. Pshaw! well, Miss Abby, you may make up your mind about that soon enough, for she is coming into school to-day, I suppose. She is more black than green to my eye—what eyes mine weren't covered with dust."

"What name—what's her name?" repeated a dozen.

"Louise, I heard Miss Stone call her; I don't know the other."

"Lo-i-sy?" asked Abby, with a comical look at others laughing. "Lou-ise!" she added to herself in a little mincing voice, with the accent on the last syllable.

"I wonder whether she'll sit next me!" said Cornwford, a quiet sort of child, with blue eyes and golden brown hair.

"No—me!" exclaimed Laura, "Miss Stone put me up my seat first—it's in turn."

"Well, she'll be your forty-eleventh friend, I suggested Abby, playing with a spear of grass.

"Are you provoking thing!" answered Laura somewhat tartly. "What should I want of more than one as you?"

"Oh, I thought it was about time for you to have a new one again—that's all! It's all of a piece you and I cooked up a crony-ship, I suspect it is getting cold by this time!"

"You never was any body's friend, Abby," said Laura, turning away with a reproachful look and tone.

"Much obliged to you! Do you reckon your somebody, then?"

"I had as lief have a new girl, at any rate," Laura went on, growing quite crimson in the face.

Fortunately, the quarrel that was fast coming on was nipped in the bud by the sharp stroke of the school-bell.

"There! there! nine o'clock!" they cried; and away they ran to their seats.

A low hum of whispering died away on the benches, as Miss Stone came in, leading by the hand a girl about eleven years old. All the scholars held their breath, and strained their eyes to look at her; and some even half rose from their seats to have a better view of the stranger.

She was dressed in black, as Laura had said, with a wide tumbled white frill around her neck; hair dark brown, cut short in her neck, without curling; and a face as frightened and woe-begone in its expression as you could find anywhere. You could not see a particle of color in her cheeks or lips, as she involuntarily hung behind her teacher, shrinking back from the gaze of so many pairs of blue, black, and hazel eyes.

Miss Stone herself did not seem to take much notice of her bashfulness, but, almost pulling her along, pointed to a single desk at the end of the school-room.

"There is your seat," she said. "Your father wished you to sit alone. Bring your books to me, after I have opened the school, and I will set you at work."

The school was "opened" by the reading of a chapter in the New Testament. Each of the girls read a verse. Alice, whose seat was nearest to Louise's, finished hers, and then there was a long pause. Miss Stone looked up impatiently.

"Whose turn? Oh, Louise's. Do you know how to read in the Testament?"

Louise made a gesture for "Yes, ma'am."

"Well, read, then! Stand up child!" Louise stood up as she was bidden, but it seemed that she could not coax her white trembling lips to do as they were bidden, for she made one attempt, between a gasp and a sob, and then, bursting into tears, covered her face with her hands, and shrank down into her seat again.

"The next!" said Miss Stone, pressing her fore-finger tightly on the verse. Abby curled her lips, shading it with her hand, and looked down on the new comer with a grimace of contempt, then dropping her hand, read the verse as demurely and correctly as was proper. Louise had not seen her, neither had Miss Stone, but two-thirds of the scholars had; and they, taking the hint from her, began to try to despise bashful stranger in their hearts. A geography class was the first one called up, in which Louise had her part.

"I wonder if she'll find her tongue," whispered Abby to Alice, as they were taking their places in the class. Alice looked straight forward at the black-board; for she knew that to whisper in school hours was contrary to rule.

"Louise Stoddard," observed Miss Stone, heading to put her name on the class list. The girls looked at each other.

"Your places, young ladies. Sit upright."

"Louise, what is the capital of Maine?"

No answer. Louise turned whiter than ever.

"Do you know, Louise? Then speak. You must say something. If you do not know, say so; if you know, tell me—what is the capital of Maine?" "Massachusetts!" Louise gasped, making an effort that shook her small frame as a leaf on a windy day.

A titter went around the class. The poor child, seeing what a mistake she had made in fear, colored to the roots of her hair, and did not dare to look up again.

It was just so in the arithmetic class, where she set all in a laugh by looking around with a distressed eye when she was asked, "What are four times nine?" and tremulously exclaiming, "Sixty-three."

"The girl is a green-horn and a dunce!" cried Abby, after the recess bell had rung, as soon as she found herself outside of the school-room.

"Take care, Abby!" "Hush! she heard you!" quickly whispered two, near her. Abby looked half around, saw Louise standing near a window, pressing a marble statue, except for the tears that glazed over her dark blue eyes, and the distressful, almost agonized, expression of her face. She did not seem able to move, but stood as though the naked words had turned her really into stone.

"What if she did hear me?" exclaimed Abby, a little piqued. "I'll repeat it again for her benefit, if she stands there staring at me much longer."

"Oh, Abby!" said Alice. "Come—come yourself, and comfort the cry-baby.

See! she has gone to her bench to whimper away again. I do hate a ninny!"

Very few of the girls were so hard-hearted as Abby; but they were, without really knowing it, very much ruled by her opinion, because they stood in great fear of her power of raising a laugh against them. So, instead of going to comfort little Louise and make her feel at home, they joined in a laugh at her expense, and went off in a troop, to follow Abby to the "spring." One or two—Alice for one—gazed up timidly at the window, but did not dare to turn and go in, where Louise sat sobbing, with her face leaned on her atlas.

"Oh dear!" she sighed, lifting her red eyes for a moment into the sunshine, which fell in golden showers over her head, as though it longed to cheer her up, and call her out to play. "Oh dear! I wish"——The very act of wishing brought a fresh burst of grief, and she dropped her face again.

"Homesick, eh, little one?" asked one of the larger young ladies, passing by her desk.

Louise started up in confusion, and stared timidly at her, as though she did not know whether she were an enemy or a friend.

"Want to go home, hey?" added the other. "N-no, ma'am!" stammered Louise, turning her head away to hide her tear-sprinkled cheeks.

"Oh, well, I'll let you have your cry out," said the other going away, and taking no further notice of her.

The day passed thus. Louise did not venture to either the dinner or supper tables, but crouched in a corner of the school-room, looking up into the sky, when the others were not with her. The teacher thought that she was sullen, and not disposed to become acquainted in her new home. The scholars had made up their minds that she was a very disagreeable sort of girl, besides being "green," and they didn't care anything about her. So the poor thing went uncared for until bed-time, when a servant was sent to show her to her sleeping-place.

She was taken into a large room, where most of the girls of her age also had their beds set against the wall, all in a row. Hers was exactly between those of Laura and Abby.

The girls clustered into a corner to whisper and giggle, as soon as she came into the room, and expressed as plainly as they could do it without words, that she was very unwelcome, and they did wish she had stayed away. She stole along to her bed, and stood leaning against it, as though uncertain what to do next.

"Well, are you going to stand there all night?" asked Abby, at last, turning suddenly upon her. "Because I can tell you the light will be taken away in five minutes, whether you are dressed or undressed."

Thus warned, Louise commenced hurriedly untying her clothes; but the girl came for the light before she had finished. She was too timid to ask for her trunk, which had not yet been brought up. She stole along to the window, lifted the curtain, and stood unfastening the knots, by the light of the moon.

"I say, girls, did you ever hear that 'the moon was made of green cheese?' or was it 'made green cheese?' which?" said Abby to the others, in a whisper loud enough to reach Louise.

"What's the capital of Maine?" chuckled Laura, in another loud whisper.

"Why, 'sixty-three,' to be sure! Don't you know it?" said Abby, very complacently; and all laughed again.

Louise felt as though her head and heart were bursting. But she did not shed any more tears. She had "had her cry out," and was too weary and hopeless to do any thing but stagger to her bed. As soon as she lay down in it, however, she sprung up as though a bee had stung her.

"Why, what's the matter now?" inquired Abby. The others all kept silent.

"There's something in my bed!" exclaimed the terrified Louise, drawing up her feet.

A few of the girls giggled under their counterpanes.

"Something is there? Well, you had better lie down and take up with 'something,' for I guess you'll get 'something' else if Madame Stone hears you talking out loud here, after hours." and Abby turned over on her pillow.

Louise crawled out of her sheets, and, rolling herself up as well as she could, slept the night away on the outside of her bed. In the morning, she was suddenly awakened from a sweet dream by a sousing dash of cold water. She started up with a little scream; but nobody was near her; yet the girls were all laughing.

"Hope you rested well last night," observed Abby. "Come, girls, let us see what could have got into her bed," said she, giving a wink to the rest.

Turning down the clothes, they found one or two bunches of burdock burrs, stuck just where Louise was to have lain. They tried to conceal their laughter; and Abby, seeing very much astonished, cried out—

"Dear me! who could have done this? How did these coms here? Alice, do you know anything about it?" For she saw that Alice, who was the only one that had not laughed, was just on the point of speaking.

"No, I don't; but, I know somebody that does," said Alice, coloring with anger, unlike her usual gentleness.

"Ah, the tell-tals blush betrays the guilty!" said Abby, pointing her fore-finger at her with a meaning look. "It was very wrong of you, Alice! I feel it my duty to report you!"

Alice was quite flustered, and did not reply. The others laughed as though they would kill themselves.

Louise was put into the small classes that day, with little girls a head below herself. Her teacher told her she thought she could get those lessons, at least. She hardly seemed to study them, however, but sat with her head on her hand, looking vacantly before her.

Two or three weeks passed in this way. Louise became a little less bashful in her classes; but she did not dare to go near the girls in their play-hours; for she was too painfully conscious that they disliked and despised her. Abby had called her a coward, the second day, and she never went near the group at play, without seeing the game stopped, and hearing something muttered about "dunce," "coward," or "sneak."

One day, more unhappy than usual, she had gone down to the spring, all by herself, to get a dipper of water. Finding no one there, she stayed, throwing little pebbles in, and amusing herself in various ways, until she heard the laughter of girls very near her. She sprang to her feet, and met them on the little hill which arched up from the spring, like the side of a bowl. She passed them without speaking. She had walked slowly a few steps, whirling a pole which she had picked up for a cane, when she heard a terrible scream. She turned, instinctively, and ran down the hill. The girls were running in all directions like wild-fire. Abby was the hindmost.

"A snake! oh, a snake!" they screamed.

"Abby trod on a snake!"

Abby screamed louder than before, just here, as she caught a second sight of the snake, coiling through the grass. Louise saw it, too. Being a country-bred girl, and not in the least afraid of snakes, she dashed in after it. It was a large water adder, and was probably more afraid of the girls than they were of it. Louise soon despatched it, by the help of her stick, and, hanging it across the end, held it up, to call back the frightened troop. The girls scarcely dared to approach, even when they saw their enemy killed. But by degrees they came near, touched it with the stick, and breathed more freely. Abby was first among them.

"If this snake hadn't been killed," said she, "we would none of us have ever dared come to the spring again! I declare, Louise," and she turned suddenly toward her, "you are a real heroine, and a right generous girl, and I'll make friends with you!"

She reached out her hand, but Louise drew hers behind her back. Ah, Louise! there was a little of the poison of our fallen nature, pride, rising in your heart at that moment! But we can scarcely blame you for doing, on first impulse, what many another, older and wiser than you, would have done.

All would have been lost, and the two would perhaps have been enemies forever, if Alice had not sprung forward as Louise half turned away. "Oh, Louise, stay with us—do!" she exclaimed, catching her in both arms. "We haven't liked you, I know; and we have called you names, and laughed at you; but we are sorry, all sorry; and won't you forgive us, and be friends, now?"

"You never have, Alice," said Louise; as her lip quivered.

"But I have," said Abby, coming again to her side. "Look here, Louise Stoddard, I like you all the better for your 'spunk.' I've called you a coward, over and over again. I won't say I'm sorry, but I'll tell you what I will do; I'll leave it to all these girls to say which of us two is the biggest coward! There, will that suit you? Shake hands on it, then!"

Louise did not refuse again. She joined the party, and all clustered around her as they proceeded to the school-house. Louise seemed another being, by the time they reached the gate. Her cheeks were flushed, her eyes were lighted up, and a bright smile made her once pale face beautiful. Alice walked beside her quietly, with Louise's hand in hers, having fallen back into her usual calm, sweet mood. Abby followed; but, though Louise often turned to her, she did not look on her so lovingly and trustfully as on the dear girl at her side.

That night, Alice and Louise had a long confabulation at twilight, under the pear tree in the garden—a place celebrated in the annals of Miss Stone's school.

"Oh, Alice," said Louise, fervently, "why didn't you tell me you liked me, that first day, if you really did like me?"

"It was wrong not to, I know, Louise," replied Alice, sadly. "But, somehow, Abby Bolden always does make us do just as she wants us to. I did'nt put the burdocks in your bed, though! You can't think I would be so mean as that? I did'nt know anything about them, until Abby pulled down the clothes."

"I'll try to forget all that they've done, and all the three weeks past," said Louise, wiping her eyes with her apron. "But, oh, Alice, I never, never can forget what happened before that!"

"Did your mamma die?" asked Alice, softly and tenderly; for Louise had covered her eyes, as if to shut out some horrid sight.

"Oh, Alice, I shall almost be glad when she does die!" sobbed Louise.

Alice sat, silently wondering.

"My baby sister died—she went to Heaven, they said—half a year ago; and the sorrow, and trouble, and sickness, made my poor mamma cruzy. And they say she never will get well," Louise struggled to say. "They took her—oh, it was two days only before I came her—they tied her hands, and took her off to a great stone house, an insane asylum, to shut her up there; because, they said, she would kill us all if she staid at home. She never, never would have hurt me," sobbed the child. "Oh, mamma loved me so much! and I loved her so much, too. Before she was taken bad, we used always to be studying and writing together the whole morning. Mamma would write, or paint, or practice music, and I would be close beside her; studying, or sewing, or taking lessons of her. I never went to school a day, before I came here; and I never played with any girls. Mamma played with me sometimes, and I played with the baby. Oh, I was so happy."

She leaned her head on Alice's shoulder, relieved by this outpouring of her sad heart's troubles.

"What did you use to study with your mamma?" said Alice.

"Oh, all the things that you study—arithmetic, and geography, and history, and French, and all sorts of studies."

"Why, then you needn't stay in the little classes, need you?"

"I won't stay there a day longer, said Louise resolutely. "I haven't cared to study before; but now I do care. That first day when you were all looking at me and laughing, and I was thinking so about poor mamma, I couldn't say anything nor do anything. I thought I would have to stay here; and be unhappy all my life; because my papa is gone to Europe, and he left me here until his coming back."

"But you will be happy now, Louise," said Alice, giving her an affectionate kiss, "I could cry to think how we plagued you, when you were feeling so dreadfully!"

"Never plague another new girl, Alice," said Louise. "I tell you, the very first scholar that comes here after me, I'll make friends with her the first day, if I can. You won't be jealous if I do, will you, Alice?"

"No, indeed; I'll help you all I can."

Louise kept her resolutions. She rose in her classes immediately. She studied with such energy as even to rival Abby in her classes. That tormentor was changed, so far as respected Louise, into an affectionate friend. Louise gained influence over her, after awhile, greater than any other girl had done; because she was the only one who would not be laughed out of what she thought right to do. She, the timid child before, became the courageous, erect, cheerful girl, whom every scholar, young and old, admired and loved. Her teacher, too, loved, praised and rewarded her.

Louise was also as good as her word, in watching over every succeeding "new scholar." If ever she saw Abby Bolden disposed to shoot her arrows of ridicule against one, she would give her a laughing hint, such as—

"Take care, Abby! she may kill a snake yet!"

And Abby would reply—

"If she does, Louise, she'll kill me, that's sure! You half did that, you know. I have'nt been more than half myself since! But you're a jewel of a girl!"

But Louise is no longer a "new scholar;" and we will leave her among her school mates now, hoping that her story may win some young laughing eyes to look more tenderly than they are wont to do on some other bashful New Scholar.

A HUMOROUS LETTER—TELLING THE TRUTH.

Way up in the "Northern Country," between NewYork and the Canada Line, there are several gentlemen living upon estates owned by them. A friend of one of the gentlemen wrote to him from NewYork city, making inquiries with a view to "emigration," if the information received was agreeable. The Burlington (Vt.) Free Press publishes the reply, which represents this undiscovered country a second Beulah. The reply is as follows:

April 29, '52.

Dear Sir—Yours of the 20th is received, and I hastened to give you the information desired for the benefit of your friend, as follows:

The soil, when you get at it, is composed principally of conglomerate, viz: a mixture of muck, moss, decayed fern leaves, paving stones and snow.

The face of the country, when not covered with snow, is covered with a growth of hemlock, tammrec, spruce and cedar timber, except those portions which the enterprise of former years has attempted to clear, these are covered with stumps, rocks, fallen trees, alder brushes and brambles.

The fruits are various, comprising most of the species found in high latitudes, such as chokecherries, moose-berry, whortle-berry and black raspberry, the latter in great abundance and perfection.

Among the game is to be found the domestic fowl, the swallow, crow, and blue-jay, and in the mid-summer, the night-hawk and screech owl.

The animals hunted for their fur are the eat, the chip-munk, the stray dogs. Those chiefly esteemed for their flesh are the musk-rat, skunk and woodchuck.

The fishes embrace a great variety, from the tad-pole to the bull-pout—the sucker is salted down for winter use.

The principal articles of consumption are pork, white beans, apple-sauce, and rye whisky.

The principal articles of import, are dried apples, buffalo coats, tea, tobacco, cotton-cloth, molasses, bogus cigars, and spoilt oysters.

The articles of export are few, being only such things as they don't want themselves. The principal are convicts to Auburn and Sing Sing Prisons, and emigrants to California.

The chief productions are white headed children, which in time grow to be lumbermen, peddlers, demons, squires, politicians and rogues.

Their means of getting a living are ingenious and varied—the most ostensible, however, is "dickering," at which they are very expert, swapping horses, trading cattle, and getting bo6t.

Their chief amusements, in winter, are keeping up a fire, watching the weather, going to funerals, whittling, and breaking steers—in summer these are varied, by getting out manure, hoeing corn, acting as scare crows, and getting "down sick" eating green apples.

Their principal business is an impertinent interference in other people's affairs, to the entire neglect of their own, exaggerating evil reports, throwing obstacles in the way of public improvements, talking politics, and doing chores. The young leave their parental roof at a tender age, and commence on their own hook, peddling popcorn, gingerbread and molasses candy.

The climate is a cross between Lapland and Siberia, not quite as cold as one, and a good deal colder than the other, but healthy. The principal diseases are lame stomach, delirium tremens, and "folk is sick."

The articles of luxury, most esteemed, are salt codfish, dried pumpkins and woolen gowns

The articles of furniture, are a cook-stove, mop-pail and wash-dish.

Their farming implements, consist of a saw, a log chain, generally hooked, and a jack knife.

Their education is confined to writing their name, guessing off hogs, and making axe-helves.

Their moral and religious ideas are vogue and loose. They generally live to a green old age and die as green as they lived.

Their principal places of resort are the platforms of railroad depots, bar rooms, justices courts, and public and private offices, where they have no businesses.

Their habits are predatory and migratory.

If your friend is a bachelor it may be interesting to him to know, that the females (with a few exceptions) have no front teeth, but their eye teeth are cut early, and are sharp and well developed. If there are any points not touched upon likely to influence him in the choice of a residence, I hope you will have no hesitation in asking further enlightenment. Yours, ever.

JAIL SET ON FIRE—Escape of a Prisoner.—On Monday morning, the 5th inst., as the jailor at Alexandria opened the main door of the jail, a negro prisoner rushed out and attempted to make his escape. He was pursued, fired at, and struck with two balls, which so disabled him that he was retaken. In the meantime the jail was discovered to be on fire, and the negro confessed that he had set it on fire. The flames were, however, soon extinguished. The prisoner being severely wounded, was taken to the jailor's house, where he received every attention that his case demanded. It was not thought that he would again attempt to escape, but during Monday night, he managed to slip his irons and get away, and has not since been heard from.

APPLES.—The Planter's Banner, published at Franklin, says that fine apples are grown near that place, and that with proper care and management they can be raised there in great perfection.

DESPERATE ECONOMICAL.—The Red River Republican says: "The Police Jury was in session this week. They have concluded to post up their proceedings in three conspicuous places in the parish, in manuscript. Instead of having them printed in the papers." This is a species of economy which should immortalize that Police Jury.

SABINE RIVER.—The Red River Republican, in speaking of the Sabine, says: "This stream is now in fine order for navigation, and promises to continue so during the summer. The steamer Gen. Rusk arrived a few days since at Fredonia, from Sabine Pass, with a full freight. She is now loading, and will leave for the mouth of the river in the course of two or three days. Had three or four boats been in the Sabine trade this year, all would have done well, and the cotton crop of this country would have found its way to market almost entirely by this stream."

THE ARMY WORM.—The army worm has made its appearance on the plantation of Mr. McMillon in East Feliciana. Its appearance this year is much earlier than ever known heretofore, and will in consequence of the backwardness of the plant, whose growth has been retarded by late spring, do immense damage. The worst fears are entertained.

FLATBOAT BURNED.—A flatboat belonging to Messrs. Mellatton, Ward & Co., loaded with hoop-poles and lime, was consumed by fire last Tuesday evening, at the landing, Baton Rouge.

THE WEATHER AND CROPS.—The Jackson Mirror says: The weather is cold and clear. The crops revived by the recent rains are all doing well. The prospects now are for a plentiful harvest.

RED RIVER.—The Caddo Gazette of the 5th says the river is still rising at that point. There is plenty of water for the largest class of boats.

CHOLERA.—Several cases of cholera have occurred at Shreveport, but they originated on steamboats. Most of them proved fatal.

PANTHER KILLED.—Mr. Pinilin Dupuy killed a panther on the 11th inst. on his plantation in the Parish of Iberville. The animal was two and a half feet in height, and six feet two inches in length.

FROM THE PLAINS.—The steamer Clara arrived at St. Louis from Independence on the 6th inst., bringing down Judge Watts, of the Supreme Court of New Mexico, and Mr. Hubble, a merchant of Santa Fe. These gentleman are lately in, but they bring no Mexican news additional to that brought by the mail which reached Independence on the 27th ult. In crossing the Plains, Aubry's train was met, getting along finely.

The Union says: We are glad to state that the rumors of the sickness and mortality among its men are without foundation.

The accounts, however, received from other sources are discouraging in the extreme. The expedition started by Warner & Hughes has been extremely unfortunate. This firm had sent out a freight and also a passenger train.

The cholera had made its appearance among the men of the former train, who were conveying goods to Salt Lake, and one morning ten were attacked with violent symptoms, and, before night six of them died. This so greatly disheartened the balance that the majority of the company abandoned the trip and returned to the settlements. The passenger train was more fortunate. The people who have went with it are bound for California, and were enjoying good health at the latest advices.

It seems that in many instances the cattle, in crossing the plains, have been suddenly attacked with a disease, which in the course of a very few hours has invariably proved fatal. Many of the trains have in this manner suffered severely.

RELIGION IN HAYTI.—The New York Freemen's Journal contains an interesting article on the coronation of the Emperor Soulouque, and the state of religion in the island of Hayti. We make the following extract:

"In the French part of the island there are about fifty parishes; but, with a very few exceptions, the French, or Savoyard or Spanish priests, who attend to them, are a set of wretches, who have been compelled to leave dioceses to which they belonged, after having been suspended from their sacredotal functions. Others are priests in name only, and by virtue of forged certificates, so that it is quite a usual occurrence in Hayti to meet with Trappists such as Leahy, or with Jesuits such as Loud. The priest who crowned Soulouque, and who by his own authority conferred upon himself the unusual title of Archiepiscopal Superior, is well known at Mobile, where he was forced to leave in consequence of his misconduct. But a short time ago he wrote to several priests in this city, requesting them to send him consecrated oil to be used at the anointing of Faustin I. As may be supposed, his communications have been suffered to remain unanswered. All these impostors are on the best terms with the vaux doux sorcraft; and the worship of serpents, the sacrificial offerings of coxen, and a certain profanation of the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass, are all of a like and constant practice.

FROM CUBA.—The NewYork Sun publishes a column of what (were we certain of its correctness) would be very interesting news from Cuba. We are not inclined to take it all for gospel, although we would not wish to call into consideration the veracity of the Sun's correspondent. He says that Government professes to have discovered a Catalius conspiracy—a conspiracy among the Spanish residents to assassinate every American in the Island as soon as any thing like an invasion occurs. It is said that then Concha discovered and smothered a similar conspiracy at the time of the Lopez expedition. "This is of course, to be taken for what it is worth. The Americans on the Island manifest no fear of the Catalines."

We may here state that it is confidently asserted that there are still a few of the Lopez expedition wandering through the Island. Over five hundred Creoles are yet in prison for their connection with the troubles last year, or because they have since exposed themselves to the suspicion of the Government. Very closely are the Creoles watched by the authorities, that in case of a new expedition they will scarcely venture beyond their own doors without being shot. It may almost be said, literally, that every Cuban lives with the muzzle of a musket leveled at his breast. Before the Cubans can rise to assert their rights, a way must be opened up through these muskets. There is, henceforth, no use in sympathy and aid, without it is powerful enough to give these muskets other employment than keeping the Cubans in their houses.

A non-commissioned officer in the Spanish service in Cuba, states that the actual number of the killed during the Lopez expedition campaign was 2300, besides wounded.

WASHINGTON, June 7.

SENATE.—After the presentation of petitions, reports of committees, etc., the Senate took up the bill to provide for the repair and improvement of the dam at the head of Cumberland Island, in the Ohio river. After debate, the further consideration of the bill was postponed until to-morrow, and the Senate went into executive session.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.—The House refused by a decided vote to lay upon the table the bill granting lands to the several States for the benefit of the indigent insane; and then the morning hour having expired, the joint resolution (moved some time since by Mr. Harris, of Tennessee) fixing the time for the termination of the session, was taken up and amended, on motion of Mr. Richardson, so as to designate the 16th of August for the day; and as amended, the joint resolution was then agreed to. The bill making appropriations for the construction of military roads in Oregon; the bill authorizing the legislative authorities of the several United States Territories to control the appropriations for meeting the expenses of the several territorial governments, with an amendment excepting Utah from its operations; the bill making appropriations for continuing the construction of public buildings in Minnesota; and the bill regulating the payment of the salaries of the United States territorial officers in case of their protracted absence from their respective posts, were respectively passed. The bill to provide for continuing the construction of roads in Minnesota was next taken up; and pending the question on its passage, the House adjourned.

ST. DOMINGO.—By a recent arrival at New York from St. Domingo, advices have been received that the island is in a very unsettled state, and that hostilities between the Hayliens and Dominicans are threatened. It is stated that the Emperor Soulouque has refused to acknowledge the independence of the Dominican Republic, and has also refused to exchange prisoners. He has threatened that unless the Haytien flag is hoisted at Port au Platt, he will march against that place in October next. Arrangements are being made by the Dominicans to meet the emergency by placing a force of 6000 men, under the command of Gen. Santa Anna, on the frontiers. The Dominicans were busily engaged in repairing the fortifications on the frontiers, and preparing otherwise to give the Emperor a warm reception, should he put his threat in execution.

The Dominican Government is encouraging settlers by granting fifty acres of land to each emigrant intending to settle in the country. Five hundred German settlers were daily expected to arrive to Cape Isabella.

AN IMPERIAL REVIEW.—Mr. Weed, of the Albany Evening Journal, was in Vienna when the Emperor Nicholas had arrived, and witnessed his arrival. He was also present at the grand Review already noticed, and describes it as follows:

Monday, May 9.—Well, we have seen one of the great military pageants of the earth. We have looked upon two live Emperors, Nicholas I., of Russia, and Joseph II., of Austria, at the head of an Army with Banners."

It was understood that the Review was fixed for 10 o'clock. Knowing that the Russian Emperor was prompt in his movement, we drove out to the "Glacis Josephstadt" at that hour. The troops were afield and in line," and at ten minutes past ten, the Emperors, with a magnificently dressed Staff of Aids, Arch Dukes, Princes, Marshals, Generals, etc., etc., hoved, with their high-blooded and proud steeds upon the ground. A bright sun gave the fullest effect to all this gorgeous and glittering paraphernalia of war. The Emperors were dressed in the uniform of the Polish Lancers—their aids in crimson and gold—the others of the Staff in the uniform of their respective corps.

There were upwards of 20,000 troops in the field, of which 20,000 were Infantry and Rifle, and 10,000 Cavalry and Artillery. Of the mounted men, 3000 were Lancers, and streaming from each lance was a black and yellow flag.

The Emperor of Russia, with one Aid-de-Camp, a few rods in advance of the Emperor of Austria and Staff, rode in front of the line, (or rather of the three lines,) stopping at the head of each battalion and addressing a few words to the officers. This occupied nearly an hour. He then, with his staff, which consisted of more than 300 splendidly mounted officers, took a position in front of the centre of the line, which immediately passed him in review. The different corps, whether by battalion, regiment or brigade, formed in sections, of three files, fifty deep. Giving 150 men to each section or company. There was a marching distance of about six rods between each section. The band of each division, as they reached the Emperor, moved out to the left, and playing until their corps had passed, was succeeded by the next. The line was two hours in passing. After this there was a review of a regiment of Lancers, whose horses were put to the top of their speed. The ride was thrilling. And this closed the day. The Emperors returned to the Palace and the troops to their quarters. There was a large number of Court ladies in Court carriages upon the field. Among these was the mother of the Emperor of Austria, a woman whose influence is supposed to be as potent with the son as it was with her husband, the ex-Emperor, who lives very quietly at Prague.

(The ex-Emperor, by the way, who lives very quietly at Prague, is not the father of the present Emperor, but his uncle.)

FROM THE ARCTIC OCEAN.—A letter received at NewYork from Hong Kong, dated March 28, says that there have been there no less than thirty-seven whalers from the Arctic seas, almost all of whom believe that Sir John Franklin is safe, and that he has got through the ice barrier into inner waters, where he will not be reached until a mild season arrives; which they say the present will be. Most of them have now departed. They say Franklin will not suffer for want of food. They give strange accounts of the Esquimaux vibrating from the Asiatic to the American continent and back again, carrying their boats made of skins and whalebone, over the ice, and launching them when they meet with open water. They all confirm the fact that the whales found in Behring's Straits and in Hollin's Bay are the same species, proving the existence of a passage for a whale of the Arctic species, they say, has never been seen to the South of 22 degrees of latitude; so they cannot have doubled either of the Capes (of Good Hope or Cape Horn,) and the whale is under the necessity of making his presence known by coming to the surface to blow.

A RECENT CURIOUS DISCOVERY AT NINEVAH.—The London papers by the Asia announce a recent very curious and interesting discovery made at Nineveh; namely, a coffin containing the body of a lady of the Royal house, many of whose garments were entire, also the gold studs which fastened her vest. The most singular discovery, however, was a mask of thin gold pressed upon the face, so as to assume and retain the features of the deceased.

MORE TROUBLE IN YALE COLLEGE.—There is more trouble at Yale College, between the Professors and the students, similar to that which occurred a few weeks since, in consequence of the students publishing a newspaper in which the Faculty of the College were ridiculed and satirized. Eight of the students have been dismissed, and there is, as usual on such occasions, great excitement among the students, and the course of the Faculty is condemned as injudicious and unnecessarily severe.

IRON.—It appears to be not generally known to what an immense extent the manufacture of this universal metal is carried on in Pennsylvania. That State now produces as much iron as was manufactured in all Great Britain thirty years ago. Compared to the present manufacture of the article in France, that of Pennsylvania is at least equal—it is more than Russia and Sweden united; and exceeds that of all Germany. Pennsylvania may well be called the Iron State of the Union.

PESTILENCE AND FAMINE IN GERMANY.—The condition of the people in many parts of Germany appears to be most afflicting, through the existence of almost absolute famine. In Wurtenburg, Bavaria, the Grand Duchy of Baden, and Nassau, whole villages are being deserted for want of food. In other parts trade is standing still; of 78,000 looms in a single province of Bavaria, almost exclusively inhabited by weavers, not half are at full work; and to consummate the wretchedness and despair, the sheep and cattle are being carried off by a rapidly spreading disease.

THE FIRE IN WETUMPKA.—An extra from the office of the Wetumpka (Ala.) State Guard, of the 12th instant, gives the particulars of a destructive fire which occurred in that town on that morning, leaving the main portion of it in ruins. The loss is estimated at over two hundred thousand dollars. Of the amount destroyed, there was supposed to be about $60,000 covered by insurance.

Highly Important to Planters and Property Holders.

BRIDGEWATER ADAMANTINE PAINT.

The superior properties of this unequaled mineral substance is now so well and favorably known that it is unnecessary to enter into an extended notice. The public are referred to our circular, embracing certificates from—

Capt. Sir C. THOMASSON, of steamer Magnolia.
Wm. BROWN, of towboat Porpoise.
HUGHES, VALLETTE & Co., Managers La. Dry Dock
J. P. WHITNEY & Co., Agents do
Capt. N. B. ROBBINS, of the ship Leodes.
JOSEPH BENSON, Painter, 132 Camp street.
And the UNDERWRITERS' CERTIFICATES

Also, the recommendation of a large number of our most influential COTTON FACTORS and COMMISSION MERCHANTS, all of which are included in the Agent's Circular. Also, to the following, received since the circulars were printed from JOHN F. MILLER, of Attakapas:

"In July last I was induced to apply the Bridgewater Mineral Paint to my Sugarhouse, and, in every respect, it has exceeded my expectations, and the representations made by the agents, Messrs. H. C. Bigert & Co. I cheerfully add my testimony to the numerous ones embraced in the Agent's Circular, and recommend the same to Planters and others, as the best Weather and Fire Protector I have ever known. Where I have applied it, it has been exposed to the sun since last July, and has neither blistered nor cracked, and has formed a solid metallic surface, which has proved entirely impervious."

(Signed) JOHN F. MILLER.

New Iberia Attakapas, March 16, 1852.

In addition to the above, we have in our possession innumerable certificates from equally respectable sources, which can be seen at our office; among which are those of Capt. Wm. Cutts, of the ship Charles Cooper; Brevet Lieut. Col. G. H. Talcott, New York Arsenal; R. S. Smith, Lieut. and Quartermaster U. S. Military Academy, West Point; O. H. Ives, late Superintendent, now Secretary of the Hudson River Railroad Company; D. O. McCallum, Ass't Engineer New York and Erie Railroad, etc.; proving conclusively, by being thoroughly tested, that it is both

FIRE AND WEATHER PROOF.

The bending, shrinking or warping of the material upon which it is used does not affect the paint; in twenty-four hours it dries, and in four weeks, becomes a perfect slate.

It preserves wood from decay, and neither blisters nor cracks by exposure to the hottest sun. For covering roofs of either tin iron, fine wood, canvas or paper, it is also invaluable, and particularly recommended, as it is a certain PROTECTION AGAINST SPARKS AND CINDERS, and is furnished cheaper than any paint in the Southern country. All orders sent to the General Agents, or their sub-agents, promptly executed. No deviation in price. Terms—cash, or its equivalent. H. C. BIGERT & CO.

THE BEREAVED ONE.

He knelt beside the grave of her whose life
Had crowned a very portion of his own;
And as the evening zephyrs kissed his cheek
And fanned his burning brow, he prayed for strength
And resignation to endure this trial
Of faith that he was called to undergo.

Oh! if there is one spot on earth that seems
As though 'twere nearer heaven than all the rest,
One sacred spot, where the heart's offering
Goes up more swiftly to the throne of Him
Who hears and answers prayer, it is beside
The grave of one we dearly loved in life.

The sun had set behind a silver cloud—
The birds had sung their evening hymns of praise,
And now with folded wings slept quietly,
While the bright moonbeams softly stole to earth,
Casting a mellow light on all around,
And the stars, waking from their noonday sleep,
Came out to deck the canopy of heaven.

The form of these the stricken mourner saw;
His thoughts were with the spirit of the dead.
For three short months the dear one had been lent
To cheer him with her looks and words of love;
And then a bright-winged seraph, who was sent
To take her guardian angel's place, while he Went up to worship, fell in love with her,
Who seemed too pure and good to linger here,
And carried her above.

'Tis ever thus—
The lovely flowers that most we cherish here,
Behind which our fond affections closely twine,
Are snatched away by unseen angels' hands
To be transplanted to the world above. KATE.

Early Methodism in South Alabama.

BROTHER McTYEIRE: Looking over your issue of May 29, I find a communication from Thomas Nixon, purporting to be the first introduction of Methodism in Alabama. Being a mistake of a full year, I have concluded to give a brief sketch of the rise of Methodism in this country, and you can do with it as you think proper.

In the fall of 1817, Rev. Thos. L. Douglas, P. E. in the Tennessee Conference, determined to make an effort to plant Methodism in the newly settled country, (S. Alabama,) and for this purpose, as he told me afterwards, retained me in his district, thinking I was the man for that work, although quite young in the ministry; but as I had in the fall of 1813 been through that country as a soldier, and still having a good constitution and fine health, quite able to bear the fatigue of such an enterprise, in March 1818 he made known to me his object, and solicited my co-operation. I readily consented, and after some little made the necessary arrangements, took leave of friends, left the Flint Circuit in the care of Sterling C. Brown, and in April crossed the Tennessee river at Ditton's Landing. I passed through a small part of the Cherokee Nation, to reach the settlements on the Black Warrior and Cahawba rivers, north of the great Alabama river.

The first settlement I found was at what was then called the Bear Meat Cabin, now Mountville. Here I made my first appointment—here I found Methodists, Baptists, and some Stoneites, called Christians. I formed a small society here, the first formed in that part of the newly settled country. From here I proceeded to Jones' Valley—a fine, fertile country, running southwest for some thirty miles between the mountains of the Black Warrior and Cahawba rivers.

In this valley I found a good many Methodists. I formed societies and left appointments. From thence to where Tuscaloosa now is there were many huts, made of posts set in the ground, and boarded up with clapboards. From here I went to the place now called Carthage, then known as McKown's Fort. From there I went to Russel's Settlement, now Greensborough, thence to Rice's Settlement, now Marion, crossing the Cahawba river and going to Pleasant Valley, back of what was then Moor's Bluff, now Selma, on the west bank of the Alabama river. Then I turned north, and passing the settlements on Mulberry Creek, I reached Wilson's Hill, now Mt. Ayalla, at the lower end of Cahawba Valley—a long and fertile valley, lying near the Cahawba river, and bounded west by the Coosey mountains.

Throughout the length of this valley I found materials for forming societies, which I did, and in the fall had a camp meeting in the lower end of it, at which time and place many souls were converted. I was aided by several local preachers—Rev. Jos. Walker, Henry Powell, J. D. Lee, and others.

From this valley I proceeded to the Catawba towns, on Canoe Creek, the place where Wetumpka now stands, thence to Will's Valley, where I preached to whites and Indians promiscuously, then through Bristow's Cove to Bear Meat Cabin, my starting point, having a circuit of near seven hundred miles round. During the time from March until the last of May late in December, I never saw nor heard of a Methodist traveling preacher; sometimes lying out on the mountains, no white man within miles of me, and hearing the panthers howling around me. The country was very newly and thinly settled, that the comforts of life (saying nothing about the luxuries) were scarce; but the people did the best they could, and I was satisfied and happy, preparing the way for others to do good and live comfortably.

In the fall I returned to the Tennessee Conference, held in Nashville, from which place I was sent back to South Alabama, accompanied by Brothers Stringfield and Kestorson; I traveled the work I had formed the year before, making the seven hundred miles and thirty appointments in six weeks. During the latter part of the spring of 1819 I had the pleasure of meeting with Bro. A. Talley, who was sent from the South Carolina Conference, and occupied the territory on the south side of the Alabama river. Sometime in the summer, Bro. Stringfield went to another field of labor, while Kestorson and myself continued during the year. On a considerable portion of the work we had a good state of religion, and in some places quite a revival. We had some three or four camp meetings. At the fall of this year I was sent to the head waters of the Tombigbee, in the region of Cotton Gin Port, and where Columbus now is. Robert, now Bishop Paine, was sent to the field I had formed, and now left. At the close of the year 1820, the Tennessee and South Carolina Conferences gave up South Alabama, and the Mississippi commenced getting recruits from both of them, spread out her wings, and covered the ground from the line between Alabama and the Creek Indians to the Sabine west, and so continued until 1832, when the Alabama Conference was formed.

I am, dear brother, yours in haste,
EBENEZER HEARN.

The New Bishops of the M. E. Church, North.

Bishop Scott—Bp. Simpson—Bp. Ames—Bp. Baker.

Many of our readers helped to make the older Bishops, and knew them well. But as the last made are strangers somewhat, we introduce them to their acquaintance by copying the following interesting and discriminating sketches from Zion's Herald. [Ed.

All eyes have been directed for several days to the Episcopal seats, where the recently elected Bishops sit beside their predecessors. They are a strong addition to the Episcopal Board, and we believe that the satisfaction of both the Conference and the Methodist public with their election increases daily. They have all presided in the Conference, and with manifest competency for the duties of the chair.

Dr. Scott is tall and slight in person, and seems not to possess vigorous health. We would not, however, pronounce him an invalid; on the contrary, judging from his appearance, it may be hoped that the extensive travels required by his new office will repair his vigor. We think this the more probable from the fact that he appears to be a man of calm self-control, and therefore, as the mental wear and tear of the office are its chief perils, he will be able to defend himself against them.

Dr. Scott's features are very regular, and indicate much refinement, both moral and intellectual. His hair is sandy, and is becoming slight; his craniological development full and intellectual, the organs of "perception," "comparison" and "caution" being most prominent; his eyes dark blue; his nose large and well formed; his mouth and chin remarkably well defined, expressive of the refined sentiment we have alluded to.

We have old personal recollections of Dr. Scott, and avail ourselves of this opportunity to put upon record (as we have in other cases when able) some brief but authentic dates of his career. He was born October 11, 1802, at Cantwell's Bridge, New Castle co., Delaware, and joined the Church October 16, 1822. He joined the Philadelphia Conference in 1826, and was sent to Talbott circuit, and in 1827 to Dover circuit. In 1828 he was ordained Deacon by Bishop George, and stationed in St. George's charge, Philadelphia. In 1829 he returned to the same station. In 1830 he was ordained Elder by Bp. Hedding, and sent to West Chester, Penn., whither he returned in 1831. In 1832 his health having failed, he was given the relation of supernumerary. In 1833 he resumed an effective relation, and was sent to Kent county, Md. In 1834 and '35 he traveled Delaware district, on the "Peninsula." In 1836 he was stationed at Franklin St. Ch., Newark, N. J.; in 1837 and '38 at Ebenezer Church, Philadelphia; 1839 St. Paul's Ch., Phila. In 1840 he was appointed Principal of Dickinson Grammar School, Carlisle, Pa. In the same year the honorary degree of A. M. was conferred upon him by the Wesleyan University, Middletown, Ct. In 1843 he resigned his position at Carlisle, and was appointed to Union Church, Phila. 1844 resent to the same charge. In 1845-6-7-8 he was presiding elder of the South Philadelphia District. In 1846 the honorary degree of D. D. was conferred upon him by Delaware College, Newark, Del. In 1848 he was elected Assistant Book Agent, N. Y., where he has performed especial service to the Church in the lawsuit case. At the present General Conference he has been elected to the Episcopacy. He has served as a delegate to this body in 1836, 1840, 1844, 1848 and '52.

Dr. Scott is self-educated, but not the less thoroughly educated on that account; his attainments are classical. He is an able preacher, and will, we predict, sustain his new functions with unflagging success. If he fails at all, it can only be by the failure of his health. The marked distinction of his whole character—moral and intellectual—is its perfect symmetry.

Dr. Simpson we have already "sketched." We availed ourselves of that opportunity to relieve by a little humor the gravity of these rather monotonous columns. Now that our late brother editor has been translated from our notable brotherhood to an inferior position, and partly by our own rash agency, we can not be expected to contemplate him with the same lively interest. Still we are willing to let our former compliments pass. He has not changed an iota since the change in his circumstances. He is evidently himself, and will always be so, through all external vicissitudes.

Dr. Simpson is reputed one of the strongest men of American Methodism. His face is expressive of calm decision, of persistent energy, and discriminating sagacity. He ought to be a capital business man, a safe manager, and a first rate presiding officer. As a preacher and platform speaker he has won high esteem in Boston during the session. His discourses are perspicuous, well arranged, full of instruction, and are varied by passages of peculiar power and sometimes of touching pathos.

He was born in Cadiz, Ohio, June 21, 1810. His parents were members of the M. Episcopal Church. Their house was the home and preaching place for the traveling ministers. When about a year old, his father died, and his education devolved upon his mother, who yet lives in the city of Cincinnati, and upon an uncle of very considerable and varied learning, who was for years in public life, either on the judicial bench or in the State Senate of Ohio, and who was also an active member and a devoted friend of the Methodist Church.

His intellectual training was commenced very early, and in addition to the ordinary branches, at eight years of age he began the study of the German language, and read the German Bible through in the following year. When about twelve years old he commenced the study of Latin and Greek, first privately, and then at an academy in his native town. To these languages he added the study of French, and an extensive mathematical course. When between 17 and 18 he became a student in Madison College, then superintended by Drs. Ilsecm, Elliott and Fielding, and received the appointment of Tutor. During his stay in this institution he pursued the study of Hebrew, which he had previously commenced.

In 1829 he united with the M. E. Church, and immediately engaged in active religious duties as a Sabbath School teacher, and shortly afterwards as a class leader. His health suffering severely, he turned his attention to the study of medicine, and having completed the usual course was licensed as a physician in 1833. But feeling it to be his duty to preach, he was licensed as a local preacher, and recommended to the Annual Conference about the same period. His first circuit was West Wheeling. The second year he was stationed in the city of Pittsburgh under the charge of Rev. T. M. Hudson. The third year, the station being divided, he was placed in charge of Liberty Street Church in that city. The fourth year he was appointed to Monongahela city. He was ordained Deacon by Bishop Roberts in Pittsburgh, in 1835, and Elder in Steubenville, Ohio, in 1837, by the same Bishop.

At the close of the fourth year he accepted the professorship of Natural Science and the Vice Presidency in Allegheny College, where he remained ten years, and in 1839 was elected President of the Indiana Asbury University. Here he remained until elected editor of the W. C. Advocate, in 1848. Shortly after his election, he was tendered, by the faculty of Dickinson College, the Presidency of that institution, but would not accept it—since the commencement of the present session, the Presidency of the Wesleyan University has been offered him. Dr. Simpson received the title of A. M. from Dr. Ruter, at Allegheny College, in 1835, and that of D. D. from the Wesleyan University, in 1843. He was a delegate to the General Conference in 1844 and 1848. In the latter we had occasion to notice his devotion to, and mastery in the business of the Church. In conjunction with Rev. J. A. Collins, he projected our California Conference—a measure then much questioned, but now found to be full of wisdom.

Bishop Ames is a stout, robust looking man, as perfect a specimen of health as can be found in the assembly. His hair is deeply black, his head fully developed with a special prominence of the "perceptive organs," his cheeks full and florid, his eyes small and of light blue color, his chin double. There is a very marked characteristic expression about his whole countenance; it indicates calm, frank earnestness. The indication reveals itself also in his voice; which, without being oratund as usual with robust men, has noticeably this significance.

We are disposed to claim Dr. Ames as a Western New Englander. He came of a good old Puritan stock. His grandfather, Rev. Sylvanus Ames, was a Massachusetts man a graduate of old Harvard, a settled pastor at Taunton, a stout hearted Puritan patriot, and died in the camp of Washington at Valley Forge, where he was a chaplain in the hard winter of 1777-8; so at least a printed genealogical table of the Ameses, which we have seen, records. Bp. Ames' father settled early at Athens, Ohio, where the Bishop himself was born, May 20, 1806.

He was converted during a remarkable revival of religion which took place among the students of the Ohio University in August, 1827. It was a productive revival. Among the converts, who are now ministers, and who were associated as fellow students in the University, were Rev. H. J. Clark, J. M. Trimble, F. H. Pilcher, W. Herr, H. E. Pilcher and F. W. Schon.

In 1828 and 1829, Dr. Ames taught in the McKendree College, at Lebanon, Ill. In August, 1830, he was licensed to preach by Rev. Peter Cartwright. He was received on trial, in the Illinois Conference, the same year. On the division of the Illinois Conference in 1832, he was assigned to the Indiana Conference, and was ordained a Deacon by Bishop Soule in 1832. In 1834 he was ordained Elder by Bp. Roberts. He was employed in various fields of labor till 1840, when he was elected a delegate to the General Conference held that year at Baltimore, and there chosen Corresponding Secretary of the Missionary Society. In this office he had the supervision of our German and Indian missions. He traveled more than 25,000 miles during the four years of his secretaryship, passing over the entire Indian Territory from Texas to Lake Superior; traversing wildernesses and camping out for weeks together. He had the honor to be the first chaplain ever elected by an Indian Council, having served the Choctaw General Council in that capacity in 1842, and he drew up, at the request of the Committee on Education, the school law now in force in that nation; a noble bill, by the provisions of which a larger sum is appropriated for education, per person, than in Massachusetts itself.

Bishop Ames served as a delegate to the General Conference of 1844, and from 1844 to 1852 has traveled as P. Elder on the New Albany, Indianapolis and Jeffersonville districts, Indiana Conference. In 1844 the State University of Indiana conferred on him the degree of A. M.

We have never heard Bishop Ames preach, nor speak any where else than on the Conference floor. He is said to be an excellent practical preacher. His remarks in the Conference have always been distinguished for their good sense and direct pertinency. He is not the man to fall into precipitate or novel opinions, or to commit himself impetuously on dubious questions. Good sense, good temper, practical sagacity and a rare power of projecting and executing large schemes, are said to be his chief characteristics. Western men who know him well predict that he will leave a deep mark on our Episcopal history. He is especially able in financial plans—a talent much needed by the great enterprises of the church.

Bishop Baker is the junior superintendent, in years at least. Like Dr. Ames he is round and blooming with health. His features present a very interesting expression. There is a manifest air of modesty about them; you would take him to be incapable of any discourtesy, however slight or sudden, or of any egotism or obtrusion. His head is large and intellectual; his eyes of hazel color, and protected by spectacles; his nose is prominent and his mouth large and expressive of generosity. Bishop Baker was born in Marlow, N. H., July 30, 1812. At the request of some of the Methodist preachers who began about 1827 to visit at his father's, (Dr. Isaac Baker) he was sent to Wilbraham Academy, where he was under the care of the sainted Fisk. Here, in March 12, 1828, he was converted in a very extensive revival which prevailed there. Rev. David Patten, of the Providence Conference, Rev. Stephen Cushing, of the New England Conference, Rev. Morris Hill, of the New York East Conference, and other brethren of our ministry, made a profession of religion at the same time. Dr. Fisk baptized him, and received him into the M. E. Church. His first license as an exhorter was given in 1829 by Rev. David Kilburn, of the N. E. Conference, and his first license to preach was given in 1830, by Rev. Laban Clark, of the New York East Conference.

In 1830 he entered the Freshman Class taught by Prof. Larrabee, of Indiana, under the direction of the Trustees of the Wesleyan University, and at the opening of the University he entered Freshman. On the account of ill health, he spent only three years in college; but continued his studies privately, and took the second degree with his class.

In 1834 he was elected Teacher in the Conference Seminary at Newbury, Vt., where he remained five years in connection with Rev. Charles Adams, who was Principal. When Mr. Adams retired from that Institution in 1839, he was elected Principal, which office he held five years. At this time he united with the N. H. and Vt. Conference on trial. About the year 1840 he formed the first Theological class in Newbury Seminary, which became the nucleus of the Biblical School, and when the institute proper was organized he was elected Professor.

In 1844 he retired from the Newbury Seminary and Institute, and was stationed at Rochester, N. H.—a delightful country appointment, embracing some ten miles square, and known in the early days of Methodism as Norway Plains. From Rochester he was sent to the city of Manchester, N. H. At the expiration of one year he was appointed Presiding Elder on Dover district.

Having been elected Professor in the Methodist General Biblical Institute, he entered upon the duties of the Professorship at the close of the Conference year in 1847, where he has remained during the past five years with distinguished success. When elected to this office, he resolved to be governed by the judgment of his brethren, and did not finally decide to engage again in the work of teaching until the N. H. Conference, by a specific vote, requested his appointment to that institution.

His brethren have shown their confidence in him by giving him two elections as a delegate to the General Conference, and by electing him Conference Secretary for quite a number of years. An occasional sermon, and a Sabbath School Gift Book—"The Last Witness"—are all the works he has published. He has a volume in MSS. which we have occasionally alluded to. It is entitled "The Methodist Preacher's Hand Book." It is by no means a mere collection of Episcopal decisions as some have supposed, but a practical commentary on the duties of a Methodist preacher, embracing Episcopal decisions and such civil judicial decisions as relate to ecclesiastical matters. We hope it may be published before long.

Bishop Baker is a thorough Greek scholar, a rare instructor, and noted among us for his familiar acquaintance with the Methodist economy. His place in our Biblical school can not readily be filled. As a preacher he is sound, systematic and instructive. There is no impetuosity about his discourses or his counsels, but good sense, calm moral power, and almost infallible safety. New England feels not only satisfied, but honored in his election. He is a man who will not only secure the profound respect of the Church, but its universal love.

Such are a few notitia of our new superintendents. We have reason to congratulate ourselves, and thank the Great Head of the Church, that such men have been raised to the responsible office. They will be a powerful addition of moral and intellectual force to it, and the next four years will show by the progress of our cause the additional potency which their election has put into the administration of its mighty system.

SUBMISSION TO CIRCUMSTANCES.—Dr. Johnson used to say, that a habit of looking on the best side of every event is better than a thousand pounds a year. Bishop Hall quaintly remarks, "For every bad there might be a worse; and when a man breaks his leg, let him be thankful it was not his neck." When Fenelon's library was once on fire, "God be praised," he exclaimed, "that it is not the dwelling of some poor man." It has been beautifully said, that the wild bird yet untamed and unaccustomed to confinement, beats itself almost to death against the wires of its cage, while the tame prisoner quietly acquiesces, and relieves its solitude by a song. And apt illustration of the soothing influence of submission.

From the N. Y. Evening Post.

THE STARS IN THE STREAM.

Between the steep and sunny hills
That all the dreamy vale enclose,
With many a bright and graceful curve,
A clear and placid streamlet flows;
There soft green banks slope gently down,
And groups of fragrant trees bend o'er
Fresh blossoms nestle in the grass,
And sibling pebbles gem the shore.

Here, in the spiritual night,
When all the glorious earth was still,
As if the hand of God was spread
Above the deep woods of the hill,
A fair-faced boy, with deep blue eyes,
And hair like sunlight's wavy beam,
Would come and sit for hours, and gaze
Upon the thick stars in the stream.

He wondered why the golden stars,
That hung so far amid the sky,
Should also in the wave below
In such a trance of beauty lie.
And there for many a balmy night,
He lingered by the silvery shore—
So innocent with dear desire,
That questioned all things, more and more.

A lovely, thoughtful boy was he,
In love with all things good and fair,
Great hopes and wishes filled his heart
Before he hardly knew them there;
But still that heart grew bold and strong,
That love more broad and earnest grew—
He saw the inner sense of things,
And Nature's mystic meanings knew.

Long years had passed since he reposed
Upon the bank of that fair stream;
Long years of thought and holy toil
Had taught him life was not a dream.
The same stars in the placid wave
Were still the same soft crowns of light,
And all along the banks flowed down
To his great heart the same delight.

He wondered not now they were there,
So sweetly, tremulously bright,
Nor why star looked again to star
From waters to the fields of light;
For he had learned that love's own law
Is to restore what it receives,
That each kind look and tender word
Its image in the bosom leaves.

He wondered not that at his feet
The space-born orbs so brightly shone,
He knew the heart when turned to Heaven
May make its starry joys its own;
And that the more serenely pure
That heart shall keep through day and night,
The more divine shall glow within
The love-stars of celestial light.

Rev. Chauncey Richardson, A. M.

THIRD PAPER.

In this number I proposed giving some of Brother Richardson's characteristics as a preacher. I may fail to give to strangers a distinct impression of the MAN, but I will endeavor to draw such a picture as will be recognized by those who have listened to his pulpit instructions. Earth does not afford a finer field for the employment of great talents, and for the exhibition of the nobler feelings of the human heart, than the Gospel ministry. At life's dawn, his office calls him to consecrate the infant in the hallowed rite of baptism; as the man approaches the meridian, he is summoned to the hymeneal altar, and as it descends to the darkness of the grave, he must be there to administer to the departing spirit the consolations of religion. Thus the minister has to deal with men in all the various walks of life, in every stage of life's progress, and in every eventful hour of its history. Though he may be at all times and in all places engaged in his work, there is one place for which he must reserve all his strength, towards which all his studies and efforts must converge, to which he must consecrate all the redeemed powers of his mind and heart—that is, THE PULPIT. Here, the time, the place, the auditory, the themes, involving in their boundless range all the higher interests of man's deathless nature, conspire to waken up his energies, and call his talents into requisition.

Each class of Gospel ministers are marked by some peculiarities. What are the characteristics of Methodist preaching? Formerly their practicalness, their system of doctrines, and their direct appeals to the heart, distinguished them from others. But ministers of other communions now preach in the same style. What is now the distinguishing feature of Methodist preaching? I should say its extemporaneousness. Not that jejune extemporaneousness which exhibits neither originality or thought, genius or eloquence. In listening to the better class of our preachers, those who give character and tone to our ministry, we constantly detect evidences that they are composing their sermons as they deliver them. In the introduction and the didactic portions of their sermons, they sometimes appear languid. Observations are made which have but an indirect reference to the subject; sentiments are repeated, sentences are sometimes involved in obscurity; but in the midst of this mental effort to grapple with the difficulties of a subject, the speaker strikes a rich vein of thought: instantly his whole manner is changed. His eye flushes, his countenance becomes ignited, the tones of his voice become more moving and persuasive—his every look and gesture indicates that his soul has become electrified, and he pours forth a torrent of eloquence that reaches, subdues and captivates the hearts of his hearers. Now it is evident that had the speaker carefully written out his sermon and read it, or delivered it memoriter, it would have possessed neither the same defects or excellencies.
